V. 11. ſhall chooſe] That was for a time the City Shiloh, where the Tabernacle was placed, Jer.7.12. Pſal. 78.60. and where it continued unto the dayes of Samuel, which was two hundred fourty and three years; or, (as ſome think) three hundred, 1 *Sam.*4.12, 13. though called the Temple, 1 *Sam.*1.9. and afterwards Jeruſalem, where the Temple was built in Solomons time. See on 1 King.8.29. Pſal.78.68. Dan.6.10.

choice vowes] That is, ſuch things as you vowed freely, being at your own choice; or, ſuch things as you offered, not taking what cometh firſt to hand, but making choyce of the faireſt and beſt, as meeteſt for Gods ſervice and acceptance.

V. 12. before the Lord] At the Tabernacle or Temple, or in the City where either of them ſhall be erected for the ſolemn ſervice of God to be preſented to him, as converſant with thoſe that ſincerely ſerve him.

hath no part] His rejoycing is not becauſe he hath no part of inheritance, but becauſe, though he have no ſuch portion as the reſt, he ſhall rejoyce in the participation of the offerings, &c. Or theſe words may have reference to what was ſaid before, which is, that the Prieſts ſhould invite the Levites to their feaſts, as may be collected from Chap.16.11, 14. and that becauſe he hath no portion of lands with the other Tribes, Num.18.20.

V. 13. take heed, &c.] Chap.11.16. Lev.17.4.

the burnt-offerings] Under this word are other holy oblations comprehended, though they be not expreſly mentioned, as burnt-offerings are.

V. 15. as of the Roe-buck] Every one, whether ceremonially unclean, or not, might eat of the kinds of beaſts which were appointed for ſacrifice, as well as of them that were not, as the Ro-buck, and the Hart, which were not to be ſacrificed to the Lord; for in civil meats (whereof he ſpeaketh here) there was not that diſtinction obſerved betwixt perſons or meats as in ſacrifices there was, ver.20,21,22. of which this diſtinction is to be obſerved; ſome creatures were ceremonially unclean, ſo that they might neither be ſacrificed nor eaten; whereof ſee *Lev.*11. & Chap.14. of this Book; ſome were wholly clean, which might be both eaten and offered in ſacrifice; as of birds, the Turtle and Pigeon, and of beaſts the Sheep, Kine, and Goats; and ſome were partly clean, and partly unclean, ſo clean, that they might be eaten, and ſo ceremonially unclean, that they might not be ſacrificed; whereof ſee Chap.14.5.

V. 16. as water] That the ground may drink it up, and it be not uſed for meat to man or beaſt, becauſe the blood of ſacrifices is peculiarly conſecrated to God, as a type of the blood of Chriſt. There be other reaſons uſed againſt the eating of blood, whereof ſee ver.23,24. and Annot. on Gen.9.4.

V. 19. Take heed] This Caveat ſheweth mens proneneſs to forſake the Levite, and importeth a threat to them that do it, Chap.14.27. Neh.10.39.

V. 21. be too far] They that dwelt too far off from the place of the Tabernacle or Temple, might for all keep their feaſts here mentioned, though they had not Prieſts and ſacrifices as at the place where the Tabernacle or Temple ſtood; for though the Prieſts were there, it was not their duty to kill the cattell which were eaten in their particular or private houſes; therefore they that dwelt at ſuch diſtance that they could not appear, need neither forbear their feaſts, nor be ſcrupled becauſe they had no Prieſts among them to celebrate ſuch ſervices as were done at the Tabernacle or Temple.

V. 22. * Roe] *ver. 15. Chap. 14. 5. & 15. 22.

unclean &c.] There was a two-fold ceremonial uncleanneſſe: a leſſer, which onely reſted on the party who was ceremonially unclean, and did not derive uncleanneſſe unto another; and there was an uncleanneſs by which another became ceremonially unclean, by touch or company; the former leſſer uncleanneſſe was no let at all to a ſociable eating with others who were not ceremonially unclean at all; the latter was: yet they that were thus unclean, might, in their meat, communicate among themſelves; as when a whole family was unclean, by reaſon of a dead body among them.

V. 23. for the bloud] *S*ee on Gen. 9. 16. Levit. 17. 11.

V. 26. thy holy things] Such as are mentioned, v. 17.

V. 27. the fleſh thereof] That is, the fleſh of Peace-offerings, for part thereof was to be eaten by the owners who offered them. So are we to underſtand, Lev. 7. 15.

V. 28. after thee for ever] A man cannot better bleſs his children, then by his own obedience to his heavenly Father, Iſa. 48. 18, 19.

V. 30. after that they be deſtroyed] That is, in time to come, when their judgement is out of mind, or little thought of, being paſt a great while before, elſe their deſtruction might be a warning againſt their evil imitation of them.

V. 30. enquire not] With any purpoſe to make any pattern of their practiſe.

V. 31. burn] They thought nothing too dear to offer to their Idols, whereby it appeareth how ſubtil and powerful *S*atan is in drawing Idolaters to do ſo contrary both to grace and nature, Lev. 18. 21. & 20. 2. 2 King. 16. 3. Jer. 32. 35.

CHAP. XIII.

Verſ. 1. D*reamer*] Which, ſaith he, hath things revealed to him in Dreames.

V. 2. come to paſs] As the Prophecies of ſuch Prophets are falſe, ſo are their wonders fallacious and counterfeit, 2 Theſſ. 2. 9. elſe, if they were true wonders, they were Gods ſeales, which are never ſet to confirm an untruth: and therefore the Devils argument was good, (though his meaning was naught) when from a miraculous mutation of ſtones into bread, Mat. 4. 3. he inferred the divinity of the Son of God; for if God had wrought a miracle to confirm the poſition, it muſt needs have been aſſured as undoubtly true. But many things foreſpoken might come to paſs, and yet not by any Divine revelation: for the Devil may to a falſe and Idolatrous ſuggeſtion (as in this verſe) affix a prediction by his skill in natural cauſes: as if a Jeſuit, to perſwade the Indians to the Popiſh party, ſhould give them for a ſign of aſſurance, a prediction of the eclipſe of the *S*un: In ſuch a caſe we muſt bring the propoſal to the tryal of the Scripture, and alwayes prefer the Divine word before a naturall or diabolical work. See Chap. 18. 22. Jer. 28. 9. Matth. 7. 22.

V. 3. proveth you] Tempteth, or tryeth. See on Chap. 8. 2. Gen. 22. 1. 1 Cor. 11. 19.

to know] Or, (as ſome render the Hebrew word) that it may be maniſeſt, or known and diſcerned to themſelves or others, or ſo convicted in the ſight of God, that he may without ſuſpition of injuſtice puniſh them for their Apoſtaſie.

V. 5. put to death] When their evil hearts are made known by their evil workes, and of thoſe evil works, they are ſufficiently convicted, and for them judicially condemned, Chap. 18. 20. Jer. 14. 15. Zach. 13. 3.

V. 6. if thy brother] All natural affection muſt give place to Gods honour: and in ſuch a caſe we muſt ſhew our ſelves rather children of God then brethren, or kinſmen, or kinſwomen, in what degree of relation ſoever, Chap. 17. 2.

V. 9. thou ſhalt ſurely kill him] See on ver. 5. Chap. 17. 6.

thine hand,] Thou who art a witneſſe to accuſe him, ſhalt caſt the firſt ſtone at him: for the witneſſes were to begin, and all the people to follow in throwing ſtones at the offender, Chap. 17. 7. Act. 7. 58.

V. 13. children of Belial] Belial ſignifieth without yoke, and it is uſually applyed to ſuch as are moſt unruly, ſubmitting to no yoke, living by no rule, and ſo moſt wicked and licentious; and therefore the word is often taken for the Devil, 2 Cor. 15. 6. and for conformity to him, wicked men may be ſo named, who are Devils incarnate. See 1. Sam. 1. 16. & 2. 12. & 25. 25. Judg. 19. 22.

V. 14. inquire] This is ſpoken chiefly to the Magiſtrate, who hath power to puniſh ſuch faults. See Joſ. 22. 13.

abomination] Though Idols be ſet out gloriouſly with gold and ſilver, and curious mixtures of colours, and their temples gorgeouſly garniſhed, yet is Idolatry a loathſome and abominable thing in the ſight of God; and ſo it ſhould be in the ſight of men, Exod. 8. 26.

V. 15. deſtroying it utterly] Which ſheweth, that no Idolatry is more execrable, nor more grievouſly to be puniſhed then theirs, who have formerly profeſſed God, and have fallen off from that profeſſion. Levit. 27. 28. Joſ. 6. 17.

V. 16. an heap] Of rubbiſh, a monument of ruine, never to be repaired or built up again.

V. 17. of the accurſed thing] That is of the ſpoil of the citie which God hath curſed to confuſion and ruine.

V. 17. to thine hand] Though it come to thine hand, it ſhall not cleave or ſtick to it, ſo as to tarry with thee, but thou ſhalt caſt it away as an execrable thing, Chap. 7. 25, 26.

CHAP. XIIII.

between your eyes] That is, in that part of the forehead which is above the partition between the eyes.

for the dead] That is, by occaſion of the dead, as by way of lamentation for their death, Lev. 19. 28. & 21. 5. Jer. 16. 6. & 41. 5.

V. 2. an holy people] That is, conſecrate, ſeparate, or ſet apart from other Nations, as the peculiar people of God, not in reſpect of inherent holineſs, or of *S*aint-like life; for they are juſtly charged with many great rebellions, Chap. 9. throughout. Yet that relation to God did bind them to more holineſſe then other people, to take his example for a pattern of holineſs, and was to keep them at a further diſtance from conformity with the corruptions of uncircumciſed Nations. *S*ee Chap. 7. 6. & 26. 18. Exod. 19. 5.

V. 3. abominable thing] That is, not onely what mans nature abhorreth, but what Gods law forbiddeth; for when it is forbidden by God it ſhould be abominable to man.

V. 4. the beaſts] This ceremonial law instructeth the Jews to ſeek a ſpiritual pureneſs even in meats and drinks.

ſheep, and] The Hebrew word [Seh] ſignifieth the leſſer cattel; not leſſer for age, as the lamb in reſpect of the ſheep, but in their kind and is commonly taken for a ſheep, or a goat.

V. 5. wild goat] In other languages this creature is called by a name ſignifying a Goat, and a Deer or Hart, in ſhort a Goat-hart; reſembling a Goat in his hornes and hair, eſpecially his beard, and an Hart, or Deer, in the reſt of his body: of which ſee Plin. l. 8. c. 3.

Pygard] So called after the Greeks Tranſlation: the Hebrew word [Diſhon] uſed only in this place is variouſly underſtood; ſome take it for a wild beaſt, whoſe horn turns inward toward his head; ſome for a kind of Bugle; ſome for an Unicorn; ſome for a wild beaſt like to a Fallow-deer, or Roe-buck: but though to us it be not perfectly underſtood (as the names of many living creatures, herbes and ſtones are not) yet thoſe to whom the precept or prohibition of ſuch things was given, had the right underſtanding of them, (with the rule, whether it were a command or a caveat) if not in particular, yet by the general notes.

wild ox] *S*uch as doth not ſort with tame cattel, but haunt deſert places, and are hurtful to men, and no way ſerviceable, but when they are hunted to death. And as there are wild oxen, and wild goats, ſo of all ſorts of domeſtical creatures that are tame, there are of like kind which are wild. Plin. hiſt. lib. 8. cap. 53.

Chamois] Wild one: the Hebrew word Zemerr is rendred in the beſt Engliſh Tranſlations by a French word, Chamois, which ſignifieth a wild goat, a goat that haunts the rocks, and other places out of ordinary acceſs: many Authors call it a Camelo pard, which is a creature reſembling a Camel in his head, and a Libard or Panther in ſpots, for the body of it hath white ſpots upon a red ground, Plin. l. 8. c. 18.

V. 10. nor fins] *S*ee Annot. on Lev. 11. 9.

V. 9. that flyeth] *S*ee Annot. on Lev. 11. 20.

V. 21. dieth of it ſelf] This alſo is to be underſtood of ſuch a creature as dyeth by any miſhap, as falling, drowning, or any other way, ſo that the bloud was not let out of it, but remained in it; and it is to be underſtood of a clean beaſt: for the unclean were not to be eaten at all. See Lev. 11. 39.

V. 26. beſtow that money] at. 21. 12.

V. 27. Within thy gates;] Living in the ſame City with thee, Chap. 10. 9. & 12. 12, 19. & 18. 1, 2. & 26. 12. Num. 18. 20, 24.

V. 28. at the end of three yeares] When the tenths were gathered in the third year. Deut. 26. 12. beſides the yearly tythe that were given to the Levites, and a ſecond tythe which the owners ſet apart for their journey-ſacrifice and feaſting, (when they appeared, before the Tabernacle or Temple ſtood) thrice a year there was a third tythe, viz. that here mentioned, which every third year (not reckoning the Sabbatical year when all was common, Exod. 23. 10, 11.) was laid up in ſtore for the uſe ſpecified in the next verſe. where the giver himſelf is not mentioned ; nor was he to have his part in theſe tythes as in thoſe oblations which were brought for publick feaſts. Theſe Tithes were called Prochodonarus.

V. 29. may bleſſe thee] By bleſſing and beneficence to others, men may derive bleſſings upon themſelves. Bounty is the way to plenty, and a godly liberality a prevention of poverty. See Chap. 15.10. Prov. 11. 24, 25, Mal. 3. 10.

Verſ. 1. E*Nd of every ſeven yeares*] Ver. 12. Exod. 21. 2. & 23. 11. Lev. 25. 4. Jer. 34. 14.

V. 2. ſhall releaſe it] To ſuch poor debtors as were not able to pay what was due to be paid that year, ſo it appeareth by verſ. 4. This releaſe is taken by ſome to be but a forbearance of payment for that year, which might be expected the year following, but if the party were as unable that year as the former, it was not then to be called for, and the lender was to expect a recompence from the bleſſing of God, ver. 6.

neighbour or of his brother] By this is underſtood a neighbour or brother not by community of humane nature, (as ſometimes it is) but by nation : ſo that one of another nation, though a proſelyte or convert, if he were not a natural Jew, was not, (as ſome reſtrain the rule) to have this priviledge, but if he had not to pay, was to make recompence by ſervice. But it is more probable that his Religion gave him as much priviledge as his carnal kinored could do, and therefore that the proſelyte ſhal be taken for a neighbour and brother , and ſo have as much favour for Gods ſake (if not more) as the naturall Jew for mans.

V. 4. ſave when] Or, that there be no poor among you ; That is, made poor by exacting that of them which they are not able to pay : for God will have poor alwayes for the exerciſe of the charity of the rich, ver. 11. Matt. 26. 11. though private poor, rather then publick beggers ; for ſuch are forbidden by law, and order taken in well-govern'd Common-wealths that there be none ſuch.

V. 6. * lend to many nations] * Chap. 28. 12, 44.

V. 8. open thy hand &c.] Matt. 5. 42. Luk. 6. 34. 2 Cor. 9. ver. 5, 6.

V. 9. ſinne unto thee] Bring the puniſhment of ſin upon thee, if he ſtand in need of thy charity by giving or lending , and thou with-hold the relief, becauſe the year of releaſe is at hand.

V. 10. not bee grieved] Charitable beneficence muſt be performed with cheerfull benevolence ; for God not onely loveth a cheerful giver, but bountifully rewardeth him, Verſ. 18. & 14, 29. & Prov. 11. 14. & 28. 27.

V. 11 the poor ſhall never ceaſe] That is not contrary to what is ſaid, verſ. 4. See the reconcilement there.

V. 12. in the ſeventh year] That is, at the beginning of the ſeventh year : but the releaſe of debts was at the end of it, verſ. 1.

V. 14. liberally] As acknowledging the bleſſing of God upon his labour, & conſcionably recompencing his painful & faithful ſervice, v. 18.

V. 17. unto thy maid ſervant] That is, for giving unto her, as unto the man-ſervant, ver. 13, 14, 15. not for boring thorow the ear, which was peculiar to a man-ſervant.

V. 18. double hired] For three yeares ſervice was the ſtinted time of an hireling, Iſa. 16. 14. But the Hebrew ſervant here ſpoken of, ſerved ſix years. *S*ee on Iſa. 16. 14. & 21. 16.

V. 19. nor ſheare] Being appropriated to God, they muſt not be uſed for the ſervice or advantage of man : therefore the ſheep and wooll muſt be given unto the Prieſt. Some underſtand this of the firſtlings of the females, whereof the wool might be a part, being offered as Peace-offerings, which ſeemeth to be meant, verſ. 20.

V. 20. before the Lord] Chap. 12. 7, 17.

V. 22. the unclean and the clean] Which is not lawfull, if it were offered as a peace-offering : for of ſuch onely the clean were partakers, Lev. 7. 20.

V. 23. not eat the bloud] This prohibition is often repeated for better caution againſt all kinde of cruelty, and becauſe bloud was ſprinkled for atonement, and ſo as a thing conſecrated to God to be kept out of common uſe. *S*ee. Lev. 17. 11.

V. 3. bread of affliction] *S*o the unleavened bread was called, becauſe it was to mind them of their afflicted condition , from which they fled in ſuch haſte, that they could not ſtay till their bread was leavened, Exod. 12. 39. Eſay. 30. 20.

V. 4. until the morning] See Annot. on Exod. 12. 10.

V. 6. at the ſeaſon] This is not meant punctually for the preciſe hour for killing of the Paſchal Lamb : for they departed not till the next day, but with ſome latitude of time : or their departing, or coming forth is taken for their preparation for their departure. See Annot. on Exod. 12. 8.

V. 7. unto thy tents] Or, to thy dwelling place, whether tents, or houſes, ; and indeed this hath eſpecial reference to the ſetled eſtate of the Hebrews in the land of Canaan.

V. 8. ſix dayes] The dayes of unleavened bread were ſeven , but the ſeventh is ſpoken of by it ſelf, as having ſomewhat proper and peculiar to ; it but it is to be underſtood for unleavened bread to be like unto the reſt , for the ordinance is expreſly for ſeven, Exod. 12. 19. Lev. 23. 6 *S*ome ſay by the ſix dayes are to be underſtood the ſix immediately following the Paſſeover which was the firſt day of unleavened-bread, Matth. 26. 17. but is not here counted as elſewhere.

V. 3. hoſt of heaven] See Annot on Gen. 2. 1.

* not commanded] Whereby he condemneth all Religion and Service of God, which God hath not commanded ; and withall in this expreſſion there is a figure called Liptote, or, Litotes, whereby more is meant then ſpoken ; For by not commanded, is to be underſtood forbidden ; and not ſimply forbideen, but with ſevere comminations, as verſ. 5 Chap. 4. 23. 29. * So ſhalt thou put] To ſacrifice ſinners to publick juſtice , is the meanes to obtain mercy for the preſervation of them that ſurvive. * Verſ. 12 & Chap. 13. 5 & 19. 19. & 21. 21. & 22. 24. & 24. 7.

V. 8. between blood and blood] That is, betwixt the guilt of wilful murder, and caſual man-ſlaughter ; or, betwixt bloodſhed by violence, and blood to be ſhed by juſtice : or, betwixt blood and blood , may be betwixt kindred and kindred. wherein juſtice muſt put a difference betwixt guilt and innocence , though the party be never ſo neer in alliance or kindred.

ſtroke and ſtroke] Whether it be of malignity, or caſualty.

God ſhall choſe] For the pitching of his Tabernacle , or building his Temple.

V. 9 . Judge] Who ſhall give Sentence as the Prieſts counſel him by the Law of God, in matters of Religion, or the Ceremonial Law ; but in civil controverſies there were civil Magiſtrates, who were to hear and determine betwixt party and party ; yet ſo, that if there were a ſcruple, or caſe of conſcience which made the Judge doubtful what to determine, he was to conſult with the Prieſt, Pſal. 122. 45. V. 11. ſentence of the law] The Judge was not to give what ſentence pleaſed himſelf, but according to the law : and if the Caſe were ſuch as was not already ruled by the Law, God was to be conſulted with, & reſolution to be made by his direction. See Levit. 24. 12. Numb. 15. 34. Deut. Ezek. 44. 24. Deut. 21. 5. & 24. 8.

hath ſaid] Not in expreſs words, but implicitely, and by conſequence, when he ſhewed himſelf much offended at thoſe who would have made them a Captain to lead them back into Egypt, Num.14.4, 11. See Jer.42.15.

that way] He ſpeaketh not of any particular way, but of that way (which ſoever it is) which leadeth unto Egypt: for in this caſe the matter of moment lyeth not in the journey, but in the end of it. See chap.28.68.

V.17. multiply wives] If Kings may not, much leſs may their Subjects; ſince it is of more moment that Princes have children then inferior perſons, and though the Patriarchs had more wives then one at once, it was not according to the firſt inſtitution of marriage. See Annot.on Gen.4.19. & 29.28.Levit.18.18. it was never allowed by God, though for a time tolerated upon reaſons which concern not our times. And this might the rather be forbidden to a King, becauſe of the power of his example upon the manners of his people.

greatly multiply] That is, immoderately addict himſelf to multiply gold or ſilver: for covetouſneſs is a miſchievous ſin in a man of great power, in a King eſpecially, ſince it will for reward attempt, admit and uphold any wickedneſs; and oppoſe and ſuppreſs any good man good cauſe, Iſai.2.7.

V.18. He ſhall write] Or, cauſe to be written, as 2 Sam.13.

a copy of this Law] Of this fifth Book of Moſes, out of that Original record, which was kept in the Sanctuary, chap.31.26. 2 King.22.8. or, of the whole Law. Philo writeth, that the King ought to write it with his own hand: but by whomſoever it was written, he muſt diligently read in it; notwithſtanding the multiplicity and greatneſs of the affairs of his kingly office, 1 Sam.10.25.

V.19. read therein] Joſh.1.8. Pſal.119.98. chap.31.11.

V.20. Not lifted up] Not ſo lifted up above his Subjects, as to forget they are his brethren, but to make his government rather loved by lenity, then feared or hated by rigour, 1 King.12.7. Dan.5.20.

CHAP. XVIII.

Ver.1. M*Ade by fire*] Which were partly burned for Gods glory, and partly reſerved for maintenance of the Levites, Lev.7.32,34 as in the right of the Lords inheritance, who have reſerved that portion for the ſervice of himſelf, and the ſuſtenance of his ſervants, Chap.10.9. 1 Cor.9.13.

V.2. The Lord is their inheritance] They muſt look to the Lord for their portion, and ſhall find it in him by his right in all, and his favor to them, whoſe riches and beneficence will ſupply them with maintenance, Num.18 20. See on Joſh.13.14.

V.3. that offer] That bring a ſacrifice of Peace-offerings. Lev.7.32,34.

the maw] Or, the breſt, as Exod.29,27. Lev.7.31. Or the maw with the breſt.

V.7. As all his brethren] Though they attend the ſervice of the Sanctuary by courſe, yet if any would willingly offer his ſervice who was not bound unto it by turn, he was to be admitted.

V.8. like portions] For their diet out of the revenues of the Tabernacle, while they attend at it, who at other times were maintained by the tythes: ſome conceive, they that did not perform ſervice in the Sanctuary, had neither any ſuſtenance thence, nor ſo much in tythes as their brethren who underwent the ſervice in their turnes.

Sale of his patrimony] Which he was to keep, for if he did not ſpend the mony, he might redeem what he had ſold at any time, Lev.25.32.

V.10. paſs through the fire] Either as a ſuperſtitious purging, by paſſing between two fires, or by an Idolatrous ſacrificing them to the Idol Molech. See Annot.on Lev.18.21.

divination] Taking upon them to foretel things to come, Mic.3.11 without any ground of reaſon or divine revelation. See on Prov.16.10. and on Gen.1.14.

obſerver of times] Superſtitiouſly making difference of dayes and times, as good or bad, as lucky or unlucky.

an inchanter] Is ſuch an one as uſeth ſongs and verſes, or other words or ceremonies to produce ſupernatural effects.

V.11. Or a Charmer] A Charmer is the ſame in effect with the Inchanter.

a wizard] Is the ſame with the Diviner.

a Necromancer] One that ſeeketh to the dead, as 1 Sam.28.8. Iſa.8.19.

V.14. hath not ſuffered] Heb. And hath not given, God hath given thee that is, Prophets and Inſtructors to teach thee, that thou maiſt not need to ſeek to Diviners for inſtruction or direction.

V.18. A Prophet like] This is meant principally of Chriſt, Acts 3.22. betwixt whom and Moſes though there are many remarkable conformities, as Numb.12.3. Exod.32.32. compared with Matth.11.29. Joh.2.17. and Deut.5.5. Gal.3.19. with 1 Tim.2.5. and Exod.1. with Matth.2. yet withal God promiſeth here a ſucceſſion of Prophets before Chriſts coming, by whom his people were to be inſtructed from time to time, ſo that they ſhould not be affrighted with Gods ſpeaking to them, as formerly they had been: Chapter 5.25 Exodus 20 19.

V.19. I will require it of him] That is, I will call him to an account, and bring him to puniſhment for it.

V.22. if the thing follow not] For if the Prophecy were of God, it muſt needs come to paſſe, for he cannot lie, nor be deceived; though it follow not to ſay, The thing is come to paſſe, therefore it is the Lord that ſpeaketh: for they that uſe to foretel, may among many untruths light upon ſome truth: as if a blind man ſhoot many arrows at a mark, he may ſometimes hit it, though it be rather by chance then any good cunning: and ſometimes God may for trial, (chap.13.3.) in judgment puniſhing the people by miſ-guidance, ſuffer the ſayings of falſe prophets to come to paſſe: ſee on chap.13.2.

not be afraid of him] Though he foretel fearful things, thou ſhalt not be afraid of him, ſince he is a falſe prophet, and his predictions ſhall not take effect,

CHAP. XIX.

Verſe 1. T*Heir cities*] On the other ſide Jordan: for on the Eaſt ſide there were three appointed alwayes; Chap.40.v.41: See Num.35.14.

V.2. in the midſt] That is, within the land, (though not preciſely in the midſt) ſo that from all parts there may be convenient recourſe to ſome of them. The three cities were to be of equal diſtance one from another, & as it is probably conceived, the diſtance was triangular thus, like the Capital Greek letter Delta Δ.

V.3. prepare thee a way] For commodious paſſage unto them; which ſome think was paved, and had marks of direction, that they which fled towards them might not miſſe their way, nor be hindred, if there were need to make an haſty flight from the purſuit.

every ſlayer] Which kil'd againſt his will, and bear no hatred in his heart before.

V.4. ignorantly] At unawares, or unwillingly: See Numbers 35,6,&c.

V.5. and live] That murder be not committed upon murder, by ſlaying of him in wrathful revenge, who ſlew another againſt his will.

V.7. for thee] He ſpeaketh to the people as to one man, or to Moſes, as in their names, and for their uſe.

V.8. enlarge thy coaſt] When thou goeſt over Jordan, and art poſſeſſed of the land of Canaan.

to give unto thy fathers] Which he promiſed to thy fathers to give thee, as to Abraham, Gen.15.7 to Iſaac, Gen.26.3 and to Jacob, Gen.28.13.

V.9. if thou ſhalt keep] The promiſe of the land of Canaan was but conditional, and therefore if the people did not their part, their failing of poſſeſſion was not Gods, but their own fault: See on chap.1.9.

ſhalt thou add] In thy enlarged portion verſe 8 which if it be without the land of Canaan, the cities of refuge ſhall be there; but we read not of thoſe three cities more added to the former ſix, for the enlargement of the dominion of the Iſraelites in the time of David and Solomon, was not ſo much in actual poſſeſſion, as a tributary dominion; in which caſe, (if it were none otherwiſe) the cities of refuge would have been of no uſe to the people of the Jews: nor was this therefore an idle ordinance, for if the people had kept covenant with God, he had enlarged their borders, not only by conditional ſubjection by tribute, but by actual poſſeſſion.

V.11. if any man hate, &c.] Num.35.20,21, &c.

V.12. of his citie] Not where the man-ſlayer hath taken Sanctuary for ſafety, but where the ſlain man dwelt.

V.13. put away the guilt] See Annot. on chap.17.7

V.14. land-mark] See Annot. on chap.27.17. Prov.22.28. Hoſ.5.10.

V.15. at the mouth] An Enallage of number: that is, of mouth for mouths; Or, though the ſeveral witneſſes, they muſt all agree as if they had but one mouth: Mat.18.16.

V.17. before the Lord] Gods preſence is where his Miniſters are aſſembled to do according to his commandements.

CHAP. XX.

Verſe 1. W*Hen thou goeſt*] Which is to be underſtood of a warrantable war, which requireth a juſt cauſe, and lawful authority, and great neceſſity, when peace will not be entertained, verſe 12.

V.2. the Prieſt] The Prieſt though he warred not with his hands, he animated to the battel with his tongue.

V.4. goeth with you] That is, is preſent to defend you with his grace and power.

V.5. not dedicated it] For when they entred firſt to dwell in an houſe, they gave thanks to God, acknowledging that they had that benefit by his grace, and it may be alſo feaſted with ſinging of Pſalmes at the firſt poſſeſſion of it, which was a kind of dedication of it to the uſe intended: See the Title of the thirtieth Pſalm, and Neh.12.27

V.6. planted a vineyard] Or garden, or any ſuchlike thing, which makes men unwilling to go to wars: for as in all the ſervices done to God, we are to bring a good will to the work; ſo eſpecially in war God requireth a moſt chearful and cordial reſolution to fight his battels.

not eaten of it] Heb. not made it common: For the Law concerning a vineyard was, that for the firſt three years the fruit of it ſhould not be eaten: the fourth year that ſhould be offered to God, and the fifth year it was common to the owners and others; ſee Lev.19.23.

V. 8 faint as well as] Cowardiſe is catching, eſpecially in ſuch as ſhould be leaders unto others; inſomuch that ſome hold that an army of Harts led by a Lion, would be more valourous and victorious then an army of Lions led by an Hart: See judg.7.7.

V. 10. proclaim peace] For though nothing ſeem more contrary to peace then war; yet war is not to be undertaken, if peace may be obtained without it: and the end of war ſhould be peace; and therefore David enquiring of Uriah concerning Joab his army, and the war; asked him of the peace of the war; ſo it is in the original, 2 Sam.11.7. But this is not to be underſtood of the Cities without the land of Canaan, verſe 15. thoſe without were to be more ſeverely dealt withal, ver. 16, 17. and for ſhewing them more favour Iſrael is blamed, Judg.1.28. See 2 Sam.20.18.

V. 14 women, and the little ones] the weakneſſe of the ſex in the one, and of age in the other, made them objects of compaſſion; when men, who were more able for doing, were more obnoxious to the ſuffering of violence; yet ſometimes the ſlaughter was to be general, when God did particularly preſcribe it, women and children not excepted, Joſh. 6. 21.

V. 15. Thus ſhalt thou do] In ſparing women and children, and taking the ſpoil, as verſe 14.

of theſe nations] Which are after mentioned, v. 16, 17.

V. 16. ſave alive nothing] If they refuſe conditions of peace, when they are tendred unto them, this ſlaughter is not to be underſtood of beaſts, but of mankind, Joſh.11 14. See on Joſh.9.15.

V. 17. the Hittites] See Annot. on chapter 7.1.

V. 19. is mans life] This is ſpoken of the fruitful tree, which miniſtred food for mans ſuſtenance, and ſo is called mans life, by a figure called a Metonymie, whereby the cauſe is put for the effect.

CHAP. XXI.

Verſe 1. SLain] This Law declareth how chary the Lord is of ſpilling mans blood, how diſpleaſing the ſhedding of it is to him, and how dangerous to others that have their hearts and hands defiled with it; when a whole City or country may be charged with one mans murder, and brought to puniſhment for it, if they do not ſolemnly teſtifie their clearneſſe from it.

and it be not known] Upon diligent enquiry after the blood-guilty perſon.

V. 2. they ſhall meaſure] If there were any doubt concerning the diſtance of it to the place of the ſlain.

V. 3. which is next] Since the guilty perſon might be moſt like to lurk there, or to have come thence to do the murther, or there to have conceived or plotted the execution of it; or becauſe they that were next, it is like, might have the firſt notice of that wicked act, and had therefore the advantage of other places for a ſpeedy purſuit and apprehenſion of the murderer.

yoke] The like is ſaid of the ſacrifice of the red Cow, Numb. 19.2 which as it was a type of Chriſt, had a ſuitable ſignification unto it. *S*ee the Annot. on that place: but here being killed for, or inſtead of the murderer, which ſhould have ſuffered if he had been taken; it may ſignifie an unruly wrathful man, not ſubject to the yoke of reaſon or conſcience, and ſo a ſon of Belial, that is, one without yoke: ſee on Chap. 13 v. 13.

V. 4. rough valley] A place of it ſelf to be abhorred, to make the thought or murther more horrible. The Hebrew word Nahhal, is put ſometimes for a brook, or for a valley, chap. 2 36. It ſignifyeth properly a declive place, or a place of deſcent, where waters uſually fall, and come together, although there be no water in it: and the word Ethan, rendring hereby rough, ſignifieth ſtrong; as either fortified by hills round about it, or having hard and ſtrong things in it, as rocks, and ſtones.

ſtrike off] Signifying that the murderer deſerved to be ſo uſed, and that they, if they had him, would do capital execution upon him.

V. 5. by their word] See Annot. on chap. 17.11.

V. 6 waſh their hands] Murder defileth the hands with blood, Iſa.1. 15 and waſhing the hands was a ceremony of clearing a mans ſelf from the guilt of it, Mat.27.24.

V. 7. this blood] By this it ſeems either the ſlain man was brought where the heifer was killed, or the heifer to the place where the ſlain man lay.

neither have our] We neither ſaw the deed when it was done, nor knew the living man that ſlew the ſlain.

V. 8. Be merciful] This was the prayer which the Prieſt made in the audience of the people.

Lay not innocent blood] That is, the blood of the ſlain: But if they were not guilty of it, what need they pray for mercy; or that the guilt might not be imputed unto them? Becauſe it was not enough not to have their hands or hearts polluted with ſo hainous a crime, but they muſt ſo far clear themſelves from it, as in this manner to ſhew their deteſtation of it, elſe they were to be reputed, and deſerved to be puniſhed as guilty, though not in ſo high a degree as the murderer.

V. 9. So ſhalt thou put away] So ſpeaketh Moſes to the Prieſt, ſhewing that thus they might acquit themſelves of that guilt of the fact, which otherwiſe in ſome degree would be charged upon them: *S*ee on Chap. 17. v. 7.

V. 12. ſhave her head] Which may be taken as a token of mourning for her final parting from her parents, v. 13. whom by that ceremony ſhe lamented, as to her utterly loſt and dead, eſpecially if they, or either of them were killed in the war; where is permitted unto her to mourn after the manner of her country; or her head might be ſhaven for the reaſon alledged in the next Annotation.

pare her nails] The Original hath no more but (ſhe ſhall make her nails) which ſome expound, That ſhe ſhall make or ſuffer them to grow, or, let her nouriſh her nails; and then the meaning may be, That the deformity of her ſhaven head and long nails, ſhould allay the affections of him that took her, that he might not take her to wife, unleſs ſhe ſhould ſhew her ſelf a true convert to the right Religion. But moſt read the words pare her nails, and the Original word being rendred (as it is by ſome) make, or dreſſe; by dreſſing of her nails may be meant paring of them; and ſo it might be to admoniſh her to put off her former manners, and to betake her ſelf to a contrary courſe, which is further implyed by putting off the atire of her captivity, (according to the cuſtome of changing the garment in mourning, 2 *S*am.14.2. See Joſeph. Antiq. l. 4. c 8) to ſhe muſt renounce her former Religion, and profeſſe the Religion of the Hebrews, elſe ſhe was not to be taken to wife, Exod.34.16.

V. 13. bewaile her father] See Annot. on ver. 12.

a full moneth] That time was obſerved in mourning for Aaron, Num. 20.29. and for *M*oſes, Deut. 34.8. but withal there might be ſomewhat more in this matter, as that the man that took her might learn to be moderate in his deſires, and to curb his concupiſcence by this monethly forbearance; and in that time he might be better acquainted with the womans diſpoſition, and ſo he might the better judge whether ſhe were fit or worthy to be his, or no.

thy wife] This was permitted only in the wars, otherwiſe they could not marry ſtrangers; nor ſo neither, but by ſuch an eſpecial allowance as this is.

V. 14. no delight in her] If he were actually married, he had not liberty to leave her, though he hated her, chap. 22.13, 19. but if upon ſome purpoſe of marriage, or intemperate deſires, he had lien with her, (which is meant by humbling her, and though mentioned without reproof, is not allowed) and had not yet married her, ſhe was of a captive to be made a free woman again.

let her goe whither ſhe will] Heb. thou ſhalt ſet her free to her ſoul. That is, give her power to do according as her ſoul deſireth; as in ſervitude, the ſoul is ſaid to be ſubject to the higher power, Rom.13.1.

V. 15. have two wives] In this ſuppoſition, plurality of wives is not allowed, being contrary to the firſt inſtitution of marriage, Gen.2. 24. to which our *S*aviour reduceth the Phariſees for reſolution of a matrimonial queſtion, Mat.19.4, 5. See on Gen.4.19. but preſuppoſing the practiſe, he reſolveth the caſe concerning the firſt-born ſon of the hated wife, which was held alſo in ſecond marriages: *S*ee on Chap. 17.17. ſee Gen.29.31. 1 *S*am.1.8.

V. 17. double portion] As if a man had two ſons, his eſtate being divided into three parts, the firſt-born was to have two, the other one; and if he have many ſons, he is to have double to them, as he muſt have a third part for their ſixth, a fourth for their eight, a fifth for their tenth throughout.

the right of the firſt-born is his] Except he deſerve to be deprived of it, as Reuben did, Gen.49.3, 4. 1 Chron.5 1.

V. 18. voice of his mother] For it is the mothers duty alſo to inſtruct her children, Prov.1.8. & 31.1.

when they have chaſtned him] This goeth beyond words: and if this chaſtning will either not be received, or if thereby he be not bettered, then when all other means were fruitleſſe, and hopeleſs, the magiſtrate was to be appealed unto.

V. 19. lay hold on him] Or, cauſe him to be apprehended.

V. 20. ſtubborn] Contumacy, or ſtubbornneſſe in a diſſolute perſon, ſhews he is incorrigible, therefore he deſerveth to dye by the Law.

a glutton] Heb. an eater, or, devourer of fleſh, and a drinker, or carouſer of wine: Becauſe uſually men are moſt exceſſive in ſuch kinde of meat and drink; though there may be, and is gluttony and drunkenneſs committed in other meats and drinks.

V. 21. ſtone him] Which death was alſo appointed to blaſphemers, and Idolaters; ſo that to diſobey the parents, and to be ſtubborn againſt their authority, is an horrible ſin: See Lev.20.9.

V. 23. all night] For Gods law by his death being ſatisfied, he required not that there ſhould be ſtill a viſible remembrance of his wrath; *S*ee Joſh.10.26. but it was otherwiſe in the caſe of Sauls ſons, 2 Sam. 21.9, 10. Gen.40.19. See on Joſh.8.29.

accurſed] A temporal curſe it is to all that undergoe it, Gal.3.13. which is ſeconded with an eternal malediction, on ſuch as die in their ſins without repentance, Luk.23.42.

that thy land be not defiled] That there might not be a viſible monument of an accurſed thing to remain: there was a defilement, by a ſcandalous looking on the dead malefactors, whereby ſome might take occaſion to murmur at the juſtice done upon them, and ſtrangers might think the worſe of Gods people for having ſuch malefactors among them. Or, by theſe words (that thy land be not defiled) may be meant that great offenders are to be put out of all manner of communion with men, being indeed vile as dung, Pſa.83.10. which was to be covered in the earth, chap. 23.13.

CHAP. XXII.

Ver.1. Hide thy ſelf] Or, make as if thou ſaweſt it not.

V.2. not nigh] Shewing that brotherly love muſt be ſhewed, not only to them that dwel neer unto us, but alſo to them that are far off: yea, in this caſe juſtice and charity muſt be offered to an enemy, Exod.23.4.

V.3. With his aſſe] And ſo likewiſe with his horſe: for under theſe creatures particularly named, the cattel or creatures of other kinds, are comprehended ſo far as they have reference to the good or hurt of their owners.

V.5. The woman ſhall not] For this prohibition there may be many reaſons: as, becauſe it was againſt the Ordinance of God, for diſtinction of ſexes, which would make men effeminate, and women immodeſt; and might be occaſion, or give opportunity to ſome to commit ſins againſt nature: and it is obſerved that the worſt and wickedeſt ſort of men, have been moſt noted for wearing the apparel of women; as Caligula, Sardanapalus, Clodius, and others.

abomination] Except in caſe of neceſſity, as for neceſſary covering.

V.6. dam with the young] If God deteſt cruelty done to birds, how much more to man, made according to his image? See on Lev.22.28.

V.8. battlements] Their houſes were ſo built that they might walk upon them, 2 Sam.11.2. Mat.10.27. and the battlements which were borders of each ſide, were to be ſo ſtrong, that one might ſafely lean on them, and ſo high that he might not be like to fall over them. See on Joſh.2.6.

V.9. not ſowe] The tenour of this law was to teach the people to walk in ſimplicity, and not to be curious of new inventions; as alſo to warn them againſt mixtures in Religion, and manners with other Nations.

defiled] Or, corrupted, which may be underſtood of a ceremonial defilement, for the neglect of a ceremonial Law, cauſed at leaſt a ceremonial uncleanneſs, both perſonal and real: and by theſe mixtures, the fruit might be phyſically corrupted, either by an ill temperament, or weak nouriſhment of them, eſpecially if they were ſown too thick, or that the ſtronger ſeed ſucked the juice from the weaker.

V.10. oxe and an aſſe] Which might be partly becauſe of their unequal ſtrength, and ſtature betwixt them, which might prove a preſſure to the lower and weaker: but withall (if not principally) to admoniſh the people againſt unmeet mixtures, and matches of the clean, and unclean; the oxe was a clean creature, the aſs unclean.

V.11. of wollen and linen] See Annot. on v.9. & Lev.19.19.

V.12 fringes] See Annot. on Num.15.39

V.17. the cloth] Meaning the ſheet wherein were the ſigns of her virginity, which are of the colour of a maidens bluſh: yet for the cleating of her innocency, the Elders (not the younger ſort) might have the view of them: for thereby (as Phyſicians affirm) the truth or falſhood of her husbands charge might be diſcerned, *Valeſ. de ſacra philoſ.c.*25.

V.18. chaſtiſe him] Either by ſtrokes, or very ſharp words at the leaſt, beſides the amercement, v.19.

V.19. to the father] For the fault of the child, redoundeth to the ſhame of the parents, therefore he was recompenſed ſince he was ſlandered.

not put her away] If ſhe be content to continue with him as his wife.

V.22. both of them dye] In adultery there is divers times the concurrence of ſeveral ſins of hainous guilt; as of vow-breaking, of theft, whereby one mans ſeed may come to inherit another mans eſtate; beſides the foulneſs of defiling the marriage bed with lawleſs luſt, and therefore it was puniſhed with death in both ſexes, without partiality to either.

becauſe ſhe cryed not] For her ſilence in ſuch a caſe, was a ſigne of conſent.

V.24. his neighbours wife] Becauſe ſhe was betrothed, ſhe was a wife in right, though not in fact; for the mutual ſtipilation or promiſe makes the marriage-bed, not the lying together, which is but a conſequence upon it, and a confirmation of it

V.26. ſo is this matter] By violence on the one ſide, and innocence on the other.

V.28. lay hold on her] This argueth violence, and enforcement, which goeth beyond inticement, and ſo it is a different caſe from that of Exod. 22.16.

V.29. fifty ſhekels] See Annot. on Exod. 22.17.

ſhall be his wife] That is, if her father give his conſent to the marriage, as in the place forecited.

V.30. his fathers wife] He ſhall not lye with his ſtepmother, meaning thereby, all other degrees are forbidden, Lev.18.8. & 20.11.

diſcover his fathers skirt] That is, uncover or remove that covering, which his father only had power to make bare, or naked. See on Ruth 3.9. Ezek.16.8.

CHAP. XXIII.

Ver.1. Wounded in the ſtones] In one or both of them: for the word is of the Singular Number. Or, is an Eunuch.

ſhall not enter] Shall not be accepted, or admitted, as one belonging to the Common-wealth of Iſrael, or bear any office in the Church or State of Iſrael, Levit. 22.21, 22. Nehem. 13. 1,2,3. Iſai. 56.3.

V.2. baſtard] Some reſtrain this to a baſtard, that was not a Jew, who, though he would embrace the Religion of the Iſraelites, was not to be admitted to their holy aſſemblies, howſoever, whether the Law be made of aliens, or home-born, it was an admonition of chaſtity, in regard of the infamy and contempt of ſuch a polluted poſterity.

V.3. tenth generation] Incluſively, ſo that until the grand-child of the eleventh deſcent, there was no admiſſion of the off-ſpring of a baſtard into the holy Congregation. Se Judg. 11.1.

for ever] Some reade, and for ever, as an aggravation of their rejection, as though that of the baſtard, ver.2. were too little; and therefore to ſhew the condition of the Amonite and Moabite more abominable to the Iſraelites, for ever, is added to the excluſion fore-mentioned. Or the meaning may be, that this ordinance againſt the Moabites to be caſt off to the tenth generation, was to laſt for ever, which is thought to be made rather againſt the men then againſt the women: for Moabitiſh wives (if their husbands were Iſraelites, as it was in the caſe of Booz and Ruth, Ruth.4.10.) had more acceptance among Iſraelitiſh women, then a Moabitiſh husband had among the men of Iſrael, if he had married an Iſraelitiſh wife. See Neh.13.1,2,3.

V.4. met you not] Hereby he condemneth all that further not the children of God in their vocation: not only they that doe hurt, but they that do not good to Gods people are diſpleaſing to him, and he will for their omiſſion of obſervance, repay them with vengeance. See Gen. 14.18 Mat.25 42.

V.7. thy brother] An Edomite is brother to an Iſraelite, as Edom, or Eſau (for he was called both) was brother to Iſrael or Jacob.

not abhor an Egyptian] The reaſon rendred is, becauſe the Iſraelites were ſtrangers in their land, though they endured hard bondage there, yet at their firſt coming they were very kindly entertained, Gen.47.6. and at their going out of Egypt, Exod.11.3. & 12. 35,36. and it was more agreeable to the goodneſſe of their Religion to forget the offences, then the favours of their Land-lords.

V.8. third generation] After their firſt profeſſion of the Iſraelitiſh Religion, if their fathers having renounced Idolatry and received Circumciſion, their children perſiſt in the profeſſion of the ſame.

V.9. then keep thee] A Souldier ſhould be a Saint, and preciſely abſtain from all ſorts of ſin, as a dying ſick man, ſince (carrying his ſoul in his hand, Judg.12.3. 1 Sam.19.5.) he is in danger of death every ſtep, and conſequently of damnation, if he dye in ſin unrepented of.

V.10. out of the Camp] That was for the people, but if a Prieſt were ceremonially unclean, it was enough for him (as ſome affirm) to go out of the Temple or Tabernacle, and Court of either; and if any were unclean before, he was to keep out of the Camp, or Temple, &c. and not to enter until he were cleanſed by waſhing, v.11. See Num. 19.

V.12. whither thou ſhalt go] For the neceſſities of nature.

V.13. a paddle upon thy weapon] Or, beſides thy weapons, or, among thy weapons: Which, what it was, may be know by the uſe to which it is put in this verſe, which ſheweth, that Gods people ſhould be pure, both in ſoul and body: and by this curioſity concerning bodily defilements, he meant to admoniſh them to be ſo much more curious of the cleanneſs of the ſoul, as it is more excellent then the body.

V.14. walketh in the midſt] Becauſe the Ark, which was the ſign of Gods eſpecial preſence, was placed in the midſt of the Camps of Iſrael.

V.15. not deliver] This is meant eſpecially of the Heathen, who fled from their maſters cruelty and embraced true Religion, who were not to be given up to their Maſters, until they had given over their wrath, and were reconciled unto them.

V.18. hire of a whore] Hereby is forbidden that any gain of evil things ſhould be applyed to the ſervice of God, Mic.1.7. but the Pope takes tribute of whores, and Papiſts hold the price of whoredome to be baſe, but not unjuſt.

or of a dog] Haply becauſe the impudence of luſt is compared to that of dogs, wherefore ſuch as were moſt ſhameleſſe were called Cynicks from dogs: ſome take it to be the price of ſome dog of moſt uſe, let out for hire to breed others of the ſame race; or of the price of the firſt of the litter, which was neither to be offered nor redeemed, as the firſtling of an aſs was, Exod.13.13.

V.19. upon uſury] See Annot. on Exod.22.25.

V.20. unto a ſtranger] This was permitted for a time, partly for the hardneſs of their hearts, as bills of divorce; but by a ſtranger was to be underſtood, one rather of another Religion, then of another nation; for if he were a convert to the Iſraelitiſh Religion, he was to be accounted as a brother, Lev.19.34. & 25.35,36. See on chap.15. 2.

Bleſſe thee] If thou ſhew thy charity to thy brother, God will declare his love towards thee.

V.21. ſin in thee] If thou ſhouldſt not pay, or perform what thou haſt vowed, Num.30.2 Eccleſ.5 4.

V.23. keep and perform] If the vow be lawful and godly.

V.24. neighbours vineyard] Orchard, or Olive-yard, being hired to labour in it, or ſuch as occaſionally paſſe by them, or through them, if neceſſity urge them, they may take ſome refreſhing, as the Diſciples did paſſing through corn-fields which they ſowed not, Mat.12.1.

put any into thy veſſel] To bring home to thy houſe,

CHAP. XXIV.

Verſe 1. S*ome uncleanneſſe*] Nor of adultery, as ſome take it: for if that could be proved, ſhe was to die for it, Lev. 20.10. Deut.22.23,24 and if it were doubtful, ſhe was to be tryed by the water of jelouſie. Num.5. but ſome bodily uncleanneſs, as of leproſie, or ſome other diſeaſe which hindred contentment in her. To theſe, as cauſes of divorce, are added by ſome, barrenneſs, madneſs, ſtubbornneſs, reproachful inſolency toward her husband, which is an uncleanneſs of the mind, or any other things which might diſpoſe him rather to loath them then to love her.

bill of divorcement] Hereby God approveth not the fickleneſs of mens affections, in a light, or cauſeleſs leaving of their wives, Mal.2.16. but permitteth a parting, for prevention of danger through diſlike, Mat. 5. 31. & 19.6,7,8,9 In this Bill, (which was a ſchedule of writing) the husband gives his wife a releaſe of the bands of marriage, and liberty to go whither ſhe would, and to marry whom ſhe would; this ſeemeth to have been rather at the husbands choice to give the wife a bill of divorce, then at the wives to give one to the husband, which was not allowed among the Jews, as Joſephus affirmeth, Antiq.lib.15.c.11.

V. 4. may not take her again to be his wife, after that ſhe is defiled] That is, put away for ſome uncleanneſs, or if ſhe were not taken by the ſecond man as a wife, her lying with him was an uncleanneſs; and ſuch a putting away for a time only, might occaſion an unlawful love of one mans wife, to be another mans bed-fellow: By this debarring of the husband of liberty, to reſume her that was divorced, might make him leſſe forward to put away his wife. See Mal. 2. 14,15,16. Yet before ſhe was taken to the bed of another, he might take her again, but not after, though ſhe were again divorced.

cauſe the land to ſin] If ſuch lightneſs and leudneſs ſhould be practiſed, or permitted, it would draw a guilt of ſin upon the people, and a curſe upon the land, Pſal.107.34.

V. 5. with any buſineſſe] Which may cauſe him to break off co-habitation with his new married wife: ſee chap.20.7. Prov.5.18.

V. 6. mil ſtone] (Whether upper or neather, becauſe without both he cannot grinde) nor any thing whereby a man getteth his living, which therefore is called his life in this verſe.

V. 7. ſtealing] See Annot. on Exod.21.16.

V. 8. of the plague of leproſie] Which thou maiſt incur by contempt of their authority who are ſet over thee, whether in the Church, or in the Common-wealth: See 2 Chron.26.19. Num.12.16.

V.10. not go into his houſe] Although thou maiſt appoint what to have, yet thou ſhalt receive for a pledg, what he may ſpare, and will willingly part withal.

V. 12. ſleep with his pledg] What pledg is here meant, is plain by verſe 13 and by this God admoniſhed the lender to take ſuch a pledg, (if any at all) as he ſhould not need often to return, and reſume.

V. 13. Sun goeth down] See Annot. on Exod.22.26.

before the Lord] As done with reſpect to Gods preſence, and knowledg; though the man may be unthankful, yet God will not forget it; but accept it as an act of conformity to his own law, and ſo far righteous, and withal as merciful to man, as righteous before God. See on Mat.6.1.

V. 16. The children] This is a law for man to follow; but God, to whom all, both parents and children, are guilty of ſin, and who is ſupreme Lord of life and death, is not bound unto it. See on Exod. 20. v. 5. & Joſh.7.24. & 2 Sam.25.22. Ezek. 18 20. 2 King. 14.6. Jer.31. 30.

V. 17. the ſtranger] Who being unknown, and without friends, was moſt like to be wronged by falſe accuſations, and other hard meaſure; therefore God had ſo much the more care of their comfortable condition, as men have the leſs. See Iſa.1.23. Jer.5.28. Ezek.22.29.

V. 18. Therefore I command thee] To do juſtice, and to ſhew mercy unto ſtrangers, to the fatherleſſe and widdow, of oppreſſing whom thou ſhouldeſt be the more apprehenſive, becauſe thou thy ſelf waſt oppreſſed in Egypt, and thou muſt ſhew thy ſelf thankful for thy deliverance, by charitable offices towards them that need; for he will not judg them mindful of his benefits, who are not beneficial unto others.

V.19. not go again to fetch it] A merciful oblivion is to be preferred before a juſt remembrance. This care of the poor is obſervable, Lev.19. 9. wherein men were to be ſo free, that they ſhould rather remember to leave a portion for the poor, Joſeph. Antiq.lib. 4.c.81. then fetch that home, which by forgetfulneſs was left behind.

CHAP. XXV.

Verſe 2. B*Eaten*] When the crime deſerveth not death.

V 3. fourty ſtripes] Every fault that deſerved not death, was not to be puniſhed with fourty ſtripes, for correction muſt be done according to the proportion of the fault, ver.2. but the puniſhment of any fault (which was not capital) muſt not exceed the number of fourty ſtripes, of which the Jews uſed to abate one, leaſt they ſhould by miſcounting go one beyond: yet ſometimes it is like ſome of them did not out of mercy make that ſtint, but out of cruelty, that they might begin their account again the ſooner; it might be ſo with Saint Paul, when as we read, 2 Cor.11.24. he five times received fourty ſtripes ſave one, (as it is probable for preaching five times againſt their minds) the keeping back of that one, might bring thirty nine upon his back the ſooner, and ſo for that one he might have one hundred fifty and ſix; ſo cruel are the mercies of ſome wicked men. Some think theſe ſtripes were given with a whip of three leather thongs, wherewith having given thirteen blows, they made account they had given thirty nine ſtripes, one leſſe then the juſt number, for three times thirteen, is thirty nine.

V. 3. vile] As if he were rather a ſlave then a brother, or rather a beaſt then a man; and by uſing of extreme tyranny in this kind, mens hearts might be hardned in cruel contempt of thoſe whom they ſhould love and eſteem, hating the ſin, and not hurting the ſinner, but ſo as may tend to his greater good. Or, he might become vile by extremity of pain, falling down to the ground as half dead, or by loſing the ligaments of the retentive faculty.

V. 4. treadeth out] There were many wayes to bring the grain out of the eare of Corn, as threſhing Inſtruments, 2 Sam. 24. 22. beating with a ſtaff, bringing the wheel over the ear, Iſa.28. 27,28. and here by treading of the oxe, (which was in uſe, not only with the Jews, Hoſ.10 11. but with Romans, Greeks, and other Nations. Varro de re Ruſtica, l.1. c.12. Columella, de re Ruſtica, l. 2.c. 21) the beaſt while he was laboured, was not to have his mouth muzzled, but might feed himſelf while he prepared food for man, and had as much liberty to his meat, as his Maſter had authority over his work. Saint Paul applies this to the maintenance of the Labourers in the Goſpel: See 1 Cor.9.9,10.—— 5. 18. Prov.12.14.

V. 5. her husbands brother] Or next kinſman, for the Hebrew word Jabham, ſignifieth not only a natural brother, but alſo a kinſman; ſo it may be that it is not meant that the natural brother ſhould marry his brothers wife, but ſome other of the kindred, who was in that degree which might marry; yet it may be a natural brother, as Onan was to Er: See Annot. on Gen.38.8. and if there were many brothers, this rule was, when as one dyed, ſucceſſively to be obſerved by the next ſurviving brother; but this was to have place only where the brother died altogether childleſſe; for if he had no ſon, but a daughter, there was another rule to be obſerved, for continuation of the name and family of the deceaſed, Num.36.2, 3. ſo that beſides the caſe of extreme neceſſity, when the brother died altogether childleſs, the Negative precept, Levit.18.16. & 20.21. ſtood in force.

V. 6. in the name] That is, in the ſtead, for it was not neceſſary, that the name of the firſt husband ſhould be put upon the ſon of the ſecond; for the ſon of Boaz by Ruth was not called Mahlon, the name of her firſt husband, but Obed. See Ruth 4.10, &c.

V. 9. looſe his ſhooe] Looſing of the ſhooe and giving it, Ruth 4.7,8. was a ceremony of alienation of land, whereby the ſeller, reſigning up his land to the buyer, made tender of his ſhooe, ſignifying, that not he, but the buyer had the right to tread on that ground from that time forward. In this caſe the like ceremony was uſed, but with another intimation, to keep a memorial of contempt to the unkind brother, who was held as worthy to go barefoot, in that he would not uphold the name of his brother, and raiſe up ſeed unto him.

ſpit on his face] Or, on the ground before him, as in contempt and defiance of him.

that will not build up] By raiſing him iſſue to uphold his family. See Annot. on Exod.1.21.

V. 12. cut off her hand] Becauſe by ſuch an act ſhe may maim the man, and utterly diſable him from being a father; and becauſe ſhe ſheweth her ſelf to be a very impudent woman, and it is an horrible thing to ſee a woman paſt ſhame.

V. 13 a great and a ſmall] For deceitful barganings to buy by the great weight, and to ſell by the ſmall: See Prov.20.10.

V. 18. and ſmote the hindmoſt] This belongeth to the ſtory of the war of the Amalakites againſt the Iſraelites, Exod.17. yet there this particular is not mentioned, the wiſdom of the Holy Ghoſt holding it fitteſt to be mentioned in this place; the like is obſerved of other paſſages before.

V. 19 blot out the remembrance] This was partly accompliſhed by Saul, about four hundred and fifty years afterward, 1 Sam.15.2,3. and further purſued by the Simeonites in Hezekiahs dayes, 1 Chron. 4.42. and yet further when Queen Eſther prevailed againſt Haman and his ten ſons, Eſt.7.10. & 9.12,13. who were ſlips of that corrupt and accurſed ſtock of Amalek, Exod.17.46.

CHAP. XXVI.

Verſe 2. T*He firſt of all*] By this Ceremony, they acknowledged that they received the Land of Canaan as a free gift of God: this oblation was yearly, and the time of the year when it was made, was the feaſt of Tabernacles, Numb.18.12. See Levit. 23.19.

to place his Name] To be called upon, ſerved and worſhipped: See Annot. on Chap.16.2.

V. 5. A Syrian] Meaning Jacob, who lived twenty years in Syria with Laban, who was the ſon of Bethuel the Syrian, Gen.31.24,38.

ready to periſh] By the deadly hate of his brother Eſau purpoſing to kill him, Gen. 27.41. and his approaching towards him, with four hundreth men in an hoſtile manner, Gen. 33. 1. after, by his hard ſervice unto Laban, wherein he was conſumed by drought in the day, and froſt in the night, Gen. 31. 40. and laſtly, ready to periſh by the famine in Canaan, whence he removeth into Egypt, for neceſſary ſuſtenance to preſerve his life, Gen. 42. 1, 2, &c. and 46. 1.

V. 7. when we cried] Alledging the promiſes made to our fathers, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob.

V. 9. floweth with] See Annot. on Exod. 3. v. 8.

V. 10. thou ſhalt ſet] Thou ſhalt bring it neer the place where it ſhall be ſet, but the Prieſt ſhall take it out of thy hand and place it, verſ. 4.

it] That is, the basket where the firſt-fruits are put, verſ. 2.

before the Lord] That is, before the Altar of the Lord, v. 4.

V. 11. rejoyce] See Chap. 12. v. 7.

V. 12. year of tything] To wit, the third year. There was a three-fold tithe taken, one was out of the whole for allowance of the Levites, another out of that which remained for the owners to eat with thankeſgiving in the place where the Sanctuary was ſituate; as in the City of Shiloh when the Tabernacle ſtood there, and afterwards in Jeruſalem where the Temple was built; and of the third tithe, ſee Annot. in Chap. 14. 28. From this addition of tithe more then was other yeares, (For in them there was but a double tithe, in this a third tithe beſides the other two) the third yeare was called the year of tithing.

the third year] See Deut. 14, 28.

V. 13. before the Lord] That is, ſincerely, as in his preſence without all guile or hypocriſie.

V. 14. my mourning] That is, being ceremonially unclean by mourning for, and burial of the dead; for none ſuch might eat thereof, Levit. 7. verſ. 20. See Hoſ. 9. 4. It was to be eaten with rejoycing, as in manner of feaſting, Chap. 16. verſ. 11, 15. See on verſe the twelfth of this Chapter, and Chap. 28. verſ. 47.

for any unclean] Common or profane uſe, or for any unclean perſon to eat thereof.

for the dead] To furniſh the funeral of the dead, whereof ſee Jer. 6. 7. or the ſacrifice offered to dumb and dead Idols, Pſal. 106. 28.

according to all] As far as ſinful nature would ſuffer; for elſe as David and Paul ſay, there is not one juſt, Pſal. 14. ver. 3. Rom. 3. 10.

V. 17. Thou haſt avouched] The Covenant betwixt God and his people, conſiſts of mutual conditions; on the peoples part the conditions are faith and obedience, whereby they embrace him, and rely upon him as their God; and obedience to his Commandments, as to their Law-maker and Governour.

V. 18. the Lord hath avouched] On Gods part, the conditions are to take them for his peculiar people; which implyeth both his protection of them, and proviſion for them, both for this life and the next.

CHAP. XXVII.

Verſ. 1. I Command you] That is, Moſes Gods Miniſter: Or, God by his Miniſter Moſes.

V. 2. great ſtones,] Theſe were not for building of an Altar; but being ſmoothed over with plaiſter, they ſerved for another uſe, noted in the next verſe.

V. 3. write upon them] What was written, ſee Annot. on v. 8. and for the reaſon why we may conceive it to be, for that God would have his Law ſet up in the borders of the Land of Canaan, that all that looked thereon, might know that the Land was dedicated to his ſervice; and that the twelve Tribes (according to whoſe number, it is probable, the ſtones were twelve) were eſpecially obliged to obedience to the Law of God upon their actual poſſeſſion of the promiſed Land.

V. 4. mount Ebal] See on verſ. 12.

V. 5. iron tool] The Altar ſhould not be curiouſly wrought, becauſe it was to continue but for a time: for God would have but one Altar in Judah; and as yet the ark not having a certain place, the altar was to be but ſuch a one as might ſerve for the preſent occaſion, and afterwards be eaſily demoliſhed.

V. 8. upon the ſtones] That is, not upon the ſtones of the altar, verſ. 5, 6. but upon the ſtones which were plaiſtered, verſ. 4.

this Law] Not the whole book of Deuteronomie, or Exodus, but the principal part of the Law, which is the ten Commandments, with ſome other ſelected parcels of moſt uſe for edification of the people, which were (as ſome conceive) the bleſſings and curſings upon Mount Gerezzim and mount Ebal, verſ. 12, 13.

very plainly] So that it may be eaſily and readily read by thoſe who are leaſt skilful in reading.

V. 9. this day thou art become] See Annot. on Chap. 26. ver. 17, 18.

V. 12. Theſe ſhall ſtand] See Annot. on Chap. 11. 29.

upon] Joſh. 8. 33. It is ſaid, over againſt; yet no contradiction; for they that ſtood upon the one, ſtood over againſt the other.

Gerizzim] Is a Mountain neer the City Shechem, Judg. 9. 7. Neer unto it, (onely a little valley betwixt them) is Mount Ebal, which v. 4. was named before Mount Gerezzim, becauſe the curſes, after mentioned pronounced from the top of Ebal, take up a very great part of the Chapter.

Simeon, and] Onely the Tribes who were born of the wives of Jacob Leah, and Rachel, (though not all of them, for Inceſtuous Reuben the Elder and Zebulon the youngeſt of Leahs ſonnes ſtood upon Mount Ebal) are named firſt, and have the more honourable part applyed to them, which is to aſſiſt at the pronouncing of bleſſings from Mount Gerezim.

Joſeph] Meaning Ephraim and Manaſſeh his ſons, in whom he had a double portion; for they were each of them reputed, and provided for as ſeveral Tribes.

V. 13. curſe] Signifying, that if they would not obey God for love, they ſhould be made to obey for fear.

V. 14. the Levites] The maine body of the Tribe was to ſtand on Mount Gerezzim, verſ. 12. by the Levites therefore we are to undeſtand the Prieſts, Joſ. 8. 33. theſe ſtood with the Ark in the valley betwixt the two hills, And there office, from God was to pronounce, not onely bleſſings, Num. 6. 23. at which they looked toward Mount Gerezzim, but curſes, at which they turned their faces toward Mount Ebal, to which the Tribes fore-named were (by their preſence and ſaying Amen) to ſignifie their aſſent.

loud voice] So loud that all might hear; or thoſe who were neer, beginning their Amen with a loud voice, the reſt might take it from them; and from them again others, till it went through all the company.

V. 15. image] Under this he containeth all the corruption of Gods ſervice againſt the firſt Table. See Exod. 20. 4.

in a ſecret place] God will not endure Idolatry in ſecret; much leſs when it is committed with publick ſcandal.

ſay, Amen] That is, ſome of them ſhall ſay Amen, at the pronunciation of the bleſſings, ſome at the denunciation of the curſes, as v. 12, 13.

Amen] Signifieth truth: or, be it true: and that either importeth a proteſtation, that it ſhall be ſo; or a prayer, that it may be ſo. See on Matth. 28. 20.

V. 17. land mark] To enlarge his own portion by taking from another mans: or diminiſh the inheritance of his father, to gratifie a friend. See 1 King. 21. 3.

V. 18. blind to wander] When his eyes ſhould rather guide him, and his hands lead him in the right way. See Job. 29. 15. Gen 27. 12. Lev. 19. 14.

V. 20. fathers skirt] See on Chap. 22. 30.

V. 26. to do them] Conformity in work, is the beſt confirming of the words of the Law; yet the law is ſo perfect, and all men ſince the fall ſo imperfect, that it is not onely a rule for our life, but a rod, upon diſcovery of our failings, to make us runne to Chriſt, the Lord of life, for ſafety againſt the ſecond death, Gal. 3. 24.

CHAP. XXVIII.

THis Chapter is for the material contents of it much like the 26. of Leviticus, ſo that the clearing of that may be a ſparing of ſome labour in the expounding of this.

Verſ. 2. overtake thee] If thou be diligent in hearing, and conſtant in doing of the will of God out of pure love to him, though thou haſt no mind of the reward, but ſhouldeſt rather run from it, then aim at it, or labour for it; bleſſings nevertheleſſe ſhould folow thee ſo faſt as to be ſure to overtake thee.

V. 7. ſeven wayes] That is, many wayes; a certain number for an uncertain; as v. 25. Lev. 26. 24.

V. 8. command the bleſſing] We obtain bleſſings by intreaty, but God beſtoweth them by command, ſince the creatures can no more reſiſt his power in their uſe, then in their eſſence, when at firſt he commanded their being.

V. 10. the Name of the Lord] That is, ye are the Lords children, as Chap. 14. 1. Or, his peculiar people, Chap. 26. 18.

afraid of thee] The holy league betwixt God and his people, is matter of terrour to thoſe, who otherwiſe would be a terrour to them. See Exod. 23. 22.

V. 21. treaſure, the heaven] Heaven is the treaſure of every bleſſing; even thoſe which are moſt earthly, have their Original from thence.

V. 13. and not the tail] A proverbial ſpeech, importing high preheminence, or a ſecurity, from contempt. See Iſa. 9. v. 13.

V. 15. not hearken] To hearken, is more then to hear, for that comprehendeth hearing with attention, and with a ready diſpoſition to actual obedience.

V. 20. periſh quickly] Plagues ſhall come on apace, treading on the heeles of one another, like Jobs meſſengers, making haſte to make thee quickly miſerable many wayes. See Job. Chap. 1.

V. 23. braſſe] See on Lev. 26. 19.

V. 24. powder and duſt] That is, in ſtead of rain; by exceeding great drought grains of duſt ſhall aſcend into the ayr with the wind, and come down as the drops of rain in a ſhower when it is kindly weather.

V. 26. carkaſſe] Thou ſhalt be curſed both in thy life and in thy death, and after it, for thy burial is a teſtimony of the reſurrection but for thy wickedneſſe thou ſhalt want, it being left a prey to be devoured by the fowls of the ayr, and the beaſts of the earth, See on Deut. 6. 8.

V. 27. botch of Egypt] See Exod. 9. 9.

Emrods] A diſeaſe proceeding principally of the exceſſe, and malignity of melancholick blood in the heads of the veines of the fundament, which ſometimes bleed, and ſometimes gather into knots with a painful ſwelling, called by ſome the Piles.

V. 29. grope at noon day] In things evident and clear, thou ſhalt lack diſcretion and judgement to do what is beſt, or to prevent, and avoid the worſt.

V. 32. to another people] Carried captive to another Nation. ver. 41.

thine eyes ſhall look] When they ſhall return from their captivity.

V. 36. and thy King] As he did Manaſſeh, Jehojakim, Zedekiah, and others; for they have no more priviledge to offend, nor protection from puniſhment, then their meaneſt ſubjects.

ſerve other Gods] There is no God but one, Iſa. 4. 8. the maker of all things; but there are many gods made by the fond fancies of men: theſe they ſhall be made to ſerve, either blinded in their underſtandings, or forced againſt their conſciences. See Dan. 3. 19, &c.

V. 40. caſt his fruit] Before it come to maturity.

V. 42. locuſt conſume] Under one kind is contained all the vermine which deſtroy the fruit of the land, which ſometimes ſucceed and prey upon the leavings of each other; as Joel 1. 4.

V. 43. very high] Heb. high, high.

very low] Heb. low, low.

V. 44. and thou the tail] See Annot. on ver. 13.

V. 46. for a ſign] Of Gods great indignation, which ſhall be evident upon thee.

for a wonder] That a people once ſo happy in Gods favour, ſhould be ſo unwiſe and wicked as to deſerve ſo great a change.

V. 49. as the Eagle flyeth] With ſwiftneſſe of her wings, greedineſſe of prey, without any reſpect or pitie: ſuch were their enemies mentioned Jer. 4. 13. Lam. 4. 19, & Ezek. 17. 3. See Dan. 7. 4. ſuch were the Chaldeans, Jer. 5. 15. & Romans, Luk. 19. 43.

V. 53. the fruit of thine own body] See Lev. 26. 29.

V. 55. not give to any of them] That is, neither to his brother, nor to his wife, nor to the remnant of his children, whom yet he hath not eaten.

V. 57. between her feet] See Annot. on Gen. 49 10.

V. 58. to do all] For he that willingly offendeth in one point, is guilty of all; becauſe he contemns the Author of the Law; and he that contemns him in one point, obeyes him not in any, James 12. 0 For though he obſerve the matter of the Law, he doth it for ſome other reaſon, then the Word, or Law of God, and ſo to him it is no obedience.

fearful Name] The name of God is ſometimes put for God himſelf, as Pſal. 20. 1. Joel 2. 32. ſo here.

V. 61. not written] Though God hath threatned many ſorts of puniſhments in expreſſe termes, yet he hath many more plagues in ſtore, then are committed to record, or writing.

V. 63. rejoyce over you to deſtroy] Not as a work of miſery to the creature, Ezek. 33. 11. but as an execution of juſtice upon the ſinner.

V. 64. ſerve other gods] See Annot. on ver. 36.

V. 68. with ſhips] In mentioning Ships, he gives them occaſion to remember their paſſage through the Sea without ſhips, by Gods miraculous making of the water to give way unto them, Exod. 14 21, 22, 29. and to ſtand as a wall on each ſide their paſſage, and afterward to turn, and overwhelm their enemies. This mention of Ships by Moſes, confutes the fiction of them who fain there were no ſhips untill about fourty yeares before the laſt Trojan Wars, which is later then this record of Moſes by above two hundred yeares: and although this be a Prophecy for after-times, Moſes ſpeaketh of Ships as things then known to thoſe, to whom he ſpake. *S*ee on Gen. 8. 17. and 9. 1.

thou ſhalt ſee it no more again] That is, that miraculous way foretold by God, and fore-mentioned by Moſes, Exod. 14. 16. thou ſhalt not go that way, nor ſhalt ſee that way any more; for that is covered with the *S*ea, which no more ſhall be divided to ſhew the bare ground for thy paſſage, as once it did. Or, no more that long and winding way by many turnings and changes to and fro, backward or forward, in the wilderneſs; and when many hundreds of yeares after, the Jews (upon the taking of Jeruſalem by the Romanes) were ſold captives many wayes, and ſome were carried into Egypt partly by Ships, partly by the way of the Wilderneſſe; yet was not their paſſage in the ſame road or way whereby they paſſed out of Egypt towards Canaan. See Chap. 17. 16.

no man ſhall buy you] That is, ſet to ſale, and they ſhall be ſo vile, and contemptible, that none ſhall bid any mony for you, or, you ſhall be ſold, and none ſhall buy you again by way of redemption; and hereof read Joſephus of the Warres of the Jews, lib. 17. cap. 16.

CHAP. XXIX.

Verſ. 1. B*Eſide the covenant*] The ſame in ſubſtance, but not altogether the ſame, but much varied with ſundry additions of explanation, admonition, with ſome new commands, comminations, and benedictions, which were not mentioned in the former Edition of the Covenant; in which reſpect it may be ſaid to be diverſe from the former ſo diverſe, as if it were another beſides it.

V. 2. Moſes called] It is not like that all this was delivered at once, but that the people diſmiſſed having heard ſome part and then diſmiſſed were called together again to hear the reſt.

ye have ſeen] See on Exod. 19. 4. and on Deut. 2. 7.

V. 3. temptations] Tryals or proofs of Gods power. See Annot. on Chap. 7 19.

V. 4 not given you] They had both naturally eyes and ears but a ſpirituall apprehenſion and uſe of thoſe great works they had not; and they had it not, becauſe God had not given it unto them: ſo that wonders without the work of grace, will not avail for mans converſion, but grace without them will be ſufficient for Faith and ſalvation.

V. 5. clothes not waxed old] See Annot. on Chap. 8. 4.

V. 6 not eaten bread] Made by mans art, but Manna, which is the bread of Angels, Pſal. 78. 24, 25.

or ſtrong drink] For your drink hath been as miraculous as your bread; water fetched out of the rock, Num. 20. 11. Pſal. 78. 15, 16.

that ye might know] By a miraculous ſupply of your wants of both; how great a God I am in power, how able to provide for my people without ordinary means.

V. 10. all of you] All of what difference ſoever, by ſex, by age, ſtature or ſtate muſt be made to know what they are bound to keep.

before the Lord] Who ſeeth you, though you ſee not him; and in you ſeeth what man cannot ſee, (your hearts) and therefore you may not think to diſſemble with him in making of the Covenant, nor in a guileful obſervation of it.

V. 11. thy ſtranger] *S*uch as came with thee out of Egypt, and left their Idolatrous Religion behind them.

from the hewer] A proverbial ſpeech, as from a thread to a ſhoe-latchet, Gen. 14 23. *S*ee Joſ. 9. 21.

V. 12. enter] Heb. paſſe. Alluding to them who when they made a ſure Covenant divided a beaſt, and paſt between the parts divided. *S*ee Annot. on Gen. 15. 10.

V. 13. a people unto himſelf] Chap. 28. 9.

V 15 that is not here] Meaning your poſterity.

V. 16 paſſed by] To come through (as is ſaid before) and to paſſe by, (as here) ſeem repugnant; but the meaning is, that they came through ſome parts of the Nations, where they ſaw their Idols, ver. 17. and paſſed by others; or that though they came through them, they made no ſtay among the people, but as wayfaring men paſſed away.

V. 18. Leſt there ſhould be] He propoſeth the Covenant in general terms both for thoſe that are, and thoſe that ſhall be, verſ. 14, 15. leſt any one ſhould expect a priviledge from the curſe, if he do tranſgreſſe: or this word (leſt) may be anſwered by ver. 20 leſt any one ſhould do ſo, the Lord proteſteth he will not ſpare him. See Heb. 12. 25. verſ. 19 adde drunkenneſſe to thirſt. See on Prov. 23. 35.

root that beareth] That is, a corrupt heart whence proceed evil words and deeds, which are bitter leaves and fruit; bitter by repentance if they be pardoned, and bitter by pain if they be puniſhed; and unto God as diſtaſteful as the bittereſt gall can be unto man. And though it be in the root, and that hidden in the ground, yet it is as well known to God, as that which is in the branches or fruit are to men which are obvious to the view or taſte of man.

V. 23. brimſtone and ſalt] The heat of brimſtone and ſalt dry up the fruitful juyce of the earth, and make it barren; wherefore Abimelech when he had overthrown the City of Sechem ſowed the ground with ſalt, Judg. 9. 45. See Pſal. 107. 34. text and margine. Jer. 17. 6.

V. 28. as it is this day] Theſe words are not to be taken as ſpoken by Moſes himſelf, or as if the condition of the people were in his time ſuch as is ſaid, verſ. 22. but they are ſpoken as of the time when the Prophecy ſhould come to paſs, as in the name, and by thoſe who ſhould ſee it accompliſhed.

V. 29 the ſecret things] Theſe words are not, as the former, the words of God, but of Moſes; & they are an Epiphonema, or a ſentencious concluſion of that which went before, wherein mention is made concerning curſes and judgements, in which there are many ſecrets which men cannot ſearch into, as the wicked thoughts of men, and their privy practiſes, Chap 27. verſ. 15 what manner of curſe ſhall come upon men for their ſinnes as they are particularly named, Chap. 27. ver. 15, &c. and when they ſhall come, and who are impenitently guilty of ſuch ſinnes, as deſerve theſe curſes; theſe and ſuch like ſecrets we muſt leave as locked up in Gods private Cloſet, of which the key is in his own keeping, not in ours.

V. 29. revealed things] Are of many ſorts, but thoſe here chiefly meant, are the Rules of duty to God and man, revealed not for contemplation, but for practice, and the Judgements in the generall before threatned to the tranſgreſſors of them; in which ſentence he giveth a Caveat againſt curious preſumption in prying into hidden matters, and careleſſe neglect of known Laws.

CHAP. XXX.

Verſ. 1. B*Leſſing and the curſe*] Firſt the bleſſing, the ungratefull neglect, and the ungracious abuſe whereof deſerveth the curſe; or, the bleſſing to thoſe that keep the Law; the curſe to ſuch as break it.

hath driven thee] Upon preſuppoſal of their great ſinne, he foretelleth their puniſhment, whereof he ſpeaketh by way of aſſurance, as if it were already come upon them.

V. 3 turn thy captivity] That is, return thee out of thy captivity. Pſal. 126. 1. 147. 2.

V. 4 utmoſt parts of heaven] As farre upon earth as there is heaven beyond or above it.

fetch thee] And bring thee into thy Countrey.

V. 6 circumciſe thy heart] See what is legally commanded Chap 10. 16. is here evangelically promiſed on Chap. 10. verſ. 16.

V. 11. not hidden from thee] The Law is ſo evident that none can pretend he is ignorant of it.

V. 13. beyond the ſea] By heaven, verſ. 12. and ſea here, he meaneth places moſt diſtant. See Rom. 10. 6.

V. 14 very nigh] So neer, that it is within thy nautre, and thou canſt not pretend any ignorance of it, for it is by word of mouth revealed to thee, and that thou mayeſt not forget it, it ſhall be written for thee, Chap. 31. 9.

that thou mayeſt do it] By Faith in Chriſt, for ſo his obedience is made ours, & without it, mans obedience is very imperfect, not onely becauſe.

cauſe he cannot do all he ſhould, but becauſe he doth not all he might in outward exerciſes and duties of devotion.

V. 16. love] So that to love and obey God, is the means to eſcape death, and to obtain life eternal.

to keep his Commandements] Though God command to keep his Commandements, it doth not follow, that it is in mans power to perform them, (no more then it was in the power of Lazarus to deliver himſelf from whence Chriſt bad him come forth, Joh.11.43. and ſuch as was his corporal, is mans ſpiritual deadneſſe, Eph.2.1.) for the Law implyeth a right of command, and a duty to obey, and not any ability thereto, or if an ability, an ability once had, though ſince loſt, when entruſted to the cuſtody of our firſt parents free-will, it was treacherouſly made away by their conſent to the evil motions of Satan.

V. 19. I call heaven] See Annot.on Ch.4.26.

V. 20. thy life and] That is, effectively the cauſe, or Chriſt the Author of life and length of dayes, for in him we live, move, and have our being, that is, by power and virtue from him, Act.17.28.

CHAP. XXXI.

Verſ.1. W*Ent and ſpake*] That is, (as ſome take it) Moſes went to the people aſſembled together, and to them aſſembled, ſpake as followeth: but it may be, went and ſpake, is, he went on in ſpeaking, or began again to ſpeak; for the Hebrews uſe to phraſe beginning, by going, or riſing.

V. 2. an hundred and twenty years old] His years might have made him too aged to bear ſo great a burden, yet his ſight was not dimme, nor his natural force decayed when he dyed, Deut.34.7. but the chief reaſon was, he knew though he were neither ſick, nor weak, he muſt quickly dye, ver.14. and muſt not lead the people over Jordan, as he ſaith in the next words, and that Joſhua was deſigned to take the Charge which he laid down: and he complaineth of his age, to make them the more to accept of a younger man for their Governour in his ſtead.

no more go out and come in] That is, do the office of a Captain to lead the people forth to war, and to bring them home back again in peace.

V. 3. and Joſhua] He joyneth the Lord and Joſhua together, that the people may have the better hope of his happy guidance, who, though he were before but a ſervant to Moſes, was now to be Commander in Chief under God, as himſelf had been; and whatſoever difference they conceived betwixt them as men, they were to expect, that he is guided and aſſiſted by God, would be a ſufficient Conductor of them to the poſſeſſion of the promiſe, and therefore they might follow him with confidence, and muſt follow him with obedience, rather as ſecond onely to God, then as Succeſſor to Moſes.

V. 4. as he did to Sihon] God is the ſame in future, that he was in former Favours to his people, and judgments to their enemies, if they be not rebels againſt him, or revolters from him.

unto the land] That is, the Inhabitants of the Land.

V. 5. Before your face] They ſhall ſo fly or fall before you, that you ſhall perceive that you prevail by the power of the Lord.

V. 6. Be ſtrong and of] For he that muſt govern his people (eſpecially ſo numerous and apt to murmure) hath need to be valiant to repreſſe vice and conſtant to maintain virtue.

V. 8. The Lord he it is that doth] Gods aſſiſtance is the ſureſt ground of couragious confidence.

V. 9. this Law] That is, the Book of Deuteronomy. Some conceive the whole pentateuch to be here ment and that that which was now written was found, 2 Kings 22.8.

to the Prieſts] Who were to be moſt converſant in it, that they might the better inſtruct the people out of it, eſpecially in the year of releaſe, which was every ſeventh year, Exod. 23.11. when it was ſolemnly and entirely to be read unto them, verſ.11. of this Chapter.

which bear the Ark] The Ark is mentioned here by occaſion of the Book, which was laid up in the ſide of it, and for the bearing of the Ark, there is ſome doubt whether it belonged to the Prieſts onely, or to the Levites with them, or whether to the Prieſts as Prieſts, or as Levites. Some conceive that the Prieſts muſt bear the Ark, and not the Levites, and therefore that Uzzah being but a Levite when he touched it, was ſmitten, becauſe he preſumed upon the charge of the Prieſts, but it appears, Num.3.31. that the Levites, (which were the ſons of Kohath, who had the charge of the Ark,) did carry it, as verſ. 25. of this Chapter, though not onely, nor alwayes, for at ſome extraordinary times the Prieſts did bear it, Joſh.3.13. & 1 Kings.8.3. yet with this difference, that the Prieſts might, and ſometimes did it upon eſpecial occaſion, to teſtifie their piety, or for greater ſolemnity: but the Levites muſt do it, as a part of their ſervice in ordinary. See 1 Chr.15.2. And yet might they not touch any of the holy things they carried untill they were covered by Aaron and his ſons the Prieſts, Num 4.15. and therefore the ſin of Uzzah, whether Prieſt or Levite, was not only, for that he and the reſt ſuffered the Ark to be carried on a Cart, (which they ſhould have born on their ſhoulders) but for that he either fained a peril of falling, and ſo ſeemed hypocritically to ſupport it, or that he took the boldneſſe irreverently to touch ſome part of it, for which he ought to be ſmitten as he was, Num.4 15.

V. 10. year of releaſe] Every ſeventh year was a year of releaſe. See on Chap.15.1,2.

V. 11. before the Lord] Before the Ark of the Covenant, which was the ſign of Gods preſence, and the figure of Chriſt.

Thou ſhalt read] It is not ſaid who in particular, but it is like the ſervice was performed by ſome eminent perſon in the Prieſthood, as by Ezra, who is called both a Scribe, and a Prieſt, Neh.8.1, 2. A Scribe, as he was a Writer of the Law; and a Prieſt, as a Reader, and Expounder of it to the people, and a ſacrificer to God.

V. 12. children] Children muſt be timely inſtructed in the Law of God, that they may be inured unto it, and habituated in it before they come to be men; for young Saints are moſt like to be old Saints (though one of the Devils proverbs calls them the old devils.)

V. 14. in the Tabernacle] The Tabernacle is ſometime taken for the whole ſpace, or place, which was marked, and bounded out for holy uſes, and not fit for the curious Tent of curtains, Exod. 26.10,11, &c. Here it is taken for that part of the Court which was neer the door of the Tabernacle, for into the Tabernacle it ſelf none but the Prieſt might enter.

V. 15. pillar of a cloud] That is, a cloud in form, and faſhion of a pillar, as the flaming ſword, was fire in form of a ſword, Gen. 3. ver.laſt.

V. 17. hide my face] That is, I will take my favour from them; as to turn his face towards them, is to ſhew them his favour. See on 1 Kings.2,15. & on Iſa.8,17. & 54,8.

V. 19. this ſong] See on ver 30.

a witneſſe] For me againſt their diſobedience and ingratitude, and againſt their obſtinacy, and ſtupidity, who, though they were warned of the wretched end of wicked works, would not beware.

V. 20. then will they turn] Outward proſperity, though good for the body, may be bad for the ſoul; for many will no longer obey God then they are under his rod, who turn their proſperity, which ſhould be a motive to their obedience to God, to an occaſion of contempt againſt God.

V. 21. teſtifie againſt them] That they own wickedneſſe wrought their woe, & that their ſufferings were but the juſt reward of their diſobedience.

which they go about] There were ſome ſo ill minded among them, as to mediate on miſchiefe before hand, whereby they deſerved their expulſion out of the land, when as yet they had not gotten poſſeſſion of the Land: but God foreſaw how bad they would be, and therefore foreordained a juſt reward for their wickedneſs.

V. 23. and ſaid] Hitherto God ſpake of, and to Joſhua, but by Moſes; now he ſpeaketh to him by himſelf, and here both giveth him his charge, and encourageth him to it.

V. 26. in the ſide of] Or, by the ſide: and (as ſome Hebrew Rabbines note) in a cheſt by it ſelf placed on the right ſide of the Ark; for there was no writing kept in the Ark, but the two Tables of the Ten Commandements, 1 King.8 9, 2 Chron.5. 10. See on Exod.25.16. where the doubt is more largely diſcuſſed.

V. 28. heaven and earth to record] See Annot. on Chap. 32. verſ.1.

V. 29. you will utterly corrupt] By the Spirit of propheſie he foretels their defection, as a forerunner, and cauſe of their future affliction.

V. 30. of this ſong] Which followeth in the next Chapter.

CHAP. XXXII.

Verſ.1. G*Ive ear O heavens*] Here beginneth the Song ſpoken of verſ. 19. of the precedent Chapter, where he turneth his ſpeech to the heavens, either meaning by the heavens, Angels, the Inhabitants of the heavens, and by the earth, men, the Inhabitants of the earth; as by the land, the Inhabitants of the land, Chap.31.4. Or elſe by the heavens, and the earth, we may underſtand the heavens, and earth themſelves. The meaning is, by ſuch a paſſionate expreſſion, to ſtirre up their apprehenſions: or by appealing to the heavens, and earth, which have neither ſenſe nor reaſon, nor religion, and yet obey Gods Ordinance, to ſhame them, who profeſſe to have all, and againſt all are diſobedient to him: or that upon their rebellion againſt God, the heavens and the earth ſhould both joyn in judgment againſt them, as is threatned. Chap.28.23.

V. 2. My Doctrine ſhall drop] I would have my doctrine to drop from my lips upon your hearts to mollifie them; or that it may be unto them as a fruitfull dew or rain which maketh graſſe, and flowers to ſpring and ſprout, Heb. 6.2. See Iſa.55.10. Ezek.21, 27. Amos.7.16. Mic. 2.6.

V. 4. He is a rock] In ſtrength, and fixedneſſe, a ſtrong, and durable foundation, that cannot be removed; Iſa. 26.4 & 28.16.

V. 5. their ſpot] That is, their ſin, which ſpotteth, and blemiſheth their ſoules, 2 Cor.7,1. Jude verſ.23.

not the ſpot of his children] That is, not ſuch ſin as is of infirmity, which Gods children may, and many times do commit, 1 Joh.8.1. but of malignity, perverſneſſe, and contempt. See 1 Joh.3,6.

V. 6. O fooliſh people] Great ingratitude is groſſe folly, and the ingratitude is great which returns evil for good to a mans beſt Father, and onely Maker, as God is.

V. 8. divided to the Nations] This ſome conceive to be meant of the diviſion by confuſion of Tongues upon the building of Babel, others of aſſigning portions to the Nations, as of Seir to the poſterity of Eſau, Chap.2.5. and through the whole earth the Lord diſtributeth the portion to every people as pleaſeth himſelf.

ſet bounds] Or limits, meaning the diviſion of the Land of Canaan among the children of Iſrael according to the Lords allotment; for it was done (for the moſt part) by lots, Num.34.13. and the diſpoſition of the lot is of the Lord, Prov.16.33.

V. 9. the Lords portion] The Lord hath choſen the people of Iſrael for his peculiar portion, out of all the Nations of the world, Amos 3.2.

lot] He alludeth to the diviſion of the Land of Canaan, as if the ons of Jacob had fallen to him by lot.

V. 10. he found] Not by chance, but with reſolved choyce he manifeſted himſelfe to him in the Wilderneſſe.

howling wilderneſſe] Becauſe of wilde beaſts, whoſe noiſe is howling, when they want proviſion. See Iſai. 43. 20. Mich. 1. 8.

V. 11. fluttereth over her young] Either to teach them to flie, or to ave them from violence. See on Exod.19.4. Matth.23.37.

on her wings] It is noted as the peculiar property of the Eagle, to carry her young in her claws, as ſhe catcheth, or carrieth the prey; but with ſuch tenderneſſe, as that ſhe may not hurt them, and at ſuch an height, as other may not reach them.

V. 12. did lead him] By the pillar of cloud by day, and of fire by night.

V. 13. ride upon the high places] That is, triumphantly prevail over the fenced Cities, whoſe walls, and towers are raiſed higheſt, Chap: 33 29. Iſa.58.14.

made him] The preterperfect tenſe uſed for the future as in other verſes of this Chapter.

honey out of the rock] Barren places, like rough, and craggy rocks were made to yeeld fruit; or (according to the letter) ſwarms of Bees made honey in the clefts of the rocks, and Olive trees proſpered in ſtony places.

V. 14. breed of Baſhan] A place of ſpecial note for a good breed of cattel, or for good paſture for them.

kidneys of wheat] The fatneſſe of the creature appears in the kidneys, and the beſt are ſuch as are moſt fat; to ſuch is the fruitfulleſt, fulleſt, and whiteſt flower of wheat compared. See Pſal.81.61.

pure blood of the grape] That is, the liquor of it, which in ſome ſort of grapes is red; and being pure without mixture, it is more red, and like to blood. See Annot on Gen 49 11.

V. 15. Jeſurun] The word is derived of Jaſher, ſignifying riteouſneſſe, or uprightneſſe; by which is meant Iſrael, Gods peculiar people, Iſa.44.2. who ſhould have been upright, righteous, juſt in obedience to the Will and Law of God, but was lawleſſe, and unruly, and like a fatted bullock, kicked againſt his feeder. The word Jeſhurun, is very rarely uſed, and it ſeems to be made by Moſes by way of parronomaſia or alluſion to an oxe, as if he had ſaid, Iſrael ſhould be Jeſhurun, but is, Schor, that is, an oxe: or a bullock.

waxed fat and kicked] See on Eccleſ 7.2. Jer.5.7. Hoſ.13.6.

V. 17. new gods] For all falſe gods are new, and young to God the Ancient of dayes, who was from everlaſting, Dan.7.9.

V. 18. the Rock that begat] He was called a Rock before, ver.4. and here again, but with a great difference from an extraordinary Rock: for the ſame God who is ſo called, is (as a Rock is not) of a quickning and a generative power to beget ſons and daughters as they are called verſ.19.

V. 20. hide my face] See Annot. on Chap.31.17.

ſee what their end] Gods hiding, is a withdrawing of his favourable influence and aſſiſtance, and though he be not ſeen, he can ſee and obſerve, and will ſo ſee, as to make others obſerve (and this pharſe is uſed after an humane manner, as many others in the *S*cripture) as if God watched, (as Moſes ſiſter did, Exod.2.4. to ſee what would become of him, Exod.2.4.) whereas indeed he knoweth all things concerning all creatures at one act of underſtanding.

V. 21. not a people] That is, ſuch as I have not taken for a people as I have done Iſrael, nor given Laws as a Lord unto them, nor entred any Covenant with them: to wit, the Gentiles, whom I will uphold againſt the Jewes and make them victorious over them, and when their ſins are ripe for a further rejection, and they refuſe the greateſt Favour I can do them, (my *S*on ſent to ſave them,) then I will accept of the Gentiles for my people, who ſhall embrace the Meſſias I ſend, by belief in him, and adherence to him: the words in this ſenſe are applyed by the Apoſtle, Rom.10.19.

fooliſh Nation] So are all blinded Gentiles, who not diſcerning the difference between the Almighty God, and impotent Idols, turn their backs upon him, and ſet their faces with bended knees towards them.

V. 22. to the loweſt hell] Or, to the deepeſt part of it; A vigorous Metaphor importing a moſt deep deſtruction, rooting out all hope of growing up, or recovering proſperity again. Or, by the loweſt hell, may be meant the extremeſt plagues of the other world, as well as manifold and woful calamities in this; ſuch terrour of the Lord might perſwade men to beware of ſin, 2 Cor.5.11.

V 24 burnt with hunger] Famine conſumes the fleſh and moiſture, and ſhrivels up a young girle, ſo that it makes her look like an old woman; and (as fire) makes the viſage black like a coal, Lam.4.8.

V. 25. ſword without, and terrour within] They ſhall be ſlain both in the field, and at home, within their houſes, and chambers.

V. 27. Were it not] Here again, as ver. 20. God ſpeaks after the manner of men, who do not what otherwiſe they would for fear of ſcandal and encouragement of the wicked. See Pſal.140.8.

V. 28. a nation void of counſel] This is ſpoken of the Iſraelites, who inconſiderately went on in wickedneſs without fore-caſting what would come of it, Iſa.27.11. Jer.4.22.

V. 30. how ſhould one chaſe] That is, one of the enemies of Iſrael chaſe a thouſand Iſraelites, except God, who was, and would have been their Rock of defence and refuge, hath given them up to ruine.

V. 31. not as our Rock] That which was ſaid before, is ſpoken in the Perſon of God; this in the perſon of Moſes, or the people, where comparing the true God of Iſrael with the falſe under the name of rocks, the enemies upon former experience of Gods power and terrour in puniſhing their tranſgreſſion and wickedneſſe, (which ignorant and impotent Idols could not do) have judged the preeminence on Gods ſide, againſt them.

V. 32. their vine] (Meaning of the wicked Jews,) is compared to the Vine of Sodome, whoſe fruit is abhorred, as was all that belonged to that accurſed City, and to her wicked ſiſter Gomorrah. *S*ee on Gen 19.25.

V. 33. the poyſon] The fruits are as poyſon, deteſtable to God, and dangerous to man.

V. 34. treaſures] God hath his juſt treaſures of wrath, Rom.2.5. anſwerable to the evil treaſure of ſin, Matth.12.35. which is heaped up by the wicked.

V. 35. ſlide in due time] Due is added by way of explication: for the wicked, though they be thought to ſtand too long, ſhall fall in due time, that is, in the time which God chuſeth, as moſt meet for the honour of his own juſtice, and for the good of the godly.

V. 36. judge his people] That is, give ſentence for them, by taking vengeance on them that wrong them, Pſal.26.1.

repent himſelf] In favour and compaſſion to his ſervants. Of his repenting, ſee Annot. on Gen.6.6.

their power is gone] When there is leaſt hope in the creature, there is moſt help from the Creator. *S*ee Exod.14.13.

none ſhut up] That is, none lying hid, as thoſe in the Prophet Elijahs time, who would not bow to Baal, 1 King.14.10. & Chap.19.14, 18. & 2 King.14.25, 26.

V. 37. he ſhall ſay] That is, God, ſpoken againſt by the wicked, to whom he maketh anſwer, verſ.39, 43.

V. 38. let them riſe up] That may be applyed to the heathens, (who oppreſſed Gods people) as a taunt for their Idolatry, when God takes vengeance of them for it. But withal, God ſpeaks the like words by way of bitter reproach againſt Idolatrous Iſrael, Judg.10.14. Jer.2.28.

V. 40. lift up my hand] See on Gen.14.2. *S*ee alſo, Heb.6.16, 17.

and ſay, I live for ever] That is, God proteſteth by himſelf, that he will do as he ſaith, afterward, verſ.41, 42.

V. 42. from the beginning] Or, the head of revenges. That is, the chief of the enemies of my people. Or, from the beginning, of revenges: that is, from the beginning of the enemies oppreſſion of my people with revengeful minds towards them; I will begin my revenges at the beginning of theirs.

V. 46. to obſerve to do all] Obſerving to do, or obſerve to do (even) all: elſe the ſenſe is not ſo clear.

V. 47. For it is not a vain] Not vain that I command, nor ſhall it be in vain that I have promiſed unto you. See Iſa.55.10, 11.

V. 49. mount Abarim] *S*ee on Num.27.12.

V. 50. and dye in the mount] This is not a command to Moſes to dye, but a decree that he ſhould dye there; for he was not to kill himſelf, but to expect there untill God took away his ſoul to heaven.

gathered unto] See Annot on Gen.25.8.

unto his people] Moſes and Aaron were brethren, and their people on earth were the ſame, and being in heaven (both of them) there ſociety there is the ſame: therefore the words (thy and his) here repeated, doth not imply they went ſeveral wayes, or had different kindred or company in heaven; but it noteth the particular right of each to the comfort and reſt with the ſame people; as when our *S*aviour ſaith, I aſcend to my Father and your Father, to my God and your God; he meaneth not two Fathers, or two Gods, but only one Father, and one God, Joh. 20.17.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Verſ.1. THe bleſſing] This bleſſing containeth not onely a ſimple prayer, but an aſſurance of the effect thereof.

V. 2. The Lord came from] Or, unto Mount Sinai: (for the word will admit of three readings, though more uſually it be rendred from, or out of it) Throughout the whole verſe there is a continued metaphor, wherein God is brought in as the Sun, ſhewing himſelf to the people in divers places, in ſeveral kinds and degrees of glory and goodneſſe; as at Mount Sinai, God called for his people to make a Covenant with them: out of it, or from it, he went to guide them towards Canaan.

roſe up from Seir] A Mountain of Idumea. The former ſaviour was at the light before the Sun-riſing; here at Mount Seir he roſe up, and ſhewed himſelf in ſpecial Favour and glorious power, when in their way by Seir or Edom, the braſen *S*erpent (a Type of Chriſt the *S*un of righteouſneſſe ariſing with healing in his wings, Mal.4.2. and a remedy againſt the biting of fiery Serpents) was erected. *S*ome take it literally, as that the glory of God began to ſhine from Mount *S*eir, (the top whereof might be ſeen neer *S*inai) and that it paſſed thence to Sinai, becomeing more and more glorious, and there ſettled for a time.

ſhined fourth from mount Paran] A Mountain in the wilderneſs, neer unto which Moſes made this repetition and explication of that Book of Deuteronomy, Chap.1. verſ.1, and where it is conceived by ſome that God endowed the Elders of Iſrael with a larger meaſure of his *S*pirit: and there alſo did he manifeſt his miraculous power in proviſion for his people by ſending Quailes from heaven.

ten thouſands of his Saints] That is, holy ones: meaning an infinite company of Angels: for the good Angels are all of them Saints,though all Saints be not Angels; and they attended him in the ſolemnity of his appearance at *S*inai,from whence alſo was his Law delivered,*S*ee Act.7:53. Gal.3.19. Heb 2.2. See Hab.3.3. 2 Theſ.1.7.

a fiery Law] Given with the fire of terrible lightnings. Exod.19.16, 18. Or,becauſe the Law is the rule of our ardent devotion to God, and fervent affection to our neighbours.

for them] That is,for his people.

V.3. In thy hand] That is, in the Lords hand; by which is ſignified his power and protection; the perſon is often changed, the *S*pirit ſometimes moving the inſpired Pen-men to ſpeak of God, ſometimes (upon ſpeaking of him) raviſhing their affections in devotion towards him,and moving them to ſpeak to him.

at thy feet] Thy holy people attended upon thee at the foot of Mount Sinai, (where thy Majeſty appeared) as Diſciples at the foot of their Teacher, Act.22.3.

V.4. Moſes commanded] The fourth and fifth verſes are the words of the pious part of the people,expreſſing their good affection to the Law and to Moſes,by whoſe mediation they received it.

the inheritance] Or an hereditary law to be kept by themſelves, and tranſmitted to their poſterity. Pſal.119.111.

*V.*5. King] That is, Prince or chief governor, Judg.19.1. meaning Moſes; for the Kingly government,as it is deſcribed, 1 Sam.8 9. was not yet ſet up in Iſrael. Or,if it be meant of ſuch an one,it is a propheſie of the Commonwealth of Iſrael in the reigne of Saul. See on Gen.36.31.

let not his men be few] Or,Let his men be few; for the word (not) is not in the Original, yet it may be repeated as in Job.30.20,25. and Pſal.9.18. The needy ſhall not alwayes be forgotten, the expectation of the poor ſhall periſh for ever: but the word not, muſt be repeated thus: The expectation of the poor ſhall not periſh for ever: or, nor the expectation of the poor periſh for ever. So, let Reuben live and not dye; and let not his men be a number; that is, let them be few: and if the words be read without the word not, let his men be a number, (as in the Doway Bible) that number may be either few or many. The Geneva renders the words, though his men be a ſmall number; and thereupon the Annotation is, Reuben ſhall be one of the Tribes of Gods people, though for his ſin his honour be diminiſhed, and his family but ſmall. And Numb.1. where the number of the Tribes is ſet down, Reuben hath the feweſt of all the ſons of Leah there mentioned, yea, cometh far ſhort of the ſons of Bilhah, Dan and Napthali; and in the latter account brought in Numb. 26. eight of the twelve go beyond him. See on Gen.49.4.

*V.*7. Hear the voice of Judah, and bring him unto his people] The prayer of Moſes, or voice of Judah is not to be underſtood of the perſon of Judah, for he was dead long before this time, but of the Tribe of Judah,and of the bringing of him unto his people, ſome conceive to be the bringing of him with his people into the Land of Canaan,according to the deſire of Caleb and Joſhua, Numb.14.8. Secondly, others take it to be a coming as a Warrior with victory over his enemies,and ſafety and protection to his people; and this as well by prayers as by force of armes of the Tribe of Judah; as in the example of David, who prayed devoutly, as well as fought valiantly and victoriouſly againſt his enemies, as Aſa, and Jehoſaphat and Hezekiah, Kings of Judah. Thirdly, the bringing of Judah to his people, is taken for the return of the Tribe of Judah from captivity: for though the children of Iſrael, and the children of Judah were oppreſſed together, and all that took them captives held them faſt, and refuſed to let them go, Jer.50.33. yet the Lords promiſe was to bring again the captivity of Iſrael and Judah, Jer.30.3. which promiſe implyeth a condition of repentance, and that condition performed by the Tribe of Judah and Benjamin,and ſome few of the other Tribes,they were reſtored to the people, to wit, to the poor which were left to husband the Land, Jer.39.10. & 40.7. & 52.16. but the other ten Tribes,generally perſiſting in their impenitency, continued in their captivity.

ſufficient] Give thou ſufficient ſtrength to his hands, that he may not be made a prey to his enemies.

V.8. And of Levi] Simeon his elder brother,who was joyned with him in the curſe of Jacob, was not here made his partner in the bleſſing of Moſes, for he is not mentioned at all: the reaſon is thought to be, becauſe that Tribe was exceedingly defiled with fornication ſpiritual and corporal; and though Levi had his part in the ſlaughter of the *S*hechemites,and curſe of Jacob for it, yet is his Tribe here bleſſed by Moſes,and becauſe of his zeal againſt Idolatry, Exod.32.26,27, &c. See Gen.49.7.

let thy Thummim and Urim] Or,Urim and Thummim. See Annot. on Exod.28.30.

thy holy One] Thy High Prieſt dedicated unto thee by a peculiar conſecration. See on Pſal.86.2

Maſſah] The word ſignifieth temptation, probation or trial, and ſo the words may be read, whom thou doſt prove with a probation,that is,with ſome great ſpecial trial.

Meribah] Of Meribah, ſee Numb.20.13. Of Maſſah and Meribah both,ſee Exod.17.7.

V.9. Who ſaid unto] Or,of his father and mother, I have not, nor do not ſee him. (Concluding both under the more worthy gender) That is, who was ſo impartial in Gods cauſe,as not to acknowledg either father or mother, brother or children, againſt his command. This is applyed to the ſtate of the High-Prieſt, who was not to defile himſelfe by mourning for the dead, whether father, mother,&c. Lev.21.11,12. nor being Judg to favour his neereſt kindred in a naughty cauſe, Deut.17.9 nor in execution of juſt puniſhment to ſpare his own fleſh and blood,how neer ſoever,from ſlaughter in the Lords cauſe and quarrel, as Exod.32.26,27,28,29.

V.10. Teach] Mal.2.7.

V.11. that hate him] He declareth, that the Miniſters of God have many enemies,and therefore have need to be prayed for.

V.12. The beloved of the Lord] That is,Benjamin,who, as he was his father Jacobs darling, when Joſeph was ſuppoſed to be dead; ſo was he much beloved of the Lord; of whoſe Tribe the firſt King was choſen, and in whoſe portion the Temple was built.

by him] That is,by Gods aſſiſtance; or Benjamin ſhall dwel in ſafety by Levi; for the Temple wherein the Tribe of Levi miniſtred, was in the lot of Benjamin,whoſe lot of inheritance was betwixt the Tribe of Judah,and the Tribe of Joſeph.

his ſhoulders] God ſhall chuſe him an habitation in the chief City of the Tribe of Benjamin: for though the South part of Jeruſalem, (which is called the City of God in eſpecial manner) where was Mount Sion, were in the Tribe of Judah, yet the Northern part, with mount Moriah where the Temple ſtood, was in the Tribe of Benjamin; and being ſet upon that hill, it was conſpicuouſly eminent, as the head placed above, and between the ſhoulders. And though God be ſaid to dwel in Mount Sion, and thence ſome conceive his Temple was ſituate upon it, yet where it is ſo ſaid, the word Sion muſt be taken, not ſtrictly for the hill of Sion, but by a Synecdoche for the whole City of Jeruſalem, and therewith for the Temple founded upon mount Moriah. See on Joſh.18.11.

V.13. The precious things of heaven] He plentifully ſets forth the fruitfulneſs of the portion of Joſeph, by all the means that produce increaſe, whether from above, as rains and dewes which fall from heaven upon the earth,or from beneath, Ezek.34.26.

the deep that coucheth] That is, the ſprings,and rich minerals which are below.

V.14. By the Moon] The influences of the Sun by heat, and of the moon by moiſture, and the influences of the Stars make the fruits of the earth to proſper. Or, according to the Hebrew,Moons,meaning the various operation by the change and courſe of the Moon for that bleſſing of the earth. See on Gen.49.26.

V.15. Ancient mountains] There are ſome mountains of ſand and rubbiſh caſually made,ſome purpoſely caſt up by the labour of man, in reſpect of theſe, the mountains made at the Creation are very ancient mountains; and upon ſome of them grow Olives,Cedars,Pine-trees, Cypreſs-trees,and other things uſeful for neceſſity and delight.

and upon the top of] Which is not another, but the ſame Joſeph,but ſpoken of under another title, that the bleſſing might be doubled upon him.

ſeparated from his brethren] Or, was a Nazarite; Which ſome take in reſpect of beauty,for the Nazarites are commended for that, Lam 4.7. and ſo was Joſeph, Gen.39.6. But why he was called ſo,ſee on Gen. 49.26.

V.17 His glory] That is, the glory of Ephraim ſhall be like unto a fair young and luſty bullock.

horns of Unicorns] See Annot.on Numb.23.22.

to the ends of the earth] He ſhall overcome Countries far remote.

the ten thouſands of Ephraim, and they are the thouſands of Manaſſeh] By this the fruitfulneſs of Ephraim,by this comparative proportion,ſeems to be much greater then that of Manaſſeh, and ſo we find it at the muſter and number of the people, Numb.1.33,35.but when Moſes bleſſed them the Tribe of Manaſſeh was more numerous, Numb.26.34,37. yet Moſes over-looks the preſent overplus of the Tribe of Manaſſeh, foreſeeing, and foretelling that Ephraim ſhould overtake it, and overgo it in the multitude of his troops in future times.

V.18. in thy going out] In thy proſperous voyages by Sea, according to that, Gen.49.13. and thy going out to war againſt thine enemy.

in thy tents] In thy peaceable habitation in paſturing of cattel,and other exerciſes of husbandry, whereto Iſſachar ſo addicted himſelf,that he had rather ſubmit like a ſtrong Aſs to a double burden of Tribute, then fight for his freedom from it, Gen.49.14.

V.19. unto the mountain] To the mount where Moſes by the ſpirit of propheſie,foreſaw the Temple ſhould be ſeated. See Annot. on Chap.33.12.

they ſhall ſuck] The former part of the verſe of inviting to the holy mountain,may be meant of both the Tribes forementioned, but this of ſucking of the abundance of the Seas, is to be appropriated to Zebulun, who being commodiouſly ſituate for merchandiſe, reaped great benefit by the ſeas, and by the Cities ſeated upon the ſea ſhore, which is ſandy ground, whereof Iſſachar had ſome, though Zebulun had more, or more commodious for traffique.

V.20. That enlarged Gad] Either by giving him more ſcope and compaſſe for his company, as Joſh.17.15. or by delivering him out of ſtraights when he is diſtreſſed, Pſalm 4.1,2. 1 Chron 5.18. 20.21.

teareth the arm with] That is, catching the prey like a Lion, who greedily ſeiſeth on the arm and head together; ſo that he ſhall prevail over the ſtrong, and pull down the dignified; for the arm is the ſtrongeſt part, the crown of the head the higheſt.

V.21. Provided the firſt part for himſelf] That is, Gad, with the Reubenites and half Tribe of Manaſſeh, got the firſt portion of land, which was on this ſide Jordan, to thoſe which journyed towards Canaan out of Egypt. See Num.32.23,29,33. 1 Chron.5.18.&c.

Law-giver] That is, Moſes; for he had not his portion by lot, as others had, but by his own requeſt, and Moſes his grant.

he came with the heads] A propheſie for aſſeveration and aſſurance, ſet down in the phraſe of an hiſtory, as if already the deed were done: it imports the forwardneſs of that Tribe, who would be as ready as the beſt to execute the juſtice of the Lord upon the Canaanites. Joſh.4.12.

and his judgments] Which God had denounced againſt them.

with Iſrael] For though the Gadites, with the Reubenites, and half Tribe of Manaſſeh, had their part on the eaſt ſide of Jordan, they undertook the conqueſt on the other ſide, with the reſt of their brethren, Num. 32.23,29,33.

V.22. Dan is a Lions whelp] As a fierce young Lion leaping from the hills of Baſhan (where he was bred) to catch the prey. Baſhan was a part of the portion of Manaſſeh, not of Dan, chap.3.13. So that the ſimilitude is in regard of quality, not of place; and in this he is reſembled (as Judah was) to a Lion, Gen.49 9. and the Danites were valourous, of which Tribe were more Warriors numbred, Num.1. then of any other Tribe, but Judah, ver.22.39. Or it may note the diſpoſition of the Danites to hunting and living upon prey as Lions do. See Num.1.27 39. & 26 2,43.

V.23 Napthali ſatisfied with favour] His portion was moſt pleaſant and fruitful by land; and for forraign Dainties his ſituation neer the ſea, furniſhed him with abundance by his traffick with the Sydonians, Tyrians and Phenicians, ſo that he might very well be ſatisfied who neither wanted contentment for the quantity or quality of deſirable proviſion.

V.24 dip his foot in oyl] In his portion ſhall be great ſtore of oyl, not only to annoint the face, but to ſupple the feet: This is agreeable to Jacobs prediction, Gen 49.20.

V.25. Iron and braſs] At thy feet where thou treadeſt ſhall be Mines of thoſe metals, which thou ſhalt dig in great abundance; or it may be meant of ſtrengthening their ſhooes with nailes, or plats of iron or braſs, ſometimes uſed by Romans and Syrians. See Joſephus of the Wars of the Jews, lib.7.cap.3. Plin.Nat.Hiſt.l.33.c.3. Val.Max l.9 c.1 See chap.8.9.

as thy dayes, ſo ſhal thy ſtrength be] While thy dayes hold out, thy ſtrength ſhall hold out, and not fail, as it was with Moſes, Chap.34.7. Or, the honour and power of the Tribe of Aſher ſhall not decay with age, as uſually a mans perſonal ſtrength doth, but it ſhall continue in vigour and vertue which ſhall not fail or languiſh with continuation of time.

V.26. Of Jeſurun] See the Annot. on Chap.32.15.

in thy help] For thy help.

V.27. Underneath are the everlaſting arms] Gods protection over his people is above and beneath, and both everlaſting.

V.28. In ſafety alone] Without any enemy to challenge or uſurp any part of his promiſed poſſeſſion. See Num.23.9.

the fountain] That is, the poſterity of Jacob ſpread abroad like the overflowing of a Fountain, Pſal.68.27 & Iſai.48,1. & Rev.17.15. or, his plentiful bleſſing, which floweth from God as a fountain that cannot (not as a ciſtern that may) be drawn dry. Some for the fountain of Jacob, read the eye of Jacob, and the meaning then is, that he ſhal feed and delight his eyes with the fruitfulneſs of his land abounding with good corn and wine.

his heavens] The heavens ſpread over the land of his habitation.

V.29. Sword of thy excellency] God is not only a Buckler of defence to his people, but a ſword of aſſault againſt their enemies, whom by his aſſiſtance they ſhall excel, and glorioully conquer in combat with them. See Pſal.44 5,6.

found lyars] Either in their propheſies of tryumph over thee; or in faining and lying, like the Gibeonites, to curry favour with thee, Joſh.9. 4. Pſal.18.44. & 66.3.

high places] See Annot. on chap.32.13.

CHAP. XXXIV.

Ver. 1. PLains of Moab] A part of the wilderneſs where Moſes had given his inſtructions to the people, and pronounced his laſt bleſſing upon them:

Nebo] A part of Mount Abarim. See on Num.27.12.

Piſgah] Nebo was the higheſt of the mountaines of Abarim, and Piſgah was the higheſt top of Nebo, thither he aſcended from whence he had the faireſt and trueſt proſpect of the Land of Canaan.

the land of Gilead] The land of Gilead is here taken largely for that part of the land which was already beſtowed upon the Reubenites, Gadites, and half Tribe of Manaſſeh, Moſes being on the top of Piſgah, which afforded him a Proſpect every way, he firſt caſt his eyes upon Gilead; and having taken a view of that, he directed his ſight to the ſurvey of the other part of Canaan beyond Jordan.

unto Dan] A City anciently called Leſhem, Joſh.19.47. and Laiſh Judg.18.27,29. but afterwards poſſeſſed by the Danites, it was called, Dan; it was the further part of the Land of Canaan towards the North as Beerſheba was towards the South; and by theſe two were the utmoſt limitations of it ſet out. See Judg.20.1.

V.2. All Napthali, and the land] Their portions were not ſeverally aſſigned them in Moſes time, therefore he either uttered this by the Spirit of Propheſie, as that this was afterward by lot to be the portion of Napthali, and ſo of the reſt; or elſe this chapter was written, not by Moſes but by ſome other ſacred Pen-man of the Holy Ghoſt, who wrote the reſt of this chapter from ver.5. to the end of it.

and all the land of Judah] The like may be underſtood of the land allotted to the other Tribes, for his proſpect was not limited to thoſe particularly named.

utmoſt ſea] The Mediterranean ſea; the Hebrews uſe to call any great confluence of waters Sea; and they called this the utmoſt Sea, becauſe it was the utmoſt bound of the Land of Canaan, chap.11.24.

V 3. Vally of Jericho] This was in the Tribe of Benjamin.

City of Palm trees] Jericho is ſo called, becauſe it abounded with Palm trees, Joſeph.Antiq l.4.c.5. Judg.1.16. Plin.l.4.c.15. & l.13.c.4.

Zoar] Lots place of refuge, ſituate neer the Lake Aſphaltites, whereof ſee Annot. on Gen.19.20.

V.5. Dyed] And (as ſome, who ſeem exact in the computation of time, affirm) he dyed the third or fourth day of the month Adar, which anſwereth to our February: from hence the reſt of the Chapter (and it may be the whole) was not written by Moſes, but by ſome other by the Lords appointment, who is thought by ſome to be Ezra, but by others, more probably, Eleazar, or Joſhua. The like obſervation is to be made of the Book of Joſhua until the 28 verſe of the laſt Chapter, but from the 29 where his death is mentioned, is thought to be ſupplyed by Samuel, Ezra, or King Hezekiah.

V 6. He buried him] The Lord himſelf without any humane act or aid, prepared a grave for Moſes, and laid his body in it, having taken his ſoul unto himſelf. See on Joſh 13.29.

Over againſt Beth-Peor] The place of that abominable Idol forementioned, Chap.3.29. & 4.46.

but no man knoweth] For though it be ſaid, he was buried in a valley in the land of Moab over againſt Beth-Peor, that was ſo great in ſpace of ground, that the particular grave might be altogether unknown; eſpecially Gods purpoſe being to conceal it, he would leave no outward appearance of it, leſt the Iſraelites ſhould have made it an occaſion of Idolatry. But why had Moſes poſſeſſion of the land of Moab by his burial, when God ſaid, he would give the Iſraelites none of the land of Moab? for anſwer to this Doubt, ſee Annot. on Chap.2.9.

V.7. His eye was not] See on chap.31.2.

V.8. thirty dayes] It was the manner to make thirty dayes the meaſure of mourning for principal Rulers, whether of the Church or State, ſo long was Aaron lamented for, Num.20 29.

V.9. And Joſhuah——was full of] Hereby appeareth the favour of God, that he left not the Church deſtitute of a Governor.

hands upon him] See Annot. on Num.8.10.

V.10. ſince] By this it ſeems that this part of Deuteronomie was written not preſently, but a good while after the death of Moſes: or, for ſince him, we may read beſides him, according to ſome Tranſlations, (which accord well enough with the Original) and ſo the Writer having the Spirit of Propheſie, might ſpeak not for his own time, but for a good while after.

face to face] Unto whom the Lord did reveal himſelf ſo plainly. See on Exod.33.11. & on Num.12.8.

V.11. In all the ſignes] That is, there is none like him in might and miraculous operations, whereby the Lord magnified his own majeſty, and dignified his ſervant Moſes his Miniſtry. This is no prejudice to the praiſe of John the Baptiſt, whoſe excellency did not conſiſt in ſigns and wonders, nor in ſuch familiarity with God, but in other graces wherein he was exceeded by none that went before him.

ANNOTATIONS
On the Book of JOSHUA.

The Argument.

THe main ſcope of the Holy Ghoſt in this Book of Joſhua, is to glorifie God by the manifeſtation of his truth in his Promiſes, and his Power and All-ſufficiency in performance. For whereas he had promiſed unto Abraham four hundred yeers before, That he would give unto his poſterity the Land of Canaan for a poſſeſſion, he remaineth firm and conſtant in his Word. And though they provoked him to wrath by their hainous ſins and wilful rebellions, both in Egypt and in the wilderneſs, and thereby juſtly moved him to nullifie his Promiſes, and either wholy to deſtroy them, or at leaſt to caſt them off from being his people; yet he rather diſpenſeth with their ſins, and exerciſeth his patience and long-ſuffering, in bearing with their evil manners in the Wilderneſs, rather then that their unbelief ſhould make the Faith of God of none effect, or cauſe any of his gracious promiſes fall to the ground unaccompliſhed. So alſo is Gods Almighty Power in this Book magnified and glorified, and he mightily declared to be the Lord of Hoſtes, by giving unto ſuch a poor contemptible People, whoſe Parents were lately Bond-ſlaves in the Land of Egypt, ſo great and glorious Victories over ſuch warlike nations, and ſuch a numerous multitude of puiſſant enemies. Unto which we may adde the manifeſtation and glorifying of his Juſtice, in rooting out theſe curſed Nations, when their ſins were encreaſed to a full meaſure; But yet withal ſome mixture of Mercy with this juſt ſeverity, in ſaving ſome of the Hivites from this common deſtruction, and from being as it were drowned in this general deluge: Mercy, I ſay, towards them, in ſparing their lives; and towards his own People, in providing for them ſervants and ſlaves to do their baſeſt works, that they, in the mean time, as a Royal Nation, might be priviledged and exempted from ſuch ſervile drudgery. Another end aimed at in this Hiſtory, and ſubordinate to the other, is to deſcribe and ſet out to the life, a worthy Prince, and a truly valiant and victorious General, both in his perſon, parts and properties in the example of Joſhua, as a Precedent and Pattern to all ſuch as are of like Calling and Condition; and that whether we reſpect his Piety towards God, his juſtice and charitie towards men, or his temperance and ſobriety towards himſelf. In reſpect of God, he is deſcribed to be pious and religious, both in his perſonal holineſſe, and in his publick Calling, as he was a general and Chief Commander: For he was a man truly fearing God, a ſtrict obſerver of his Commandments, neither declining to the right hand, nor to the left, a worſhipper of God in ſinceritie and truth; and ſo zealous and reſolved in the true Religion and wayes of godlineſs, that though he had no other among all the people to joyn with him, yet he profeſſeth, That he and his houſhold would ſerve the Lord. So in his particular Calling, he is propounded as a fit Pattern and Precedent to all of his Rank; For he wholy dependeth on his chief Soveraign, the King of Kings and Lord of Hoſtes, for his direction and protection: He attempteth nothing of any moment till he hath firſt conſulted with God; and then he goeth on with undaunted courage, when he commandeth him, againſt many and mighty enemies: He truſteth not in the arm of fleſh, in his own or the peoples policy and power, but only relieth on Gods Promiſes and Providence; and having his aſſiſtance, he is moſt couragious; but when he, ſeeming diſpleaſed, withdraweth his helping hand, how is he humbled and dejected for the loſs only of ſix and thirtie men? Finally, in all his famous victories he arrogateth no part of the praiſe unto himſelf, but aſcribeth the whole glory unto God as being the principal cauſe of all his Conqueſts. In reſpect alſo of his carriage towards men, he is propounded as a ſingular pattern of Juſtice and Charity: For being to divide the conquered Land among the people by Lot, as God commanded he obeyeth his Will with all uprightneſs, ſhewing therein no favour, partiality or reſpect of perſons, as appeareth in his dealing with his own Tribe; For when (preſuming, it may be, on his neerneſs unto them in blood and kindred) they make ſuit unto him for the enlarging of their Inheritance, under a fair pretence, That their portion is too ſtrait for their numerous Tribe, he refuſeth to gratifie them by ſcanting others, but retorteth their argument upon themſelves, namely, That if they were ſo numerous, they were the better able to enlarge their borders by their own endeavours, and ſo putteth them upon labour to fit the Mountain for their habitation, by felling down the woods; and upon danger alſo, by fighting with, and driving out the inhabitants of the Valley, though they were a ſtrong people, and had iron Chariots. His Charity and love alſo appeareth, in ſeeking the peoples welfare and proſperity with all his endeavors: For whereas the love and favour of God was the chief ground of their preſent and future happineſs, and there was no other means to preſerve it unto them, then their cleaving cloſe unto him in his pure worſhip, and ſhunning Idolatry, he is not only careful to maintain it in purity and ſincerity all his dayes, but when he is ſtricken in age and ready to dye, it is his chief care to have it continued after his departure; and calling together all the Heads and Elders of the people, he uſeth all his Art and policy to make a firm covenant between God and them, That they would cleave only unto him, and utterly aboliſh all Idolatry and falſe worſhip. Laſtly, He is propounded to all Princes and great Commanders, as a mirrour of Temperance, Sobriety and Contentation, in that having in his hand, by reaſon his famous Conqueſts, ſo great Power and Authority, that he might have commanded what he liſt, yet he aſpireth not to any Regal Soveraignty, nor to enrich himſelf with a vaſt eſtate or large inheritance, but reſteth contented with ſuch a proportion as by Gods providence was allotted unto him amongſt the reſt of his Brethren. The laſt End at which this Scripture aimeth, is myſtically and typically expreſſed. For Joſhua is here propounded as a Type of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the only true Saviour of his Elect People. And to this purpoſe, that he might more fitly repreſent this great Saviour of the Church, the Prophet foretold and promiſed by Moſes, his name is changed by him, and whereas he was before called Oſhea, he was afterwards named, Joſhua, or Jehoſhua, being the ſame name that was given to Chriſt our only Saviour; Becauſe, as he in a ſort was to ſave his people out of the hands of their earthly enemies by a temporary deliverance, and to bring them into the Land of Canaan as their poſſeſſion and inheritance; ſo our Jeſus prefigured by him, was to ſave all his Elect People out of the hands of all their Spiritual enemies, and to give them as their poſſeſſion the heavenly Canaan, of which the other was but a type: And as this could not be effected by Moſes the Law-giver, but was left unto Joſhua as his proper work. unto which God called and aſſigned him; ſo this was to ſignifie unto us, That the Miniſtry of the Law, with all its legal Ordinances and Performances, can never bring us into the heavenly Canaan, but is wholly left to be accompliſhed by our true Joſhua and Saviour, as his peculiar work unto which he is called and ſealed by his Father, who hath vanquiſhed all our ſpiritual enemies, and will give unto us, at his ſecond appearing, both in our ſouls and bodies, the full poſſeſſion and fruition of our holy and happy Inheritance in his heavenly Kingdom unto all Eternity.

THe Book of Joſhua] It is called the Book of Joſhua, becauſe it containeth the Hiſtory of the Acts of Joſhua, in his Government, Conqueſts, dividing the Land, and ſetling the State and Commonwealth of Iſrael; and becauſe (as it is moſt probable) it was penned by Joſhua; following herein the example of Moſes his Predeceſſor. Howſoever ſome paſſages in this Book could not be penned by himſelfe, as containing ſome things which were done after his death, but were afterward inſerted by ſome holy man of God inſpired by the Spirit. Calvin thinketh Eleazar wrote the Heads of this Book. Maſſias conceiveth Ezra to have written it: But it appeareth, Chap.15.63 that the Pen-man, whoever he was, lived before Davids time, and therefore long before Ezra's.

Verſ.1. NOw] Heb. And. With this copulative the ſtory is continued, and knit to the end of the Book of Deuteronomie: as it is uſual with the Hebrewes. So Ruth 1.1. Judg.1.1. 1 Sam.1.1. & 2 Sam.1.1.

after the death] i.e. After the funeral mournings for his death were ended, which laſted thirty dayes, Deut.34.8.

Moſes the ſervant of the Lord] So called not only in a common and ordinary ſenſe, as other holy men, but in ſpecial relation to the qualitie and nature of his ſervice, as being Gods Deputie and Vicegerent, in guiding, inſtructing and governing of the people of Iſrael. By which title God did more honour him then if he ſhould have called him, in a bare relation to the people, the Prince, or King of Iſrael, as he is called Deut.33.5. And therefore David more glorieth in this title, as appeareth by his pathetical exclamation and reduplication of this phraſe, Truly I am thy ſervant, then in his ſoveraign dignity over all Gods people, Pſal.116:16.

that the Lord ſpake] Not immediately by himſelf, as he ſpake to Moſes, and as it were face to face, (for this was his peculiar priviledg, Deut.34.10.) but either by ſome created voice, by an Angel, or by viſion, he being wakening, or by a dream in his ſleep: of which ſee Num.12.7. Which alwayes made ſuch a deep impreſſion, that the things revealed were of ſo infallible truth, that there could be no ſcruple or doubt of them. Or, finally, by the Prieſts inquiring for him by Urim and Thummim; which is moſt probable, ſeeing this manner of revealing Gods will to Joſhua is plainly foretold, Num.27.18,21.

Moſes miniſter] Not in ſervile and ordinary imployments. For the word here uſed is not ſervant, but miniſter, as it is rightly tranſlated; ſignifying that he was ſuch an one as was trained up by Moſes, and both by his daily inſtruction and continual example well prepared and fitted for the wiſe managing of all the affaires of Church and Commonwealth, and therefore above all others moſt fit to ſucceed him in his place of Government.

V.2. Moſes my ſervant] My Vice-gerent in guiding and governing of my people in the wilderneſs, whom I honour, by owning him for my faithful ſervant, in the performance of all duties required of him in that his place and calling.

is dead] And therefore being now no longer able to execute that office, my people Iſrael are deſtitute of a ſupreme Magiſtrate to governe them, and of a Captain-general to lead them into the land of Canaan, which I have promiſed their forefathers that I would give unto them.

Now therefore] Make no delaies, the exigencie of the State requiring preſent diſpatch; but ſeeing I have deſigned, and ſolemnly conſecrated thee to ſucceed him in his place and office, and have alſo ſufficiently fitted and qualified thee by my ſpirit with wiſdom and fortitude, go preſently about this work unto which I have called thee.

ariſe] *S*it not ſtill demurring on the matter, but preſently prepare thy ſelf for the undertaking of all actions and affairs which belong to thy place of Captain-general. Joſhua is called to his office three ſeveral times; here, and Num.27.18. and Deut.31.14. to take away all ſcruple both out of his mind, and the peoples.

over this Jordan] The greateſt river of Canaan, running along the land and falling into the Lake Aſphaltites, or Dead ſea, where it mingleth its ſweet waters with thoſe which are pitchie and peſtiferous, by which being hindred from flowing, it becometh a dead lake or ſea. This river ariſeth from the root or bottom of Libanus, and that (as ſome write) from a double fountaine; one on the right ſide called Dan, the other on the left called Jor. The word this, is here added, to ſhew the neerneſs of this river to Shittim, where their Camp was now pitched. Others think this Pronoun is added by way of emphaſis.

thou, and all this people] Thou, as becometh a good General, conducting and encouraging them by thy example; and all the people, namely the ten Tribes and an half, with the forty thouſand of the Reubenites, Gadites, and half Tribe of Manaſſeh, who were appointed to aſſiſt them in this expedition; for as for the reſt of the two Tribes and half, they were permitted to ſtay on the other ſide Jordan, in their Cities, which they had built and repaired with their wives, children and cattle.

unto the land which I do give to them]. That is, in real poſſeſſion, as before I gave it by promiſe and right, Deut.11.24. The Pronoun, (I) hath its ſpecial emphaſis, q.d. I, and no other, becauſe none but God alone, without violation of juſtice can take a countrey from the ancient inheritors and give it unto others. And he may do it as the ſupreme Lord and owner of all, the whole earth being his, and the fulneſſe thereof, to diſpoſe of it as his proper right, according to his pleaſure Pſal.24.1.

even to the children of Iſrael] This is purpoſely added, becauſe when God changed Jacobs name into Iſrael, he then promiſed to give this whole land to his poſterity, Gen.35.10,12: And here he intimateth, that he would now be as good as his word.

V.3. Every place] Which by Covenant I have promiſed to give you Deut.11.24. and which alſo here, ver.4. is expreſſed, Chap.14.9. The which Covenant and promiſe was not abſolute, but conditional, namely, if they would wholly follow the Lord their God, love, fear and ſerve him. And therefore when they did backſlide and worſhip idols, God threatned to make void this Covenant, Chap.23.11.&c. Judg.2.1,2,3. cauſed theſe nations oftentimes to prevail againſt them, and by reaſon of their apoſtaſie and ſin, never gave the whole land promiſed into their poſſeſsion.

that have I given] This is added for their ſingular encouragement againſt all doubts and difficulties ſeeing the Lord had given it them, who had ſupreme right unto what he gave, and omnipotent power to maintain his right againſt all oppoſers.

as I ſaid unto Moſes] According to my covenant which I made with Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, and have lately renewed with Moſes, Deut.11.24. for the better confirmation of your faith, ſeeing it is freſh in your memory,

V.4. from the wilderneſs] In this verſe God deſcribeth and boundeth the whole country given to the Iſraelites for their inheritance from the regions that butted upon them. Firſt, the wilderneſs of Sin on the South. Secondly, Lebanon, the higheſt and greateſt mountain of all Syria, extending it ſelf from Sidon to Damaſcus, and bounding the Land of Promiſe on the North. Thirdly, the great Sea, that is, the Mediterranean, (called great, in compariſon of the petty ſeas or lakes of Paleſtine) which bounded the land on the Weſt, Numb.34.6. and is therefore called the utmoſt ſea, Deut.11.24. And fourthly, the River Euphrates, the confine on the Eaſt.

all the Land of the Hittites] Theſe are here ſpecially named, either by a *S*ynecdoche for all the ſeven nations, as elſewhere the Amorites; or, as ſome think, for a ſpecial purpoſe, namely to ſtrengthen Joſhua's faith againſt all difficulties, ſeeing he hath a ſpecial promiſe from God, of vanquiſhing the Hittites, who ſeemed moſt invincible as being a more warlike and puiſſant nation then any of the reſt.

V.5. There ſhall not any man, be able to ſtand before thee] This is added for further encouragement, ſeeing they had from God a ſpecial promiſe, that though their enemies far exceeded them both in number, ſtrength, and all warlike preparations, yet God would give unto them the victory in the day of battle.

all the dayes of thy life] Thou ſhalt not only have ſome good beginnings in thy undertakings, but ſhalt have a conſtant and continual tenour of happy ſucceſſe. And he giveth a reaſon hereof for the further confirmation of his faith, namely, becauſe he would be ever preſent with him, as he had formerly been with Moſes, and give him his aſſiſtance in all his enterprizes, unto whom nothing is hard or difficult.

as I was with Moſes] i.e. As Moſes prevailed in all his undertakings and was not only ſupported in all the difficulties of his Government of a ſtiff necked, murmuring and rebellious people, but alſo vanquiſhed and ſubdued all thoſe enemies on this ſide Jordan, which roſe up againſt him, only by my power aſſiſting him; ſo ſhalt thou likewiſe proſper, both in thy government, in which thou ſucceedeſt him, and alſo in thy warlick expeditions againſt thy enemies.

I will not fail thee, nor forſake thee] i.e. I will alwayes be preſent with thee to aſſiſt thee by my power and Spirit, in all thoſe enterpriſes which thou undertakeſt at my command, ſo as thou ſhalt eaſily atchieve them, though they ſeem never ſo difficult; and therefore go on with courage, reſting upon me for good ſucceſs, not only in thy firſt beginnings, but be aſſured that I will never faile thee unto the end. The like encouragement giveth Moſes, Deut.31.6. And thus David ſtrengthneth his faith in the time of a deſertion, Pſal.27.9.

V.6. Be ſtrong, and of a good courage] Though Joſhua was exceeding valiant, yet the work which he is now to undertake, had in it ſo many great difficulties, that the Lord thought it not ſuperfluous to repeat often theſe incouragements, ſeeing in point of government he was to ſuſtaine a heavy burden, in reſpect of the perverſe diſpoſition of the people ; and to undergo many difficulties and dangers, in reſpect of the enemies whom he was to encounter, being men of vaſt and Giant-like ſtature and ſtrength, and dwelling in Cities with high walls and ſtrongly fortified.

For unto this people ſhalt thou divide, &c.] i. e. Be couragious in undertaking in reſpect of the greatneſſe of thy reward, ſeeing hereby thou ſhalt attain unto an higher degree of honour then I vouchſafed unto Moſes. For he onely led Iſrael through the wilderneſſe, but was not permitted to bring them into the promiſed land, whereas thou ſhalt not onely ſubdue all theſe nations, but alſo divide their land amongſt thy people, and ſettle them in it as their inheritance, as by oath I promiſed to Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, that I would do in the fourth generation, which time is now come.

V. 7. Onely be thou ſtrong, &c.] Here he not onely requireth courage and reſolution in Joſhua, but alſo ſheweth him the onely ſure foundation upon which it was to be grounded, namely, his obedience to Gods law delivered by the Miniſtry of his ſervant Moſes, the which he was to make the rule of his whole life, not ſwerving from it either on the one ſide or the other, in any extreme of exceſſe or defect, through ſuperſtition or profaneneſſe, adding unto it or detracting from it. Without which though there may be in Captains and Commanders deſperate raſhneſſe, yet no true fortitude or wel-grounded courage. But this is not to be underſtood of perfect and exact legall obedience, unto which degree no mortall man can attain, but of that Evangelicall obedience to the Law which conſiſteth in fervent deſires and earneſt indeavours, which God in Chriſt accepteth from us. God requireth not impoſſibilities of thoſe who are in Chriſt ; but onely by his ſtrict commands admoniſheth us what we ought to do, and teacheth us to pray for what we cannot do.

which Moſes my ſervant commanded thee] This obedience, here ſpoken of, was by Moſes required of the whole people, Deut.5.32. & 28.14. But is particularly applyed to Joſhua, to put him and all ſupream Governors in mind, that ſuch obedience is principally required of them, ſeeing their example is as a law to all their ſubjects.

that thou mayſt proſper whitherſoever thou goeſt] i. e. That thou mayeſt have good ſucceſſe in all thy actions and undertakings, as it is expounded Deut.29.9. and ſo this phraſe ; whitherſoever thou goeſt, doth uſually ſignifie.

V.8. This book of the law] That is, a Copie of it. For the Original was by Moſes appointment laid up and reſerved in the ſide of the Ark, Deut.31.25,26.

ſhall not depart out of thy mouth] i e. Thy tongue ſhall be alwaies readie to utter the holy meditations of thy mind and heart, abounding, as a good treaſurie, with the knowledg of God and his law, Pſal.1.2. & 10.8.1. Matth.12.34,35.

but thou ſhalt meditate therein day and night] i. e. Thou ſhalt continually take all opportunities to think and conſider of it, as being the onely rule to direct thee in all private and publike affaires, Pſalm.119. 105. Deut.17.18. not departing or declining from it at any time, or in any thing, either to the right hand or to the left. Neither is it ſufficient for thee to read and know it, or to meditate and ponder on it in all its precepts and paſſages, unleſſe thou alſo doeſt obſerve and practiſe it in the whole courſe of thy life. And ſo ſhalt thou carry thy ſelf prudently and proſperouſly in all thy undertakings, and have good ſucceſſe in all thy counſells and enterpriſes.

V.9. Have not I commanded thee ?] Here firſt God confirmeth him by a divine vocation, and then by a promiſe of his efficacious preſence. The former is propounded by way of interrogation, which is uſed with the Hebrews for a ſtrong affirmation ; Have not I commanded thee ? i, e. I have without all queſtion aſſuredly done it. So Gen. 13.9. 2 Sam.13. 28. 2 Kings 6. 32. q. d. Do what I require with an unfainted courage, remembring who it is that injoyneth it, namely, thy God, who is all ſufficient to preſerve thee in all dangers and difficulties, and proſper thee in all thy actions which thou undertakeſt at my command.

for the Lord thy God is with thee] This is a promiſe for his better incouragement, of Gods ſpeciall preſence and aſſiſtance. Neither are we to underſtand it of Gods preſence in all places, but of a ſingular preſence of his ſpeciall favour to aſſiſt him in all his enterpriſes, to preſerve him in all difficulties and dangers, and to protect him againſt all his enemies.

V. 10. Then Joſhua commanded the officers of the people] i. e. Such as were appointed by the Princes and Magiſtrates to publiſh their decrees and ordinances to the people, that taking notice of them, they might obſerve and obey them.

V. 11. Prepare you victualls] i. e. All proviſions fit for ſuch an expedition, ſaving bread. For manna ceaſed not till they were entred into the land of Canaan, and had eaten of the old corn of the land, Chap.5.12.

for within three dayes] This muſt neceſſarily be underſtood of the time after the return of the Spies ſent to view Jericho, though the ſtory of their ſending thither be related in the next Chapter : For they ſpent ſome time in going thither, one night there and in their eſcape, and three dayes in the mountains, that the purſuers might not meet them. Neither was it to any purpoſe to ſend the Spies to view Jericho, if they did not ſtay where they were till they returned, to relate unto them in what condition they found it.

which the Lord your God] Theſe words are added, to make the people couragious and cheerfull in this expedition, ſeeing it was Jehovah that called them unto it, who was Almighty and allſufficient to give them good ſucceſſe, and alſo their God, and therefore moſt gracious and propitious to bleſſe and proſper them, ſo as there could be no cauſe of fear and doubting, ſeeing neither power nor will were wanting in him.

giveth you to poſſeſſe it] This alſo tendeth to their further incouragement, ſeeing God gave it unto them, not onely for a preſent bootie or prey, as he did when they vanquiſhed the Midianites, but that they and their poſterity might poſſeſſe it as their own hereditarie right by Gods ſpeciall gift.

V. 12. And to the Reubenits, &c.] i. e. Their elders and Princes who were to relate it to the reſt of their Tribes.

V. 13. Remember the word] i. e. The agreement and covenant which was between you and Moſes, Num.32.17.20.

given you reſt] i. e. A place of reſt for your wives, children, and cattel, namely that part of the land in which you now are on this ſide Jordan, Num.32.33.

V. 14. paſſe before your brethren] Not that they were to be alwaies in the van-guard or front of the battle, and as it were the forlorn hope, but onely that they ſhould accompanie them in all their warfare, and be preſent with them in all their expeditions. For the word here uſed ſignifieth not a precedencie in place, but onely a preſence and concomitance : And thereby is meant, that they ſhould be alwayes ready to joyn with their brethren in fighting againſt their enemies.

armed] Marſhalled in military order. See on Exod 13.18.

all the mighty men of valour] Not all of theſe Tribes (for the moſt of them were to ſtay ſtill in the countrey allotted to them, to guard it, with their wives and children, from the in-rodes of their bordering enemies ;) but thoſe onely who were the choiceſt and moſt valourous men, and were the fitteſt to do the beſt ſervice See on Num.32.21.

V. 16. And they anſwered Joſhua] That is, as ſome ſuppoſe, the two Tribes and half, to whom his ſpeech was formerly directed ; or, as others more probably think, not onely the two Tribes and half, but together with them all the reſt of the people by their Princes, Elders and Tribunes, ſeeing this anſwer equally belongeth to all the people, and is not peculiar to thoſe Tribes onely, and promiſing unto Joſhua the like willing and cheerfull obedience which they had yeilded to Moſes eſpecially in the latter times of his goverment when as thoſe murmuring and rebellious people were conſumed and deſtroyed and theſe of their poſterity were come in their places.

V. 17. onely the Lord thy God be with thee] This is not to be underſtood as a condition of their promiſed obedience, but a joyfull acclamation, or cheerfull wiſh and prayer, ſuch as men uſe to make for their Kings and ſupream Magiſtrates at their firſt inauguration, and entrance into their government, 1 King.1.34. q. d. The Lord bleſſe thee in thy government, and ſo be with thee, and proſper thee in all thy enterpriſes, as he was with Moſes, who never failed to obtain happie victories over all his enemies with whom he fought.

V. 18. Whoſoever he be that doth rebell, &c.] In theſe words they bind themſelves unto abſolute obedience to all his lawfull commands, under a moſt ſevere ſanction of corporall puniſhment.

onely be ſtrong and of a good courage] Here they exhort and incourage him to ſhew ſuch valour and fortitude as beſeemeth a magnanimous Emperour and Generall, tacitly implying, that nothing on their part ſhould be wanting whereby they might approve themſelves worthy the conduct of ſuch a Captain.

CHAP. II.

Verſ. 1. AND Joſhua the ſon of Nun ſent out] See on Chap.6.17. But why did Joſhua take this courſe, having had formerly experience of the ill ſucceſſe which Moſes had in the like action ? R. There was great defference between this and that ſending of Spies, both in reſpect of the actors, motives, manner and ends of the actions. For firſt, This was done by Joſhua alone, and that by ſpeciall inſtinct of the Spirit, or at leaſt for prudent ends, That primarily and principally by the inſtigation of the people. For though it be ſaid that God commanded them to ſend the Spies, Num. 13. 1,2. Yet is was not done ſimply becauſe God approved it, but becauſe the people out of their fear and diffidence required it, and therefore he gave way to their importunity, when they would no otherwiſe be ſatisfied, but yet afterwards did puniſh it with ill ſucceſſe : For Gods firſt command was that they ſhould preſently go up without fear and diſcouragement, and poſſeſſe the land, Deut. 1. 21. But when the people demurred upon it, and out of fear and infidelity would not obey it, then the Lord condeſcending to their weakneſſe, giveth by way of permiſſion a ſecond command, that they ſhould ſend twelve ſpies to ſearch the land. Secondly, This was done ſecretly, no man knowing of it, ſaving Joſhua, and the two Spies, whom he choſe as fit men for this imployment ; That openly by publike command, and performed by twelve men of ſpeciall note and chief valour, but, as the event ſhewed, ten of them moſt unfit for ſuch a deſigne. Thirdly, theſe gave account of their expedition to Joſhua alone at their return, verſ. 23,24. but thoſe to the whole Congregation, Num.13. 26. which was the occaſion of their murmuring and rebellion. Fourthly, Joſhua ſent, as a wiſe General, out of a prudent providence, to view the Citie, that he might be certified of the ſtrength of its fortifications and the number and courage of the inhabitance, that he might accordingly manage the warre, and prepare for the ſeige : But thoſe, though they propounded the ſame ends, yet not with the like mind, or induced with the ſame motives, but only out of diſtruſtfull fear, and relying herein more upon their own reaſon and providence then upon Gods promiſes and powerfull aſſiſtance, as plainly appeared in the event. But what need all this ado in ſending and ſearching the land, If Joſhua believed Gods promiſe, that he would caſt out their enemies, and give unto them their land for a poſſeſſion? R. Our faith is never ſo ſtrong but that it ſtill needeth further confirmation: As we ſee in the example of Gideon, who though commended for his faith, Heb. 11, 32 yet needed to have it confirmed by divers ſignes, Judg. 6. 37. & 7. 9, 10. Fifthly, though we be aſſured of the end, yet this muſt not ſlacken our diligence in the uſe of the means which conduce unto the end, and ſerve Gods providence for the attaining unto it; yea, rather it may move us to uſe them with more confidence and comfort; ſeeing we have before-hand aſſurance of good ſucceſſe.

of ſhittim] In the plains of Moab, where they then encamped, Num. 33. 49. and not farre diſtant from the Dead ſea; ſo called from the abundance of trees of that name which grew about it. In this place the Iſraelites committed whoredome with the Midianitiſh women, Num. 25. 1.

to ſpie ſecretly] Heb ſilently. i. e. To ſpie out the Land with as much ſilence and ſecrecie as they could, and that chiefly in reſpect of their own people the Iſraelites, from whom they were to keep it ſecret, that they might not now again be diſcouraged with rumors, as they were before, Num. 13. 28, 32. and alſo in reſpect of the people of the Land, that they might not deſcover and apprehend them, and fruſtrate the deſigne.

Go, view the land, even Jericho] The land, for their more convenient entrance and commodious encamping, and chiefly Jericho, in the confines of the land of Canaan, to diſcover its ſtrength and fortifications, and the beſt means whereby it may be beſeiged and maſtered. It was called Jericho from the figure of the plain wherein it was ſituate, reſembling a new-Moon, or from the ſweet ſmell of Balſome which there abounded, as alſo Palm-trees, whereof it was alſo called the Citie of Palm-trees, Judg. 1. 16. Deut. 34. 3. 2 Chron. 28. 15. A place moſt fragrant and fruitfull, in length ſeventie ſtadia, or furlongs, and in breadth twentie, as Joſephus deſcribeth it.

An harlots houſe, named Rahab] Some tranſlate it an Hoſteſſe, or Innekeeper: but the word moſt commonly ſignifieth an Harlot, and is ſo here to be taken, as the Apoſtle James and the Author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews do plainly expreſſe it, James. 2. 25. Heb. 11. 31. And hereof it is, as ſome think, that whereas ſhe contracteth for the lives of her Father, Mother, Brothers, Siſters and kindred, ſhe maketh no mention of an Husband, ver. 13. Although it is probable that ſhe had now, before the ſpies came to her houſe, left that courſe of life, and repented of her ſin, as appeareth by her communication with them, which ſavoureth of religion and the true fear of God. And beſides the Apoſtle plainly affirmeth, that ſhe acted her faith in lodging of theſe Spies, which ſhe could not have done, unleſſe ſhe had before believed and been truly converted. In Rahabs example we have a ſingular evidence of Gods free and infinite grace and goodneſſe, who in the common deluge of deſtruction not onely ſaved this poor Heathen and Harlot, together with her family and kindred, but alſo vouchſafed unto her the honour to be married to Salmon a Prince of the Tribe of Judah, and ſo not onely to be converted to the faith and religion of the Iſraelites, but alſo to be one in the number of the parents of our Saviour Chriſt himſelf according to the fleſh, Matth. 1. 5.

and lodged there] To this houſe as they were directed by Gods ſpeciall providence for their ſafety, ſo it was by them made choyce of as a place moſt convenient for their preſent occaſion, being in a remote corner upon the wall of the Citie, and therefore ſecret, eaſily come unto unobſerved; and being neer the gate, as it is moſt probable, and ſo when they were there they were moſt likely to be hidden and concealed; being alſo a place high and eminent, from whence they might conveniently take a view and proſpect of the Citie and countrey adjoyning, and from whence alſo they might moſt fitly make an eſcape if they were diſcovered.

V. 2. And it was told] Namely, (as it is moſt probable) by ſuch as were appointed to keep the watch, and to obſerve in thoſe times of danger, when their formidable enemies approached ſo neer unto their Citie, who came in and went out of the gates, and were any waies liable to ſuſpicion.

there came men in hither to night] i. e. Late in the evening before the gates were ſhut, that ſo they might more Conveniently ſlip by to their lodging undiſcovered.

V. 3. ſent unto Rahab] Being certified that they were come to her houſe to lodge there.

for they be come to ſearch out all the countrey] i. e. For they are ſuſpicious men, who in all probability are ſent hither as ſpies to ſearch and diſcover all advantages for invading the countrey and ſurpriſing our Citie.

V. 4. And the woman took the two men] i. e. She knew by their diſcovery of themſelves, what they were, from whence they came, and upon what deſign; and upon her conference with them, and the reports which ſhe had formerly heard of the great miracles which God had wrought in favour of his people, and of the fear and faint-heartedneſſe of her own nation, being perſwaded by a lively faith (wrought in her by Gods Spirit, and bringing home to her heart theſe reaſons and motives) that God would deſtroy their nation, and give his own people poſſeſſion of their land, ſhe ſubmitteth to Gods will, and ſeeing no ſafetie ſaving in his protection, by joyning her ſelf to his Church and people, ſhe willingly entertaineth his ſervants, and neglecting all fear and danger, ſhe wholly applyeth her ſelf to uſe all means for their preſervation. For which act of faith ſhe is ſo much commended, Heb. 11. 31. And therefore underſtanding that their coming to her houſe was diſcovered to the King, before he could ſend any to apprehend them, ſhe taketh care for their preſervation.

there came men unto me] By a free and ingenuous confeſſion of ſuch a truth, as, being known to the watch and ſome of her neighbours, could not be denied, ſhe politiquely gaineth credit in the hearers to believe that which ſhe intendeth to ſpeak afterwards, though it were an untruth.

but I wiſt not whence they were] And therefore am to be excuſed, ſeeing I am priviledged by my profeſſion to entertain all gueſts who ſeem honeſt, and I ſuppoſed thoſe to be ſuch, as knowing nothing to the contrary. The which her ſpeech though ſome would excuſe, as being no untruth, but onely the concealing of ſuch a truth as was not neceſſary to be diſcovered; (for being an Inn-keeper, it may be ſhe lodged others in her houſe that night which were now gone, of whom ſhe ſpeaketh in truth, and concealeth theſe Spies in faith and charity, Heb. 11. 31.) Yet the truth is, that her whole ſpeech, in all the branches and parts of it, is nothing elſe but a continued equivocation and masked lye. And therefore herein her example is no precedent for our imitation. For though God accepted of her faith and charity, yet he approved not of her lies, howſoever he paſſed by and pardoned them in this new convert, who had as yet but little knowledge, becauſe ſhe failed through frailty and infirmitie. See on Exod. 1. 19. & on 2 Sam. 17. 20.

V. 5. of the gate] Namely, of the City.

whither the men went I wot not] Seeing after they were gone out of my houſe, I looked not after them, as not ſuſpecting them to be either Spies or Iſraelites. This ſhe ſpeaketh, that ſhe might, by caſting before their eies this miſt, make them to leave her houſe where they were hid, and to make there no further ſearch for them.

purſue after them quickly] This ſhe ſpeaketh that ſhe might take off from her ſelf all ſuſpition that ſhe was privie to their eſcape, ſeeing that now they were diſcovered to be ſpies ſhe like a good Citizen giveth her beſt advice for their ſpeedy apprehenſion, whereas in truth her diſigne was by this means to ſecure them from danger, and to put the Kings officers off from any further ſearch in her houſe, where ſhe had hid them.

V. 6. to the roof of her houſe] Which in thoſe Countries was built flat like a terraſe or leads, as is now alſo in faſhion with the Italians, and was likewiſe with the Jews in the time of Chriſt, Mar. 2. 4. Luke 5. 19. And becauſe the Sun had thither the moſt open and free paſſage, ſhe layd there her green ſtalks of flax that they might be dryed, and theſe ſhe now uſeth to cover and hide the ſpies. See 2 Sam. 17. 19.

V. 7. and the men purſued after them] i. e. Being deluded with her words, unto which (being over-ruled by a ſpecial providence) they gave an over-credulous ear, they deſiſted from any further ſearch, and with all ſpeed haſtened their purſuit.

unto the foords] i. e. The ferries, or the ſhalloweſt places of the river where they might with leaſt danger paſſe over it.

ſhut the gate] i. e. The gate of the City, both to prevent all danger of approaching enemies, and the ſpies going out, if perhaps they were ſtill in the City, and not yet gone out, as Rahab imagined.

V. 8. And before they were laid down] i. e Had compoſed themſelves to take their reſt, to which they had little liſt in this extremity of danger; ſhe haſted up unto them (who were all this while in ſuſpenſe, as not knowing what was done) to acquaint them with all the former paſſages, that they might haſten their eſcape, leſt they ſhould be prevented either by the return of the purſuers when they ſaw their labour loſt, or by a further and more diligent ſearch of the Kings officers.

V. 9. And ſhe ſaid unto them] i. e. I will now declare unto you what reaſons and motives have induced me to deſert the cauſe of my King and Countrey, and to adhere unto you and your party with the extreme danger of my life and livelihood; Becauſe I know that you are highly in Gods favour and under his ſpeciall protection; but we, our King and Country, in his high diſpleaſure, proſcribed by him, and deſtinated to utter ruine and deſtruction.

I know that the Lord hath given you the Land] i. e. I am fully perſwaded, grounding my faith upon Gods promiſes which he hath made unto you, and the wonderfull miracles which he hath wrought for you, that he hath as certainly given you our land (who hath both power and right to diſpoſe of all things both in heaven and earth) as if you were now in preſent poſſeſſion of it

And that your terrour] An Hebraiſme; i.e. in that we are terrified becauſe of you in regard of your near approach and power, and all the inhabitants of the land faint becauſe of you. The which ſhe uſeth as another ground of her confidence, ſeeing God hath given to the Iſraelites courage befitting Conquerours, and poſſeſſed them with diſperate fears and faint-heartedneſſe. And this God had promiſed, Deut. 28. 7. See Chap, 5. 1. Exod. 23. 27. & 34. 24. Deut, 2. 29.

V. 10. For we have heard] Here ſhe rendreth the reaſon of her peoples fear and faint-heartedneſſe, to wit, the report which they had heard of two great miracles; Firſt, Gods preparing a paſſage for them by drying up the waters of the Red ſea; which being an act of omnipotency declared that he was as able to make them victorious over all their enemies, and ſo to give unto them poſſeſſion of their countrey according to his promiſe, as by his miraculous power to make unto them this paſſage unto it: And ſecondly, their vanquiſhing of the Amoritiſh Kings, Sihon and Og, and the iſſue of their victorie, namely their ſlaughter and utter extirpation.

V. 11. Our hearts did melt] An Hebr. i. e. were diſſolved with fear, ſo that we quite loſt all our valour and courage; like metall melted with the fire, or like ice thawed into water and ſpilt upon the ground, which cannot be taken up again. The like phraſes we have, Chap. 5. 1. Deut. 1. 28. & 20. 8. Iſa. 13. 7.

becauſe of you] Hebr. from your face, i. e. by reaſon of your preſence; and that not conſidered ſimply as men, for ſo the Canaanites were more in number and ſtronger than they, but in reſpect of their God whom they ſerved, in whoſe favour they were, who being Lord and King of heaven and earth was able to give victory unto whom he pleaſed.

V. 12. Now therefore I pray you, ſwear unto me by the Lord] Here Rahab ſheweth and exerciſeth a ſingular act of faith. For whereas the people of Iſrael, notwithſtanding all Gods promiſes confirmed unto them by many miracles, were ready every-hand-while to ſtagger and doubt of their performance, ſhe onely upon hear-ſay and reports of them was ſo confidently perſwaded of the truth of them, that ſhe deſireth to enter into covenant with them for her own life and of her friends, as if they had already ſtormed the City, and had the power of life and death in their hands: And that even when the ſpies themſelves had great cauſe of fear in reſpect of their preſent condition, being ſurrounded with enemies, and ſhut up in their City, not ſeeing with the eye of reaſon any probable means of making an eſcape. Herein ſhe conſulted not with naturall reaſon, which would have told her that her gueſts were at this preſent in a deſperate condition, and not able to ſave her or themſelves, but with the eye of faith looking upon Gods power and the truth of his promiſes, ſhe wholly relyeth upon them in the abſence of all earthly meanes, and deſireth the ſpies to ratifie by oath a covenant with her for the life and ſafety of her ſelf and friends.

ſince I have ſhewed you kindneſſe] She moveth them to hearken unto her ſuit by a modeſt commemoration of a great benefit by them received from her; which ſhe extenuateth by terming it only a kindneſſe, whereas in truth it was no leſſe then the ſaving of their lives with the extreme hazard of her own.

unto my fathers houſe] i. e. Not only to me, but alſo for my ſake to al my kindred and allies. So verſ. 13. & Chap. 6. 23.

and give me a true token] That you will inviolably keep covenant with me, and which may ſerve for a ſign to the Iſraelites when they ſurprize the City, that they preſerve us and not ſuffer us to periſh in the common deſtruction.

V. 13. and that yee will ſave alive my father, &c.] For whoſe preſervation ſhe is more ſolicitous then for her ſelf, becauſe they were in more danger, as having no aſſurance of Gods protection, being yet out of covenant and unconverted.

V. 14. Our life for yours] i. e. We warrant thee on the penalty of our own lives, which we deſire God to cut off, if we be not true and faithful unto thee in our promiſe. Or, We will preſerve thy life and of thy kindred even with the hazard or loſſe of our own.

If ye utter not this our buſineſſe] i. e. If you do not diſcover untimely either this our oath unto you, or our ſign which we give you for your aſſurance and ſafety, either to any of your Citizens, or more eſpecially to any of your kindred, which may perjudice our ſafety in our eſcape, or make others, unto whom this preſervation is not intended, to keep themſelves out of danger, either thruſting into your houſe, or by making uſe of the ſame ſigne which we give unto you. And upon the obſerving of this covenant only we will be bound to preſerve thee and thy kindred.

V. 15. Then ſhe let them down] Namely when they had taken this oath, & given her this ſign, & when ſhe had adviſed them of the beſt courſe to be taken after their departure for their ſafe return: Neither is it probable (as ſome think) that all theſe ſpeeches paſſed between them under the window, when they were let down and ſtood without the wall. Though it may be very likely that this whole buſineſſe was in haſt briefly tranſacted whileſt they were in her houſe, but again repeated and more fully amplified when they were let down, and now ſomewhat more out of danger and onward in their eſcape, as appeareth verſ. 18.

for her houſe was upon the town-wall] Namely in an out-corner of the City, where uſually the poorer ſort of people dwelt, though this was ſo diſpoſed of by a ſpecial providence, ſeeing if it had been otherwiſe ſeated, ſhe could not have had this oppertunity of letting them down out of the City, the gates being ſhut. See on Chap. 6. 5.

V. 16. Get you to the mountain] For there were mountains in the paſſage between Jericho and Jordan on both ſides, both North and South.

V. 17. We will be blameleſſe of this thy oath] They punctually and ſtrictly propound, and again more fully repeat, the conditions on which they took their oath, becauſe they were reſolved conſcientiouſly to obſerve it; namely, That ſhe ſhould bind the line of ſcarlet thred in the window by which ſhe had let them down, that it might ſerve for a ſigne to the Iſraelites, to keep them upon their entrance from plundering the houſe, and maſſacring thoſe whom they found in it; and that ſhe ſhould bring her friends whom ſhe would have ſecured into her houſe, of which is before ſpoken; and now laſtly, that none of them in the time of the common ſlaughter and deſtruction ſhould go out of her houſe into the ſtreets of the City.

V. 18. when we come into the land] i. e. As ſoon as we are come over Jordan into your countrey, and are drawing neer, unto your City. For if ſhe deferred to gather her kindred into her houſe till the city was ſtormed and taken, in reſpect of the great fear and perturbation that would then neceſſarily be in every part of it, it would have been too late.

V. 19. his blood ſhall be upon his own head] i. e. The fault or guilt of his blood or death ſhall lie upon himſelf, and not upon him that ſhall ſlay him, becauſe he obſerved not his condition, to keep within thy doors, which is one branch of the covenant between thee and us; but contrariwiſe the guilt ſhall be upon him that ſhall kill him finding him there.

V. 21. According to your words ſo be it] i. e. I willingly ſubmit to all theſe your conditions upon which you have paſſed your promiſe, as being all equall and juſt.

V. 22. the purſuers ſought them throughout all the way] To wit, between Jericho and Jordan. Whereby is intimated the wholeſomeneſe of Rahabs councell, ſeeing they had been ſurprized and periſhed by the hands of the purſuers, if they had not embraced and followed it.

V. 23. and paſſed over] To wit, Jordan; and being come unto Joſhua, who incamped at Shittim, and had ſent them from thence on this expedition, they related unto him all the former paſſages which they had obſerved in their journey, and that privately to himſelf alone, and not, like the other ſpies, Num. 13. before the people, having had experience of the miſchiefs which it produced.

V. 24. And they ſaid to Joſhua] To wit, by way of incouragement like valourous and faithfull men to the cauſe of God, and not like the other daſtardly and unbelieving ſpies.

the Lord hath delivered] They ſpeak of that which was to do as if already done, to expreſſe the confidence of their faith, and certainty of their hope.

Faint becauſe of us] And therefore there is no doubt but that the ſame Almighty power of God will ere long caſt them out of their land and country, who hath already deprived them of all courage by which they ſhould defend it.

CHAP. III.

Verſ. 1. AND Joſhua aroſe] i. e. After the Spies were returned and had related unto Joſhua what they had done and obſerved in their view of the land, city and inhabitants, and the people were much comforted and incouraged with their joyful news, and after that Joſhua was hereupon reſolved to paſſe over Jordan, to enter into and invade the land of Canaan and beſiege Jericho, and had by his officers given notice to the people of his intention, and warning that within three dayes they ſhould prepare for ſuch an expedition, and furniſh themſelves within the compaſs of this time with victualls and all neceſſaries befitting ſuch a journey, and they according to his command had prepared themſelves and were furniſhed with all proviſions, then Joſhua roſe and removed his camp from Shittim, and came unto Jordan.

early] This is added, to ſhew that Joſhua performed the duty of a good and wiſe Generall, not being ſlothful and ſluggiſh in a buſineſſe of ſo high a nature and important concernment, but careful and diligent in his undertakings, ruling and guiding the people under his government, not onely by his commands, but alſo by his good example.

in the morning] Namely, of the ninth day of the firſt moneth, for they paſſed Jordan on the tenth day, Chap. 4. 19. This moneth, which was by the Hebrews called Niſan and Abib, was appointed by God in their religious computation, to be the firſt moneth of their year, in which they were commanded to celebrate the feaſt of the Paſſeover in remembrance of their great deliverance out of the bondage of Ægypt. And was fitly made the beginning of their year, ſeeing then they ſeemed by coming out of a cruel thraldome, worſe then death, to begin their life, when they enjoyed the liberty of Gods people. And as in this moneth formerly they had had that great deliverance, ſo now in it they have a ſecond benefit of entring into Canaan, a type of their heavenly inheritance in Gods Kingdome. Otherwiſe the Jews in their civill account reckoned the ſeventh moneth from this to be the beginning of their year, which they called Tiſri, becauſe they thought it to be the beginning of the worlds creation. The former of theſe anſwereth to our March; the other, to September. Now on this day Joſhua again appointeth his Officers that they ſhould paſſe through the Camp, to give unto the people notice of his directions, for ſuch courſes as they were to obſerve in their paſſage over Jordan.

V. 2. And it came to paſs after three dayes] i. e. After the command of providing victuals, Chap. 1. 11.

That the officers went through the hoſt] Namely, the ſecond time, with new directions from Joſhua for their paſſage, and the manner of it.

V. 3. And they commanded the people] In Joſhuah's name; as he alſo did in Gods name, and by his appointment, verſ. 8.

when yee ſee the ark of the covenant] So called by reaſon of the two Tables of the Law written in ſtone, which were laid up and reſerved in it. It was alſo called the Ark of the Teſtimony, chap. 4. 16. becauſe it contained the teſtification of Gods will. See on Exod. 25. 16.

of the Lord your God] i. e. Not only the God of heaven and earth, but your God by a peculiar and perpetuall covenant, whoſe preſence therefore is in an eſpecial manner to be adored by you, and his Ark, which is the viſible ſigne of it, to be followed by you with great cheerfulneſſe and religious veneration; not in reſpect of the Ark it ſelf, and the materials and figure of it, but as it was a type of Jeſus Chriſt, the Angel of the Covenant, in whom dwelleth the fulneſſe of the God-head bodily, Col. 2 19. Whom they were to follow, as being their true guide that went before them and conducted them into the land of promiſe, which was alſo a type of the heavenly Canaan.

and the Prieſts the Levites bearing it] i. e. Which were all of the tribe of Levi. For howſoever ordinarily it was the office of the Levites, and properly of the Kohathites, to bear the Ark, Num. 3. 31. who were only Levites and not Prieſts; yet in extraordinary ſervices, for the greater pomp and magnificence, this ſervice was alſo appointed to the Prieſts the ſonnes of Aaron, although very rarely; as we ſee here, in the ſiege of Jericho, and when David fled from Abſalom, 2 Sam. 15. 29.

yee ſhall remove from your place, and go after it] Hereby it appeareth that the courſe and order in bearing the Ark obſerved in the time of Moſes was changed by Joſhua; For then the pillar of the cloud by day and the fire by night went before the people and guided them in their journies, and the Ark was carryed in the midſt of the Army, as being the ſafeſt place, Num. 2. 17. but now the cloud is removed, and the Ark as their guide is appointed to go before, and to lead them into the land of promiſe: Which was (as ſome probably think) to typiſie unto them, that the Law and its umbratilous ſhadows could not, but the Ark of the Covenant typified by it, Jeſus Chriſt, was able to conduct them into the promiſed land: And as there was no other way of entrance into the earthly Canaan but by following the Ark, ſo there is no other way of entrance into the heavenly Canaan then onely by Jeſus Chriſt, John. 14. 6.

V. 4. Yet there ſhall be a ſpace between you and it] This diſtance was preſcribed to affect their hearts with an awful fear and due reverence of Gods preſence, of which the ark was a ſigne. In which reſpect at the giving of the law there were bounds appointed about the mount, to keep the people from approaching unto it, Exod. 19. 12.

about two thouſand cubits] i.e. A thouſand yards, or there-abouts, as neer as they could gueſſe with their eye, ſeeing they could not conveniently meaſure it otherwiſe. The which was about the breadth of Jordan when the waters overflowed, as now they did, as Authors and all eye-witneſſes report.

that ye may know the way by which yee muſt go] Here another reaſon is rendred why the Prieſts bearing the Ark were to go before in this diſtance till they arrived on the other ſide juſt over againſt them, that is, that they might diſcover unto the people a firm and ſafe paſſage in which they might follow them in an orderly march, for their better ſecurity, before themſelves entred into the River which was yet unknown unto them.

for ye have not paſſed this way heretofore] Heb. Since yeſterday and the third day; i.e. never hitherto, and therefore need this guidance and conduction to ſecure your paſſage.

V. 5. Sanctifie your ſelves] Both ceremonially by legall purifications, as at the giving of the law, Exod. 19. 10, 15. and ſpiritually by an internall purity; that you may be prepared to ſee a miraculous ſigne and glorious effect of Gods powerfull preſence, namely in that wonder of dividing the waters, Lev. 20. 7, 8. Numb. 11. 18. 1 Sam. 16. 5. Joel. 2. 16. See on Chap. 7. 13.

V. 6. And Joſhua ſpake unto the Prieſts, ſaying, Take up the Ark] This he doth not enjoyn by his own abſolute authority, but according as he was directed and appoined by God, whoſe commands he obeyed, as they did his, and God in him. For otherwiſe he durſt not have altered that order which God himſelf appointed, of carrying the Ark in the midſt of the army, and have cauſed it now to be carried before all the people.

And they took up the Ark] And carryed it to the other ſide of the river. Herein they ſhewed a ſtrong faith and humble obedience, hazarding their own lives to ſecure the people from all danger of that fearfull and uncouth paſſage, and alſo expoſing themſelves to the perill of enemies, when they touched upon their land, who might be ready to oppoſe them, that they might hinder their entrance, and keep them from landing, eſpecially being in ſuch a diſtance from the reſt of the army.

V. 7. This day will I begin to magnifie thee] God had much honoured Joſhua in Moſes time, when he admitted him to be preſent with Moſes in the Tabernacle while he ſpake with him out of the cloud, and when he commanded Moſes by the impoſition of his hands to conſecrate him his ſucceſſor in government, to indue him with the ſpirit of wiſdome and fortitude and ſo to make him partner and partaker with him in his glory: But now he further promiſeth to honour him in the execution of his function of Empire and government: q. d. I will now begin to exalt thee in the place unto which I have called thee, in the eſteem of the people, by a great miracle which I am about to do, whereby they ſhall be brought to acknowledge that I have made thee Head over them, and by thee will poſſeſſe them of the promiſed land; and in this I will make thee equal with Moſes, ſeeing as by him I made paſſage for the people out of Ægypt by dividing the Red ſea, ſo by thy miniſtry I will make way for them into Canaan by dividing this river Jordan, and ſo declare that my preſence and power is with thee, as it was with him.

V. 8. When ye are come to the brink of the water] i.e. When ye have paſſed over Jordan, and are come to the brink of it over againſt you on the other ſide, then ſtand ſtill there till I call you from thence, ſeeing by the ſtay of the Ark there the courſe of the waters ſhall be ſtopped, untill all the people be paſſed over. For ſo I underſtand it of the brink of the river on the further ſide, ſeeing otherwiſe the Prieſts with the Ark could not in that diſtance have gone before the people, as was commanded, but before they were paſſed over they would have gone before it, and ſo loſt their guidance in ſecuring their paſſage in the greateſt part of it.

V. 9. and hear the words of the Lord your God] i. e. Stirr up your attention, ſeeing it is not ſo much I as God himſelf that ſpeaketh unto you and not onely here, but believe alſo what he ſpeaketh, ſeeing he is truth it ſelf, and cannot deceive you, and a God of infinite power, and therefore able to perform what he promiſeth; yea, he is alſo the Lord your God who hath choſen you to be his peculiar people, and therefore will take ſpeciall care over you, proſper you in your undertakings, and ſo diſpoſe of all your affairs as ſhall be moſt for your profit and welfare.

V. 10. Hereby ye ſhall know] i. e. By this wonderful miracle which he is about to do in dividing the waters, which in the courſe of nature conſtantly run in a continued ſtream, ye ſhall know that the omnipotent God is among you to aſſiſt you, and to give you poſſeſſion of the promiſed land, ſeeing none but he is able to do ſuch a work of wonder. Neither is he onely powerfull for the preſent to do what he pleaſeth, but alſo for ever unto all ſucceeding ages, ſeeing he ever liveth to perform his word and promiſes, and this in particular, of caſting out theſe nations, and giving unto you their land for your inheritance. And therefore go on with courage, ſeeing there is no cauſe of fear and doubting.

drive out from before you the Canaanites] He reckoneth here but ſeven nations, whereas God numbreth ten in his promiſe to Abraham, Gen. 15. 19. How then is that performed, ſeeing four of thoſe there named are here wanting, the Kenites, Kenezites, Kadmonites and Rephaims, and the Hivites here mentioned are not there named? Unto this ſome Anſwear, that he ſpeaketh here onely of thoſe nations which Joſhua in his time conquered, and that the other nations, from the river of Ægypt even to Euphrates, were ſubdued in Davids and Solomons time. But this ſatisfies not, ſeeing theſe lands were onely ſubdued and became tributaries, but the inhabitants were not caſt out, nor their land given to Iſrael for an inheritance. Others think that ſome of thoſe named there as ſeverall, might now be joyned into one, and ſo bear but one name. But that which I conceive to be moſt probable, is, that theſe promiſes made to Abraham then and the people here were not abſolute, but onely conditionall, if they continued in their obedience, ſerving God alone and cleaving unto him. Which in a great part they made void unto themſelves by their apoſtaſie and idolatry; in which reſpect God telleth them plainly, that he would no further proceed in driving out thoſe nations before them, Judg. 2. 1, 2, 3. and ſo divers of thoſe lands never came into the Iſraelites poſſeſſion, as Tyre and Sidon, the land of the Philiſtines, &c. though the moſt of them in Davids and Solomons reign became tributaries, which doth not fully reach home to the promiſe, of giving their land to Abrahams poſterity, Gen. 15. 18.

V. 11. the Ark of the covenant, even the Lord of the whole earth] Which by repetition of the word Ark, may be thus taken, the ark of the covenant, even the ark of the Lord, &c. Or thus; The ark, which is a type of Gods preſence, who is the Lord of the whole earth. This is added to ſtrengthen their faith. For if the Lord of the whole earth, who made it of nothing, and governeth all things contained in it by his wiſe and powerfull providence, paſſed over before them to direct and aſſiſt them, there could be no place left for incredulity, or ſo much as doubting of their good ſucceſſe.

V. 12. take ye twelve men] i. e. Now make choiſe of them, that in their paſſage they may be eye-witneſſes of this great miracle, though the ſervice required of them ſhall not be performed till ye be paſſed over Jordan, Chap. 4. 1, 2. For that they were the ſame twelve here mentioned, appeareth Chap. 4. 4.

V. 13. And it ſhall come to paſſe] q. d. This ſhall be the iſſue of your buſineſſe, and the manner of your paſſage; that when you ſee every thing done juſt in that manner and time which I foretell you, you may not attribute it to any accedentall cauſes, but wholly aſcribe it to Gods allruling providence.

the waters of Jordan ſhall be cut off] i.e. The waters coming from above ſhall ſtand ſtill on an heap, and the waters below according to their ordinary courſe ſhall paſſe away, and ſo leave the channell dry for the people to paſſe over.

V. 14. And it came to paſſe] i. e. As ſoon as the Prieſts had taken up the ark, and the people were come out of their tents and lodgings, and prepared themſelves to follow the Prieſts towards Jordan.

V. 15. And as they that bare the ark] Here is ſhewed, that all things foretold verſ. 13. were accordingly fulfilled in every particular.

For Jordan overfloweth all his banks at the time of harveſt] Namely of the Barly harveſt, which in thoſe hot Countries was in their firſt moneth called Niſan, or Abib, which anſwereth to the latter part of our March, and the beginning of April, in which moneth they kept their Paſſeover. Now the reaſon why at this time Jordan overfloweth its banks, is credibly thought to be the melting of the Snow which lyeth all Winter upon the hills and mountains adjacent, and is melted in their harveſt time with the heat of the Sun; which is the cauſe of the like inundations of the Rivers Euphrates and Tigris, Eccl.24.25, 26. Now this is added for divers reaſons; Firſt, to amplifie the greatneſs of the miracle, in that Jordan was dryed up and made a ſafe paſſage when the waters were at the higheſt. Secondly, to commend the Prieſts faith, who adventured to enter and paſs over the River when it thus fearfully overflowed, and did run with a ſwift and ſtrong current. Thirdly, that the people might be moved hereby to obſerve Gods care and providence watching over them, in that he brought them into the land of their enemies in harveſt-time, when as it was beſt furniſhed with all neceſſary proviſions both for the preſent, and the year following. See 1 Chron.12.15.

V. 16. ſtood and roſe up] As they muſt needs do, when coming down from above in their ordinary manner, they were ſtopt here and had no paſſage, and therefore did riſe up as an high heap, which extended very far backwards; even from hence where they were to paſs over, to the City Adam, which ſome Coſmographers place on the Eaſt-ſide of Jordan over againſt Gilgal, which is beſide Zaretan, lying Southward from Adam. Of Zaretam ſee 1 King 4. 12. & 7. 46.

over-right againſt Jerico] The place, as ſome think, from this paſſage over, was called afterwards Beth-abara, Joh.1.28. where John the Baptiſt baptized.

V. 17. ſtood firm on dry ground] Becauſe the waters which were above, at the preſence of the Ark, or rather of God repreſented by it, were kept back and ſtood on an heap, according to Pſal.114.3. The Sea ſaw this, and fled; Jordan was driven back: and the waters below, according to their natural and ordinary courſe, were run away into the lake Aſphaltites, or the Salt and Dead Sea, leaving the channel dry, and ſo fit for the Iſraelites to paſſe over.

in the midſt of Jordan] Which is not meant of the mid-way of the River, or middle part, as appeareth by the reaſons before given on v. 8. but of the channel neer the bank on the other ſide. Neither doth (as learned interpreters obſerve) the Hebrew word here uſed, and tranſlated midſt, ſo uſually and properly ſignifie the middle part of a thing, or that which ſtandeth in the mid-way, as that which is within a thing it ſelf, or contained within the verge and circumference of it, whether it be in the middle or in the out-ſide and extream part of it.

till all the people were paſſed] i.e. Quietly and ſafely arrived and come to land, as meeting with no enemies to oppoſe them and hinder their landing, though it be uſual for people in the like caſe to guard and man their coaſts & frontiers when they are ready to be invaded. Which theſe Canaanites at this time neglected, either becauſe they thought it needleſſe, as being in their conceit an impoſſible thing to paſſe over Jordan at this time when the waters were ſo high that they overflowed the banks, or becauſe God had infatuated and deprived them of the uſe of their reaſon, ſo that they never thought of any means of defence, or finally becauſe they were ſo wholly poſſeſſed with terror and amazing fear that they durſt not come out into the open field, but kept themſelves immured in their ſtrong, fenced, and high-walled City.

CHAP. IIII.

Ver.1. A*Nd it came to paſſe*] In this Chapter is related what things were done after they were paſſed over Jordan, both neer and about the River, and after they had pitched their Camp in Gilgal, where they lodged that night.

V. 2. Take you twelve men] Here he more fully and amply expreſſeth that command mentioned, chap.3.12. concerning the choice of twelve men, and ſheweth to what uſe they were to be put. Theſe men were to be choſen out of every Tribe a man, one with another, becauſe the remembrance of this great miracle concerned them all alike, namely, that by their relation they might propagate the knowledg of this wonderful work to all their poſterity. Neither were the two tribes and half to be exempted, though their inheritance was already fallen unto them on the other ſide of Jordan: For howſoever they were ſeparated from one another in their habitation by the River, yet they remained ſtill one people, and of one Religion, and joyned together in the worſhip and ſervice of the ſame God: Upon which grounds they afterwards excuſed themſelves to the other Tribes for building that Altar mentioned Chapter 22. ver.22—30.

V. 3. midſt of Jordan] i.e. The channel neer the bank where they were now arrived. For why ſhould they fetch the ſtones further off, when they might have them nearer hand?

lodge this night] i.e in Gilgal, v.19, 20.

V. 4. whom he had prepared] i.e. Whom he had before choſen for that imployment, Chap. 3.12.

V. 5. of the Lord your God] And therefore this ſervice, though it may ſeem mean, is not to be ſlighted by you, ſeeing it is done to ſo great a Lord and Maſter, and tendeth to the uſe and benefit of all the Tribes of Iſrael, for whoſe ſake you do it.

V. 6. That this may be a ſign] Namely to call to your remembrance in time to come, ſo great a benefit for the ſtirring up of your ſelves and your poſterity to thankfulneſſe, for the ſtrengthning of your faith and affiance in God, and working your hearts to true obedience. So Exod.13.14. Deut.6.20. Joſh.22.27. & 24.27. See on Exod,12.26. & on Eccl.12.1.

in time to come] Hebr. to morrow; Which often with the Hebrews ſignifieth all that time which is to come: q. d. ſo often as you ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak of it to your poſterity. See on Chap. 22. 18.

V. 7. Then ye ſhall anſwer them] i.e. Ye ſhall be ready to inſtruct them in the knowledge of theſe great works which God hath done for you, ſeeing parents cannot perform a better duty to their children, then to train them in the fear of God, and to ſeaſon their minds and hearts with the knowledge and love of true Religion.

V. 8. And the children of Iſrael did ſo] i e. The twelve men appointed to this office who repreſented the whole people, every man his particular Tribe, and therefore here bear their name.

V. 5. And Joſhua ſet up twelve ſtones] Beſides thoſe twelve which were to be ſet up in Gilgal, that it might be a monument to them that inhabited about Jordan, or paſſed by that way, of that great miracle. They were therefore to be pitched in the place where the Prieſts that bear the Ark ſtood, not in the middle part of Jordan, where by reaſon of the depth and diſtance they could hardly at any time be ſeen, but in the channel neer the bank, where they might alwayes be in view, ſaving when the River did overflow.

and they are there unto this day] i.e. By an immutable and perpetual ſtatute, or to that time when theſe words by ſome holy Writers were inſerted into this Book. See Chapter 6.25. and on 1 Sam. 5.5.

V. 10. For the Prieſts which bare the Ark ſtood in the midſt of Jordan] Theſe words were added to ſhew and commmand to poſterity the faith and patience of the Prieſts, and propound them as patterns and precedents to all of that calling, with all other faithful Miniſters; in that, when all the people are ſaid for fear to haſt away, they conſtantly perſiſted and perſevered in that office unto which God ſigned them, without fear or fainting, ſtaying immoveably in their ſtation all the while that Joſhua delivered Gods commands concerning the carrying of the ſtones and the uſe which was to be made of them, the taking away of twelve to the land, with the faſhioning and fixing of other twelve in the place where they ſtood, and the tedious paſſage of ſo great a multitude by them over Jordan; and all this notwithſtanding the fearful ſight of thoſe hideous mountaines of water which hung over their heads, and were every minute ready to overwhelm and dround them, unleſſe they were miraculouſly ſtayed by the hand of an omnipotent God.

according to all that Moſes commanded Joſhua] This is not to be underſtood as though Moſes had given by his commands, directions unto Joſhua in all the particular carriages of this whole buſineſs, ſeeing we read of no ſuch directions in all the Books of Moſes; but as in general he was commanded by Moſes, to obey God in all his commands when they ſhould be made known by Eleazar the High Prieſt, inquiring of the Lord for him from time to time by Urim and Thummim, Num.27.21,22,23. ſo did he now in all things that concerned buſineſſe of paſſing over Jordan.

And the people haſted and paſſed over] As apprehending great danger whileſt they were in their paſſage. For though they paſſed over upon dry ground, yet ſeeing the waters ſtanding on heaps, and hanging over their heads ready to overflow and ſwallow them up, they were affrighted with this ghaſtly ſight, and through weakneſſe of faith made all poſſible ſpeed to be out of this danger. For though it be ſaid that by faith they paſſed through the Red Sea, even as now alſo they did over Jordan, yet their faith was not free from doubtings, but mixed with failings and much weakneſs, Heb. 11. 29. Matth. 14. 30.

V. 11. and the Prieſts] This is added to ſhew their faithfulneſs in their place and execution of their office, who did not only as good guids and leaders go before, and hazard themſelves to the peril of the firſt entrance into the River, and with faith, fortitude, and patience long continued in that place of fear and danger, but alſo were the laſt that came away, not leaving their ſtation till all the people were in ſafety, that their example might be a precedent for all their ſucceſſors.

in the preſence of the people] Who ſtood upon the bank to behold the laſt act of this great miracle, namely the return of the waters to their ordinary courſe, as ſoon as the Prieſts bearing the Ark were come to land.

V. 12. And the children of Reuben &c.] According to their covenant made chap.1.14. & Num.32.20,27.

V. 13. About fourty thouſand] The reſt of their Tribes being left behind to defend their Country newly fallen unto them, with their Cities and Inhabitants, againſt the in-rodes of their bordering enemies.

prepared for war] Or, ready armed, as v.12.

paſſed over before the Lord] i.e. Before the Ark of the Lord, which was a viſible ſign of Gods preſence; or, before the people of the Lord. Neither is it likely that their place was to go immediately before the Ark. Or, hereby is ſimply to be meant that they went forward in this expedition in the ſight and preſence of the Lord, (in which ſenſe it was ſaid that Nimrod was a great Hunter before the Lord, Gen. 10. 9.) implying their great valour and chearfulneſs in this warlike expedition. See on chap.1.14. & Num.32. 20.

V. 14. On that day the Lord magnified Joſhua] According to his promiſe, chap.3.7. that being in high eſteem with the people, he might be of more authority in his rule and government, and ſo carry on the work, unto which he was by God called and deſigned, with more eaſe and better ſucceſſe.

V. 15, 16, 17. And the Lord ſpake unto Joſhua] Whereby is implied that the managing of this whole buſineſs was by Gods ſpecial command to Joſhua, and by his from God to the Prieſts and people.

V. 18. and the ſoles of the Prieſts feet] i.e. As at their entrance into the River, their feet no ſooner touched the water, but preſently they were divided, chap.3.15, ſo as ſoon as they landed on the Continent, they returned to their former courſe, and this the more to convince the people that there was nothing of nature or chance in all this action, but all came to paſſe by Gods ſpecial providence and appointment.

unto the dry land] Not the banks neer the River, which upon the return of the waters were again overflowed, but the adjoyning Continent, unto which the water overflowing did not reach.

returned to their place] Not ſuddenly and all at once, (for then thoſe huge heaps and mountains of waters, gathered by the ſtopping of the ſtream, would have drowned the whole Country adjoyning) but by little and little, and ſlow degrees, as they were ordered and overruled by Gods powerful providence.

V. 19. on the tenth day of the firſt moneth] Namely, Abib, in which they were to celebrate the Paſſeover in remembrance of their deliverance out of Ægypt, chap.5.10. which they might not do before they were prepared thereunto by Circumciſion, Exod.12.48. which had been omitted all the time of their continuing in the wilderneſſe, chap. 5.5. And therefore by a ſpecial providence of God they landed in Canaan, and went unto Gilgal, on the tenth day (on which the Lamb was to be ſet apart, Exod.12.3.) that being there circumciſed, they might on the fourteenth day celebrate the Feaſt of the Paſſeover. See on chap.3.1.

and encamped in Gilgal] So called here by an anticipation, q.d. they incamped in that place which was afterwards by Joſhua called Gilgal, chap.5.9. Here they pitched their ſtanding Camp, when part of the army marched on further to conquer the Country, as being a place moſt commodious for this uſe by reaſon of its fruitfulneſſe, and the River adjoyning to it, and the mountains on either ſide.

V. 20. did Joſhua pitch in Gilgal] In ſome eminent and conſpicuous place, that all that paſſed by might ſee them, and ſo be put in mind of the miraculous paſſage over Jordan.

V. 21, 22, 23. And he ſpake to the children of Iſrael] This ſpeech for ſubſtance is the ſame with that v. 6, 7. (only that was directed to the twelve men appointed to bear the ſtones, and this to the whole people, or rather to their elders and rulers) and therefore needeth little further explication.

V. 23. from before you] The waters of Jordan were not dryed up before their children unto whom they were thus to ſpeak, but before the parents themſelves, who are here commanded to make this relation unto their poſterity: But they are here ſaid to have been dryed before them, becauſe this miracle was done not only for the uſe and benefit of them who then lived and were preſent at the doing of it, but alſo for their children that were to deſcend from them, and were yet in their loyns, or ſo young and little that for the preſent they were unable to obſerve and make uſe of this great work of God. And again it is ſaid to be done before their children, becauſe they had intereſt in the ſame God with their parents, were of the ſame Religion, and Members of the ſame body, Church and Commonwealth.

Red Sea, which he dryed up from before us] Here, upon the ſame grounds he ſaith that this was done before the people unto whom he now ſpake, when not any of them were preſent at this miracle that were of ripe age, ſaving Caleb and himſelf, ſeeing the men that paſſed over the Red ſea were in Gods juſt diſpleaſure, for their unbelief, murmuring, ſtiff-neckedneſſe and rebellion, cut off in the wilderneſs, and never entred into the land of promiſe, chap. 5.6.

V. 24. might know the hand of the Lord] i.e. Might acknowledg and take occaſion to glorifie God in this manifeſtation of his power and providence, which is his main end in all his miracles. And ſecondarily, that hereby his people might learn to fear God, (as it is here to be underſtood) to worſhip and ſerve him alone, to imbrace his true Religion, and in faith and obedience to do his will, and obſerve and keep all his commandments. All which is uſually in the Scriptures comprehended under this one duty of Fearing God, in reſpect of a ſpecial uſe which the people here ſpoken unto were to make of it, namely, hereby to be reſtrained from apoſtaſie and ſtarting back from obedience unto God, which was the ſinne of their Anceſtors, Pſalm 78. 56, 57. Jer. 32.40.

for ever] Hebr. all dayes, i. e. for the whole term of your lives.

CHAP. V.

Ver. 1. WHen all the Kings] Though the whole land of Canaan was but of ſmall extent, yet there were many Kings in it, becauſe it was the manner of thoſe times to have a King over every particular City: But in after ages men increaſing in pride, ambition and covetuouſneſſe, could not content themſelves to be thus bounded and limited, but with power and violence extended their Soveraignty and dominion, not only over many Cities, but alſo provinces and Nations.

of the Amorites] The Amorites were on both ſides Jordan; whereof two Kings were ſlain already on the ſide towards Moab.

on the ſide of Jordan weſtward] i.e. Inhabiting the Weſtern parts of Canaan.

all the Kings of the Canaanites] Under theſe two the reſt of the nations are comprehended: under the Amorites, thoſe that were ſituate near Jordan Eaſtward, from North to South; and under the Canaanites, thoſe that did lye Weſtward, and bordered upon the Mediterranean Sea.

until we were paſſed over] By Gods providence it came to paſſe that the Inhabitans laid it not to heart to make uſe of their greateſt advantage in oppoſing and hindering their landing on the borders of Canaan, either out of ſecurity, becauſe the paſſage ſeemed unto them impoſſible, or out of cowardiſe, becauſe they durſt not come out of their Cities and places of ſtrength, before they were forced by urgent neceſſity. See on chap.3.17.

their heart melted, neither was there ſpirit in them] i.e. Their courage wholly was quailed and could not be recollected, like metals, that have no ſtrength in them when they are melted and diſſolved; or like waters ſpilt upon the ground, that cannot be gathered up again: and their underſtanding alſo through fear and aſtoniſhment failing, they (as we ſay) were at their wits end, ſo as they could not think or adviſe of the beſt means whereby they might be preſerved from approaching ruine and calamity. See Exod.15.14,15. This fear (like that Gen.35.5.) withheld the Canaanites from aſſaulting the Iſraelites, though at this time they had a double advantage againſt them, they being ſore upon their circumciſion, and buſied with the ſolemnity of the Paſſeover. See Exod.34.24.

V. 2. At that time] This verſe and thoſe following co-here with the laſt verſes of the former chapter, the firſt verſe being a digreſſion from the ſtory. Where, by that time is to be underſtood the day in which they arrived and came to Gilgal: for being ſo taken, here only were four dayes before the Paſſeover, in which they were to be circumciſed and healed. Or, as others more probably think, theſe words are to be referred to that time when as Joſhua gave them in charge to prepare for their paſſage over Jordan, becauſe otherwiſe they ſhould have been much ſtraightned in time, to the due performance of all that was to be done reſpecting circumciſion and their preparation for the Paſſeover.

make thee ſharp knives] The Hebrew word doth ſignifie knives of ſtones, or flints, or elſe ſharp razors, as the Chaldee Paraphraſe hath it. Theſe might be provided with eaſe if this charge were given by the Lord before their paſſage over Jordan, and with no great difficulty at their firſt coming to Gilgal; ſeeing many hands make ſhort and light work, and as there were many knives required to circumciſe in the ſpace of one day ſo great a multitude, ſo there were many hands to make them. See Exod.4.25.

and circumciſe] Heb. turn again circumciſe, that is, circumciſe again, an Hebraiſme like that uſed Num.11.4. Pſalm 85. 8. Ezek. 8.6. Whereby is not meant, that thoſe who were already circumciſed ſhould now again be circumciſed; which could not have ſtood either with religion or natural reaſon, ſeeing they could not again take away that foreskin which was already cut off: But this is the ſenſe of theſe words, Reſtore the Sacrament of circumciſion to its primitive uſe at the firſt inſtitution of it to Abraham and his ſeed, which hath now for a long time been neglected, or at leaſt omitted. It had been much forborn in Ægypt, as ſome think, till it was again reſtored by Moſes, either out of neglect of Gods holy Sacrament, or, which is more likely, becauſe there they could not by reaſon of oppreſſion adminiſter it according to Gods inſtitution. And in the wilderneſs it had been wholly laid aſide (at leaſt from the return of the ſpies, which was in the ſecond year after the Iſraelites came out of Ægypt) becauſe at Gods appointment they were ſuddenly to remove from place to place, as the cloud removed, that was their guide, which they could not do without great hurt and damage to thoſe who were newly circumciſed, v. 8. For though ſometime they encamped long in a place, yet all that while they had no aſſurance of their abode there, but were ſtill at an hours warning to remove: In which caſe the Lord diſpenſing with his own ordinance by a new command of their removing, it was in them no neglect or ſin: For had it been ſo, it is not probable but they ſhould have been ſharply reproved for it by God himſelf, and his Miniſters, Moſes and Aaron. But it may be objected, that Moſes was ſtricken with a dangerous ſickneſs for not circumciſing his ſon, though he were in a journey which was undertaken by Gods appointment, Exod.4.24? Unto which I anſwer, that this puniſhment was inflicted, becauſe he had had time enough before to have circumciſed his ſon, and had neglected it: or if he had been then but eight dayes old, he might have ſtaid by the way till the child had been circumciſed and healed, ſeeing though God had appointed him his journey, yet he had not ſtrictly limitted him to diſpatch it in ſuch a time. But why was Joſhua commanded by God to circumciſe all the people at their firſt entrance into Canaan? I anſwer, Firſt, that hereby he might roll away the reproach which they had contracted in Ægyp ,v.9. *S*econdly, that hereby they might be prepared to celebrate the Paſſeover, of which none might eat before they were circumciſed, Exod.12.48. Thirdly, for the ſtrengthning and confirming of their faith in this aſſurance, that God would make good unto them his Covenant and all the promiſes contained in it, eſpecially this of giving the land of Canaan for an inheritance both to them and their ſeed, ſeeing this *S*acrament was annexed to the covenant firſt made with Abraham as a ſeal to confirm his faith in the full aſſurance of this particular promiſe, Gen.17.8,9,10. In which reſpect they now needed eſpecially the benefit of this Sacrament, that their faith might be ſtrengthened againſt all difficulties which they were now to meet with, in reſpect of the mighty oppoſitions of their numerous, warlike and potent enemies, and that they might hereby be the better encouraged in all their dangerous attempts and undertakings. And laſtly, it was enjoyned by God for the tryal of their faith and obedience when they were under a great tentation. For being now entred into the Land, and invironed round about with many mighty and malicious enemies, who watched upon all opportunities to ruine and deſtroy them, they could never have had a fitter opportunity then this for the attaining of their purpoſe, if by any means they might have come to the knowledge of it. For had they come upon them, as Simeon and Levi upon the *S*hechemites, Gen.34.25,26. When they were ſore of their wounds, they might eaſily have ſlaughtered them, they being utterly diſabled to fight for their lives, or make any reſiſtance. Herein their faith therefore was throughly tryed, in that at Gods command they were willing to hazard their whole Army at once to ſo deſperate a danger, relying wholly upon Gods power and providence.

V. 3. And Joſhua made him ſharp knives] Or, knives of flint. i.e. He cauſed them to be made; or, they were made by his appointment.

and circumciſed the children of Iſrael] To wit, all that were not before circumciſed, that is, all that were under fourty years of age, and were born ſince their coming out of Ægypt.

at the hill of the foreskins] Heb. Gibeah-haaraloth. Which name was now given unto this place, becauſe the Iſraelites had there left and buried their fore-skins.

V. 4. And this is the cauſe] To wit, why they did now renew and ſet on foot again this ordinance of circumciſion, which had been omitted at leaſt for the ſpace of thirty eight years in the Wilderneſſe, becauſe all the people and men of war who were twenty years old and upward, for their unbelief, rebellion and murmuring dyed in the Wilderneſs, Num.14.23. 1 Cor.10.5. Heb.3.17. and were circumciſed before their coming out of Ægypt, as were alſo their children that were born there, and came out with them under the age of twenty, Num.14.29. Deut.1.31. And now a new generation was come in their place which were not yet circumciſed, ſeeing this Sacrament had been omitted thirty eight year, that is, from the return of the Spies until this day.

V. 5. All the people that came out] Namely, thoſe which lived in Ægypt after Moſes return out of Midian, and had received from him Gods meſſage concerning their deliverance out of bondage, confirmed with ſo many and wonderful miracles, theſe renewed their Covenant, and with it their hopes of enjoying the promiſed land, and ſo accordingly prepared themſelves and their children for their entrance in thither, by taking upon them circumciſion, the Seal of the Covenant.

V. 6. Till all the people] Or, all the nations, as the word properly ſignifieth. Neither doth he here (as ſome obſerve) honour thoſe faithleſs and rebellious men with the name of people, or his people, but doth ſecretly ſtigmatiſe them with the name of nation, which is uſually taken in a worſe ſenſe, that is, for prophane and heatheniſh men, who were not of the ſeed of Abraham, but ſtrangers from the Covenant.

unto whom the Lord ſware] Being provoked to anger by their infidelity and diſobedience, Num. 14. 23. Pſal. 95. 10,11. Heb. 3. 17,18.

not ſhew them the land] Not ſo much as ſuffer them to ſee it (which favour he vouchſafed to Moſes) much leſſe to inherit and injoy it.

which the Lord ſwear unto their fathers] That he would give it unto them and their poſterity, yet not abſolutely, but upon condition of their faith and obedience, which they on their part not obſerving, but contrariwiſe provoking God with their infidelity and rebellion, made void this Covenant, and wilfully abdicated and diſinherited themſelves of this promiſed patrimony.

V. 7. And their children whom he raiſed up in their ſtead] Namely, thoſe who were born unto them in the wilderneſs, (for they who came with them out of Ægypt were circumciſed before, ver. 5.) to ſhew Gods faithfulneſs and conſtancy in performing his promiſes, ſeeing the infidelity and diſobedience of theſe rebels could not make them void to their poſterity, but according to his Word, Numb. 14. 31. he would give to their little ones the land for their inheritance and poſſeſſion.

Them Joſhua Circumciſed] Becauſe God by covenant had given unto them the Land of Canaan, therefore he giveth unto them the ſeal of this Covenant for the better confirmation of their faith.

for they were uncircumciſed] *S*o that Joſhua brought into Canaan both thoſe who had been circumciſed in Egypt, who were at their coming thence under twenty years of age, and now ſupervived, and thoſe who were uncircumciſed in the Wilderneſſe: Wherein he was a type of the true Joſhua, Jeſus Chriſt, who is the *S*aviour of all believers, circumciſed and uncircumciſed, Jews and Gentiles, Col.3.11. Eph.2.14. Gal.5.6. & 6.15.

V. 8. They abode in their places] Relying by faith upon Gods providence and promiſes, they ſecurely reſted in their ſtations till their wounds were healed; and he accordingly took care of them, and in the mean time ſo poſſeſſed the hearts of their enemies with fear and aſtoniſhment, that they did not ſo much as diſturb their peace by making any attempts againſt them. See on v.1.

V. 9. I have rolled away the reproach of Ægypt] i. e. I have freed you from that ſhame and diſhonour which did lye upon you whileſt you were bond-ſlaves in Egypt, by receiving you into Covenant with me, acknowledging you for my peculiar people, and admitting you to have this priviledge ſealed unto you by this ſeal of Circumciſion. Some underſtand by the reproach of Egypt, the Egyptians reproaches which they caſt upon them whileſt they were in the Wilderneſs, as though God had not out of his love delivered them out off Egypt, but rather to wear and waſte them in the Wilderneſs, even unto utter ruine; ſeeing they remained there ſtill after ſo many years ſpent, till they were almoſt conſumed, and were not brought into the promiſed land. *S*ee Deut.9.28. Numb.14.16. The which reproach was now taken away by their entring into the land, which was unto them as an earneſt of all the reſt, and now further ſecured by Gods renewing his covenant with them concerning their full poſſeſſion of it, and his confirming their faith in full aſſurance of it by circumciſion and the Paſſeover, which were as ſeals added to the promiſe. Some by reproach of Egypt underſtand the wicked religion of Egypt, with which they were infected and corrupted, by living and converſing with them; From which he now delivered them, by renewing his covenant with them, and confirming it unto them by his ſeals, the *S*acraments. Others by this reproach underſtand the reproach which did lye upon the Egyptians themſelves, as upon all other nations, in that being out of Covenant with God, and not partakers of the Seals of it, they were aliens and ſtrangers from God, in an heatheniſh and damnable condition, and were ſo reputed and had in abomination with the Church and people of God, as appeareth 1 Sam.17.26. Gen.34.14. From which reproach they were now freed by receiving the Sacrament of Circumciſion. Others underſtand, and that very probably, the reproach which the Iſraelites themſelves had contracted in Egypt, when as living amongſt them for above two hundred years, they imitated their evil manners, and were tainted with their ſuperſtitious and falſe worſhip, Exod.22.1. Lev.18.3. Joſh.24.14. Ezek.20.7. & 23.3,4. neglecting Gods ſincere worſhip and ſervice, and hereby, as alſo by their late rebellion, had left this reproach upon their children, through the juſt judgment of God that they had not the Sacrament of Gods Covenant, but had their fore-skin ſtill upon them all the while they lived in the Wilderneſs, Num.14.34,35. From which wicked nation they were now differenced, in that they did by circumciſion take upon them and wear Gods Livery and cognizance. See 1 Maccab.4.58.

The place is called Gilgal] i. e. Rolling, becauſe their reproach was rolled or turned away, when as by Circumciſion they renewed their covenant with God. *S*ee on Hoſ.4.15.

V. 10. And kept the Paſſeover] Which was likewiſe omitted in the Wilderneſſe, ſaving only the ſecond year. *S*ee Numbers 9. 1,2.

moneth] i. e. Abib. *S*ee on chap. 3. 2. & 4. 19. and Exodus 12. 2,6.

at even] i. e. In the laſt part of the day, not long before the Suns going down.

V. 11. And they did eate of the old corn of the land] Which they found in barns, the inhabitants being fled away. [and parched corn] i. e. The new corn which they found ſtanding on the ground the preſent year, ſeeing it was now the time of their harveſt.

on the morrow after the Paſſeover] i. e. As it is moſt probably thought, on the ſixteenth day of the moneth. For the Lamb was killed and roſted on the fourteenth day, and ſo the feaſt began that night, which was part of the fifteenth day, and on the day following, which was the ſixteenth day, they did eat of the corn of the land. Neither might they by the law eat of the new corn of the land till they had brought unto the Prieſt a ſheaf for an offering unto God, Levit. 23. 10, 14.

in the ſelf-ſame day] This is added to ſigniſie the peoples earneſt deſire to eat of the fruits of the promiſed land ſo ſoon as they might lawfully do it, having firſt renewed their Covenant with God, whereby only they had right to the land and the fruits of it, and been made partakers of the ſeals of it, Circumciſion and the Paſſeover, by which holy ordinances theſe outward bleſſings were ſanctified unto them.

V. 12. And the manna ceaſed] Becauſe there was no neceſſary uſe of it any longer. For whereas it was firſt given them by God to ſupply their want of all other food, now there was no more need of it when he had brought them into a fruitful land flowing with milk and honey: And the rather, becauſe this ungrateful people loathing this bread which came down from heaven even then when they had no other food to ſatisfie their hunger, would now much more have loathed it when they were come into a land that abounded with all Gods bleſſings. See on Exod.16 35.

neither had the children of Iſrael manna any more] That they might hereby know that they had injoyed it all this while, not from any natural cauſe, but by Gods meer gift and bounty. Herein the earthly Canaan was a type of the heavenly, ſeeing when we are come thither we ſhall have no further need of word, ſacraments, or other ordinances, becauſe God will ſupply all things unto us immediately by himſelf, and will be all in all, Rev. 21.22,23.

V. 13. when Joſhua was by Jericho] i. e. In the plains of Jericho, not far from Gilgal, where he incamped, whither he now came (as may be probably thought) to obſerve the ſtrength of the City, and the beſt opportunities of beſieging it.

that he lift up his eyes] This phraſe in the *S*criptures uſually ſignifieth ſome new, ſudden and unexpected ſight that preſented it ſelf to the beholders. *S*o Gen.18.2. & 33.1,5. Dan. 10.5.

there ſtood a man] i e. The Lord Chriſt, who aſſumed and appeared in the ſhape of a man, but now and at ſundry other times, as a preparative to his Incarnation. For that it was no created Angel, appeareth by Joſhua's adoration and his acceptance of it, ſeeing a created Angel would have refuſed it, Rev.19.10. & 22. 9. Judg. 13. 16. See on Gen.16.7. & 18.2.

with his ſword drawn in his hand] Hereby repreſenting himſelf unto him as the Lord of Hoſts, the ſupream and chief General of their Armies, in whoſe wiſdom only conducting them, and power aſſiſting them, they ſhould prevail againſt their many puiſſant enemies, and execute his juſt judgments upon thoſe curſed nations till they were wholly ſubdued and utterly deſtroyed. All which was done to ſtrengthen the faith of Joſhua and all the Army, in aſſurance that they ſhould be victorious, ſeeing they had God on their ſide ready to fight againſt his and their enemies; Exod. 23.23. Rom. 8. 31.

And Joſhua went unto him, and ſaid] This is added to ſhew the undaunted courage and reſolution of Joſhua, whom God had appointed General of his Armies, in that he thus boldly and confidently goeth to an armed man (who was alſo no doubt of a majeſtical preſence) to queſtion him on whoſe ſide he was, that according to his anſwer he might either oppoſe him as an enemy, or entertain him into amity and friendſhip.

V. 14. And he ſaid, Nay, but as a Captain of the hoſt of the Lord am I now come] q. d. I am not a mortal man, as thou conceiveſt, either Iſraelite or Canaanite; but the Lord of hoſts and chief General of the Angels which fight for the Church againſt all its enemies, being Michael the Arch-angel and chiefe Prince, Dan. 10. 13, 21. Rev.12. 7. & 19.11,14. and am now come to ayd Iſrael, which is the people and hoſt of God, and encourage thee and them againſt all your enemies, and now more particularly to give thee inſtructions and directions what means are to be uſed for the beſieging and taking of this City Jericho. *S*ee chap.6.2,3,4.

And Joſhua fell on his face] Being affected with an awful fear and reverence of Gods glorious preſence, Exod. 3. 2, 6. (Dan. 10. 8,9.

and did worſhip] Becauſe he knew him to be the Lord Chriſt, the eternal Son of God.

What ſaith my Lord to his ſervant?] A queſtion ariſing from reverence and admiration, ſignifying his willingneſs and prompt readineſs to obey all his commands: q.d. Let me only, O Lord, know what is thy pleaſure, and what it is that I ſhould do, and I will moſt willingly perform what thou requireſt.

V. 15. Looſe thy ſhoe from off thy foot] This was ſpoken to poſſeſſe Joſhua with a more awful reverence of Gods glorious preſence, before whom he now ſtood, to ſtir up his attention in hearkning unto what he ſpake, and to affect his heart with deeper humility in the ſight and ſenſe of Gods majeſty and his own baſeneſs and vileneſſe. For this Ceremony of putting off the ſhoes, was uſed firſt, to expreſſe the higheſt degree of humiliation, when Gods hand was heavy upon any in grievous afflictions, as 2 Sam.15,30. Iſa.20.2,4. Ezek.24.17,23. And ſo Moſes, Exod.3. 5. and Joſhua here, were commanded to do it, to ſhew that they might not raſhly preſume to approach into Gods preſence, but with all humility, lowlineſs of mind, and awful reverence, Lev.16.2. Exod.30.10. And ſecondly, to put them in minde that when they did draw near unto God, they muſt put off all fleſhly luſts and carnal perturbations of the mind, which made them to cleave unto the world and earthly things, and thereby become uncapable to underſtand the things of the Spirit of God, 1 Cor. 2. 14. Eccleſ. 5.1,2. and to come with all due preparation to the performance of all holy duties in the deep apprehenſion of Gods great and glorious Majeſty unto whom they were to be performed, and their baſeneſs and nothingneſs which were to do them.

for the place whereon thou ſtandeſt is holy] Here he rendreth a reaſon why he ſhould put off his ſhoes, namely, becauſe the ground on which he ſtood was holy, not in reſpect of any inherent holineſſe in it ſelf, but as it was now ſanctified by Gods divine and holy preſence: q. d. Conſider that thou now ſtandeſt before thy great and glorious God, to hear the counſel of his will, who though he filleth heaven and earth with his preſence, yet he doth now in a ſpecial manner reveal himſelf and manifeſt his preſence unto thee, and thereby doth conſecrate this place as holy, and therefore be thou accordingly affected with humility and awful reverence in hearing what he will ſpeak unto thee. See on Eccl.5.1.

And Joſhua did ſo] i. e. With all willingneſs and chearfulneſs he obeyed Gods command, leaving unto future ages himſelf as an example for their imitation. And being thus prepared he received from God thoſe directions and commands which are expreſſed in the firſt part of the following chapter.

CHAP. VI.

Verſ. 1. N*Ow Jericho was ſtraightly ſhut up*] That is, ſo carefully watched and ſtrongly guarded that no inhabitant could get out, or Iſraelite come in, as the *S*pies had formerly done, for fear of any ſudden ſurprize by their enemies that now were near unto them. Theſe words were inſerted between the precedent diſcourſe of Chriſts appearing to Joſhua in the former chapter, and his following ſpeech in this, to intimate what great need there was why his faith ſhould be thus confirmed in aſſurance of good ſucceſſe in this enterpriſe, ſeeing in reſpect of the ſtrength of the City and watchfulneſſe of the Citizens, without Gods ſpecial aſſiſtance in this work and gracious directions for the well managing of it, it ſeemed to be of much difficulty.

V. 2. And the Lord ſaid unto Joſhua] He who chap.5.13. is called a man, and v.14. Prince of the Lords hoſt, is here called Jehovah; implying a reaſon why Joſhua gave unto him Divine worſhip before, and why now he ſhould obey all his commands, and wholly ſubmit to be guided by his directions.

See I have given] This is a word of encouragement, whereby he ſtrengtheneth his heart and raiſeth up his fainting ſpirits in aſſurance of victory, notwithſtanding he found ſuch mighty oppoſition that he had little hope of prevailing in his own ſtrength, ſeeing he had a promiſe from God of winning the City, as of a thing done already, to intimate that it was as certain as if he were at the preſent poſſeſſed of it.

the mighty men of valour] Naturally ſo, and ſo reputed in former times, howſoever now, the terror of God being upon them, their hearts melted and their courage fainted, chap.2.11.

V. 3. And ye ſhall compaſſe the City] In this and the following verſes the Lord appointeth for the winning of this ſtrong City, moſt weak, contemptible, and even to humane reaſon moſt ridiculous means, thereby firſt to manifeſt the glory of his wiſdom and power ſo much the more and to ſhew that this miraculous work was acted by himſelf alone, ſeeing the means uſed could no way conduce thereunto, 2 Cor.12.9. & 4. 7. And ſecondly, to try the faith and obedience of Joſhua and the people, whether they would deny their own wiſdom and power, and wholly rely upon God in the uſe of ſuch means as were quite contrary to their own reaſon and ſenſe; and that in this tryal they might be approved, not diſputing the matter with fleſh and blood, but yeilding abſolute and ſimple obedience to Gods commands, and chearfully following all his directions.

all] *S*ee on v.7.

Thus ſhalt thou do ſix dayes] Not that the Lord needed ſo long time for the effecting this great miracle, for he could have done it at once if ſo he had pleaſed, but only to exerciſe here their faith, obedience, and patience in waiting thus long for the accompliſhment of his promiſe.

V. 4. ſeven trumpets of Ramſ-horns] Not the ſilver trumpets of the *S*anctuary, which would have graced the action, and bringing with them more authority might have increaſed the peoples hope and confidence of ſucceſs; but theſe deſpicable horns, ſeemed fit for nothing but to expoſe them to ſcorn and laughter. Chryſoſtom ſaith, they overthrew Jericho by dancing as it were about it rather then by warring againſt it. In Pſal.44.3. where he expoundeth this ſtorie Anagogically.

and the ſeventh day] Hereby is implyed that they compaſſed the City once in this March on the Sabbath day, ſeeing this muſt needs be one of the ſeven, which God had power to diſpenſe, being Lord of the Sabbath. And, as one ſaith, humane works are forbidden on that day, and not divine; and thoſe are divine which God commandeth:

V. 5. And the wall of the City ſhall fall down flat] i. e. Not all the wall in the whole compaſſe of it, but ſuch a large part as was ſufficient to give the Iſraelites an eaſie and fair entrance. For if all had fallen, then had Rahabs houſe, which was built upon the wall, fallen likewiſe with it, chap.2.15.

V. 6. And Joſhua] He did not demur upon Gods commands, nor defer to uſe the means which he had appointed, though they ſeemed never ſo weak and contemptible for the effecting of ſo great a work, but preſently putteth them in execution, relying wholly upon the power and promiſes of the Achief gent, who was all-ſufficient to do what he pleaſed by the weakeſt and baſeſt inſtruments.

V. 7. And he ſaid unto the people] i. e. To the military men imployed in this ſervice, or men of war, as ver. 3. Neither is it probable that the whole body of the people conſiſting of ſo many hundred thouſands ſhould be appointed to go in this march, ſeeing it would have been of no uſe, yea rather a great cauſe of confuſion and diſorder, one hindring another.

and let him that is armed paſſe on] This is principally to be underſtood of the two Tribes and half, chap. 1. 14. & 4. 12, 13.

V. 8. And it came to paſſe when Joſhua had ſpoken] In theſe words is expreſſed the alacrity and cheerfulneſſe of the Prieſts and people in obeying the commands of their Generall, though the things injoyned ſeemed unreaſonable and nothing conducing to the advancement of the preſent deſigne.

paſſed on before the Lord] See on chap. 4. 13.

Ark of the Covenant] See on chap. 3. 3.

V 9. And the armed men went before] i. e Marched on in their ranks in that order (as is moſt probable) which was formerly appointed by God according to their ſeveral Tribes, Num. 10.14. 29.

and the rereward] In which was the ſtandard of the Tribe of Dan, Num. 10. 25. though others thereby underſtand the remainder of the people that were not armed.

V. 10. nor make any noiſe] That being ſilent they might the more compoſe their minds to ſpirituall meditations on Gods works of wonder, eſpecially his gracious and infallible promiſes made unto them for the ſubduing of their enemies, and this City in particular , Lam. 3. 26 Pſal. 4. 4.

V. 12. And Joſhua roſe early] Herein propounding himſelf, like a wiſe and good Generall, as a precedent and example of watchfulneſſe and diligence for the peoples imitation.

V. 13. And ſeven Prieſts] Some obſerve that the ſeptenary number is much nobilitated both here and in many other places of Scripture. For we have here ſeven prieſts, ſeven trumpets, ſeven dayes, ſeven times compaſſing the City, and on the ſeventh day ſeven times. And frequently the number of ſeven is made uſe of in the Leviticall Law. So in the Revelation the viſions are repreſented under this number, ſeven ſeales, ſeven angels with ſeven trumpets, ſeven vials. The reaſon hereof ſome think to be, becauſe God was pleaſed to begin and finiſh all things concerning the worlds creation in ſeven dayes , ſix whereof being deſtinated to the finiſhing of the work it ſelf in the ſeverall parts of it, and the ſeventh to a wholly reſt, in which the whole creation was compoſed into (as it were an integrall frame, ſupported and ſuſtained by a Divine power and providence, and ſanctified to its main ends, to wit, the glory of God, and the good of his reaſonable creatures , men and angels. Seeon 1 Chron. 15. 26.

V. 16. Joſhua ſaid unto the people, Shout] This ſhouting was an act of their faith and confidence in Gods promiſe, that he would deliver the City into their hands, and accordingly was anſwered in the effect. And hence it is that this is attributed to faith, Heb. 11. 30. By faith the walls of Jericho fell down after they were compaſſed about ſeven dayes. Though there might be alſo other uſe of this their ſhouting, namely, to encourage one another in the onſlaught , and to ſtrike a ſudden terror and amazement in the hearts of the Citizens, whereby they were diſabled to ſtand upon their defence. See Judg. 7. 20.

V. 17. And the City ſhall be accurſed] i. e. devoted to deſtruction, and ſo conſecrated unto God, as the firſt-fruits of the land of Canaan ; in obedience to whoſe command it was to be deſtroyed. See Lev. 27, 28, 29. Numb. 24. 20. Deut. 2. 34. This anathema though pronounced by Joſhua here, yet was not from himſelf and in his own name and authority, but by Gods appointment, as appeareth 1 King. 16. 34. And probable it is, that Joſhua received this command of deſtroying utterly this City, and offering it unto God as an holocauſt , in which nothing was to be reſerved for mans uſe (in which ſenſe the ſlaughter of Gods enemies is called a ſacrifice, Iſa. 34. 6. Jer 46. 10. Ezek, 39. 17.) though it be not before expreſſed, but reſerved unto this place, to make way for the following ſtory of Achans ſin, by which he tranſgreſſed this command But why was this City above all the reſt devoted by Gods appointment to this fearfull deſtruction ? I anſwear ; Though no other reaſon could be given, yet it were ſufficient that God commanded it, who being abſolute Lord of all things in heaven and earth , may do with his own what he pleaſes ; and whatſoever he doth muſt needs be juſt , ſeeing he is juſtice it ſelf, and doth not will a thing becauſe it is juſt, but a thing is juſt becauſe he willeth it : Gen. 18. 25. Again, all theſe curſed nations were abominable in all wickedneſſe, and by their ſins deſerved the ſevereſt of Gods puniſhments , and therefore it was at Gods liberty to make choyce of which he pleaſed to make examples of his wrath. But yet ſome other reaſons may be given why this City was thus devoted to utter deſtruction ; as firſt , Becauſe being the firſt that was attempted, God would make it an example to all the reſt of his fearfull vengeance , that taking warning by it they might not obſtinately ſtand out againſt God and his people in a deſperate war ; or, if they did, might be made the more unexcuſable. And ſecondly , God would have the whole ſpoyl of the City devoted unto him, to make known unto his people, by having as it were theſe firſt-fruits offered unto him, that he had an equall right unto all the reſt of the land, and all things contained in it , ſeeing all was his, and by his power only and aſſiſtance gotten , and not by their own ſtrength ; howſoever in his rich bounty and goodneſſe he was pleaſed to beſtow upon them all the reſt.

Onely Rahab the harlot ſhall live] Others read, ſhall be ſaved, or ſafe ; becauſe, as they conceive, the benefit extended not onely to the perſons that were in the houſe , but likewiſe to their goods, that they might be preſerved as well as their lives. See. verſ. 25.

hid the meſſengers] Some read, hid carefully and faithfully.

that we ſent] i. e. My ſelf and ſome of the chief commanders, unknown to the people.

V. 18. keep your ſelves from the accurſed thing] i e. Conſecrated unto God, and devoted unto utter diſtruction without power of redemption, and that upon the penalty of a fearfull curſe againſt him who ſhould preſume ſacrilegiouſly to rob God of his right, and divert the things devoted to his own private uſe. See on Lev. 27. 29.

leſt you make your ſelves accurſed] i, e Liable to the Curſe denounced againſt thoſe that commit this ſin, Deut 7. 26. & 13. 17.

and make the Camp of Iſrael a curſe] i. e. Bring it under the ſame curſe, being in a ſort partakers with you in your ſin, as being all but one body ; as Achan did, Chap. 7. 1.

V. 19. But all the ſilver and gold] Excepting their Idols and Images made of theſe metals, which were to be burnt with fire and utterly deſtroyed and aboliſhed, Deut. 7. 25. Exod. 32. 20.

are conſecrated unto the Lord] being firſt legally purified by paſſing through the fire, Numb. 31. 22, 23.

ſhall come into the treaſury of the Lord] i. e. Shall be laid up in the Tabernacle, to be imployed in Gods ſervice, and therefore not be put to any private uſe. See Numb. 31. 54. 1 Kings 6. 5. and 7. 51,

V. 20. So the people ſhouted] i. e. After they had compaſſed the City ſeven times on the ſeventh day, as ſoon as the Prieſts began to ſound, the people ſhouted, being by faith aſſured that the Lord according to his promiſe would cauſe the walls to fall down flat before them, and give them entrance into the city, Heb. 11. 30.

V. 21. And they utterly deſtroyed all that was in the City] According to Gods commandment, Deut. 20. 16. 17. Therefore it was not to be imputed unto the Iſraelites as an act of cruelty, ſeeing they had from God himſelf an expreſſe charge to do upon them this ſevere execution, and it is no mercy, but fooliſh pity, to ſpare where God commands to puniſh, 1 King, 20 42.

V. 22. But Joſhua had ſaid unto the two men] He had given them the charge before they entred into the City : For it had been too late to have deferred it till the city had been taken , and all full of confuſion and ſlaughter.

V. 23. And left them without the Camp] As things unclean , untill they were legally purified, Num. 31. 20. and ſo incorporated into the Congregation by inſtruction, profeſſion, circumciſion, &c. Deut. 21. 12. Hereby they both ſhewed their care to preſerve their Camp holy and free from the defilements of heatheniſh and unclean perſons, and alſo put theſe poor aliens and infidels in mind of their miſerable condition in which they lived, till by faith and repentance they were incorporated into the Church and people of God, that ſo they might for the preſent bewail their miſerie, and earneſtly deſire to come out of it, by conforming themſelves to Gods true religion in al things, both in profeſſion and practice.

V. 24. And they burnt the Citie with fire] Herein they ſhewed their faith and obedience to God, in that they were contented utterly to ruine ſo fair and ſtrong a Citie, ſo commodiouſly ſituated in a moſt pleaſant and fruitfull ſoyl, which they might have reſerved as a ſure place of retreat on all occaſions, beautified with goodly houſes for them to dwell in, when they had at this time no place fit for habitation, and all manner of rich ſpoyl, goods and furniture of all ſorts, when as they were in a poor condition and deſtitute of many neceſſaries; having no other inducement hereunto but onely Gods meer command, upon whoſe promiſes they wholy relyed by faith for a ſupply of all their wants.

V. 25. And Joſhua ſaved Rahab the harlot a live] But how could this ſtand with their obedience to Gods former commands ſo ſtrictly charged upon them and often repeated, that they ſhould make no covenant with theſe curſed nations, nor ſuffer them to dwell in their land, nor ſhew any mercy unto them, but utterly deſtroy them , Exod. 23. 32, 33. & 34. 15. Deut. 7. 2. To this I might anſwer, that for ought we know, Joſhua had from God a ſpeciall diſpenſation in this particular caſe, though it be not here expreſſed; and God may juſtly reſerve unto himſelf a royall prerogative to diſpenſe when he pleaſeth with his own Laws. But Secondly, I anſwer , that theſe commands were not abſolute, but to be underſtood with theſe conditions, If they ſtill continued in their ſin and Idolatry, enemies to God and his people, and deſired not to have any peace with them : otherwiſe if they turned by true repentance from their Idolatry and ſin, and willingly embraced Gods true religion, and would ſubmit to be circumciſed, and ſo become one people with the Iſraelites , and if they did timely deſire peace before they were beſieged and would be content to yield unto all their conditions, then the extream rigour in the outward letter of thoſe ſevere commands was to be moderated by a common equity, which is the very life of the Law, and ſome mercy was to be ſhewed unto them. Which conditions none of theſe curſed nations obſerved , ſaving onely the Gibeoniets, being juſtly given up of God to the hardneſſe of their own hearts, and therefore were holy devoted to utter deſtruction ; See Chap. 11. 20. Judg. 1. 24.

And ſhe dwelleth in Iſrael] Yea , and was married to Salmon the ſon of Nahſhon, a Prince of the Tribe of Judah, one of Chriſts progenitors, Matth. 1. 5 Luk. 3. 32.

unto this day] To wit , when this ſtory was written , which could not be long after, ſeeing ſhe was of good years when this was done, and at the writing of this ſtory remained ſtill alive in Iſrael. See on chap. 4. 9.

V 26. And Joſhua adjured them] Not by a private motion, but by a Propheticall ſpirit inſpired by God, 1 King. 16. 34. Now he curſed with an adjuration thoſe that ſhould rebuild this City devoted to utter deſtruction, becauſe the Lord would have it left to poſterity as a monument of his ſevere juſtice exerciſed upon this curſed nation, and of his grace and goodneſſe to his own people, in erecting as it were this Trophee of their victorie. Otherwiſe the place and City it ſelf was not abſolutely accurſed, ſeeing though he were ſeverely puniſhed that re-built it, for tranſgreſſing Gods command and neglecting this curſe, yet being reſtored it was allowed for a fit habitation even for good men to lodge in, as Elijah and Eliſha. 2 Kings 2. 4, 18. Yea, our Saviour Chriſt himſelf did honour this City with his preſence and miracles, Mar. 10. 46. Luk. 19. 1, 5.

riſeth up] i. e. Shall perſume and addreſſe himſelf to build this City.

Lay the foundation thereof in his firſt born] i. e. In the death of his firſt-born. So that for this preſumption he ſhall be puniſhed with the death of his two ſonnes, the firſt in the beginning of the work, the other in the finiſhing of it, ſignified in the ſetting up the gate of it, which is the laſt thing done in the building of a City. Others underſtand it, that he ſhould be puniſhed with the death of all his children, from the eldeſt to the youngeſt. Now this curſe ſeazed upon Hiel the Bethelite and his ſonnes, in the reign of Ahab, 1 Kings 16. 34. This Hiel was either very ignorant in not knowing the curſe, or (which is the more likely) very profane in not regarding it.

CHAP. VII.

Verſ.1 But the children of Iſrael committed a treſpaſſe] i. e. One member of that body, which being in communion with the reſt, his particular ſinne was an occaſion that a judgement fell upon them all, till upon diligent examination and inflicting juſt puniſhment they were cleared and acquitted both from the guilt of his ſinne and the puniſhment due unto it. *S*ee chap. 22. 20. For a common-wealth is one entire body conſiſting of many members, which communicate with one another in all temporall bleſſings and calamities, even as the head and heart are affected and afflicted with the diſeaſes and pains of the hands and feet. And God would have it thus, to make us carefull and watchfull over one another, not onely for the common good, but alſo for the welfare of our ſelves and of every particular member, ſeeing we are all united together in one body with ſuch an inſeparable bond, that all have a common intereſt both in the joyes and griefs, the wel-fare and calamities of the whole body, and alſo the particular members. See 2 Sam. 24. 1. 1 Cor. 5.6.

For Achan the ſonne of Carmi] This name Achan is derived from the verb Achar which ſignifieth to trouble: unto which Joſhua alludeth ver. 25. Why haſt thou troubled us? The Lord ſhall trouble thee this day. And hereof it is that he is called Achar, 1 Chron. 2. 7. i e. a deſtroyer, or the troubler of Iſrael, who tranſgreſſed in the thing accurſed, namely, in taking and ſacrilegiouſly ſtealing that which was devoted unto God, againſt Gods expreſſe commandment, chap. 6. 18, 19.

the ſonne of Zabdi] Who alſo was called Zimri, 1. Chron. 2. 6. This genealogie is here ſet down to the fourth generation, that both the hiſtorie might be the more cleerly evidenced, with the manner of their diſquiſition in finding him out, and to imply the ſtain of his ſinne which he had brought upon his progenitors and whole familie; hereby giving warning unto all parents to be the more carefull in the education of their children in the fear of God, that they may not be a diſhonour and reproach unto them when they are dead.

V. 2. from Jericho to Ai,] Called alſo Hai, Gen. 12. 8. and Aija, Neh. 11.31. This City lay upon a hill three leagues from Jericho Weſtward, and fell afterwards to the Tribe of Benjamin. There were two Cities of this name; one in the Tribe of Gad, which the Ammonites had taken, and is propheſied againſt, Jer. 49. 3. and this of the Amorites, which was the greater.

which is beſide Bethaven on the eaſt ſide of Bethel] Two places not farr diſtant one from another, and both neer unto Ai: Bethel, the houſe of God, ſo called from Gods appearing there unto Jacob, Gen. 28, 19. and Bethaven, the houſe of iniquity, or vanity and lying; Which name was given to Bethel by the Prophet, by way of ſcorn and deriſion, after that Jeroboam had there ſet up his golden Calves, and ſo profaned and defiled it with his idolatry. Hoſ. 4. 15. and 5. 8. and 10. 5.

Go up] To wit, from the plains of Jericho to the mountainous places of the countrey.

V. 3. Let not all the people go up] This counſell given by the ſpies and entertained by Joſhua, was not good and prudential, although (it may be) well intended by them; ſeeing thereby they provided rather for the eaſe then ſafety of the Army. For what policy could there be, onely with two or three thouſand men to attempt the maſtering and ſubduing of a City ſtrongly walled and ſituate upon an hill, a place of advantage, in which there were a greater number of valiant men then themſelves? But this was ſo ordered by a ſecret providence of God overruling their counſels, that he might bring his own to paſs, which was, that the Iſraelites ſhould for Achans tranſgreſſion have the worſe, be put to flight, and ſome of them be ſlain, in that conflict: Which in no probality would have come to paſs, if the whole Army had marched to Ai, ſeeing the terrour of ſo great a multitude would have ſo diſheartned the inhabitants, that they durſt not have ſallied out of the City: Or if they had prevailed againſt the whole Army, (as it is eaſie to God to give victory unto few as well as unto many) it would have much diſcouraged and expoſed the people to extream danger, whereas it was Gods purpoſe to chaſtiſe their ſinne, and not to ruine and conſume them.

V. 4. And they fled before the men of Ai] The Lord ſo diſheartned them and deprived them of all valour and courage that it is very probable they did not endure the firſt brunt of the battell, nor the very ſight of their enemies, but fled away when they firſt iſſued out of the City; ſeeing the men of Ai are ſaid not to have ſmitten them in fight, but as they purſued them in their flight, verſ. 5.

V. 5. even unto Shebarim] Heb. a place of breakings, derived from Shabar, which ſignifieth to break. So called, it ſeemeth upon this occaſion, becauſe the Iſraelites army was here broken and diſcomfited.

wherefore the hearts of the people melted, &c.] i. e. Were diſſolved with extream fear and amazement, and not able to recollect their courage, becauſe they did not ſo much look upon the defeat and loſſe, which was ſo ſmall that it was ſcarce conſiderable, as upon the anger and diſpleaſure of God, of which this was an evidence, in whoſe promiſes and power they onely ſtood, and have no hope of prevailing or ſubſiſting if he withdrew himſelf from their aſſiſtance.

V. 6. And Joſhua rent his cloaths] In thoſe dayes this was uſed as a ceremony to expreſſe extream grief and ſorrow, which doth as it were rent and even cut inſunder the very heart. And this men did either when ſome great calamity did befall them, as Gen. 37. 34. & 44. 13. Job 1. 20. & 2. 12. or when they ſaw or heard of ſome horrible and hainous ſin committed againſt Gods Majeſty. Numb. 14. 6. *M*atth. 26. 65, &c. In the former reſpect Joſhua and the elders rent their cloathes, to ſignifie the rending of their hearts with grief and anguiſh, not for that ſmall defeat, but becauſe it was a ſigne of Gods wrath, ſeeing he proſpered not their expedition according to his promiſes, which might diſcourage the people and make them faint-hearted, as v. 5.

before the ark of the Lord] Hereby he teſtified that he did not mourn as one without hope, but was ſupported with faith in his extream grief, ſeeing he addreſſed himſelf to God for help and comfort, by prayer and humiliation, falling down flat on his face before the ark, the viſible ſign of Gods preſence.

untill the even tide] He joyned faſting with his prayer throughout the whole day, that hereby he might poure forth his ſoul with greater fervencie and efficacie.

and put duſt upon their heads] This was another ceremony uſed in thoſe times in great mournings, 1 Sam. 4. 12. & 2. Sam. 13. 19. Ezek. 27. 30. Job. 2. 12. whereby men expreſſed a great degree of humiliation, profeſſing hereby, with Abraham, that they were but duſt and aſhes, and deſerved to be buried under ground; and alſo confeſſed their frail and ſad condition, and that they were as dead men, unleſſe God ſhewed mercy upon them, and raiſed them up again with help and comfort. Job 10. 9. Pſal. 103. 14.

V. 7. And Joſhua ſaid, Alas, O Lord] In this prayer Joſhua ſheweth that he was under a great tentation, and that there was in him a great conflict between the fleſh and the ſpirit, faith and doubting, and therefore his ſpeeches and expoſtulations are not abſolutely to be ſo taken as though he were perſwaded of the truth of them; namely, That it had been better for them not to have come over Jordan; or, That God indeed would deliver them into the hands of the Amorites to be deſtroyed; or, That they would have been content to have lived on the other ſide of Jordan; or, That the Canaanites hearing thereof would environ them round, and cut off their name from the earth. For all theſe things were expreſly contrary both to that generall promiſe, I will never leave thee nor forſake thee, Chap. 1. 5. and alſo to many particular promiſes made to Abraham with the reſt of their progenitors, and often renewed to Moſes and themſelves; and therefore to diſ-believe them, had been to queſtion, yea, to deny Gods truth and power, of which impiety this good and holy Generall could not probably be ſuſpected, who had had ſo lately experience of Gods preſence and miraculous aſſiſtance. But we are to underſtand theſe ſpeeches as proceeding from humane frailty, and weakneſſe of faith, and from a ſudden diſtemper of paſſion and grief, which for the time clouded Gods face and favour from him, ſo as he could not apprehend the truth of his promiſes, nor be throughly perſwaded of his preſence and aſſiſtance. Although in all this his main intention was good, ſeeing he chiefly reſpected Gods glory, and choſe rather to have reſted contented with a ſtreight habitation for ſo great a people on the other ſide Jordan, then that by this accident he ſhould be diſhonoured, and his name expoſed to obloquie and the blaſphemies of the nations.

V. 8. O Lord, what ſhall I ſay?] i. e. What ſhall I anſwer to thoſe who upon this occaſion will detract from thy glory, in the manifeſtation of thy truth and power?

V. 9. and what wilt thou do to thy great name?] i. e. How wilt thou preſerve the glory of thy name, when theſe nations ſhall ſay that thou wanteſt power to protect thy people, or truth, in failing to perform thy promiſes, Exod. 32. 12. Numb. 14. 13. Deut. 32. 27. Joel 2. 17.

V. 10. wherefore lyeſt thou thus upon thy face?] This is not a word of reproof, as though God miſliked this poſture, ſeeing Chriſt himſelf uſed it, Matth. 26. 39. and nothing more pleaſeth him, then when poor ſinners proſtrate themſelves before him with broken hearts and contrite ſpirits: But he rather hereby quickneth and haſteneth him, that he ſhould without any further delays uſe the meanes of reconciliation which he appointed. q. d. Spend no more time in grieving & afflicting thy ſelf, ſeeing I am now ready to heare and help thee, and as willing to grant thy ſuit as thou to make it, Exod.14.14.

V.11. Iſrael hath ſinned] Though Achan alone committed this ſacrilegious fact, yet he being a member of the whole politique body, it loſt hereby its perfection and intireneſſe, and was in a ſort diſſipated and diſſolved, when one member or part of it was vitiated, and could not be reunited in a perfect integrity and oneneſſe till the vitious part were either cured or cut off. See on verſ.1.

And they have alſo tranſgreſſed] i. e. They have aggravated their ſin by many circumſtances: For they have tranſgreſſed my expreſſe command and broken my covenant, in laying hands on the accurſed thing, namely the Babyloniſh garment, and converted it to their private uſe, whereas it ſhould have been burnt; they have alſo ſacrilegiouſly ſtolen away, to wit, the gold and ſilver, which ought to have been brought into the Lords treaſurie, Chap. 6. 19. and have diſſembled this notorious fact, as though (not acknowledging mine omniſcience) they thought they could hide it out of my ſight; and finally, they have put it, to wit, the things to be burnt, and thoſe which were to be conſecrated unto God, even among their ſtuff, i. e. They have mixed it with their own goods, and ſo have hardned their hearts in this their wicked courſe, and reſolved to continue in it without repentance.

my covenant which I commanded them] Namely, concerning the accurſed thing, Chap.6.19. Or, my covenant, in not obeying my commands, as they promiſed, Exod.19.8. & 24.7.

V.12. Becauſe they were accurſed] According to Gods threatning, Chap.6.18. See on ver.1.

neither will I be with you any more] But why doth God thus ſeverely threaten to caſt off all care over his people for the ſin of one private and ordinary man? I anſwer, not onely becauſe this ſin was committed againſt a ſtrict law newly enacted and ratified by a ſevere ſanction, but alſo becauſe the tranſgreſſion would have proved very pernicious to the whole common-wealth of Iſrael, if it had not been ſeverely puniſhed. For it would have been a ſpreading ſin, and infected many others with its contagion: It would have overthrown all lawfull order and Martiall diſcipline, even in the firſt beginnings and ſetling of it, and made men careleſly to neglect all Gods commands, if they did any waies croſſe their own covetous or voluptuous luſts.

unleſſe ye deſtroy the accurſed] i. e. Not onely Achan, who hath committed the fact about the accurſed thing, and ſo himſelf is become accurſed, but alſo all his familie and goods, which are accurſed too, as being tainted with the contagion of his ſin. So v. 24.

V.13. Up, ſanctifie the people] By legall purifications, as waſhing cloathes, abſtinence from women, as Exod. 19.10,15. but much more by ſpirituall ſanctity, preſenting themſelves before God with pure and holy hearts; That thus preparing themſelves to appear in Gods preſence, the offender might be diſcovered and puniſhed, and the people freed from the puniſhment of his ſin. See on Chap.3.5.

V.14. The tribe which the Lord taketh] i. e, Apprehendeth by lot, which is at his diſpoſing, Prov.16 33. See 1Sam.14.41. Joh.1.7. Act. 1.24,26. Now the Lord thus proceeded to diſcover the offender by caſting lots, whereas, if he had ſo pleaſed, he could at the firſt have pointed him out by name, both becauſe he might by this graduall proceeding convince Achan of his ſin, and bring him to repentance and confeſſion of it, or at leaſt leave him the more unexcuſable, and alſo becauſe in the paſſages of his providence he doth not uſually act immediately by himſelf, but uſeth us as inſtruments to ſerve his providence, and to joyn our indeavours for the effecting of his works.

V.15. ſhall be burnt with fire] As the accurſed thing ought to have been, Deut.13.15,16. namely, after he is firſt ſtoned, which was the puniſhment appointed for blaſphemers and preſumptuous offenders, Lev. 24.14. Num.15.30,35 So v. 25.

he and all that he hath] i. e. Not onely the accurſed thing, but his ſonnes, daughters, oxen, aſſes, &c. This, though a moſt ſevere puniſhment, yet was juſt, ſeeing God appointed it, whoſe judgments are alwaies righteous, Gen. 18.25. Jer.12.1. Pſal. 145. 17. Though often unſearchable and above the reach of our reaſon: which may appear, whether we reſpect God, who appointed this puniſhment, For 1. he is ſupream Lord of all, and may do with his own what he pleaſeth; and his will is the rule of juſtice, yea, juſtice it ſelfe: and 2. wee owe our ſelves to God, and deſerve death by the firſt ſin, and all that followed it; and therefore God may juſtly require this due debt when and in what manner he pleaſeth: Or whether we reſpect Achan and his ſinne, ſeeing he had infected all he had with its contagion, and ſo made them liable to his puniſhment: Or finally, whether we reſpect Joſhua and the people, who did inflict and execute it; 1. Becauſe God commanded it; 2. Becauſe Achan had indangered the whole camp to deſtruction, who were not (ſimply conſidered in themſelves) guilty of his fact; 3. Becauſe he had expoſed thirty and ſix men to the ſlaughter, who were in like manner innocent of his ſin, though by their own ſins known to God they had juſtly deſerved their death. And all his were juſtly executed with him by the ſame reaſon, though not knowingly guilty of his fact, that they might be examples unto others, to deterr them from the like tranſgreſſions and ſins. See on Exod 20.5.

becauſe he hath wrought folly in Iſrael] i. e. A baſe, fooliſh and ſinfull deed; So Gen.34.7. Judg.20.6. 2Sam.13.13. and that in Iſrael, where above all other nations piety and righteouſneſſe ought to flouriſh, in reſpect of their juſt laws and Law-giver, and the manifold miracles which they had ſeen, and rich mercies and bleſſings, wherein they were preferred and advanced before all other people, Exod. 19. 5. Deut. 7.6. & 14. 2. & 26. 19. & 33. 29 &4. 5.8.

V.18. And he brought his houſhold] i. e. Either Joſhua himſelf, or Zabdi by his appointment.

V.19. And Joſhua ſaid unto Achan, My ſon] Hereby he ſhewed his love to his perſon, and that he was in giving judgement free from all rage, anger and deſire of revenge, and onely aimed at Gods glory and the good of the people.

give, I pray thee, glory to the Lord] Namely, by acknowledging thy ſin, and his juſtice in drawing thee out to deſerved puniſhment; and thereby alſo ſhew that the lot which he hath caſt upon thee is true and right. Neither ſeek any longer to hide thy ſin, ſeeing thou haſt an al-ſeeing God to be both thine accurſer and judge, whoſe knowledge thou canſt not avoid, nor decline his judgement; and therefore confeſſe the truth in an humble and penitent manner, that hereby he may be glorified, and thou freed from everlaſting puniſhment. See 1Sam.6.5. Jer. 13.16. Joh.9.24.

V.20. Indeed I have ſinned] I freely and ingenuouſly acknowledge that I, and no other, have committed this haynous fact, and thereby have made my ſelf deſervedly guilty and worthy of the greateſt puniſhment, ſeeing I have tranſgreſſed the juſt and expreſſe command of the Lord God of Iſrael, from whom I have received my being, and many ſingular favours, as being a member of this common-wealth, which he hath choſen for his peculiar people, and inriched with many bleſſings.

V 21 when I ſaw] Here he ſheweth the progreſſe and growth of his ſin by its degrees; Firſt, permitting his eies to rove and fix themſelves upon unlawfull and prohibited objects, contrary to Jobs practice, Job 31. 1. Secondly, giving liberty to his concupiſcence in deſiring them; Thirdly, actuall ſeizing upon the prey; Laſtly, uſing means, by hiding it, to reſerve it for his own private uſe.

and they ran unto the tent] i, e. They made all haſt to fetch the things which were to be burnt and conſecrated, that ſo juſtice being executed upon the offenders, Gods wrath might be averted, and the people cleared and freed both from ſin and puniſhment, ſeeing he had threatned that he would not be with them any more, and that they ſhould not ſtand before their enemies, untill they had taken away the accurſed thing from among them, ver.12,13.

CHAP. VIII.

Verſ.1. TAke all the people of warr with thee] Not (as ſome think) the whole army, of which there could be no uſe in ſuch a ſervice, againſt ſo ſmall a company of fighting men as were in Ai, but rather one would have hindred another, eſpecially when it was to be acted by a ſtratagem of flight; for they would by their multitude have deterred that ſmall garriſon from iſſuing and ſallaying out of their gates: But Joſhua is bid in this expedition to make choice onely of warlike people that had valour and skill, and ſo were fit for ſuch a ſervice. By which are meant the thirty thouſand mentioned, ver.3 which being mightie men of valour, Joſhua choſe for this imployment. Others ſuppoſe rather that the whole army was appointed to be preſent at this ſervice, for the better heartning of all the people, who were not yet free from that fear and amazement that had ſeized upon them by the former defeat, and alſo becauſe they were all to participate in the ſpoyl of the Citie, for their better incouragement in the like enterpriſes.

and ariſe, go up to Ai] Becauſe ſtanding on an hill, they were to aſcend unto it from the plains of Jericho.

See, I have given into thine hand] Therefore thou muſt not attribute the glory of the victory to thine own ſtrength and policy, ſeeing it is my free gift; nor make any doubt of obtaining it, ſeeing thou maieſt be as certainly aſſured of it as if thou hadſt it already in preſent poſſeſſion. See on Chap.6.2.

and his land] i.e. All that territory adjoyning to Ai which was under that Kings power and juriſdiction.

V.2. As thou didſt to Jericho] i.e. In the general, thou ſhalt deſtroy it as thou didſt Jericho; but not in reſpect of the manner in every particular circumſtance. For the King of Jericho was not hanged, as the King of Ai was; nor he accurſed that rebuilt Ai.

onely the ſpoyl thereof] This the Lord granted to the ſouldiers for their better incouragement, whereas if the ſpoils of this City alſo had been denied them, of which they ſtood in ſo much need, they would have been too much diſheartned and diſcontented.

lay thee an ambuſh for the City] In a juſt warr it is as lawfull to get victorie by policies and ſtratagems as by open fight and force, ſeeing God the author of juſtice hath warranted it unto us by many examples, and here alſo by his own command.

behind it] i.e, On the weſt-ſide of the City, ſeeing they were now on the Eaſt-ſide when they received this command. See ver.9.

V.3. and all the people of warr] i.e. Not the whole army (for all were not men of warr) but ſuch onely as were of great valour and skill in martiall affaires, and ſo the fitteſt for ſuch a ſervice. See on verſ.1

and Joſhua choſe out thirty thouſand] Here he more clearly expreſſeth who were that people of warr whom he choſe for his ſervice, namely thirty thouſand mighty men of valour.

and ſent them away by night] That they might lye in ambuſh behind Ai: But not the whole number of thirty thouſand: For how had it been poſſible for ſuch a multitude to have lyen hid and undiſcovered for the ſpace of a whole day, ſo neer unto the City, and that not far from Beth-el, who were confiderate with Ai? And beſides, the five thouſand more, which are mentioned ver. 12. It is more probably thought, that onely thirty thouſand were choſen out of the whole army for this ſervice, and that not this whole number were ſent to lye in ambuſh, but onely five thouſand choſen out of them, ſpoken of, ver.12. Though, I confeſſe, this narration doth not make it clear, being ſomewhat intricately and perplexedly expreſſed; as we have the like, Judg.20.29. &c.

V.4. ye ſhall lye in weight] God would not deſtroy Ai by miracle, as he had done Jericho, to the end that the nations diſcovering the power and policy of his people, might accordingly fear them.

but be ye all ready] Namely, to receive my commands and directions, as occaſion ſhall be offered.

V.5. and all the people that are with me] Namely, the five and twenty thouſand that remain of the thirty thouſand, to carry on the ſervice and deſign againſt Ai in an apert and open way, by drawing them out of the City, and encouraging them further to purſue us by a counterfeit flight, whereby we ſhall give unto you (namely, the five thouſand choſen to lye in ambuſh) a fit opportunity of aſſaulting and entring the City, when all their forces being drawn out, you ſhall find it naked, and none in it to make oppoſition.

V.6. till we have drawn them from the City] Hereby he admoniſheth them not over-haſtily to diſcover themſelves in their ambuſh, but to lye cloſe, till the citizens that ſallied out were drawn far enough out of the City.

V.7. Then ye ſhall riſe] Namely, when you ſhall have a ſign given you of our returning from our ſeeming flight and of our ſetting upon them; of which See ver.18. In which your enterpriſe you ſhall be ſure to have good ſucceſſe and victory, ſeeing you have a promiſe from God that he will deliver this City, with all in it, into your hands.

V. 8. That ye ſhall ſet the City on fire] Not the whole City, but onely ſo much as might be a ſign to Joſhua and his army, by the ſmoke aſcending, of their entrance into it, that they might ſurceaſe their deſſembled flight, and making a ſtand might fall upon their enemies. For the whole City was after burned and deſtroyed by the whole army of thirty thouſand, after they had ſlain all their enemies, and falling upon thoſe few that remained in the City where wholly poſſeſſed of it, and of all the ſpoil in it, as appeareth ver.24.

V.9. Joſhua therefore ſent them forth] To wit, the five thouſand men appointed to lye in ambuſh, ver.12.

among the people] i.e. The twenty five thouſand that remained after the five thouſand were ſent away.

V. 10. and number the people] i.e. Muſtred and ſet in order the people, to this end, that it might afterwards appear for their better encouragement, that they had gotten this victory without any loſſe.

V. 11. And all the people] Not the whole people, but onely the men of war which were by him choſen out of the whole army for this ſervice, and were now remaining with him, the five thouſand being to be ſent away to lye in ambuſh; as it is here expreſſed.

V.12. Aud he took about five thouſand men] Namely, out of the thirty thouſand appointed for this ſervice, V. 13. ſet the people] i.e. When Joſhua had ſo diſpoſed them as might be for his beſt advantage in this ſervice, ſome in ambuſh behind the City on the Weſt-ſide, and ſome with himſelf in the camp on the North-ſide, he himſelf in the night, or in the dark of the morning, as appeareth ver.9, 10. made his neer approach to the City, that ſo having with him but a ſmall company, he might diſcover himſelf to the enemy, and by the ſight of ſuch a deſpicable number might draw and incite them to ſallie out of the City. The which he did the rather becauſe it was not his purpoſe to fight with them, but to retreat to the reſt of his company in the camp.

into the midſt of the valley] Between the City and his army.

V. 14. And it came to paſſe when the king of Ai ſaw it, that they haſted] i.e. When he both ſaw the ſmalneſſe of Joſhua's army, and alſo that they had placed themſelves in a place of diſadvantage, to wit, in a low valley, he made haſt to lay hold on this opportunity.

he and all his people] i.e.] The greateſt part of his ſtrength, fit for this ſervice. For ſome remained in the City, ver.16.

before the plain] Which was on the Eaſt-ſide of the City.

but he wiſt not] This is added to ſhew their ſloth and improvidence in managing ſo great a buſineſſe,

V. 15. and fled by the way of the wilderneſſe] Which was, as is thought, the wilderneſſe of Bethaven, nigh unto Beth-el, Chap.18.12, 13. where they had left the body of their army. Or, as others, the wilderneſſe between Ai and Jericho; as if they would flee to Jericho, from whence they came, to ſecure themſelves from the imminent danger of being ſlaughtered by the purſuers.

V.16. And all the people] Hearing of the flight of their enemies, they conceived there was no uſe of ſouldiers to defend the City, and that there was nothing elſe to be done but to purſue and do execution upon thoſe that fled.

V. 17. And there was not a man left in Ai] i.e. Not a man that was able to bear arms, or do any ſervice in this expedition: For otherwiſe there remained ſtill in the City weak, aged, and impotent men, ver.24.

or Beth-el] This being a neighbour-town of ſmall ſtrength, abandoned, as it ſeemeth, their habitation, and put themſelves into Ai, as being a place of more ſtrength, that uniting their forces they might be the better inabled to defend one another againſt the common enemie But others conceive that they might ſtill dwell in their own town, but now ſallied out as well as the men of Ai, having taken notice of the Iſraelites flight; ſeeing it appeareth, Judg.1.24. that it was a place of ſtrength, which could hardly have been taken by the houſe of Joſeph, unleſſe it had been betraied into their hands.

V.18. Stretch out the ſpear] This was the ſignall to be given, to thoſe that lay in ambuſh, that they ſhould enter and ſurprize the City; and to thoſe that fled, that they ſhould make a ſtand, and turn face againſt the purſuing enemie. But in that diſtance Joſhua could not have known when to give this ſignall, or that all the ſouldiers were drawn out of the City, had not God himſelf revealed it unto him; Neither could the liers in wait have taken notice of it, unleſſe they had had the like ſecret revelation, or outwardly at leaſt, by ſome trumpet or ſhout of the army.

V.19. and ſet the city on fire] Not the whole; for then they could not have had the ſpoyl given them, ver.1. but ſo much of it as might be a ſignall to the army, by the ſmoke aſcending, to make known unto them when they ſhould return from their counterfeit flight and ſet upon the enemie.

V.20. And they had no power to flee] i.e. Being through fear and aſtoniſhment deprived of all courage in their minds and ſtrength in their bodies, they could make no eſcape, being encloſed on all ſides between them that had lyen in ambuſh and the main battell.

V.21. And all Iſrael] i.e. All that army who were imployed in this ſervice, both thoſe who had ſhewed themſelves to the men of Ai, and had encouraged them to purſue them by a counterfeit flight, and thoſe alſo who remained in the camp on the North-ſide, who now likewiſe joyned with them, when they ſaw by the ſmoke aſcending that the City was ſurprized by thoſe that lay in ambuſh,

V. 22. And the other] Who had lyen in wait, and had now done all required of them, both for the taking of the City, and for giving a ſignall to the flying army.

V. 23. And the king of Ai they took alive] They would not (it ſeemeth) ſlay him in the fight, but reſerved him for a more ſolemn execution, that his death might be exemplary to others of his rank, and ſhew them what they were to expect going on in his courſe.

V. 24. ſmote it with the edge of the ſword] i.e. The men unable to bear arms, with the women and children who were left in the City, all theſe likewiſe they put to the ſword, after they had ſlain all the ſouldiers in the field; and burnt the City, after they had firſt ſeized on the prey, and driven out the cattell.

V.25. twelve thouſand, even all the men of Ai] The Bethelites that came in to their aid are here alſo comprehended: Whereby appeareth what a ſmall number were in this City, according to the report of the ſpies, Chap.7.3. And withall how wonderfully God had blinded them with ſelf-confidence to their utter ruine, ſeeing though they were but ſuch a contemptible number, yet they adventured to oppoſe and maintain warr againſt ſuch a numerous, puiſſant and ſucceſſefull army.

V. 26. For Joſhua drew not his hand back wherewith he ſtretched out the ſpear] That it might appear both in him and others that he got not the victory by his own proweſſe and ſtrength, but onely by Gods power aſſiſting him, and effecting all for him; even as Moſes prevailed againſt the Amalekites not by fighting, but dy praying, Exod.17.

V.27. Of that City] By this emphaticall expreſſion he oppoſeth

V. 28. and made it an heap for ever] i.e. For a long time, as this phraſe often ſignifieth. See on Exod.12.14.. For Ai was afterwards rebuilt and inhabited by the Benjamites, Neh.11.31. above a thouſand years after it was demoliſhed.

V. 29. And the King of Ai he hanged] Joſhua executed the greateſt ſeverity of juſtice upon the Kings of theſe curſed nations, as being the greateſt offenders, corrupting the people both by their bad government and their evil example.

at the entring of the gate of the City] Becauſe (as ſome think) the gate being in thoſe times the place of Juſtice, he had often abuſed it by adminiſtring unrighteous judgment, neither protecting the righteous, nor puniſhing the wicked according to their demerits; therefore in this very place thus abuſed by him, the Lord executeth upon him the juſt doom of a righteous judg.

a great heap of ſtones] See on chap.7.26.

V. 30. Then Joſhua built an Alter] i.e. Soon after the ſacking and burning of Ai, according to that charge given Deut. 11. 29. & 27. 5, 6. he built both this Altar, upon which they were to offer ſacrifices when they were entred into Canaan, and alſo a monument of great ſtones, upon which the law was to be written, and that the people hearing certain curſes and bleſſings pronounced upon mount Ebal and Gerizim, ſhould give their Amen unto them. All this accordingly was here done by Joſhua. See on v.33.

in mount Ebal] Concerning the ſituation of theſe two mountains, Ebal and Gerizim, Expoſitors differ in their opinions. Some hold that they were ſituate neer Ai; for which there are divers reaſons: others, and that more probably, that they were further up in the country, in that part which afterwards fell by lot to the Tribe of Ephraim, and near unto Shechem, as appeareth chapter 20. 7. Judges 9. 6, 7.

V. 31. hath lift up any iron] To ſmooth and poliſh it with any tools of the artificer, Exod.20.25. Deut.27.5.

V. 32. a copie of the Law of Moſes] i.e. As ſome conceive, the ſumme of the Law contained in the Decalogue; or, as others, and that more probably, the bleſſings and curſes here mentioned; ſeeing where this writing is enjoyned by Moſes, he requireth that they ſhould write upon the ſtones all the words of this Law very plainly, namely, this Law of bleſſings and curſes, of which he preſently ſpeaketh in the next words, Deut 27.8. 12,14.

V. 33. And all Iſrael] Divided into two parts, ſix Tribes on the one ſide and ſix on the other.

ſtood on this ſide the Ark] Deut. 27. 12, 13. it is ſaid, that one party ſhould ſtand upon mount Gerizim to pronounce the bleſſings, and the other, to pronounce the curſes, upon mount Ebal: but here, that half of the Tribes ſtood over againſt mount Gerizim, and the other half over againſt mount Ebal: Whereby it appeareth that they ſtood not upon the top of theſe mountains, but upon their aſſent near unto the bottom, that they might be the nearer one to another, and both of them to the Ark, which ſtood in the valley between the mountains, where they might more conveniently hear the bleſſings and curſes pronounced by the Levites, and accordingly give their aſſent unto them.

mount Gerizim, and—mount Ebal] Both theſe mountains lay in the Tribe of Ephraim, Deut.11. 29,30. Judg.9.7. and therefore being far up in the country, and in ſome good diſtance from Ai, it ſeemeth that either this monument & altar were not erected preſently as ſoon as they had ſacked Ai, but in ſome ſpace of time afterward, when they had made a farther progreſs in conquering the country, although the ſtory of this action be here inſerted: Or if now it were done, to ſhew their readineſſe to execute Gods commands, as ſoon as they had made their firſt entrance into the country, Deut.11.29. & 27. 2, 4. and could do it with any conveniency, it ſeemeth they got this opportunity by means of that terrour and aſtoniſhment with which God had poſſeſſed the hearts of the Canaanites upon the occaſion of the ſurprize of theſe ſtrong cities, Jericho, and Ai. See on v. 30.

V.34 And afterward] i.e. Af he had built the altar, and offered ſacrifices upon it, and written the Law upon the plaiſter of the monument.

he read all the words of the law] Not he himſelf, but one of the Levites by his appointment. For ſo had Moſes expreſly commnaded, Deu. 27 14.

V. 35. Before all the Congregation of Iſrael, &c.] Hereby is intimated that the Levite read the Law with ſuch a loud and audible voice as that the people ſtanding on both ſides might hear him; not the whole Commonalty then aſſembly (who conſiſting of ſo many hundred thouſands could not all hear and underſtand one man reading at the ſame time) but their Princes, Elders, and chief Rulers, with as many others as ſtood within a convenient diſtance.

and the ſtrangers] i.e. Not ſuch ſtrangers as came amongſt them for trading and commerce, but ſuch as being converted were Proſelytes, and together with them made profeſſion of Gods true Religion. See ver.33. & on chap.17.13.

V. 2. gathered themſelves] i. e. Combined in a Covenant to make war againſt Joſhua and the Iſraelites that had invaded their country.

V. 3. the inhabitants of Gibeon] Gibeon was a City of the Hivites, chap.11.19. and fell to the Tribe of Benjamin, and was given to the Prieſts, chap.21.17. Together with them certain other towns joyned, which were at leaſt in confederacy with them, if not under their juriſdiction, as Chephirah, Beeroth and Kirjath-jearim, ver. 17. With theſe no peace was to be made without ſpecial warrant from God, or at leaſt ſpecial conditions peculiar unto them, which were by Gods appointment.

heard what Joſhua had done] The ſame report came to other Cities, but wrought in them quite contrary effects: in others, a reſolution to fight with Joſhua; in theſe, to yeild and make their peace. Which was ſo ordered by Gods overruling providence, inclining the hearts of theſe Gibeonites to uſe the means of their preſervation, and leaving the other to the hardneſſe of their own hearts, to go on in ſuch a way as would bring them to deſtruction, chap.11.20.

V. 4. they did work wilily] i. e. Politickly and prudently in reſpect of the matter and ſubſtance of their deſign, but ſubtilly and craftilly in reſpect of the manner and means which they uſed in the carriage of it. And in both theſe ſenſes the word here uſed is commonly taken.

bound up] Pieced and mended where they had leaked.

V. 6. We be come from a far country] This they pretended, as they confeſſe, v.24. becauſe they had heard that God had forbidden the Iſraelites to make any league with theſe curſed nations, and that he having given them their land for a poſſeſſion, they ſhould utterly deſtroy and root them out, whereof they had ſeen an experiment in the ruine of Jericho and Ai, and now feared that it would fall to be their own lot, if by this means they did not prevent it, namely, by ſaying that they were inhabitants of Countries far remote, with whom it was lawful for the Iſraelites to make Leagues, if they would ſubmit themſelves to become tributaries unto them, Deuter. 20. 11.

V. 7. And the men of Iſrael] i. e. The Elders, Princes and chief men of Iſrael, who aſſiſted Joſhua in the counſels of State, and the managing of all weighty affairs that concerned the Commonwealth.

and how ſhall we make a league with you?] Seeing God hath expreſly forbidden it, hath given unto us your land for a poſſeſſion, will not ſuffer you to dwell amongſt us, but hath commanded us to root you out, Exod. 23.31,32,33. & 34. 12. Deut.7.2.

V. 8. We are thy ſervants] And not thy enemies as the Canaanites are; and therefore will not ſtand upon any terms with thee for the tranſacting and ratiſying of a peace with thee, but as ſervants wholly ſubmit our ſelves to thy pleaſure, and will willingly accept of any conditions which thou in thy wiſdome ſhalt think fit to propound.

V. 9. becauſe of the name] i. e. Of the glory and power of the Lord (which we have heard much of, and with great admiration) ſhewed in his wonderful works and miracles. Which may be a motive to perſwade you to contract a firm peace with us, ſeeing we do adore and magnifie the ſame great and glorious God whom ye ſerve and worſhip.

and all that he did in Egypt] This they with much art and skill inſiſt upon, as done long ſince, and therefore by fame come to their knowledg, though they lived in a country far remote; and they ſubtilly conceal and paſſe by Gods great works done of late in dividing Jordan, and deſtroying Jericho and Ai, leaſt their taking notice of theſe might have diſcovered them to be near neighbours and not ſtangers dwelling a far off, who living at a great diſtance, the things ſo lately done in Canaan could not as yet have come to their ears.

V. 11. Wherefore our Elders] And therefore you have the more reaſon to hearken unto us, ſeeing we come not of our own accord, not upon the private notion of ſome few of our Citizens, but by the command of all our Elders and Governours, and the general conſent of the whole people of our Country. Some gather hence, that their Government was Ariſtocratical, or Democratical. And it is ſaid, v. 1, 2. that all the kings entred into league againſt Joſhua, and reſolved to fight for their Country.

V. 14. And the men] i. e, The chief Rulers and Princes, who talked with them and heard all their probable diſcourſe.

took of their victuals] To wit, into their hands, that they might handle and look upon them, and ſee if they were ſuch indeed as they reported; and ſo believed and approved their words, being deceived with the ſight of their proviſions.

and asked not counſel] Namely, by the high Prieſt, inquiring of the Lord by Urim and Thummim, as they were commanded, Exod. 28.30. Num.27.21. 1 Sam. 30. 7, 8. Which doth not prove that if they hap conſulted with God, he would have given anſwer, that they ſhould have rejected the ſuit of the Gibeonites deſiring peace upon their conditions, but is only ſpoken to tax the Princes of neglect of their duty, going on raſhly in a buſineſſe of ſuch importance, and not firſt asking counſel from God.

V. 15. And Joſhua made peace with them, and made a league with them, to let them live: and the Princes of the Congregation ſware unto them] For the opening of theſe words we muſt clear a great queſtion, Whether this act of Joſhua making peace with the Gibeonites, and of the Princes confirming it by oath, were lawful or unlawful. This queſtion is perplexed with ſo many difficulties ariſing from the text compared with other places of Scripture, that it is not eaſily to be reſolved. For how could this peace be lawful, being expreſly contrary to Gods command, which was, that they ſhould make no peace or league with the Canaanites, nor ſuffer them to live amongſt them, but utterly deſtroy and root them out, becauſe God had given their land for an inheritance to his people, which they could not injoy if thoſe curſed nations were not removed? Or, if it were lawful, why do the people murmur and complain of their Princes for doing of that which was juſt? and why doth Joſhua pronounce the Gibeonites accurſed, if they had done nothing ſaving that which was equal and right? And why is it ſaid, that what they did was extorted from them by deceit, implying that they could not lawfully have done what they did, had they not been circumvented by their fraud and diſſimulation? On the other ſide, if their Covenant and oath were unlawful, why did they not break it, eſpecially being drawn from them by deceit, and ſeeing alſo there was an error in the perſons unto whom their oath was made, they not being the ſame men whom they pretended themſelves to be? Neither doth it ſatisfie and clear the doubt, to ſay, that though the thing unto which they ſware were unlawful, yet the religion of their oath tyed them to obſerve it, as being made not only to men but alſo to God; ſeeing this cannot bind a man to do that which is ſimply unlawful, neither will it pleaſe God to call him to witneſs that we will do that which is ſinful and expreſly contrary to his revealed will. For the removing of theſe difficulties, I affirm, and hope to prove, that this Covenant and oath made by Joſhua and the Princes unto the Gibeonites was in the ſubſtance of it lawful, though extorted from them by fraud and diſſimulation. I. Becauſe no condition was expreſſed in it of preſerving their lands, liberties or goods, much leſſe their ſuperſtitious and idolatrous worſhip, but only of their lives; Wherein this peace much differed from that which they might lawfully make with other nations which were far off. For after they had proclaimed war againſt them, they might offer and make peace with them upon more eaſie conditions then with theſe Canaanites; namely, they might ſuffer them to exerciſe their own ſuperſtitions, and not compel them to become proſelytes and imbrace their religion; they might alſo ſuffer them to enjoy their lands, their country, and habitations, their laws and liberties, and to hold with them free trade and commerce: All which conditions were unlawful to be made with the inhabitants of theſe curſed countries. II. Becauſe theſe ſevere commands of deſtroying the Canaanites were not abſolute and general, including all and every ſingular perſon without any exception or reſpect had to any conditions, (for then Rahab, her kindred and family could not have been lawfully ſpared and preſerved) but to be underſtood on theſe conditions; If they ſtill continued in enmity with Gods people, and would not ſue and ſeek for peace; If they would not give place unto them, nor ſuffer them to injoy their inheritance which God had given them; If they would not leave their idolatry, and imbrace Gods true religion, but reteining their ſuperſtitions indanger the Iſraelites to be corrupted by their allurements and evil examples; and finally, If they would enjoy their liberties, and live as free-men in the land, and not ſubmit themſelves, their land, laws, liberties, goods, lives, and all they had, to live as ſervants under the dominion of the Iſraelites; then they were forbidden to make any peace with them, and they were to deſtroy and root them out: But contrarywiſe, if they would accept of their lives and peace by ſubmitting to thoſe conditions, and carefully obſerving them, then they might have what they deſired and ſued for. III. Thoſe commands of deſtroying theſe nations were but poſitive laws, which were alwayes to be tempred and qualified with a moral equity, namely, that notwithſtanding the rigor of them, thoſe ſhould be ſpared and preſerved who did forſake their evil wayes, and turn unto God by unfained repentance and new obedience. For ſhould not the Judge of heaven and earth execute righteous Judgement? Will he deſtroy the righteous with the wicked, thoſe who repent with thoſe that live in their ſin, Gen. 18. 25? Will he leave off to exerciſe the works of his nature, in ſhewing mercy to poor penitent ſinners, to do his work, his ſtrange work, and to bring to paſs his act, his ſtrange act, in ſhewing his wrath as in the valley of Gibeon? Iſa. 28. 21. IV. All Gods promiſes and threatnings though never ſo general in their expreſſions, are always to be reſtrained and limitted under the conditions of obedience and repentance, though theſe conditions be often concealed: as plainly appeareth Jer. 18.7,8 At what inſtant I ſhall ſpeak concerning a nation and concerning a kingdome, to pluck up and to pul down and to deſtroy it, if that nation againſt whom I have pronounced, turn from their evil, I will repent of the evil that I thought to do unto them, &c. This we ſee experimentally verified in the example of the Ninevites, who upon their repentance were freed from that deſtruction which God had denounced againſt them by the miniſtry of Jonah, and of Rahab and her family in this ſtory. V. It is ſaid Chap. 11. 19, 20. There was not a City that made peace with the children of Iſrael, ſaving the Hivites the inhabitants of Gibeon: all other they took in battel. For it was of the Lord to harden their hearts, that they ſhould come againſt Iſrael in battel, that he might deſtroy them utterly, and that they might have no favour, but that he might deſtroy them, as the Lord commanded Moſes. Whereby is plainly implyed, that if they had not continued in their enmity, but according to the practiſe of the Gibeonites had deſired and ſued for peace, and upon the like conditions, the Iſraelites might lawfully have granted it unto them. VI. Laſtly, that their covenant and oath in making and confirming this peace with them was lawful in it ſelf, and approved by God, hereby appeareth, in that God was ſo highly diſpleaſed with the breach and violation of it by Saul many years after, that though it were coloured by a ſhew of zeal to Gods people, yet his wrath could be no otherwiſe appeaſed, when he had continued a fearful famine upon the whole land for the ſpace of three years, then by hanging up ſeven of his Sons, and ſo rooting out almoſt his whole poſterity. Now theſe reaſons being premiſed and duly conſidered, the objections may without any great difficulty be anſwered. For firſt, if it be objected that this league was unlawful, becauſe God had devoted all theſe curſed nations to a univerſal deſtruction, and had expreſly forbidden his people to make any league with them; to this I anſwer, That this is not to be underſtood of all and every ſingular man, but of all who would not ſubmit themſelves to obſerve the former conditions; But if then it be further demanded why this command was general for the deſtroying of all, without any mention of theſe conditions, upon the obſervance whereof ſome might be exempted and ſpared? to this I anſwer, Becauſe it was generally and for the moſt part to be executed, and only ſome few to be exempted; for God purpoſing to give up this curſed people to the hardneſſe of their own hearts, he knew there were but a few that would yeild to theſe conditions: And moreover, becauſe he knew that his people either through cowardiſe and fear, or for ſloth and love of eaſe, when they had gotten room enough for their own habitations, would much incline to ſit ſtill, and not proſecute the war againſt Gods and their enemies, therefore by theſe general commands he ſtirreth them up with zeal and courage to fight his battels and execute his deſignes. If it be yet further objected, that the Iſraelites themſelves did thus underſtand Gods commands, as though he would have none to be ſpared, and therefore murmured againſt their Princes for making this league and ſparing their lives; to this I anſwer, That God might well ſuffer them to remain ignorant in this point, that they might more readily execute his judgments upon theſe curſed nations; and it was an eaſie matter to continue in this error, if God was not pleaſed to inlighten their minds, and diſcover it unto them. And well might this people fail for want of knowledg in the non-age of the Church, when as the Prophet Jonah himſelf either for want of knowledg, or at leaſt due conſideration, did think that Nineveh muſt needs be deſtroyed; becauſe God had threatned it; although he might at another time have ſome conceit that God would ſpare it upon repentance, becauſe he was a gracious God, merciful, ſlow to anger, and ready to forgive. Other objections there are which ariſe out of the following words in the Text, which I ſhall anſwer in their due place.

V. 17. Chephirah and Beeroth] Which came after to the lot of the Benjamites.

Kiriath-jearim] Which fell to Judah. And in it the Prophet Urijah was born, who propheſied againſt Jeruſalem, Jer. 26. 20.

V. 18. becauſe the princes of the Congregation had ſworne unto them] This was the chief reaſon that reſtrained them from deſtroying the Gibeonites, becauſe it came under their cognizance. Howſoever, they had greatly ſinned had they ſlain them, though the Princes had not taken this Oath, ſeeing with much cruelty and unmercifulneſſe they had violated a lawſul Covenant, as before I have ſhewed; of which it ſeemeth the Common people were wholly ignorant.

murmured againſt the Princes] Becauſe being circumvented with their diſſimulation they had ſworn to ſpare their lives. But theſe murmurers were ignorant that this poſitive law of deſtroying the people was to be tempered and moderated with a moral equity, in ſparing ſuch as theſe Gibeonites, who were willing to obſerve all conditions of a lawful peace, patiently ſubmitting themſelves to bear any puniſhment which their conquerers were pleaſed to inflict, becauſe they had offended in their manner of obtaining it by fraud and deceit, though they did this being ſurprized with fear of being utterly deſtroyed, if they did not by this meanes prevent their ruine.

V. 19. We have ſworn unto them by the Lord God of Iſrael] They plead their oath rather then the lawfulneſſe of the Covenant unto which they had ſworn (if at leaſt themſelves did rightly underſtand it) becauſe the people were more apprehenſive of this obligation, knowing that it was horrible impiety to break an oath made by the great God of Iſrael, from whom they received all the good they enjoyed, and which they expected for the time to come; and that it would much diſhonour God, and bring a great ſcandal upon his true religion, when the nations neer and farre off ſhould take notice that they had with much perfidiouſneſſe and extreame cruelty violated their covenant which they had confirmed with a ſolemn and ſacred oath by ſo great and glorious a God as the Lord God of Iſrael.

now therefore we may not touch them] Becauſe we are bound to ſave their lives by a ſolemn oath and lawfull to be kept. For if it had been unlawfull, it might have been lawfully broken: But they ſued for peace before we beſieged their City, and have willingly ſubmitted to all our conditions, namely thoſe expreſſed v. 21.

V. 20 This we wil do[We will ſave their lives, but ſo that they ſhall for circumventing us with their fraud, become our perpetual ſervants; which to an ingenious man is more bitter then death, and which as it will bring upon them deſerved puniſhment for their deceit, ſo ſingular profit unto us, in that we ſhall by this means have them ſlaves under us to do all our drudgery, and take off from our ſelvs ſuch baſe ſervices.

leſt wrath be upon us] As it ſurely would be, if we ſhould violate a lawfull oath. Sauls ſons ſuffered death for their fathers violation of it. 2 Sam. 21. 6.

V. 21. And the Princes ſaid unto them] Namely, to the murmuring people, that they might appeaſe their anger and quiet their minds, by propounding unto them ſuch a way as would both ſufficiently puniſh the fraud, and bring much profit to Gods people.

let them be hewers of wood, and drawers of water] i e. In the meaneſt condition among the people, which the Scripture expreſſeth by this phraſe. See Deut. 29. 11.

unto all the Congregation] i. e. For the publicke ſervice of God to be performed by the whole congregation in the Tabernacle, as Joſhua expreſſeth it. ver. 23. For which purpoſe they were bound to provide wood and water to be uſed in the ceremoniall waſhings, feaſtings, and daily Sacrifices ver. 27. which was a work of no ſmall care and pains in that countrey. Unto this ſervice, it is probable, they were bound not all at once (ſeeing they were in their habitations ſcattered over the whole land) but in their turns, as the Levites were.

V. 22. Joſhua called for them] i. e. After he and the Princes had conſulted together, and reſolved on this courſe.

Wherefore have ye beguiled us] i. e. Why have ye uſed ſuch fraud and deceit in drawing us to make this covenant with you, and to ratifie it by atteſting Gods great and glorious name, and have not rather carried on ſuch a work as this with honeſt ſimplicity, and with an upright heart and hand, not intermixing therewith ſuch cunning lyes and diſſimulation?

V. 23. Now therefore ye are curſed] Becauſe you have not indeavoured to preſerve your lives by lawfull means, but by lying and diſſembling, therefore in reſpect of your temporall condition you have brought upon your ſelves and your children this heavy curſe of bondage and ſervitude. In denouncing of which he may ſeem to relate unto that prophetical curſe pronounced by Noah againſt Cham their great progenitor, that he ſhould be a ſervant of ſervants unto his brethren; the which now was verified in his poſterity, Gen. 9. 25. But yet this curſe through Gods infinite mercy became in ſome reſpects a bleſſing to theſe Gibeonites, ſeeing by theſe ſervices (though baſe in themſelves) they had neer approach unto God in the ſervice of the ſanctuary, for the good of their ſouls, and and were in a ſort given and conſecrated unto God, as the name afterwards given them doth import. For theſe were (as is thought) thoſe Nethinims of whom we read. 1. Chr 9.2. & Ezr 2.43. whoſe office was to attend upon the Levites in the ſervice of the ſanctuary; who, though from the firſt beginning they were imployed in this ſervice, yet are ſaid to be appointed by David and the Princes unto it, in reſpect that they did order and diſpoſe of them in their ſeverall turns and courſes, Ezra 8.20 Now if David himſelfe, though a great King, choſe rather to be a dore keeper in the houſe of his God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedneſſe, Pſal. 84. 10. then theſe poor Gibeonites had no damage by their baſe ſervices, ſeeing by them they had this priviledge of neere approaches unto God.

for the houſe of my God] i. e. The tabernacle now, and the temple afterward; yea, for the publick ſervice of the whole congregation in things appertaining unto God.

V. 24. And they anſwered Joſhua] In a very prudent and politick manner, every word having in it its weight, to work his and the Princes hearts to mercy and pity; namely, that what they had done, was not out of love to fraud and deceit, but meerly out of fear, to ſave their lives, that herein they had given credit to thoſe reports which they had heard of Gods commands and threatnings againſt them; that they acknowledge the Lord to be not only the God of Iſrael, but alſo in an eſpeciall manner Joſhua's God, and honour Moſes with the title of Gods ſervant, and with all humilitie acknowledge themſelves ſervants unto Joſhua ready and willing to obey all his commands.

V. 25. We are in thine hand]. i. e. In thy power, to do with us and lay upon us what ſervice thou pleaſeſt, and as it ſeemeth good unto thee in a common and morall equity to deal with ſuch as we are, all former circumſtances duly conſidered

V. 26. And ſo did he unto them] Namely according to that ſentence he had paſſed upon them verſe 23.

V. 27. For the congregation] Not as bond-men to private perſons, but for the uſe and benefit of all Gods people in the publick ſervice of the Sanctuary.

Even to this day] Not only that time wherein this hiſtory was written, but even unto perpetuity, and in after-ages; as appeareth in the words following, in the place which he ſhould chuſe. i. e. Either in the Tabernacle now, or in the Temple hereafter.

CHAP. X.

Verſ. 1. WHen Adoni-zedek] His name ſignifieth Lord of righteouſneſſe: Which glorious and ſpecious name he arrogated unto himſelfe for his greater honour among the people, although he and his ſucceſſours were cruell Tyrants, as appeareth Judg. 1. 7. if at leaſt he were this mans ſucceſſor and not himſelfe. See that on verſe 36, had heard how Joſhua had taken Ai] Where the cauſes of their confederation and preparations for warre are expreſſed, and what it was that awakened them out of their lethargie of careleſſe ſecurity & incogitancy; into which they were fallen by long wallowing in carnall and ſinful delights, namely their imminent and approaching danger. A man might reaſonably have thought, that hearing long before how God for their horrible and hainous ſins had given their land to his people, and devoted the inhabitants to utter deſtruction, how he had made a paſſage for them through the Red ſea and Jordan, and miraculouſly fed them in the wilderneſſe, this ſhould have rouzed them out of their dead ſleepe, But outward words and works will do nothing till God bring them home to the heart, as we ſee in the example of theſe Kings compared with the contrary practiſe of the Gibeonites.

and were among them] i. e. Either were dayly and familiarly converſant with them in their Camp, their office being to hew wood and draw water for the uſe of the congregation; or rather held communion with them, by ſubmitting themſelves to be under their laws, and joyning with them in Gods ſervice.

V. 2 that they feared] i. e. Adoni-zedek, and the other Kings of the Countrey, and their people with them.

V. 3. Wherefore Adoni-zedek] He is named firſt as the chief in this confederacy, becauſe he was moſt active in the buſineſſe, as being more neerly concerned in it, in regard he was next unto danger: For he was in the middle way between the Iſraelites ſtanding camp in Gilgal and Gibeon; and may alſo be probably thought to be the chiefe of theſe Kings, and to have had in ſuch caſes ſome ſuperiority over the reſt.

King of Jeruſalem] This name is compounded of Jereh, that is, will provide, ſo called by Abraham when God had provided a Ram to be ſacrificed in the place of Iſaac, Gen. 22. 14. and Schalom ſignifying peace q. d. He will provide peace. This City did afterwards belong to the Tribe of Judah, with the other foure, which were ſituate on the Southſide of it: Hebron, twenty two miles from Jeruſalem Southerly; Jarmuth, of which name there were two Cities, one here, and the other in the tribe of Iſſachar; Lachis, ſituated five miles from Kiriath-jearim towards the Weſt; Of which ſee 2 Kings 18. 14. 2 Chron 32.9. and Eglon, called alſo Adullam, which Rehoboam afterwards reedifyed and fortifyed, 2 Chr. 11. 7. All theſe Cities were ſituate in the mountainous places belonging to Judah. Of Jeruſalem ſee more on ch. 15. 8.

V. 4. that we may ſmite Gibeon] Unto this they were induced by divers reaſons, ſome whereof are in the text plainly expreſſed: Firſt, that by deſtroying them they might deterr and diſcourage other Cities, as it were, by an exemplary puniſhment, from imitating them in the like defection, Secondly, becauſe this City was as it were a key of their countrey, and being in the Iſraelites poſſeſſion would open unto them an eaſie paſſage to the other Cities adjacent, but being in their hands would as a ſtrong frontier and fenced City hinder them from entring farther into the land. Thirdly, becauſe they had made peace with their enemies, and hereby become traitors to their own common wealth, and were now incorporated into them, and became as it were one body, v. 1. Fourthly, becauſe if the Iſraelites became owners of Gibeon, they might have a ſtrong place for retreat on all occaſions, a magazine from whence they might ſtore themſelves at all times with ammunition, victuals and all neceſſaries for the war, and might have ready information how all things paſſed, being ſo neer at hand.

V. 5. The five Kings of the Amorites] By this name is meant the whole nation of the Canaanites, both here and in many other places, becauſe the Amorites had many Colonies in divers parts of Canaan, and among the reſt in theſe mountanous places of Judea, Numb. 13. 29. Howſoever that Gibeon and the countrey adjoyning belonged to the Hivites

V. 6 Slack not thy hand from thy ſervants] Make no delay in this our great extremity to relieve and ſuccor us againſt theſe mighty forces that make war againſt us, ſeeing by covenant we are now become thy ſervants, and conſequently under thy protection.

dwell in the mountains] All thoſe five Cities named v. 5 were ſituate in the mountains, and not like Jericho, in a valley.

V. 7 So Joſhua aſcended from Gilgal] Having firſt asked counſell of God, as appeareth by the incouragement he had from God to go on cheerfully in this expedition, v..8. Gibeon was about one and twenty miles from Gilgal.

all the people of war] Not the whole army (for ſome were left behind to guard the ſtanding camp at Gilgal) but thoſe who were his beſt and moſt expert Souldiers, moſt valorous and fit for this preſent ſervice. Hereby it appeareth that Joſhua and the Iſraelites obſerved their oath and covenant faithfully and ſincerely, without any equivocations. For they might have pretended that though they had ſworne not to ſlay the Gibeonites themſelves, yet they were not bound by their oath to fight in their defence againſt thoſe that made war againſt them.

V. 8. And the Lord ſaid] Either immediately by himſelfe, or (as it is more probable) being conſulted with by Urim and Thummim.

Fear them not] Though Joſhua was a moſt valiant Generall, yet he was not free from humane feares and frailties. For God doth not uſe ſuch encouragements in vain, and when there is no need of them. Now his fear might ariſe either from a ſuſpition of the Gibeonites faithfulneſſe and truth in the preſent cauſe for which he undertook this expedition they being but newly reconciled enemies, and but lately in covenant with him, and that upon very hard conditions; or he might fear that his own army would not couragiouſly fight for their preſervation who lately murmured againſt their Princes becauſe they were not by reaſon of their oath utterly deſtroyed. Againſt which and the like fears and jealouſies God encourageth him to go on and fight in their defence. Where by the way it plainly appeareth, that God was well pleaſed with the peace made with them for the ſaving of their lives ſeeing he animateth his people to fight in their defence. For otherwiſe he is diſpleaſed with the preſervation of ſuch as he hath deſigned to deſtruction; as we ſee in the example of Agag, 1 Sam. 15. 18. and Benhadad, 1 Kings 20. 42.

V. 9. Joſhua therefore came upon them ſuddenly] Though he were moſt aſſured of victory, having Gods promiſe for it, yet this doth not make him to neglect any policy, induſtry, diligence, or other means conducing thereunto; but knowing that it is the readieſt and ſureſt way to ſupplant an enemy, to ſet upon him ſuddenly and at unawares, when he is ſecure and unprepared, he doth with all diligence uſe this meanes to ſerve Gods providence and enjoy the things promiſed.

V. 10. And the Lord diſcomfited them] He attributeth the glory of the victory to the Lord, as the chiefe and principall cauſe; who uſed, as his inſtruments and meanes, the ſword and valour of Joſhua and his men of warre, as alſo the hailſtones caſt down by his own hand, v. 11. Which though they were ſpeciall meanes of the Canaanites diſcomfiture, yet the chief cauſe was Gods ſudden ſtriking their hearts with fear and aſtoniſhment, chap. 2. 11. & 5. 1.

and ſlew them] With the ſword of the Iſraelites.

at Gibeon] i. e. In the confines about it. So ch. 5. 13.

To Beth-horon] Of this name there were two Cities: One fell to the lot of the Ephraemites, and was given to the Levites, and this to the Benjamites, See 1 Kings 9. 17.

to Azekah] Situate between Gibeon and Makkedah.

and unto Makkedah] A City the uttermoſt confines of the tribe of Judah toward the Weſt, chap. 15. 41.

V. 11. The Lord caſt down great ſtones] In a miraculous manner he rained down upon the flying Canaanites hailſtones of ſuch bigneſſe and weight as were ſufficient to brain and kill them. This (as ſome think) was accompanied with another miracle no leſſe wonderfull, in that Gods providence ſo ordered and diſpoſed of the hailſtones as that they killed onely the flying Canaanites, and not any of the Iſraelites though they cloſely purſued them, and muſt needs be intermingled with them, ſeeing they ſlew them in their flight. Though it may be ſaid that the Iſraelites fell only upon the rear, but the hailſtones upon the body of their battell and thoſe which were formoſt in the flight; which might be in ſome good diſtance from the Iſraelites that purſued them. Which is the more probable, becauſe the number ſlain is divided, and more are ſaid to be killed with the hailſtones which fell upon the body of the Army, where they were thick, than with the ſword of the children of Iſrael, See Exod. 9. 23. Judg. 5. 20. Hab. 3. 11.

V. 12. Then ſpake Joſhua] i. e. When he was in the heat of the purſuit and execution, and feared that in the ordinary length of the day he ſhould want time to accompliſh his work in hand, in ſlaying his flying enemies before they recovered their Cities and ſtrong holds.

to the Lord] Firſt he addreſſeth himſelfe unto God, who by his almighty power created heaven and earth, the ſun and moon, and all the heavenly hoſt, and by his allruling providence ruleth and ordereth them at his good pleaſure; and by fervent and effectuall prayer deſired God to effect this great miracle. Unto which having an anſwer from God by the ſecret inſtinct of his holy Spirit, that his prayer ſhas heard and his ſuite granted, apprehended by a lively faith and firm affiance, he uttered the following words in the preſence of the people, and for the greater emphaſis and efficacie (it is likely) lifted up his eyes unto heaven and pointing to the Sun and Moon laid upon them from God this powerfull command, that they ſhould keep their ſtanding.

in the valley of Ajalon] This was a Plaine into which men deſcended from Beth-horon v. 11. and in reſpect of the ſmall diſtance between it and Gibeon, it is by the Prophet, who alludeth this ſtory, called the valley of Gibeon, Iſa. 28. 21. as indifferently belonging to both Cities.

V. 13. And the Sun ſtood ſtill] And with it the whole frame of heaven. For it would have nothing conduced to Joſhua's purpoſe and deſire, that the Sun ſhould have ſtood ſtill, and deſiſted from its own proper motion from weſt to eaſt, which is ſo ſlow that it is finiſhed but once in the year, if the primum mobile or firſt ſphear, which is ſo ſwift that it goeth about once in foure and twenty hours, had not ſtood ſtill, ſeeing in the ordinary courſe of nature it would have carried the Sun away with it, notwithſtanding that its own proper motion is contrary to it. Now if any ſhall curiouſly demand why ſo great a miracle as the ſtopping of the whole heavenly frame, and that long day conſiſting of ſo many extraordinary houres added unto it, which muſt needs be known generally of all men, ſhould not be recorded in any heatheniſh hiſtories, the anſwer hereunto is eaſie, That there is no record of antiquity or heatheniſh ſtories before the Trojan war, which was many hundred years after Joſhuah's times

Is not this written in the book of Jaſher] or, the upright. This was one of the Iſraelitiſh Annals, ſo called either becauſe in that ſtory the things acted in thoſe times were faithfully and uprightly recorded, or becauſe the actions of Gods people were related in it, who both by Moſes and Iſaiah are called Jeſurun i. e. the upright. Deut. 32. 15. Iſa. 44. 2. This book of Civill annals, and divers others of like nature, are loſt and periſhed, as the book of the wars of the Lord, Num. 21. 14 (if at leaſt that be not the ſame with this) The books written by Nathan the prophet, Gad the Seer, Abijah the Shilonite, Shemaiah, Iddo, and others 1 Chron. 29. 29. 2 Chron. 9. 29. & 12. 15. & 13. 22. (See on 1 Chron. 29. 29.) God in the mean time preſerving his ſacred and holy Scriptures which are ſufficient to inſtruct us in the knowledge of His will, and to make us wiſe unto ſalvation, 1 Tim. 3. 16. & 2 Tim. 3. 15.

So the Sun ſtood ſtil in the midſt of heaven] Which ſome interpret, that it was declining and neer going down, which occaſioned Joſhua to make this prayer, that he might not by the approaching night be hindered in the purſuit of his enemies. And for either opinion there are brought probable arguments. But this point is not much materiall. Only this we are to hold, that it enlightened the earth about a whole day, and haſted not to go down untill the people had avenged themſelves upon their enemies. See Heb. 3. 11.

V. 14. And there was no day like that] As ſome think, in reſpect of length. For they compute Hezekiahs day to have been of thirty two houres; of this thirty ſix, or (as ſome others) fourty eight houres And in this the Sun ſtood ſtill, in that it went only back ten degrees But the compariſon here ſeemeth not to ſtand ſo much in the length of this day above all others, as that at no time beſide this God heard the prayer of a man craving the day to be prolonged that he might be avenged on his enemies, as the text it ſelfe hath it. See Eccl. 46. 4.

V. 15. And Joſhuah returned] i. e. Either reſolved to returne after he had gotten the victory; or this is to be referred to v. 43. to wit, that he returned when he had performed all things related from this verſe to the end of the chapter. For the writer of this book ſets forth the ſtory of the whole war ſuccinctly to this verſe, and then more largely and particularly to the end of the chapter. Neither was it poſſible that in this one day, though of double length, all things ſhould be done which are afterwards related, and alſo Joſhua and his whole army have time enough to march to and fro from this place to Gilgal, in reſpect of the great diſtance between theſe places.

V. 16. But theſe five Kings fled] Whileſt Joſhua purſued the victory and chaſed their armies.

and hid themſelves in a cave] Either becauſe they could not in the heat of purſuit reach unto their fenced Cities, or elſe thought this cave a place of more ſecurity becauſe it was ſecret and unknown, not knowing that the hand of God could there find them, and bring them out to deſerved puniſhment, Amos 9. 2. Pſal. 139. 8, 9, 10.

at Makkedah] i. e. In the countrey adjacent and belonging to this City.

V. 19, And ſtay you not] Though theſe things be fled and hid, let not this make you ſlacken your ſpeed in purſuing the victory, ſeeing I will take a courſe to ſecure them till the fight be finiſhed.

to enter into their Cities] And ſo put you to the trouble of a new war.

hath delivered them into your hand] And therefore do not through ſloth and negligence loſe this opportunity which he now offereth unto you.

V. 21. And all the people] Which by Joſhua's command had purſued the enemy, ver. 19.

to the camp] i. e. The military camp of the army at Makkedah. For the ſtanding camp of the whole people remained ſtill at Gilgal, whither they returned after the victory was compleated, ver. 43.

in peace] i. e. Sound and ſafe.

none moved his tongue] i. e. Not ſo much as a dog barked againſt them, alluding unto that proverbiall ſpeech, Exod. 11. 7. Whereby is ſignified that they were ſo upheld by Gods protection in all theſe great undertakings that they did not now meet with the leaſt oppoſition. Or, if we would take it literally, the meaning is, that none of their enemies (they being now through this miraculous victory ſtrucken with fear and amazement) durſt provoke them with a reproachfull word, much leſſe bear arms againſt them.

V. 24. Put your feet upon ten necks of theſe Kings] This Joſhua did not in inſolency of ſpirit, tyrannically inſulting over theſe Kings in their miſery, but (no doubt) by ſpeciall inſtinct of Gods Spirit, if not by a direct command from him, and that upon juſt cauſes and grounds. As, I. To ſhew his deteſtation of the horrible impieties and outragious wickedneſs of theſe Kings and the curſed nations under their government in that he inflicted upon them ſuch fearfull puniſhments as their ſins juſtly deſerved. II. That he might make them an example to his people, and deterre them, eſpecially the Kings and Magiſtrates, from imitating their abominations, leſt they ſhould provoke God, who is no accepter of perſons& cauſe him in his juſt diſpleaſure to inflict upon them the like puniſhments. III. That he might hereby move his people to be ſevere executioners of his terrible judgements, upon theſe curſed nations, and not out of fooliſh pity (unto which otherwiſe they might be inclinable) to ſhew mercy unto any of thoſe whom he had deſtinated to utter deſtruction. IV. That he might hearten and encourage them to fight valiantly Gods battels, being aſſured that they ſhould in like manner prevail againſt all the remainder of his and their enemies, if they did not the work of the Lord deceitfully, or negligently, Jer. 48.10. and this end is expreſſed ver. 25. V. Laſtly, That they might end and conclude their victories in an abſolute and glorious triumph, giving the whole praiſe unto God, who had ſubdued their enemies and trodden them under their feet, Pſalme 110 1. Malach 4. 3. See Judges 8. 20. Pſalm. 91. 13.& 149. 8.

V. 26. hanged them on five trees] i e. Cauſed them to be ſlain and hanged by his command. See chap. 8. 29.

V. 27. laid great ſtones] i. e. In perpetuall memory of the thing done. See chap. 7. 26.

V. 28. took Makkedah] See on ver. 10. Like a wiſe Generall he purſueth his victory, and taketh advantage upon their ſuddain feares following the former great victorie to ſurprize this City.

and all the ſouls] i. e. All the people, men, women and children For the cattle were given unto them for a prey. See ver. 40. & chap. 11. 11. 14.

V. 29. and all Iſrael with him] To wit, all that had been with him in this expedition at Gibeon.

unto Libnah] A City ſituate in the Tribe of Judah, chap 15. 42. and given unto the Prieſts, chap. 21. 13.

V. 31 unto Lachiſh] A ſtrong City in the confines of Judah Weſt-ward, chap, 15. 39 whoſe king was one of thoſe five that made war againſt Gibeon, ver. 5.

V. 32. which took it on the ſecond day] To wit, after they had laid ſiege nnto it. For they took it not the firſt day, as they did divers of the reſt becauſe (as it may be probably thought) they were hindred by the coming in of Horam to their aid.

V. 33. Horam king of Gezer] A city ſituate in the Tribe of Ephraim chap. 16. 3. 10. Others probably think that it was not this Gezer, becauſe being ſo far remote from Lachiſh, there was no cauſe why Horam ſhould venture himſelfe and his people in relieving it, ſeeing in reſpect of the diſtance between them they could not be in any preſent danger, but rather that it was that Gezer mentioned 1 Chron. 14. 16, where David is ſaid to have ſlaine the Philiſtims, which was not far off from Lachiſh, and therefore in like danger with it.

V. 34 Joſhua paſſed unto Eglon] In the Tribe of Judah chap. 15. 39 five leagues from Jeruſalem South-ward, and three from Emaus. The king of this City was alſo one of thoſe five which came againſt Gibeon.

V. 35. on that day] i. e. The ſame day that they encamped againſt it.

V. 36. unto Hebron and they fought againſt it] This was an ancient City of Canaan, built ſeven years before Zoan in Ægypt, Num. 13. 12. a great and famous City having divers others under its dominions, ſituate in the Tribe of Judah, chap. 15. 13. and called before Kiriath-jearim. Their king alſo was one of the five which came againſt Gibeon, and was hanged at the Cave of Makkedah. But, as we uſually ſay Rex non moritur. For no ſooner was he dead, but either his heire ſucceeded him, or the people choſe another in his place; who was alſo ſlaine at this time. But here it may be demanded, how it can be ſaid that Joſhua took Hebron and ſmote it with the edge of the ſword & chap. 11. 21. that he cut of the Anakims from the mountains, from Hebron, aud deſtroyed them utterly with their Cities, when as it is ſaid afterwards that Caleb deſired Hebron, of Joſhua for an inheritance, upon condition that he ſhould firſt conquer it, and drive out the Anakims the which accordingly he did, chap. 14. 12. 13. & Judg. 1. 9 10. To which I anſwer, That that which is but briefly touched here, & as it were in the paſſage from one City to another, is in the other places more fully enlarged, and the particular circumſtances expreſſed, namely, that Hebron was taken, and the ſons of Anak ſlain by the Tribe of Judah conducted by Caleb, who aſſiſted him in this expedition; but here in the general it is attributed to Joſhua, becauſe as Generall of the Army he gave it to Caleb as of right belonging unto him, and alſo by his authority and command alotted unto him a part of his Army, namely the Tribe of Judah, to aſſiſt him for the getting of it into his poſſeſſion And howſoever it may be further objected, That theſe things were done by Caleb, after the death of Joſhua, becauſe Judg. 1. 1. it is ſaid ſo; to this I anſwer, That though the main body of that hiſtory relateth things done after Joſhua's death; yet divers things done in his life time are there ſet down, by way of explication and enlargement of ſuch things as are but briefly touched in this book; See Judges. 2. 6, 7, 8. and ſuch are as (I conceive) divers paſſages of the firſt Chapter; Others conceive that Hebron was twice taken, once by Joſhua here, the which ſtory is more fully inlarged, and again chap. 14.. & 15. the ſecond time, after Ioſhua's death, the Anakims and men of this City (being a warlike people) having again beaten out the Iſraelites, and recovered Hebron their ancient habitation. The which they think to be the more probable, becauſe chap. 15. 14. it is ſaid that Caleb did but drive out the ſons of Anak and Iudges. 1. 10 that they were ſlain.

V. 38. Joſhua returned] i. e. Leaving the ſouthern parts, bended his courſe towards Gilgal.

Debir] A City in the confines of Judah, butting on the tribe of Simeon, before called Kirjath ſepher, chap. 15. 15. Judg. 1. 11. five or ſix miles beyound Hebron, toward the ſouth; Another of this name was in the Tribe of Gad beyond Jordan, chap. 13. 26

V. 40. ſmote all the Countrie of the hills, &c.] i. e. He ſubdued all that whole region, ſo that no part was free from ruine and ſlaughter.

all that breathed] i. e. All mankind that there inhabited, men, women, children, young and old.

as the Lord God of Iſrael commanded] Deut. 7. 2. & 20. 16. And therefore it was not to be imputed unto Joſhua or the Iſraelites as an act of cruelty, that they ſlew ſo many thouſands of all ſexes, ages, conditions ſeeing they had an expreſſe command from God to do it, who being juſtice it ſelf cannot command any thing which is not moſt juſt; and not to obey him, by detracting, altering, leſſening or heightning any thing which he requireth, is no mercy or pity, but extream wickedneſſe.

V. 41. from Kadeſh-barnea] Which was in the uttermoſt bounds of Canaan ſouthward, and in the Tribe of Judah.

even unto Gaza] This is ſomewhat more then ſix miles diſtant from Aſcalon, bending upon the Sea-Coaſt towards the South.

all the Country of Goſhen] Not that in Ægypt, but a City ſituate in the Mountainous places of Judea, of which ſee chapter 11. 16. & 15. 51.

V. 42. at one time] i. e. In one expedition.

becauſe the LORD God of Iſrael fought for Iſrael] This is rendred as a reaſon of theſe great conqueſts in ſo ſhort a time, which otherwiſe might ſeem incredible. Becauſe the Lord acted with and for them, to whom nothing is impoſſible, and gave them courage, ſtrength and good ſucceſſe in all their enterpriſes.

V. 43. and all Iſrael with him, unto the Camp to Gilgal] i. e. All the army imployed in this expedition, crowned with victory and loaded with ſpoyles, returned to their ſtanding camp at Gilgal. And ſo endeth the hiſtory of the firſt ſeven years after their entrance into Canaan, as appeareth by the taking Hebron and Debir: Of which ſee chap. 14. & 15. & Judg. 1.

CHAP. XI.

Verſe 1. JAbin King of Hazor] A City lying in or upon Galilee of the Gentiles, not far from Kadeſh. See on Jer 49. 28. Jabin was a name common to the Kings of that City, Judg. 4. 2. as Pharaoh, Ptoleme, Abimelech, Tigranes, Cæſar, &c. were in other nations. It ſignifieth underſtanding: Like as our Engliſh word King is derived from a Saxon word that ſignifieth cunning or skill, a neceſſary qualification for perſons of that calling.

that he ſent] To wit, unto the Kings which inhabited the North of Canaan, who together were entred into a confederacy to aſſiſt one another in this war againſt the common enemy, chap. 9. 1. But being thus combined, why did not theſe Kings of the north joyn with the ſouthern Kings, that they might have oppoſed the Iſraelites with united forces? Surely, ſeeing in all reaſon and common policy they ſhould have done ſo, no cauſe hereof can be rendred, but that the Divine providence did overrule them, and infatuate their counſels, ſo as they neglected their only wiſe and ſafeſt courſe, that ſo he might make ready way to his people for a more eaſie conqueſt, not ſuffering them to come out againſt them in their full and united ſtrength, leaſt they might have been diſcouraged with their vaſt multitude and great power, but one after another, that the former being firſt ſubdued, his people might be heartned and encouraged by their former victories, and might obtain a more eaſie conqueſt, when as their enemies were thus weakened by loſing half their ſtrength, and they alſo hereby gaining time to refreſh themſelves againſt the next fight: See on v. 18. Now the reaſon why Jabin rather then any other of the Kings ſummoned the reſt to this war, notwithſtanding he was further off from the danger then divers of them, may ſeem to be this, that his City being greater, and chief among the reſt, he had ſome juriſdiction and command over them. See v. 10. & on Judg. 4. 1.

to the King of Shimron] Called Shimron meron, ch. 12. 20.

V. 2 the plains ſouth of Cinneroth] i. e. The plains that lay on the ſouth-ſide of the country of Cinneroth, called Cinnereth, Deut. 3. 17. afterwards, Tiberias. See on Chapter 19. 35. and on Numbers 34. 11.

in the borders of Dor] A City and Country in the Tribe of Manaſſeh, on the Coaſt of the Mediterranean Sea, Chap. 17. 11.

V. 3. the Hivite under Hermon] This ſome think is added to diſtinguiſh them from the Hivites of Gibeon which had made peace with Iſrael. For this Hermon was an hill on the north of Canaan. See on Deut. 3. 8.

in the land of Mizpah] A City adjoyning to Gilead. *S*ee Gen. 31. 49. Judg.10.17.

V. 4. even as the ſand that is upon the ſea ſhore] An hyperbolical expreſſion uſual in the Scriptures, to ſignifie ſuch a huge multitude as is not eaſily to be numbred. 1 Sam.13.5.

V. 5. met together] Or, aſſembled by appointment at a ſet time.

at the waters of Merom] Over which the King of Shimron-meron reigned. Here they joyned all their armies into one body, that ſo being duly marſhalled they might encounter and ſpeedily ſet upon Iſrael.

V. 6. Be not afraid becauſe of them] Though Joſhua had had much and manifold experience of the truth of Gods promiſes and of his gracious aſſiſtance, yet through humane frailty and weakneſs of faith he was ſubject to fear, in reſpect of the huge multitude that came againſt him with ſo many horſes and Chariots, and therefore needed to be thus encouraged.

to morrow about this time] This is added for the further ſtrengthening of his faith, ſeeing not only the conqueſt but even the very time of victory is deſigned.

I will deliver them] And therefore thou needeſt not fear in reſpect of thine own weakneſs, or thine enemies number and ſtrength, ſeeing I alone, who have undertaken to aſſiſt you, and promiſed you victory, am all-ſufficient to make good my word unto you.

thou ſhalt hough their horſes] That being made utterly unſerviceable, the Iſraelites might not truſt in them and their own ſtrength, but might wholly deny themſelves, and aſcribe the whole glory and praiſe of all their victories unto God alone. See Deut.17. 16. Judg.7.2. 2 Sam.8.4. Pſal.20.7. & 147.10.

and burn their chariots with fire] This is alſo added for the further ſtrengthening of Joſhua's faith, in that the Lord giveth him ſuch particular direction before the battel what he ſhould do afterwards, as if already he had gotten the victory.

V. 7. by the waters of Merom ſuddenly] Notwithſtanding that he had Gods infallible promiſe of victory, yet this made him not neglect any prudent or politick means whereby he might ſerve Gods providence for the obtaining of it.

V. 8. great Zidon] Zidon was called (as Joſephus conceiveth) from the eldeſt ſon of Canaan, Gen.10.15. And it is called great, not comparatively, as though there were a leſſer of that name, (for we read of none but this) but becauſe it was truly great, both in reſpect of the largeneſs and circuit, and alſo the fame and glory of it: for it was a City of great trade and traffique with nations far and neer, and was much ennobled in the repute of all for the variety of merchandizing commodities, the art and skill of the inhabitants in all manufactures, and the fairneſs and commodiouſneſs of their haven, which made it a fit and ſafe harbour for ſhips. In which reſpects it was doubtful whether it or the famous City of Tyrus was the Metropolis or mother-City of Phœnicia, and the rather, becauſe Tyrus is called the daughter of Zidon, Iſa.23.12. This City was ſcituate on the ſea-coaſt of the Mediterranean, two hundred furlongs from Tyrus. See on Chap. 19. 28. and Zech. 9:2.

Miſrephothmaim] A place not far diſtant from Zidon; wherein were many ſalt-pits wherewith that tract abounded; or, as ſome take it, glaſs-ovens, or hot waters or bathes.

the valey of Miſpeh eaſtward] Situate under the hill Hermon, in the Tribe of Naphtali.

V. 9. And Joſhua did unto them as the Lord bad him] Here is commended Joſhua's obedience to Gods command, and his armies to his.

V. 10. turned back] Having gone far beyond this city in purſuit of his enemies.

and took Hazor] Which was the head (not of all Canaan, but) of all the Kingdoms ſubdued in this expedition.

and ſmote the King thereof with the ſword] i. e. Jabin; who either by flight had eſcaped out of the battel, and being returned was ſlain in the City when it was ſacked; or, he being killed in the fight, it is to be underſtood of a new King that ſucceeded him in the government. But it may be objected, that Jabin King of Hazor is ſaid to have tyrannized over the Iſraelites, Judg.4.2,3. and therefore he could not be ſlain here: To which I anſwer, That this was long after, when for the ſins of Gods people the Canaanites had recovered their ſtrength, reedified their Cityes, and Hazor among the reſt, and were under the government of a new King of the ſame name, as was uſual in thoſe times and countries.

V. 11. ſmote all the ſouls] *S*ee on chap.10.28.

V. 12. as Moſes the ſervant of the Lord commanded] Namely, from God. Whereby the Iſraelites are cleared of cruelty, ſeeing they had from God an expreſſe command to deſtroy utterly theſe curſed Nations. For it is juſtice to kill thoſe whom he deſigneth to be ſlaughtered, and fooliſh and impious pity to ſpare when he appointeth to kill. *S*ee on chap. 10.40.

V. 13. the cities that ſtood ſtill in their ſtrength] That had not their walls and bulwarks yet raſed and diſmantled in the fury of war when they were ſtormed: Theſe they ſtill preſerved entire for their own uſe, that they might afterwards dwell in them the more ſafely and ſecurely.

ſave Hazor] This only City was burnt by Joſhua's command, and not through the fury of the ſouldiers, as thinking it to be a ſufficient evidence of juſt wrath againſt theſe Canaanites, that their chief City was deſtroyed, though the leſſer were ſpared.

V. 14. all the ſpoil] Saving their Idols, which they were commanded to conſume with fire, though they were of gold and ſilver, and not to convert them to their own uſe, Deut.7.25.

V. 15. ſo did Joſhua] He ſtrictly obſerved his rule, and did nothing raſhly out of paſſion for what he had not an expreſſe warrant from God, nor neglected any thing through fear or ſloth which he commanded.

V. 16. So Joſhua took all that land] In this and the next verſe, he ſummeth up all that was yet done by Joſhua and the Iſraelites in the land of Canaan.

and the mountain of Iſrael] This is to be underſtood not of any one particular mountain, but of all the mountains and mountainous places which fell to the ſhare of Iſrael, only Judah excepted, which had his own mountains peculiar to himſelf, v.21.

V. 17. even from the mount Halak] Or, the ſmooth, or bare mountain, ſo called, becauſe neither graſs, nor herb, nor tree grew upon it.

that goeth up to Seir] Seir is a mountain of Idumea, and lyeth upon the frontiers of Canaan towards the ſouth.

unto Baal-Gad] Which is a part of Libanus towards the Eaſt, at the foot of mount Hermon.

V. 18, Joſhua made war a long time] q. d. Though the warlike expeditions are ſo briefly related, that they might ſeem all to have been tranſacted in a ſhort ſpace, yet in truth this war continued a long time, the ſpace of neer ſeven years, as appeareth by the computation of Calebs age. For he was fourty years old when he was ſent by Moſes to ſearch the land; and now he was fourſcore and five years old, as himſelf ſpeaketh, chap.14. 10. out of which if we ſubſtract thirty eight years, in which they wandred in the wilderneſs after his returne from eſpying the land, there remain ſeven and fourty years. But why did the Lord exerciſe his people in ſo long and tedious a war, which, if he had ſo pleaſed, might have been both begun and finiſhed in a few moneths? I anſwer, Though no other reaſon could be alledged but his own good pleaſure, it were ſufficient, ſeeing he is infinite in wiſdom, and knoweth what is beſt, and infinite in goodneſſe, and will do that which is beſt for his own glory and good of his Church and people. But yet divers reaſons may be rendred why he was pleaſed to have this war thus prolonged. I. Becauſe in his adminiſtrations and diſpenſations he uſually proceedeth in an ordinary way, according to the nature of ſecondary cauſes, and not by his abſolute power in a miraculous manner: And ſo theſe populous and warlike nations dwelling in ſtrong and fenced Cities, could not be conquered but in ſome proceſſe of time ſuitable to the greatneſſe of the work. II. That hereby he might exerciſe the faith and patience of his people, waiting and depending upon his power and promiſes, even when the performance of them was thus delayed. III. To train them up in obedience to all his commands, when they had continual need of his aſſiſtance, and daily experience of his juſtice in puniſhing ſin, and of his love and goodneſſe in ſupporting and preſerving thoſe that fear and ſerve him. IV. That by this long exerciſe of arms he might make his people a warlike nation, and not only valiant to conquer, but alſo skilful to retain what they had conquered, Judg. 3. 2. V. That hereby they might have more cauſe to praiſe and magnifie Gods love and goodneſſe towards them, which more clearly appeared unto them in the difficulty of their conqueſts. VI. That wild Beaſts might not increaſe upon them for want of people to inhabit the land, Deut.7.22. See on Chap 21.43.

V. 19. There was not a City that made peace] This is added as a reaſon to the former verſe, why the war continued ſo long, namely, becauſe the hearts of the Canaanites were ſo hardned that they deſperately and obſtinately reſolved to fight it out to the laſt man, and never ſo much as deſired to have any peace with the Iſraelites, whatſoever came of it.

all other they took in battel] Hereby is not meant that they took all the Cities in Canaan; for many remained unſubdued long after Joſhua's death, and ſome even unto Davids time; but that all the Cityes before mentioned, or all that were taken by Joſhua, were all vanquiſhed by the ſword, and not any of them ſurrendred by compoſition, ſaving the Cities of the Hivites. See Chap. 13.1.

V. 20. For it was of the Lord to harden their hearts] i. e. Either to give them over to the hardneſſe of their own hearts, and not to ſupple and ſoften them by the oyl of his *S*pirit, or actually to harden them to their utter ruine and deſtruction, as a juſt puniſhment of all their former wickedneſſe and abominations, Pſalm 69. 27. See on Chapter 9.15.

V. 21. cut off the Anakims] Anak the ſon of Arba was the proper name of a famous Giant, who had three ſons, *S*heſhai, Ahiman, and Talmai, chap.15. 14. called Anakims, with their poſterity alſo, Num.13.22. Deut.1.28. And, as ſome think, it was a name commonly given to other Giants. Ioſephus ſaith the bones of theſe Giants were to be ſeen in his time, of an incredible greatneſſe, Antiq lib.5.c.2.

From the mountains] Where they lived in a ſavage manner in Caves and Dens, after they were firſt driven by Joſhua and Caleb from Hebron and Debir, chapter 15.14,15. and doing much miſchief and ſpoil in the Country adjacent, Joſhua again attempted them, and quite cut them off from all the Mountains of Iſrael, and utterly deſtroyed all them that inhabited in thoſe places. See on chap.10.36.

mountains of Judah] In which the Giants chiefly inhabited, chap.14. 12. Numb.13.22.

mountains of Iſrael] i.e. Of all other Tribes ſaving Judah. See v. 16.

Joſhua deſtroyed them utterly with their Cities] Namely, in this his ſecond expedition. For in the former he burnt only Hazor their chief mother-City, and reſerved the other Cities for the Iſraelites to dwell in, v.11.13. but in this ſecond expedition againſt the Anakims he deſtroyed their Cityes, becauſe being ſtrong and defended by valiant and mighty men, they could no otherwiſe be maſtered and taken, unleſs they were diſmantled and utterly ruined.

V. 22. only in Gaza, in Gath, and in Aſhdod] Theſe three were Cities of the Philiſtims, ſcituate on the ſea-coaſt, and were by God given to the Iſraelites, but not poſſeſſed by them, becauſe by their ſins they had provoked his wrath, ſo as he would not caſt the inhabitants out before them, but ſuffered them to remain to be ſnares and traps unto them, ſcourges in their ſides, and thorns, in their eyes, chap. 23. 13. Numb. 33. 55. In theſe Cities the poſterity of the Gians remained even unto Davids time; as namely, Goliath of Gath, whom David ſlew in a ſingle duel, 1 Sam. 17. and another of that name, with his three brethren, who were ſlain by Davids ſervants, 2 Sam. 21.

V. 23. Joſhua took the whole land] i. e. Before mentioned. Or, it is to be underſtood figuratively, the whole, being put for the greateſt part. Or, all ſorts of land, Cities and Countries, champion and mountainous places. Or, that all the whole country were ſo ſtricken with the terrour of his victories, that they durſt not again make any more confederacies againſt him, or by making any new oppoſition diſturb his peaceable poſſeſſion of all the land which he had conquered, but that he might now without any interruption quietly proceed to the diſtribution of it among the Tribes.

according to their diviſions by their Tribes] i.e. He did not give to every ſingle man his part, but aſſigned to every Tribe their portions. Or, he gave inheritances to all the Iſraelites according to their ſeveral Tribes, in which they were numbred, according to the order and manner related in the following chapters.

and the land reſted from war] i. e. There were no more hoſtile conſpiracies to hinder them from the peaceable poſſeſſion of all which they enjoyed. See on ch.14.15.

CHAP. XII.

Verſ.1. FRom the River Arnon unto mount Hermon] Arnon is a River or Torrent dividing the Moabites from the Amorites, Num. 21.13. and Hermon, a part of Libanus towards the eaſt: and with theſe two the country was bounded on the out-ſide of Jordan, extending it ſelf from the River Arnon, where it fell into the Lake Aſphaltites, unto mount Hermon.

all the plain on the eaſt] i. e. The Champion country of Moab, extending it ſelf from Arnon towards Jordan on the left hand, and the Arabian mountaines on the right.

V.2. And ruled from Aroer] Sihons Kingdom was bounded with Arnon on the South, Jabok on the North, Jordan on the Weſt, and the mountains of Arabia on the Eaſt. Of the City Aroer ſee on Iſa.17.2.

and from half Gilead] To wit, the other half lying in the Kingdom of Og, v.5.

V. 3. the ſea of Cinneroth] See chap 11.2. Deut.3.17.

the ſea of the plain] A plain Champion lyeth between the Sea of Tiberias and the dead ſea, which on the Eaſt ſide belongeth to both. The Dead ſea here is called the Sea of the Plain, becauſe it was once an even and levil Country, before it was deſtroyed with fire and brimſtone from heaven; and it was ſo pleaſant and fruitful that it was compared to Ægypt, yea even to Paradiſe it ſelf, Gen. 13.10.

the Salt Sea] So called from the Acrimonious and ſalt taſt of its waters. chap.15.2. See on Gen.14.3.

Beth-Jeſhimoth] The name ſignifieth a vaſt and deſolate houſe, or place. It was a town ſcituate in the Champion border of Moab, Ezek.25.9.

from the ſouth (or, Teman) under Aſhdoth-piſgah] Or, the ſprings of Piſgah, or the hill. This ſetteth forth the ſouth borders of Sihons Kingdom, extending it ſelf from the mouth of Arnon unto the bottom of mount Abraim.

V.4. Og King of Baſhan] Baſhan was a very fruitful country, excelling in goodly and pleaſant paſtures.

remnant of the Giants] Namely, of thoſe (as is probable) which were ſlain by the Ammonites, Deut.2.20,21. & 3.11. See chap.13.12. & on Gen.6.4.

at Aſhtaroth and at Edrei] Some underſtand that he reigned in the City Edrei near the mountain Aſhtaroth. Others think that hereby is meant, two manſion-houſes or royal Palaces in which Og dwelt. See on Deut.1.4.

V. 5. in Salcah] A City in the utmoſt borders belonging to Baſhan, unto which the border of the Geſhurites and the Maachathites adjoyned, which were mountainous and yet fruitful places, lying more inward in that country.

Border of the Geſhurites] Geſhur was a Royall City in the Land of Baſhan not far from Damaſcus. See on 2 Samuel 3. 3.

and half Gilead] This half was under the dominion of Og; the other, under Sihon; the Torrent Jabok dividing the land of Gilead between theſe two Kings.

V. 7. on this ſide Jordan on the weſt] Here is deſcribed not only the ſea-coaſt of Canaan, properly called Paleſtine, but the whole land of Canaan bounded by Jordan on the Eaſt, and by the Mediterranean ſea on the Weſt, and extending from Libanus unto the borders of Edom: Which uttermoſt borders in the length of the land are ſignified by the names of thoſe mountains of Baal-Gad and Halak.

goeth up to Seir] Seir was the name of a very high mountain on the eaſt-ſide of the land of Hus, and of a city ſeated on it. See on Num.24. 18,19. Iſa.21.11.

their diviſions] i. e. To every one his ſhare.

V. 8. In the mountains and in the valleys] He meaneth all places generally whatſoever.

V.9. beſides Bethel] This is added to diſtinguiſh it from another Ai in the Country of the Ammonites, Jer.49 3.

V. 13. Geder] Which fell to the Tribe of Judah, as did alſo Hormah, and Arad which did lye in the utmoſt ſouth borders, chap.15.30, 36. Judg.1 16.

V. 15. Adullam] See on 1 Sam.22.1.

V. 17. Tappua] So called from the plenty of apples which grew there. It likewiſe belonged to Judah.

Hepher] A City belonging to Zebulun, chap.19.13.

V. 18. Aphek] Situate between Taanach, Gezreel and Megiddo. See on chap.13.4.

V. 20. Shimron-meron] See Chap.11 1,5.

V. 23. The King of the nations of Gilgal] Some will have to be here meant, not that Gilgal near Jericho, but a famous City of that name in the Country of Galilee, which was alſo called Galilee of the nations, or of the Gentiles, Iſa.9 1. becauſe many nations, by reaſon of the commodiouſneſſe of the ports and havens there, did reſort thither for trading and merchandizing. Some think that Tidal, Gen.14. 1. was King of this place.

V. 24. All the Kings thirty and one] Of theſe ſome were not mentioned in the victories before related: Which ſheweth that not every particular, but only the general heads of things, are touched upon. Now whereas he here ſpeaketh of one and thirty Kings, many of which reigned over divers Towns, beſides their chief Cityes, this evidenceth the riches of this country of Canaan, and the exceeding fruitfulneſſe of that ſoyl, in that, being of ſo ſmal a circuit (that is, as good Authours compute, but an hundred and ſixty miles in length, from Dan to Beerſheba, and only ſixty in breadth, from Joppe to Jordan) it was ſufficient, and that plentifully and bountifully, to nouriſh ſuch a huge multititude of Inhabitants in thoſe times; and in the dayes of David above thirteen hundred thouſand fighting men, beſides thoſe who being aged or impotent were not fit to bear arms, and alſo women, young youths, and little children.

CHAP. XIII.

Verſe 1. THou art old and ſtriken in years] God putteth Joſhua in mind of his old age and the ſhort remainder of his dayes, to haſten him on to the diſpatching of that work wherein he intended further to imploy him, i. e. the dividing of the land already conquered among the Tribes, and alſo to deſign by lot to every one, in their proportion, thoſe parts which were not yet ſubdued, nor ſhould be in his life-time, as if they were already conquered.

there remaineth yet very much land to be poſſeſſed] To wit, after the enemies are vanquiſhed, which I will, after thou art gone, poſſeſſe my people of according to my promiſe, if they keep covenant with me: But I will in the mean time reſerve it unſubdued, That I may exerciſe their faith and try their obedience. Neither had the Lord promiſed that Joſhua ſhould conquer the whole land which he had given to his people, but only that he ſhould bring them into it, Deut.31.23. and divide it for an inheritance unto them, chap.1.6.

V. 2. This is the land that yet remaineth] Unconquered. See Judg. 3. 3.

all the borders of the Philiſtims] Their land lay along the coaſt of the Mediterranean ſea, and was given to the Iſraelites as a part of Canaan, unto which of old it belonged, till the Philiſtims, then called Caphtorims. having by force caſt out the Hivites, became poſſeſſors of it. See Deut. 2. 23. Amos 9.7. & on Jer.47. 4.

and all Geſhuri] Situate in Syria, and bordring on the north of Canaan. See chap.12 5. 2 Sam.15 8.

V. 3. From Sihor, which is before Ægypt] A River which, as ſome think, divideth Paleſtine from Ægypt, Num 34.5. But the Hebrew writers think it to be Nilus; which is called Sihor, or black, becauſe of the muddineſs of the water. See on Jer.2.18.

Alſo the Avites] Or, Hivets. Many of which, it ſeemeth, continued in ſome part of the Country even in Joſhua's time, long after the Philiſtims had expelled the greateſt part of their Anceſtors; and therefore are here mentioned, becauſe the Philiſtims had no juſt title to that land in which they dwelt, Deut.2.22,23.

V. 4. all the land of the Canaanites] All the country was not wholly ſubdued by Joſhua, but divers parts of it only, and the reſt ſo terrified by the ſucceſſe of his victorious army, that not appearing in any hoſtile oppoſition, they were no hindrance unto him in his diviſion of the land; and namely Mearah, or the Cave which is beſide the Sidonians, unto Aphek, which is a City that fell to the Tribe of Aſher, called Aphik, Judg.1.31. ſee on 1 Sam. 29.1.

to the borders of the Amorites] By which is ſignified the country between Aphek and mount Hermon.

V. 5. the Giblites] So called of Gebal a promontory above Zidon: ſee Pſal.83.7. Ezek.27.9. They were a people ſingularly skilful and induſtrious in manufactures, and therefore uſed by Solomon in the work of the Temple, 1 King.5.18.

unto the entring into Hamath] See on Iſai. 10. 9. Amos 6. 2.

V. 6. All the Inhabitants of the hill Country] Which though conquered by Joſhua, yet were not wholly extirpated, but left to be ſcourges to the ſides, and pricks in the eyes of Gods people, in caſe of their rebellion againſt him.

them will I drive out] i. e. I, who am omnipotent and alſufficient by my ſelf alone to do whatſoever I pleaſe, do undertake to drive out all theſe inhabitants which yet remain unconquered, when thou art dead and gone, by ſuch men and meanes as I ſhall pleaſe to appoint, if my people do not make void the covenant between them and me by their infidelity, rebellion and diſobedience: and I will give unto them peaceable poſſeſſion of all that part of the Country which remaineth yet unſubdued. See on v. 1. & on Judg.3.3.

only divide thou it] i. e. The whole land, both that which is already conquered, and that alſo which is as yet unconquered. All this was both to ſtrengthen their aſſurance that they ſhould in due time enjoy it, if they were not wanting to themſelves, ſeeing God had already given it unto them by lot; and alſo to provoke them to attempt it with all valour and reſolution when they ſhould be called unto it, and not to make any peace with the inhabitants, either out of cowardly fear, or love of caſe.

V. 7. Now therefore divide] i. e. Seeing thou art ſtricken in years, and canſt no longer purſue thy Conqueſt.

V. 8. with whom] i. e. With the other half-tribe of Manaſſeh, who were to have no part in Canaan, becauſe their portion was already fallen unto them beyond Jordan.

even as Moſes] i. e Even as Moſes by Gods appointment gave unto the two Tribes and half their inheritance beyond Jordan, ſo do thou, who ſucceedeſt him in government, confirm his gift unto them in the ſame manner, and on the like conditions.

V. 9. from Aroer that is upon the bank, &c.] The whole region without Jordan, given by Moſes to the two Tribes and half, is firſt generally deſcribed, from Arnon to Lebanon; and then more eſpecially is expreſſed what portion fell to every Tribe. This Aroer ſome think was double, one ſituate on the bank of Arnon, and the other in the midſt of the River, not only becauſe the words here ſo carry it, but alſo becauſe the Prophet ſo ſpeaketh of it, Iſa.17.2. The Cities of Aroer are forſaken. See on v.16.

Dibon] A City built by the Gadites in the nine and thirtieth manſion of the Iſraelites, and therefore called Dibon-Gad, Num.33 45. by anticipation. See on Iſa.15.2.

V. 11. of the Geſhurites, &c.] Which their land Moſes had given to the two tribes and half; but his Army not proceeding in their invaſion to the utmoſt bounds of theſe countries, they were not as yet conquered, nor the inhabitants caſt out, that the Iſraelites might have them in preſent poſſeſſion, as appeareth ver. 2, 13. See on Chap. 12. 5.

V. 12. theſe did Moſes ſmite] Not the Geſhurites and Maachathites, nor the remnant of the Giants, but all the Kingdome of Og in Baſhan, whom not long before his death he ſlew, together with Sihon King of the Amorites.

V. 13. expelled not the Geſhurites, &c.] Either becauſe they would not, by being taken up in this ſervice, hinder their expedition into Canaan, which was a work of greater weight, or becauſe they had for the preſent, room enough in the Country for their people and cattel, and therefore might forbear the conquering of theſe parts till better leiſure.

but the Geſhurites] q. d. But whatſoever the cauſe was, without doubt herein they grievouſly ſinned, in that having conquered Canaan, and being returned into their country, they ſtill contrary to Gods command, even to this day, have ſuffered them to live amongſt them, as thinking they had Cities and ground ſufficient for their uſe, though they lived with them. And ſo either for fear, or love of eaſe, they diſobeying Gods command, this remainder not being caſt out, became ſnares, and pricks, and ſcourges for their hurt, as God threatned, chap. 23: 13. Num. 33. 55. Judg. 2.3.

V. 14. he gave none inheritance] i. e. Moſes, being ſo appointed by God, gave no inheritance to Levi, as appeareth v.33. Namely, he gave unto them no regions or parts of the Country, as to the other Tribes, upon which they might live by tillage and husbandry, but only ſome Cityes to dwell in, and the Subburbs belonging to them, with ſome circuit of ground, for the feeding of their cattel; becauſe God was to be their portion, and all that remained of the oblations offered unto him by the other tribes, which he aſſigned unto them as his free gift for maintenance of them and their families.

the Sacrifices of the Lord] i. e. All that remained of the ſacrifices, Num.18.8–24. Deut.10.9. & 18.2. Whereby a figure of the part for the whole, we are to underſtand all other oblations due unto God, as Tithes, Firſt-fruits, &c.

V. 15. And Moſes gave] Here he deſcribeth the particular poſſeſſions allotted to theſe Tribes without Jordan, with their ſeveral bounds, which Moſes, authorized by God, aſſigned unto them, for the end that every one of theſe Tribes, and all belonging unto them, might know their own, and contenting themſelves therewith might not incroach one upon another.

according to their families] i. e. Aſſigning, as ſome think, to every family its portion; Or, as others, to all and ſingular families according to their ſeveral ſtocks and kindreds: i. e. Moſes and Joſhua, by Gods appointment and direction, aſſigned unto every Tribe ſufficient portions for all the families belonging thereto, but not a particular inheritance for every ſingular family; for that work was to be done by the Magiſtrates and Officers which belonged to every Tribe.

V. 16. And their Coaſt was] Moſt of theſe Cityes, belonging lately to Sihon King of the Amorites, in former times belonging to the Moabites, but were by force taken from them by the Amorites. Otherwiſe the Iſraelites could not have poſſeſſed them, being prohibited by God to take from the Moabites any part of their Country, Deut. 2.9.

from Aroer] A City in the borders between the Reubenites, and the Gadites; who alſo built it, as Dibon, and Ataroth, Num.32. 34 Which towns, lying in the Confines between the two Tribes, are ſaid to belong ſometimes to one, and ſometimes to the other. In this place Aroer is allotted to Reuben, as the utmoſt bounds of his inheritance. See on Iſa.17.2.

V. 17. Heſhbon] This alſo was a City belonging both to the Reubenites and Gadites. And hence it is ſaid that the Gadites gave it to the Levites, Chap.21, 39, & 1 Chron.6.81. And here it is ſaid to be in the tribe of Reuben, who alſo built it, chap.21.39. Num.32.37. And the reaſon hereof is, becauſe lying in the confines of both Tribes, it was promiſcuouſly inhabited by them both, and attributed ſometimes to the one, and ſometimes to the other.

Bamoth-Baal] Situate in thoſe mountains by which the river Arnon runneth. It was the place from whence Balaam bleſſed Iſrael. Bamoth were high places in which the Gentiles worſhipped their Idols: And in this high place the Idol Baal was worſhipped; which name ſignifying a lord, was given to many of their Idols, and here, as ſome think to Saturn, as others to Jupiter.

Beth-baalmeon] It ſignifieth the houſe, or Temple of Baal, in which he dwelt, and was worſhipped, Jer.48.23. See on Iſa.15. 2.

V. 19. in the mount of the valley] By this is ſignified, as ſome think Abarim, Nebo, or Piſgah, a place famous, becauſe Moſes body was there buried by God himſelf; that, as ſome think, the people might not Idolize it; or, as others, that they might not carry it with them (as Joſeph's bones) into Canaan, into which God had ſaid he ſhould not enter.

V. 20. Beth-peor] Here ſome think the filthy Idol of the nations, called Priapus, was worſhipped. See on Numb. 25. 3. Deut. 4. 46.

V. 21. all the Kingdom of Sihon] i. e. All that part that did lye within thoſe bounds before mentioned. For there was another part of his Kingdone that was given to the Tribe of Gad.

whom Moſes ſmote, with the Princes of Midian] But not all at the ſame time. For theſe Princes, it ſeemeth, either as confederates with Sihon, or under his juriſdiction (which is more probable, ſeeing they are afterwards ſaid to be Dukes of Sihon) coming to aid him againſt the Iſraelites, upon his defeat and ſlaughter eſcaped out of battel and fled into their own Country; and there, in a ſecond expedition appointed by God, they were ſlain, Num.31.8.

V. 22. Balaam alſo the ſon of Beor the South-ſayer] He is alſo called a Prophet, 2 Pet.2.16. becauſe he had the knowledg of the true God, acknowledged that the events of things were diſpoſed and ordred by his providence and appointment, and ſpoke of many things concerning the ſtate of the people of Iſrael and other nations, and of David and Chriſt himſelf, as a true Prophet, uttering divers oracles as from the mouth of God. But here he is called a Sooth-ſayer, in reſpect of his notorious wickedneſſe, ambition and covetuouſneſſe, and in reſpect of his ends and aims in all he did, which were not Gods glory, or love of his truth revealed unto him, or of his people whom he bleſſed, but his own advancement, and the wages and reward of his divination, according to the manner of wicked Sooth-ſayers.

among them that were ſlain] i. e. The Princes of Midian. For though Num 24.14, 25. when he parted with Balak, he purpoſed ro return into his own country to Pethor, which was far remote from Midian, yet in his journey he turned aſide to Midian, or returned thither back again, to receive a reward for his wicked counſel given to the Midianites, by which the Iſraelites were drawn into ſin and ſeverely puniſhed. But ſome others do very probably think that he was a Midianite by nation and birth, and not an Aramite, though for his greater glory and credit he boaſteth himſelf to be ſo, becauſe the Aramites and Caldeans were in thoſe times moſt famous for Aſtrologie and Divination.

V. 23. was

V.23. was Jordan and the border thereof] i.e. Jordan and the Cities bordering upon it were the bounds of the Reubanites inheritance on the Weſt.

V.24. unto the Tribe of Gad] In this and the foure verſes following he deſcribeth Gads inheritance, which bordered upon the Reubenites towards the South, on the Eaſt upon the Ammonites and the hils of Arabia, on the Weſt upon Jordan, and on the North extended unto Mahanaim beyond Jabbok.

V.25. And their Coaſt was Jazer] Situate five miles from Jordan, and fifteen from Heſhborn. It bounded their country on the South; and in former times belonged to the Moabites, Iſa.16.9. Jer.48.32.

and all the Cities of Gilead] i.e. All without the bounds after mentioned. For half Gilead was given to Manaſſeh, ver.31.

and half the land of the children of Ammon] To wit, which Sihon had taken from them. For otherwiſe God had expreſly forbidden the Iſraelites to take any thing from the Ammonites, which was in their preſent poſſeſſion, Deut.2.19. and thence it was that Jephthah denyeth that they had taken any thing from them, but from Sihon, Judg. 11.15.

before Rabbah] The chief City of the Ammonites, called alſo Philadelphia by Ptolemy Philadelphus. See 2 *Sam.*11.1. & 12. 26,27.

V. 26. Ramath-Mizpeh] i.e. A watch-tower; or, an high hill, like thoſe on which we ſet our Becons for diſcovery. This was a city beyond Jabbok toward the North. And was alſo called Ramoth in Gilead, Chap.20.8. and was a city of Refuge, given unto the Levites.

Mahanaim] Not far from Ramath, ſituate in the uttermoſt angel of Gads inheritance towards the North-eaſt, neer mount Gilead; ſo called from the two hoſts of angels appearing there to Jacob, Gen. 32.2.

Verſ.1. A*Nd theſe are Countries*] q.d. As we have ſpoken before of the Countries which Moſes by Gods appointment gave to the two Tribes and half beyond Jordan, ſo now we are to ſpeak of thoſe which were aſſigned to the nine Tribes and half in the land of Canaan, according to their ſeverall diſtributions by lot.

which Eleazar the Prieſt, &c.] All which men were by name deſigned to this office by God himſelf before they entred into Canaan, Num.34.19. The firſt and principall was Eleazer the high Prieſt, as a chief Governour in the Iſraelitiſh *S*tate, and beſt underſtanding Gods laws by which they were to be governed, and alwayes ready by Urim and Thummim to ask counſel of God in all difficult caſes. And he was herein a type of Chriſt, by whom only we enter into and enjoy the heavenly Cannaan and thoſe ſeverall manſions which he hath there prepared for us, Joſh.14.2,3.

*V.*2. by lot was their inheritance] The land was divided by lot, which is wholly at Gods diſpoſing, Prov. 16. 33. I. That the people might hereby accowledge him to be Lord paramont, who hath the whole earth at his diſpoſing, and more eſpecially that as ſupream Lord he was owner of this promiſed land, from whom (as having given it to them) they derived all the right which they had unto it. II. That thereby all murmurings; quarrels and contentions might be prevented, which otherwiſe would neceſſarily have followed both againſt their magiſtrates, if in their dividing they had not given them their inheritance in ſuch place or proportion as they deſired; and amongſt the tribes one with another, whileſt divers of them would have coveted the ſame countrey, and out of pride and ſelf-love would have thought themſelves as worth of it as any of the reſt. III. That they might be contented with their portion, ſeeing God only wiſe had allotted it unto them. IV. To make it appear that the prophecies of Jacob and Moſes were from God, ſeeing the inheritance of the tribes did by lot fall unto them according to their predictions, Now the manner according to which they proceeded, was thus? The whole country was divided into ſo many parts as there were tribes to poſſeſſe them, yet ſo, as that the bounds of every Province were not ſo preciſely limited before the Tribe had drawn the lot but that afterwards they might be enlarged or leſſened according to the greatneſſe or ſmallneſſe of the number that belonged unto it, Num.26 53.56 & 33.54. And that firſt generall diviſion was ordered immediately from God by lots, whereby was determined what Country or Province every tribe ſhould inherit; but the enlarging or leſſening of it according to their number, great or ſmal, was left to the prudence of the high Prieſt, Joſhua and the Elders, whom God had appointed to divide it, as it is v.1. & Chap.17.14.

V.4. For the children of Joſeph were two Tribes] The bleſſing of birth-right being devolved to him from Reuben, Jacobs eldeſt ſon, for his hainous inceſtuous ſin. This is here added as a reaſon to ſhew, that though Levi had no inheritance, the number of the Tribes was not leſſened, ſeeing the poſterity of Joſephs two ſons were either of them reputed a tribe, Gen.48.5. 1 Chron.5.1.

V.5. And they divided the land] Not in preſent act, but in their intention. They agreed upon an order according to which the whole land ſhould be divided, both that part which they now poſſeſſed, and that alſo which was not yet ſubdued. The like phraſe we have Gen.37. 21. Exod.12.48.

V.6. Then the children of Judah came] i.e Caleb being of that tribe, they came to aſſiſt him in his ſuit for obtaining that inheritance which God had formerly promiſed him in the general, Num,14.24. Deut.1.36. And that this was done before the ſubduing of Hebron, appeareth v.12. compared with ch.10.36,37.

in Gilgal] Where the firſt diviſion of the land began; becauſe the Ark was then there, which being the viſible ſigne of Gods preſence, it was moſt fit that ſo weighty a buſineſſe ſhould be done in his ſight who aſſigned unto every tribe their inheritance. And therefore when the Ark was removed to Shiloh, that which remained to be done in this diviſion was there finiſhed, ch.18.1,6.

Caleb the ſon of Jepunneh] But 1 Chron.2. 18. Caleb is ſaid to be the ſon of Hezron. I anſwer, That Hezron was Judah's grand child, who deſcended with him into Ægypt above two hundred years before Caleb was ſent to ſearch the land; and therefore he could not be his immediate father, but grandfather, or great grandfather: And theſe in the Scripture are called fathers, becauſe their poſterity deſcend from their loyns. Others more probably think, that this Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh deſcending from Kenaz of the tribe of Judah, of whom mention is made 1 Chron.4.13,15. and who is ſaid to be the father of Othniel (though not immediately) who was alſo the younger brother of Caleb, Judg,1.13. See on Num.32.12.

Thou knoweſt] I appeal unto thy ſelf, who alone knoweſt what God ſaid unto us by Moſes after we came from ſearching the land, and had faithfully related what we had ſeen and what we thought of it, ſeeing none but thou remaineſt alive to take notice of it.

the thing that the Lord ſaid] What is meant by this, is much controverted. Some think that God for their faithfull dealing in this cauſe did not only promiſe that they two ſhould ſurvive all the reſt, and enter into Canaan, but that alſo he would generally advance them to honour and dignity above others: The which Caleb here pleadeth, becauſe by this ſpeciall favour ſhewed from God he was in a good capacity to have the grant of any lawfull or reaſonable ſuit. Others think that he meaneth hereby a promiſe from God of ſome ſpeciall parts of the land given unto them; as to be Hebron and the Country adjacient, to himſelf; and Timnah-*S*erah, to Joſhua; ſeeing it is ſaid ch.19.50. that Timnah-Serah was given unto Joſhua according to the word of the Lord.

unto Moſes the man of God] Theſe words adde much weight to his ſuit, ſeeing the Lord Jehovah, who performeth all his promiſes, had ſpoken it, and Moſes faithfull ſervant had related it, as it were from his own mouth, See Deut.33.1. Pſal.90.1.

V.7. Fourty years old was I] Caleb with others were ſent to ſpie the land two years after their coming out of Ægypt, when he was fourty years old; and after that they wandred in the wilderneſſe thirty eight years, Deut.2.14. and now he ſaith v.10. that he was eighty five years old: whereby it appeareth that this was the ſeventh year after their coming into Canaan, and that they were above ſix years in conquering it. See on ch.11.18.

as it was in my heart] In my relation I concealed no part of the truth, but ſpeak all that of which I was perſwaded in my heart; Namely, that God would give unto us the land of Canaan, notwithſtanding the great ſtrength of the inhabitants and of their Cities: as now is come to paſſe.

V.8. made the heart of the people melt] i.e. Made them fearfull and faint-hearted, by telling them of the invincible ſtrenght of the enemies.

but I wholly followed the Lord my God] i.e. Perſwaded the people without fear to enter into the land, reſting upon Gods promiſes and powerfull aſſiſtance. And the approbation God himſelf giveth unto Caleb, Numb.14.24. See ver.9.14.

V.9. And Moſes ſware on that day] To wit, by Gods motion and direction. Yea, God himſelf confirmed unto him by his own oath, that both he and his ſeed after him ſhould inherit the promiſed land. Num.14.21,24.

The land whereon thy feet have trodden] This cannot be underſtood of the whole land of Canaan in generall, (for that was not given to Caleb and his poſterity) but of ſome ſpeciall part of it, and namely (as is moſt probable) of that in which Hebron was ſituate. For ſeeing the faint-hearted ſpies, that accompanied him, took occaſion from the Giants which there inhabited, to diſcourage the people from attempting the Conqueſt of the Country, and contrariwiſe Caleb did encourage them to ſet upon it, aſſuring them that they ſhould eaſily by Gods aſſiſtance vanquiſh thoſe Giants, and overcome all other difficulties; therefore it is moſt likely that theſe places ſhould be given unto him and his poſterity for an inheritance, which in a ſort he had firſt conquered by faith and into which through fear and want of faith others durſt not enter nor approach

V. 10. the Lord hath kept me alive] Here he expreſſeth another argument to further the obtaining of his ſuit, taken of Gods miraculous preſervation of him, not only in life, when as all the reſt of the people of his age, ſaving himſelf and Joſhua, periſhed in the wilderneſſe, but alſo in that ſtrength and vigour of body and mind, that he was now, at the age of eighty five years, when uſually nature declineth and groweth weak and feeble, as able to undertake and perform any difficult ſervice, as he was at the age of fourty, when Moſes ſent him to eſpy the land.

wandred in the wilderneſſe] To wit, by Gods ſpeciall command, as a puniſhment inflicted on them for their rebellion and unbelief, Num. 14 25. Heb.3.19.

V.11. For war] Not only for counſell and the employments of a ſedentary life, which uſually beſt ſuit with ſuch an age, but for the moſt hard ſervices and difficult exploits of war.

both to go out and to come in] A proverbiall ſpeech often uſed: So Deut.31.2. Num.27.17. It ſignifieth an ability to perform our duty in any courſe of life; and here particularly, that Caleb was yet an able Commander, and fit to conquer the Country which he deſired, and to ſubdue the Giants.

V.12. Give me this mountain] i.e. This mountainous country, wherein Hebron and Debir are ſituate.

whereof the Lord ſpake in that day] Whereby it more plainly appeareth that he had a particular promiſe from God that he would give this place to him and his ſeed for an inheritance; wherein, as before, he appealeth to Joſhua's knowledge: The which promiſe was made to Caleb on that day, becauſe hearing how the Anakims were there, and that the Cities were great and fenced, he was notwithſtanding confident in the aſſurance of faith, that he ſhould overcome all theſe difficulties, and conquer that country.

if ſo be the Lord will be with me] This he ſpeaketh not as one doubting his ſucceſſe in this interpriſe, but as one that denying himſelf and his own ſtrength did reſt wholly by faith upon Gods promiſes and powerfull aſſiſtance, in which only he could prevail againſt all difficulties. See on 1 Sam.14.6.

as the Lord ſaid] i.e. As he formerly promiſed. Hereby again it appeareth that he had from God a ſpeciall promiſe of inheriting this mountainous place, although we do not find it related in expreſſe words.

V.13. And Joſhua bleſſed him] Having granted his requeſt, he prayed God to bleſſe him with good ſucceſſe and comfortable fruition of his inheritance.

Hebron for an inheritance] i. e. The Country and territorie in which Hebron and Debir were ſituate, with the towns and villages belonging to them. For Hebron it ſelf was a free city, and was given by lot to the Levites, ch.21.11,12. 1 Chron.6.55,56. Neither was it given unto Caleb on that condition propounded by him, of driving out the inhabitants by his proper forces: For Joſhua himſelf and the whole army aſſiſted him for the ſubduing of it, and afterwards gave it unto him, ch.10.37. Whereby it appeareth that this ſuit of Caleb for the obtaining of Hebron was propounded unto Joſhua before the ſlaughter of the five Kings, and the conquering of their countries, though we have the generall ſtory of it, ch.10. Unleſſe we would rather think, that Hebron and the Country adjoyning was firſt given to Caleb (even as other Provinces to the ſeverall Tribes) by lot, but afterwards this, with other Cities, were by lot caſt upon the Levites; unto which diſpoſition of God Caleb gave his willing aſſent (as alſo the ſeverall Tribes did in their portions, and the rather, becauſe both he and his poſterity, with all the reſt in that country, ſhould, by having Gods Levites living among them, be the better inſtructed in the knowledge of God and in all the wayes of true religion.

V.15. Kiriath-Arba] Or the City of Arba; So called either becauſe he built it, or reigned in it, being a great man both in authority, ſtrength, and ſtature, yea ſo reputed amongſt the Giant-like Anakims themſelves.

and the land had reſt from war] Not at the time when Caleb made this requeſt; for then both Hebron, for which he here ſueth, and a great part of the land beſides, was not yet conquered; but after that Joſhua with his army had ſubdued it, and given it to Caleb for a poſſeſſion. Theſe words are uſed, ch 11.23. After the finiſhing of that war before related, ch.10. & 11. and becauſe of the digreſſion made from that ſtory in the three next chapters, are here repeated as an introduction to the following relation of the diviſion of the land, for which the people had gotten a good opportunity by their preſent peace and ceſſation from arms.

CHAP. XV.

Verſ.1. THis then was the lot] Chap. 14. 1, 5. he began to ſpeak of the diviſion of Canaan among the nine tribes and half, but made a digreſſion from it, v. 6. upon occaſion of Calebs ſuit to have his inheritance, which God himſelf had in the time of Moſes given unto him, conferred accordingly upon him, before they came to make the diviſion among the tribes by lot: And now after that was done according to his deſire, he returneth to ſpeak of the diviſion by Lot. In which they proceeded (according as the Hebrew writers have it) after this manner. Firſt, in the performance of this action, they in a ſolemn manner, being (as may be probably thought, in reſpect of the weightineſs of ſo great a work) duly prepared by faſting and prayer, Judg. 20. 26. Acts 1. 24. preſented themſelves before the door of the Tabernacle, in which was the Ark the viſible ſign of Gods preſence, that performing this action as it were in Gods ſight, their hearts might be affected with more reverence in the doing of it. And there, Eleazar the high Prieſt, Joſhua the chief Governour and Generall, together with the Elders and Magiſtrates of every Tribe, aſſiſting in the action, they had two Urns or pots for this ſervice; and in one of them were put the names of the ſeverall Tribes, and in the other the names of the ſeverall Territories, Provinces, or portions of the land, as they had firſt divided them according to that notice they had taken of them by ſuch ſurveyers as they had imployed in that ſervice. And then theſe ſeverall lots, being jumbled and ſhaken together, were drawn out of the ſeverall urns by the high Prieſt, as ſome think, becauſe he was moſt impartiall, and might grace the action with greater authority; firſt, the name of the Tribe out of the one, and then the name of the portion and inheritance, which ſhould be given unto it, out of the other. Some others think there was only one pot or urn, in which were put the lots of the ſeverall Provinces; and then that every tribe in order, according to their dignity, were to draw them out ſeverally one after another; as, firſt the tribe of Judah, then the tribes of Joſeph, and ſo in the reſt. But the former opinion is more probable, ſeeing that courſe of drawing ſeemeth leaſt partiall, as the nature of a lot requireth; moſt peaceable, as not liable to ſtrife about queſtions of precedencie, and better ſuiteth with divers phraſes uſed in this lottery; as, that the lot came forth to Simeon, came up to Zebulun, came out to Iſſachar, Chap.19. 1, 10, 17. which ſeem to imply that when the lot of their name was firſt drawn, then the lot of their portion alſo came forth, that is, was drawn out for them.

of the tribe of the children of Judah] The lot of this Tribe came out firſt by a ſpeciall providence of God, and fell out in the chiefeſt and richeſt part of all the land, that hereby the people might take notice of Gods purpoſe to prefer Judah before all other Tribes. And here we have Firſt deſcribed the utmoſt borders of Judah's inheritance on the South-ſide, beginning at that angel next unto the Eaſt towards the wilderneſſe of Edom.

The wilderneſſe of Zin] Not that into which the Iſraelites firſt entred when they came out of Ægypt, but another on the South-ſide of the Dead Sea. See on Num.20.1.

V. 2. of the ſalt-Sea] i.e. The lake of Sodom called the ſalt Sea, becauſe it is ſulphureous and bituminous. Chap.12.3.

V. 3. Maaleh acrabbim] Or, the going up to Acrabbim; So called from the Scorpions and Snakes which abounded in that hill, Judg. 1. 36.

Kadeſh-barnea] This was the utmoſt borders of the land of promiſe, Deut.1. 20. and was the three and thirtieth ſtation of the Iſraelites, Num.33.36. See on Gen.14.7. & Num.20.1,6.

V. 4. unto the river of Ægypt] i.e. An arm of Nilus running into the Mediterranean. By this deſcription of the South borders of Judah it appeareth, that they begun at the utmoſt parts of the ſalt Sea bending towards the South, and thence winding towards the weſt, firſt to the hill Acrabbim, then to Kadeſh-barnea, thence to Heſron and Adar and laſtly to Karkaa.

V. 5. And the eaſt border was the ſalt Sea, even unto the end of Jordan] i.e. Their Eaſt-border was drawn from that utmoſt end where the South-border began, unto that part where Jordan falleth into the lake Aſphaltites.

V. 6. Beth-hogla] Some conceive this was the place called Bethulia, Judith 4. 6.

Beth-arabah] i.e. An houſe of ſolitude; taking its name from the ſolitarineſſe of the place where it was ſituate. See ch.18.18.

the ſtone of Bohan] Set up (as it ſeemeth) for a monument or remembrance of ſome thing that concerned him, or ſome notable act done by him there. But the Tribe of Reuben had no land on that ſide Jordan.

V. 7. went up toward Debir] There were two Cities of this name; one called formerly Kiriath-Sepher, which Othniel took, neer Hebron; but this other was neer Jabbok, and not far from Jericho.

Gilgal] Called alſo Geliloth, ch.18. 17. over-againſt Adummim, between Jericho and Jeruſalem: a place much haunted with theeves and robbers; to which Chriſt in the parable alludeth, Luk. 10.30.

at Enrogel] Or, the fullers well, as appeareth, 1 King.19.49. See 2 Sam.17.17. 1 King.1 9.

V. 8. the valley of the ſonne of Hinnom] A place neer Jeruſalem, of old, very ſweet and pleaſant, being watred with the brook Cedron; but afterwards horribly abuſed and prophaned with abominable idolatry, the people there offering with more then barbarous torments their children to Molech. In deteſtation whereof is was defiled by the command of good Joſiah, and made the common layſtall for Carions and all manner of filth, and a common place of buriall for innumerable numbers of thoſe who in Gods wrathfull diſpleaſure periſhed in their ſins, and thence called the valley of ſlaughter. See 2 King. 23. 10. 2 Chron. 28. 3. Jer. 7. 31. 32, 33. & 19. 6. In the new Teſtament by a little change of the letters it is called Gehenna, and taken for the place of hell-torments, Matth. 18. 9. & 23. 33. *S*ee on 2 Kings 16. 3.

unto the South-ſide of the Jebuſite] Jeruſalem was of old by the Canaanites called Jebus, Judg. 19. 11. after the name of one of Canaans ſons, Gen. 10. 16. and it was the Metropolis of the Iebuſites, which they long poſſeſſed, even ſome part of it in Davids time. Why it was afterwards called Jeruſalem, ſee on ch. 10. 3. This city it ſelf belonged to Benjamin; but the Fort of *S*ion, which ſtood in ſome diſtance from it, to Judah. *S*ee on 1 Chron. 11. 4.

V. 9. Baalah] Called alſo Kirjath-Baal, ch. 18. 14.

V. 10. unto mount Seir] Not that in Edom; but another in the land of Judah, ſo called becauſe overgrown with rough woods.

Beth-ſhemeſh] Of this name there were four Cities: One, in Iſſacher, Chap. 19. 22. another, in Naphtali, chap. 19. 38. Judg. 1. 33. a third, in Dan, 1 King. 4. 9. called Ir-ſhemeſh, Chap. 19. 41. and this in Judah, 2 Kings 14. 11. which was given to the Levites, Chap. 21. 16. 1 Sam. 6. 12. It ſignifieth the houſe of the Sun.

V. 12. The weſt border was to the great Sea] i. e. The Mediterranean. This wholly determined the borders of Judah on the weſt-ſide, and therefore there needed no further diſcription of them.

V. 13. And unto Caleb] See ch. 14. 13.

V. 14. And Caleb drove thence] See on ch. 10. 36. & 11. 21.

V. 15. And he went up thence] This expedition is attributed to Caleb, becauſe, though Joſhua and the army performed it together with him, Chap. 10. 38, 39. yet is was done at his ſuit, and chiefly for his ſake, to whom Hebron was given by Gods ſpeciall command to Joſhua, verſ. 13. and in a great part atchieved by himſelf, with Othniel and others his allies and friends of his tribe aſſiſting him. *S*ome think (though not ſo probably) that after it was conquered by Joſhua, it was repoſſeſſed by the Canaanites, and again recovered by Caleb after Joſhua's death. Others conceive, that Caleb himſelf properly being aſſiſted by his friends and allaies conquered theſe Cities, but by that anticipation, the conqueſt is attributed to Ioſhua, becauſe Caleb attempted it by Joſhua's conceſſion and authority. See on ch. 10. 36.

Kirjath Sepher] It ſignifieth a City of books, or literature, becauſe it was (as is ſuppoſed) a place in which was kept a famous library, wherein many notable monuments and ancient records of things done ever ſince the floud were reſerved: Unto which the name Debir ſeemeth to relate, as ſignifiing a ſecret place, or a place of ſecrets, and ſacred. *S*ee v. 49.

V. 16. And Caleb ſaid, He that ſmiteth] It was not diffidence in reſpect of the difficulty of the work which made him by this promiſe call in others to atchieve it, he himſelf being a moſt valiant man, and one who by Gods aſſiſtance had obtained great victories; but like a noble and magnanimous Commander, having himſelfe by his exploits gotten fame and honour enough, he giveth this occaſion to ſome of his fellow-Souldiers to partake with him in the glory of his victories, thereby to animate them to noble actions, and to ſhun the envie of ſelf-ſeeking and vain-glory: But as it was not diffidence to atchieve this action, much leſſe cowardiſe or ſloth, which kept him from attempting it, ſo we may well think that it was by ſpeciall inſtinct and direction of Gods Spirit that he gave unto Othniel this occaſion of ennobling his virtue and valour in the ſight of the people, whom God intended afterwards, when Caleb was dead, to make their Iudge and Deliverer.

to him will I give Achſah my daughter] In the Scripture parents are ſaid to give their daughters in marriage, to ſhew their authority in diſpoſing of their children; and the Apoſtle implyeth as much, 1 Cor. 7. 37, 38. But this authority was not abſolute, to give them to whom they pleaſed, but it muſt be with their daughters liking and conſent; which in marriage is moſt eſſentiall and neceſſary Gen. 24. 51, 57. and ſo it was here to be underſtood. See on Gen. 21. 21.

V. 17. the brother of Caleb] Some here by brother underſtand kinsman, becauſe uſually kinſmen in Scripture are called brothers. But it cannot be ſo taken here, as may appear, if we compare this place with Iudg. 1. 13. where Othniel is ſaid to be Calebs younger brother; which phraſe or title is proper to a brother, not to a kinſman. The reaſon why they thus interpret it, is, becauſe they hold that marriages between brothers and ſiſters children are unlawfull, ſeeing degrees further remote are forbidden: To which I anſwer, That the law of God, which is the onely rule by which we may Judge what is lawfull or unlawfull, doth no where forbid ſuch marriages; but contrariwiſe, we read that Zelophehads daughters were by Gods own command married to their fathers brothers ſons Num. 36. 10, 11. And whereas it is objected, that degrees further off are forbidden, it is not ſo in the tranſverſe-line of kindred, but only in the right or direct line, of Fathers, Mothers, and the oblique line, of Uncles, Aunts, and ſo upward and downward, even from Adam to thoſe that now live; becauſe all theſe are in the nature of parents and children: but in the croſſe line it is not ſo. See on ch. 14. 6. Num. 32. 12.

V. 18. when ſhe came to him] i. e. To Othniel. Being to remove from her fathers to her husbands houſe, ſhe took this opportunity of their parting, when parents hearts are more tender then they uſually are when their children live with them, to perſwade her husband to move her father in this ſuit, as being out of modeſty and awfull reverence to her father loth to do it her ſelf, and the rather becauſe he had already, out of his fatherly love to her, and his high eſteem of his new ſon in law, given unto them a large portion. Or (which I conceive more agreeable to that which followeth) ſhe moved her husband to give her leave that ſhe might make this ſuit to her father: Which being obtained, ſhe returned to her father, and out of her reverence and reſpect to him, and coming alſo as an humble ſuiter, ſhe lighted off her Aſſe before ſhe ſpake unto him. So Gen, 24. 64. 1 Sam. 25. 23. Which Caleb obſerving, and not knowing the cauſe of her ſo ſudden return, he asked her what ſhe would have, or what ſhe meant thereby.

V. 19. Give me a bleſſing] i. e. A gift or boon, with thy fatherly bleſſing upon it, Gen. 33. 11.

thou haſt given me a ſouth-land] *S*he intimateth, that though ſhe had received a large portion, yet it was not convenient, unleſſe he would be pleaſed to make unto it a neceſſary addition; ſeeing that which he had given her was a South-land, which lying upon the noon-*S*un in thoſe hot Countries muſt needs be dry and barren, unleſſe alſo there were ſprings to water it.

Give me alſo ſprings of water] i. e. Adde unto my former portion, which thou haſt already given me, ſome other land wherein there are ſprings of water, that ſo by watring it may be made fruitfull.

he gave her the upper ſprings] i. e. Land, which though it did lye high, had ſprings of water in it, which might eaſily be derived to dry and barren grounds that did lye lower then they.

and the nether ſprings] Such as made the grounds in which they were, fruitfull, being levell with them. All this land Caleb gave unto his daughter, not for a perpetuall inheritance (for having divers ſons, 1 Chron. 4. 15. the law of God did bind him to let it deſcend unto them, and would not permit him to alienate it from them by giving it to his daughter, Num. 27. 8, 9.) but as a dowry and annuity onely for term of her life, or at moſt till the year of Jubilee, when it was to return to the male heirs, if there were any.

V. 20. this is the inheritance] He returneth to the deſcription of Judah's inheritance by enumeration of many Cities belonging to it, from which he had made a digreſſion upon occaſion of Calebs ſtory, v. 13.

V. 21. Kabzeel] *S*ee 2 Sam. 23. 20.

V. 31. Ziklag] See 1 *S*am. 27. 1.

V. 32. all the cities are twenty and nine] There are reckoned up thirty and eight Cities; how then could there be but twenty and nine? *S*ome anſwer, that nine of theſe belonged to the Tribe of *S*imeon, who had their inheritance out of the portion of Judah, chap. 19. 1. And becauſe their inheritances were not yet divided, the cities belonging to *S*imeon are numbred among the Cities of Judah. Others think that twenty nine onely were walled Cities, and the other nine no Cities, but country-towns of ſome ſpeciall note adjoyning to them.

V. 36. Fourteen cities with their villages] Here alſo are reckoned fifteen Cities: and therefore either one of them was no City, but ſome great noted town; or, as others conceive, Gederah and Gederothaim are but ſeverall names of one and the ſame City; and then they all make but fourteen: And they read it thus, Gederah or Gederothaim, as it is alſo in the margin of our new tranſlation.

V. 41. Beth-dagon] Of this name there were two Cities; one in the Tribe of Aſher, ch. 19. 27. and this other in the Tribe of Judah.

V. 47. the great ſea and border thereof] i. e The ſhore or ſea-coaſt, with all Cities and villages belonging unto it.

V. 55. Maon] Situate in the Southern part of Canaan, tending towards the Eaſt, neer the utmoſt coaſt of the Dead ſea: from which the wilderneſſe adjoyning had its name, in which David hid himſelf from *S*aul, 1 Sam. 23. 25.

Ziph] This City alſo gave its name to the mountain adjoyning, which was neer the hill Hachilah, where David hid himſelf, 1 Sam. 26. 1.

V. 61. In the wilderneſſe] After the enumeration of Cities ſituate in the more fruitfull and uſefull places of the country, he now mentioneth thoſe which were ſeated in the waſts and deſerts, which were ſo barren that they were not for tillage, but onely uſefull for feeding of cattell.

V. 62. and the city of ſalt] *S*o called from the abundance of ſalt-pits in that place.

V. 63. As for the Jebuſites, the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, the children of Judah could not drive them out] In many places it is ſaid that Iebus did belong to the Benjamites as their inheritance; and the ſame that is here ſaid of Judah is ſpoken of them, namely, that the children of Benjamin did not drive out the Jebuſites, but ſuffered them to dwell among them, Iudg. 1. 21. whence this queſtion ariſeth, To which Tribe Jebus belonged, ſeeing by this place and divers others it ſeemeth it did belong to Judah. To which it is anſwered, That part of it belonged to the one Tribe, and part to the other, and that it was promiſcuouſly inhabited by them both, as ſtanding in both their borders. The City it ſelf for the moſt part was in the portion of Benjamin; and the tower of Sion, ſomewhat remote from it, with ſome of the South-part adjacent, belonged to Judah: & therefore it is imputed as a great fault that either for ſloth, or cowardiſe, or diffidence and diſtruſt in Gods power and promiſes, in reſpect of the ſtrength of the Jebuſites fortifications, the two Tribes did not joyn together to drive them out, but ſuffered them ſtill to live amongſt them. For had they done their indeavour, and not been wanting to themſelves in neglecting Gods abſolute commands, they might have had aſſurance of good ſucceſſe in their enterpriſe, notwithſtanding the great ſtrength of all their enemies: But failing in their duty, God would not caſt them out before them, but ſuffered them to remain, to be ſcourges in their ſides, and pricks in their eies, Judg. 2.20,21. *S*ee on Judg.1.8.

unto this day] i. e. In which this Hiſtory was written. For though part of Jeruſalem was taken by Judah, Judg. 1. 8 yet it was not wholloy conquered till Davids time, 2 Sam. 5. 6. This is an evidence (by the way) that this ſtory was not written by Ezra, as ſome have conceived, ſeeing he lived many years after David. *S*ee on chap. 17.10.

CHAP. XVI.

Verſ.1. A*Nd the lot of the children of Joſeph*] i e. Of Ephraim and the half Tribe of Manaſſeh.

Fell] The firſt lot fell to Judah, of whom the chief Ruler, yea and the Meſſiah, was to come; the next to Joſeph, to whom the birth-right and the double portion belonged: 1 Chron. 5. 2.

unto the waters of Jericho on the eaſt] Firſt the borders of Joſephs inheritance are deſcribed from Eaſt to Weſt. And here by the waters of Jericho are meant thoſe waters that flowed from the fountain which Eliſha cured by caſting ſalt into it. It is ſituate on the North-eaſt-ſide of Jericho, at the bottome of an hill which extendeth to Beth-el, and watreth all thoſe fields by trenches and ſluces made into them, 2 Kings 2.19.

V. 2. Beth-el] Where Jacob in his journey ſaw that divine diviſion, Gen. 28. 19. It is twelve miles from Jeruſalem.

to Luz] Not that ſpoken of Gen. 28. 19. but that mentioned, Judg.1.26.

Archi] Hence Huſhai came, 2 Sam.15.32.

Ataroth] Euſebius affirmeth there were two Cities of this name, one neer Ramah, the other four miles from Samaria. See on 1 Chron 2.54.

V. 3. Japhleti] *S*ee on 2 Sam.8.18.

V. 4. Manaſſeh] To wit, that half which had not its inheritance beyond Jordan.

took their inheritance] i. e. Either of them reſpectively, as their ſeverall inheritances fell unto them by their ſeverall lots. Or, as others think, having but one lot common to them both, they afterward divided their inheritances one with another, by a ſpeciall and private lot among themſelves.

V. 5. And the border] i. e. The Eaſtern bounds of Ephraim reached from Ataroth in the Southern border to Beth-horon on the North-ſide.

V. 7. and came to Jericho] i. e. To ſome of the territories thereof. For the Citie Iericho it ſelf, and ſome parts adjoyning, fell to Benjamins lot, chap. 18.21.

V. 9. And the ſeperate cities] i. e. Which did lie with in the bounds of Manaſſeh in the firſt diviſion by lot, but were afterwards added to Ephraim, becauſe their portion here deſcribed was in reſpect of their numerous multitude too ſtreight for them, as they complain. chap. 17. 14. See on ch.17.9.

V. 10. And they drave not out the Canaanites] i. e. They did not quite expell them, as God had commanded, but onely made them become tributaries unto them, Judg. 1. 29. Wherein as they grievouſly ſinned againſt God either out of cowardiſe or ſloth, ſo alſo they diſcovered their baſe covetouſneſſe, in that for gain they were content to permit theſe curſed Canaanites to harbour and live amongſt them, directly againſt Gods expreſſe command, Exod. 23. 31, 32, 33. Deut. 7. 2. It might indeed ſeem a work of great difficulty utterly to expell them, becauſe dwelling upon the ſea-coaſts, they had entercourſe and trading with all the neighbour nations, and in that reſpect might draw them in to their aſſiſtance, whence it was that ſome parts of that country remained unconquered even unto Solomons time: Yet, had they attempted it, they ſhould certainly have prevailed, having Gods command for the undertaking of it, and his gracious promiſes of aſſiſtance, unto whoſe Omnipotency nothing is unpoſſible or ſo much as difficult. *S*ee on ch.17.12.

unto this day] i. e, When our Author wrote this *S*tory, yea, to the daies of Solomon, when the King of Ægypt ſubdued Gezer, ſlew the Canaanites that dwelt in it, and gave it for a preſent to his daughter, *S*olomons wife, 1 King.9.16. Where we have another evidence that Ezra was not the Author of this Story, as ſome conceive, being deluded by that counterfeit Eſdras in the Apocryphall hiſtorie, 2 Eſdras 14.22. ſeeing theſe Canaanites were wholly rooted out in *S*olomons dayes, who lived many years before Ezras time. *S*ee on ch.15.63.

CHAP. XVII.

T*He firſt-born of Joſeph*] Gen 41. 51. & 46. 20. though by Gods decree and Iacobs bleſſing Ephraim was preferred before him, Gen. 48.14,19.

for Machir] Who was the only ſon of Manaſſeh, Gen. 50. 23. Whence it is, that the whole tribe beareth the name of Machir, Judg. 5.14.

the firſt-born of Manaſſeh] In the Scripture an only ſon is called ſometimes the firſt born, though no other is born after him, i. e. not relatively, becauſe he firſt openeth the womb. *S*o our *S*aviour is called the Virgin Maries firſt-born, though ſhe had no other beſides him, Mat.1.25. *S*ee Num. 26. 29.

becauſe he was a man of war] i. e. Therefore he had Gilead and Baſhan allotted unto him; (that is, half of thoſe Countries: for the other half belonged to Reuben. See chap. 13. 25. & Deut. 3. 12,13.) and ſo a double portion was due to him, becauſe he had not only right unto it as being the firſt-born, Deut. 21. 17. but alſo becauſe he had conquered it by his ſword, Num. 32. 39,40. Being a warlike people, they were fitter to be ſeated on the frontiers, to ſtop the incurſion of forrein nations. Therefore it was, as ſome probably conceive, that the numerous and valiant Tribe of Judah was placed on the South of Canaan, the better to guard the whole Kingdome on that ſide from invaſion, by their families] i. e. The heads of families deſcending from them, and bearing their names.

V. 2. the reſt of the children] To wit, thoſe who had no portion on the other ſide Jordan.

V. 3. But Zelophehad] This ſtory is more fully related Numb. 26 33. & 27. 1. & 36. 2, 3.

V. 5. And there fell ten portions to Manaſſeh] i. e. Six portions falling to the ſix ſons mentioned v. 2. and Hephers part being by Gods command divided amongſt his five grand-children, the daughters of Zelophehad, there were in all ten portions.

V. 6. the daughters of Manaſſeh] i. e. Which lineally deſcended from him, but were the daughters of Zelophehad.

V. 9. among the cities of Manaſſeh] The Cities and lands belonged to Ephraim aud Manaſſeh were mingled one with another. *S*ee Chap: 16. 9. And ſo it is ſaid ver. 8. that Manaſſeh had the land of Tappuah, together with the hamlets and villages contained therein, but the City Tappuah it ſelf, though it were on the border of Manaſſeh belonged ro Ephraim.

V. 10. the ſea] i. e. The Syrian, or Mediterranian.

V. 11. Beth-ſhean] Called Beth-ſan, 1 Sam. 31. 10. 1 Macc. 5. 52. & Scythopolis, 2 Macc. 12. 29.

Ibleam] *S*ee on 1 Chron. 6. 70.

V. 12. the children of Manaſſeh could not drive] This is to be referred to the times after Joſhua's death, as we may ſee, Judg. 1. 27,28. where the ſame thing is related. And, as I have formerly ſhewed, the cauſe why they could not drive them out, was either their cowardiſe that they durſt not, or their ſloth becauſe they would not attempt it, or elſe their rebellion and ſinfull diſobedience againſt God, and their want of faith in his promiſes and power, which moved him in his juſt diſpleaſure to profeſſe that he would not drive them out before them, Judg. 2. 3, 21. *S*ee ch.16.10.

but the Canaanites would dwell] i. e. Reſolving to dwell ſtill in their own Cities, they ſtood upon their ſtrength and defence, and kept the Iſraelites from entring.

V. 13. put the Canaanites to tribute] *S*ee on chap.16.10.

V. 14. And the children of Joſeph] i. e. Both the tribes, Ephraim and Manaſſeh, as appeareth v. 15. 16, 17.

ſpake unto Joſhua] Namely, after their inheritance was fallen unto them, and they were now come to ſee and take poſſeſſion of it, then perceiving that the bounds thereof were to ſtreight for their numerous tribes, they make this complaint unto him.

given me but one lot] They had two lots or portions: But their meaning is, that they were ſo ſmall that they were ſcarce ſufficient for one of their tribes to inherit, in regard of their multitude: Not that Joſhua and the reſt of the dividers had given unto them too little curcuit of land to inhabit, but partly becauſe the hills were unfit for habitation, in regard they were overgrown with woods, and partly becauſe the champion and Plains were inhabited by the Canaanites, who were a warlike people, and had the advantage of iron-chariots.

ſeeing I am a great people] In their laſt numbring, theſe two tribes were eighty five thouſand and two hundred ſtrong, Num. 26. 34, 37.

V. 15. if thou be a great people] Joſhua acknowledgeth what they ſaid, that they were a great people, but retorteth the ſtrength of their argument againſt themſelves, namely, that if they were ſo numerous, then they had ſtrength ſufficient to enlarge their borders by driving out their enemies; both out of thoſe mountanous places and out of the champions and Plains allotted unto them. And though the mountains abounded with wood, and therefore were not arrable or habitable, yet having men enough to ſet upon the work, they might eaſily cut down thoſe woods, and make thoſe places fit for their uſe.

in the land of the Perizzites] A ſavage and wild people, living far from cities, in woods and mountains, and much given to ſpoyl and prey.

and of the Giants] Who dwelt in caves and dens, and like barbarous people lived upon rapine. Theſe Ioſhua perſwadeth the children of Ioſeph to conquer and expell, that they might inhabit their country.

mount Ephraim] So called by anticipation.

V. 16. The hill is not enough for us] q. d. Suppoſe we ſhould drive them out, yet the hill, i. e. theſe mountanous places, being added to all we now poſſeſſe, will not be large enough for our habitation.

and all the Canaanites that dwel in the land of the valley have chariots of iron] i. e. Have hooks like ſithes on either ſide of the chariot faſtned in their axle-trees, which ruſhing ſuddenly into an army will cut and (as it were) mow down all that ſtand in their way, and two other hooks bending towards the earth, which will tear thoſe that fall down under them; and therefore having this advantage, they can hardly be vanquiſhed and expelled, Iudg. 1. 19. & 4. 3. Others by hill underſtand mount Ephraim, now in their poſſeſſion; and that the valleys of the Canaanites were in the way to the mountanous woods, unto which they could have no acceſſe, to cut them down, and conquer the Perizzites, but by paſſing through the valleys where theſe Canaanites dwelt that had the iron chariots.

V. 17. Thou ſhalt not have one lot onely] i. e. Seeing you are a people that excell in number and ſtrength, ye have no need to complain of having but one lot, and a place too narrow for your habitation; for if it be not your own default through ſloth, cowardiſe, or diffidence in Gods power and promiſes, you may enlarge it when you pleaſe: And therefore as there is great reaſon that you, being a great and numerous people, ſhould have a portion large enough to inhabit, ſo upon the ſame ground there is as great reaſon that you imploy double ſtrength to get a double portion.

V. 18. But the mountain ſhall be thine] i. e. All thoſe mountainous places, when thou haſt cut down the wood growing upon them, ſhall be fit for thy habitation, being made arable and fruitfull: and the out-goings of it, that is, all the champion Country and Valleys adjacent, ſhall be thine alſo, ſeeing, if thou doſt attempt it, God will ſurely inable thee to drive out the Canaanites, notwithſtanding all their ſtrength, and the advantage which they have by their iron Chariots, he being almighty and al-ſufficient to make good all his promiſes, if by faith and affiance thou relyeſt upon him.

CHAP. XVIII.

Verſ. 1. Aſſembled together at Shiloh] i. e. Withdrew themſelves from their ſtationary camp at Gilgal and aſſembled at Shiloh, a City in the Tribe of Ephraim nine miles from Ieruſalem. Unto this place they removed the Tabernacle, no doubt by Gods ſpeciall appointment, Deut. 12. 5. partly out of reſpect unto Ioſhua their Generall, who was an Ephraimite; (even as afterwards it was removed to Nob (which was therefore, as is very probable, called the City of the Prieſts, becauſe they reſided there to officiate in the Tabernacle, 1 Sam. 22. 19.) in the tribe of Benjamim, in honour of Saul their King who was a Benjamite; and after that to Ieruſalem, out of the ſame reſpect to David, who was of the Tribe of Iudah) and partly that the people might with more conveniency frequent the place of Gods publick worſhip, Shiloh being more neer the heart of the Country then Gilgal, which was ſeated in the utmoſt border. And in this place it continued three hundred and ſixty years, till for the ſins of Iſrael and the Inhabitants there, it was removed. Jer. 7. 12. Pſal. 78. 67.

And the land was ſubdued before them] i. e, All that lay neer that place: So that they had no impediment to hinder them from proceeding in the diviſion of that part of Canaan which remained undivided.

V. 2. And there remained among the children of Iſrael ſeven Tribes] In the diviſion begun at Gilgal onely Judah, Ephraim, and half the Tribe of Manaſſeh had by lot received their inheritances; and ſeven Tribes remained yet unprovided for, ſeeing the diviſion at that time proceeded no further, yea was for a long time after intermitted and laid aſide, as Joſhua plainly implyeth, ver. 3. But upon what reaſon this delay was made is not evident; only the cauſes are gueſſed at by probable conjectures: As that it was either becauſe the people were diſcontented with the firſt beginnings of the diviſion, as thinking it partiall, ſeeing a greater and more fruitfull portion was allotted to Judah then was likely to fall unto any of the reſt. Or elſe becauſe they deferred the diviſion till they might have a more exact ſurvey and diſcoverie then they could yet have, by reaſon of a great part of the land undivided was ſtill in the poſſeſſion of the enemies, that were not yet caſt out: Or which I conceive moſt probable, becauſe they were tyred with a long war, and abounded with ſpoyl, and therefore, being weary and wanting nothing, they gave themſelves to reſt and eaſe; and wollowing in pleaſure and delight, they cared not to have their inheritance allotted unto them, leſt thereby they ſhould be put upon the pains and perill of a new war, for the getting of it out of the hands of their enemies. And this was that ſlackneſſe and ſluggiſhneſſe for which Joſhua reproveth them in the next words.

V. 3. How long are you ſlack] q. d. Why do you through ſloth neglect to enter into your inheritance, ſeeing there is no let on Gods part, but as he hath freely given it, ſo he is powerfull and al-ſufficient to enter you into the poſſeſſion of it; and thoſe alſo whom he hath appointed to divide it unto you by lot, are ready to perform their duty in that behalf? And well might he reprove them for ſlackneſſe, if that be true which expoſitors conceive, that the firſt diviſion begun in Gilgal was put off ſeven years before they undertook to finiſh it at Shiloh: For ſo they were as long in dividing the land as they had been in Conquering it.

V. 4. Give out from among you] He doth not himſelf chooſe, but putteth it upon the people to make their own choice, that he might avoid all ſuſpicion of partiality, and keep them from murmuring againſt their proceedings and reports; the whole buſineſſe being tranſacted by thoſe in whom they repoſed moſt confidence.

three men] Theſe words (as ſome think) have an emphaſis; q. d. ſuch as are of maſculine courage and vigour; it being a great work they were to undertake, and full of danger, ſeeing they were to make their ſurvey not onely in ſuch parts of the country as were already ſubdued, but alſo in thoſe which were ſtill in the poſſeſſion of their enemies.

For each tribe] That the whole buſineſſe might be carried on with all indifferencie, and none might have cauſe to complain of partiall dealing.

and go through the land] i. e. Through all and every part of it, whether already conquered, or not.

and deſcribe it] To wit, what is the largeneſſe of every region and province, and what and how many are the cities, towns and villages in each of them; that ſo having a catalogue or (as it were) a map of the Land, they might the better know how afterwards, Juſtly to divide it among the ſeven tribes, according as their ſeverall inheritances ſhould by lot fall upon them; and might give proportionable ſhares to every tribe, as they were in number few or many.

V. 5. Judah ſhall abide in their coaſt] i. e. In this new and ſecond diviſion Judah and Joſeph ſhall ſtill retain their inheritances, as they did formerly by lot fall unto them, the one on the South, the other on the North; but not in reſpect of the circuit and largeneſſe of their portion. For according to that firſt and rude draught Judahs part was ſo large that Simeons inheritance was taken out of it, chap. 19. 9. And ſo Jacobs prophecie in his bleſſing of this tribe was verified, that the Simeonites ſhould be divided and ſcattered in Iſrael Gen. 49. 7. See on ch. 19 41.

In their coaſts on the North] i. e. Not in relation to the whole land of Canaan, but to the portion of Judah.

V. 6. ye ſhall therefore deſcribe] i. e. Ye ſhall take order that it be deſcribed by theſe ſurveyers which you chooſe, three men out of every tribe.

here before the Lord our God] i. e. The tabernacle and the ark contained in it, the viſible ſignes of Gods preſence. This is added to work in the hearts of the ſurveyers a more religious care in the performance of their duty, and to move them to uſe therein all diligence and faithfulneſſe, without any partiality or reſpect of perſons, ſeeing at their return they ſhould be called to give an account of all they had done in the ſacred preſence of Almighty God.

V. 7. But the Levites See on ch. 13. 14. In this verſe, and ver. 5. a reaſon is given why the remainder of the land ſhould be deſcribed but into ſeven parts, ver. 6. namely, Becauſe Levi was to have no part at all, and Judah and Joſeph, and Reuben and Gad had received their inheritance already.

V. 8. And the men aroſe] i. e. With all ſpeed, diligence and courage they undertook and ſet upon this difficult and dangerous work, God making them ſecure and confident under his protection, and ſo fitting them for the work unto which he called them.

that I may here caſt lots] i. e. That by caſting lots I may diſtribute unto every tribe their inheritance, being aſſiſted by thoſe who by Gods appointment are deſigned to this work.

V. 9. And the men went] i. e. Uſing, no doubt, the moſt prudentiall means they could deviſe to keep themſelves, while they were in their enemies country, from being diſcovered, yet placing their chief ſafety in Gods protection, who had ſtrucken the Canaanites with ſuch fear and amazement by his peoples many and miraculous victories, that they lurked in their cities and ſtrong holds, little heeding what theſe ſurveyers did in the country about them.

and deſcribed it by cities] In their book or map they ſet down the ſeverall regions with their limits; the cities, with their ſituation and bounds; and the towns and villages, with their number and names; leaving the ſpeciall diviſion of them among the ſeven tribes to be determined by lot, by the miniſterie of Joſhua, Eleazar and the reſt, before the tabernacle.

and came again to Joſhua] i. e. The whole number that were ſent out, not one wanting: Which was an evidence of Gods approbation of their action, and of his provident care over them, ſeeing the expedition was not onely dangerous, but alſo long and tedious continuing the ſpace of ſeven moneths, as Joſephus relateth, See on 2 Sam. 24. 7.

V. 10. according to their diviſions] i. e. To each of the ſeven tribes their portion and inheritance.

V. 11. And the lot of the tribe of the children of Benjamin came up]

Out of the urn or veſſel into which it had been put: namely, a double lot; out of one urn the name of Benjamin, and out of the other, the portion of land allotted unto him. And here we may obſerve that Benjamin by a ſpeciall providence had a double preeminence above the other ſix tribes: firſt, in that he had the precedency before them; and ſecondly and eſpecially, in that his portion fell next on the one ſide unto Ioſeph, who was moſt neerly allyed unto him, as deſcending both of them from Rachel the beloved wife, and on the other ſide unto Judah the Royall Tribe: and ſo he was ſeated in the richeſt and fruitfulleſt part of the land. Beſides, he had in his inheritance ſome part of Ieruſalem the chief city, in a part whereof (though not in his portion) was the Temple built, the place of Gods holy habitation; according to Moſes his prophecy, Deut. 33.12, And of Benjamin he ſaid, The beloved of the Lord ſhall dwell in ſafety by him, and the Lord ſhall cover him all the day long. and he ſhall dwell between his ſhoulders

V. 12. And their border on the North-ſide] Here are deſcribed the North-borders of Benjamin from Eaſt to Weſt, which did butt upon the South-borders of Joſeph, and have been before deſcribed, Chap. 16.

V. 13. from thence toward Luz] Here the deſcription bendeth towards the South, leaving Luz on the right hand. Of which ſee chap. 16.2.

which is Beth-el] Neer unto Ai and Beth-aven, chap. 7.2. Another Beth-el was in the tribe of Benjamin, v. 22.

V. 14. Kiriath-jearim] So called by the Iſraelites, to extinguiſh the name of the idol-god Baal. See chap. 15.9. and on Num. 32. 38. This city was from Jeruſalem five or ſix miles.

V. 15. And the South-quarter] Here are deſcribed the South-borders of Benjamin, from Weſt to Eaſt; which are the ſame with the North-borders of Judah, ſaving that Judahs borders are deſcribed in a contrary order, from Eaſt to Weſt, ch. 15.5 —11.

V. 17. went forth] i.e. From En-ſhemeſh.

toward Geliloth] Called alſo Gilgal, ch. 15.7.

ſtone of Bohan] See on ch. 15.6.

V. 18. Arabah] Or, the Plain; called alſo Beth-Arabah, ch. 15.6.

V. 19. North-bay (Or, tongue) of the ſalt Sea] See ch. 15.2.

V. 28. Jebuſi] Or, the City of the Jebuſites. Hence it is plain, that Jebus or Jeruſalem belonged in part to Benjamin; though it is certain that Judah alſo had a part, and did inhabit it. See on ch. 15.63. And the reaſon is, becauſe theſe two Tribes were ſo neerly united both in neighbourhood and alſo in love and friendſhip, that they were linked together as if they had been but one Tribe, and ſo enjoyed one with another a community of habitation and all other priviledges. And thus they continued to the laſt, Benjamin ſtill adhearing to Judah, when all other Tribes ſeparated from them.

CHAP. XIX.

Verſ. 1. W*As within the inheritance of the children of Judah*] Simeon had by Gods own appointment all his inheritance allotted him out of the inheritance of Judah, that Jacobs prophecie might be fulfilled, Gen. 49.7. See on ch. 18.5. Now the immediate reaſon of this is expreſſed, v. 9.

V. 2. and they had in their inheritance] The bounds of Simeons portion are not delineated, as they of the other Tribes are becauſe being in Iudah's lot, they were comprehended within their limits deſcribed ch. 15. only certain Cities and Towns in Simeons inheritance are named: Of which particularly to ſpeak is a work of more difficulty then uſe and profit.

Beer-ſheba and Sheba] Or, or Sheba. For though the names be two, the City was but one. It ſignifieth ſeven; or, a well of ſeven waters, and plenty of waters; or, the well of the oath; So called upon occaſion of the Covenants made and confirmed by oath, Gen. 21. 31, 32. & 26. 33. Now that both theſe names ſignifie but one and the ſame City, appeareth, in that, if they had been two, there would have been fourteen cities in Simeons portion, and not only thirteen, as ver. 6. And beſides, 1 Chron. 4. 28. where this is related, Sheba is not mentioned.

V. 3. Balah] This City is called Bilhah; and Azem Ezem; and Eltolad, Tolad, and Bethul, Bethuel, 1 Chron. 4. 29. 30. And ſuch alterations in names are frequent in Scripture, and other authors, cauſed by length of time and other accidents. See on Chap. 21. 13.

V. 8. to Baalath Beer, Ramath] Theſe two names, as ſome think ſignifie one and the ſame city.

V. 9. Out of the portion] See on verſ. 1. & ch. 15. 32.

for the part of the children of Judah was too much] i. e. Either comparatively, in reſpect of other tribes, who upon a ſecond ſurvey were found to have far leſſe portions left them then this of Iudah; or ſimply too much for them, i. e. much more then they needed, or could well be imployed for their commodious habitation, in reſpect of the number of their tribe and the largeneſſe of the country allotted unto them. Therefore by Gods wiſe providence an inheritance for Simeon, being in number the feweſt and leaſt of all the tribes, was allotted within theirs, for the good of both the Tribes; that ſo by their united ſtrength they might the better guard and defend the country, which was the frontier part of Canaan on the South, againſt the inrodes of forrain enemies, and againſt wild beaſts, with which it was much infeſted by reaſon of the wilderneſſe adjoyning; and alſo that haveing a ſufficient number of inhabitants they might the better improve their land to the beſt advantage by tillage and husbandry. See another benefit that Simeon got by this mixture with Iudah, greater then all the reſt; on Gen. 49.7.

V. 10. And the third lot came up for the children of Zebulun] According to the predictions of Jacob and Moſes, that their inheritance ſhould be upon the ſea-coaſt. See on Gen. 49.13.

unto Sarid] Or, hard upon Sarid. Now mount Carmel did lie like a promontory upon the ſea-coaſt, where Sarid was placed, which was the South-weſt-border of Zebuluns inheritance.

V. 12. Chiſloth-Tabor] Tabor was an high mountain in the lower Galile, at the bottom whereof did run the river Kiſhon, which flowed to Genaſereth: And, (as ſome think) this was that mountain on which Chriſt was transfigured, Matth. 17. 1.

V. 13. Gittah-Hepher] The birth-place of Jonah, 2 Kings 14. 25.

V. 15. Bethlem] There was another of that name in the Tribe of Judah: where Chriſt was born, Mic. 5.2. Matth. 2.1. See on Ruth 1.1.

twelve Cities with their villages] i.e. Twelve of them only belonged to Zebulun. And thoſe above that number, ſtanding upon the frontiers, did belong to other tribes: or elſe ſome of them were the chiefeſt of thoſe villages here mentioned, which belonged to their cities.

V. 18. toward Iezreel] Neer unto mount Gilboa, where Saul had that great defeat, 1 Sam. 31. A place as pleaſant and fruitfull as any part of Canaan, This fell for an inheritance to Iſſachar, according to Jacobs and Moſes propheſies, Gen. 49. 14. Deut. 33. 18, 19.

and Shunem] Where the woman lived that ſo courteouſly entertained Eliſha, 2 Kings. 4.8. and where Abiſhag Davids virgin wife and nurſe was born, 1 Kings. 1.3.

V. 21. Enganim] There was another city of this name in Judah, Chap. 15. 34. For there were divers cities of the ſame name, which were only differenced one from another by the ſeverall tribes in which they were; as Beth-Shemeſh, Miſpeh, &c.

V. 24. And the fifth lot came out for the tribe of the children of Aſher] Nothing can be more caſuall then lots; yet we may obſerve, that they are ſingularly guided by Gods providence, ſeeing all things foretold by Jacob, above three hundred and fiftie years before, came here to paſſe according to his prediction, both in reſpect of the tribes, and in reſpect of the nature of the places and parts of the country which by lot did fall unto them reſpectively for their inheritances. For the ſons which Iacob had by his wives did firſt receive their inheritances by lot: and among them, firſt Iudah the Law-giver, from whom Chriſt deſcended; then Ioſeph, who had the double portion, and Benjamin, both deſcended from beloved Rachel; then the other ſons of Leah who were to inherit portions in Canaan, namely Simeon Zebulun and Iſſachar, for Reuben was ſeated elſewhere, and Levi otherwiſe provided for, chap. 18. 7.) and after them the ſons of the handmaids in their order. And becauſe Gad; the firſt-born of Zilpah Leahs handmaid, had already received upon ſpeciall ſuit his inheritance on the other ſide Iordan, the next lot came out for Aſher her ſecond ſon; and laſtly, for the two ſons of Belhah Rachels hand-maid, Dan and Naphtali.

V. 26. to Carmel Weſtward] i. e. To that part of mount Carmel which like a promotory reacheth out into the midland ſea. Now Carmel and the country about it was a fruitfull ſoyl, Iſa. 33. 6. & 35. 2. which falling by lot to Aſher, Iacobs propheticall bleſſings was therein verified; Gen. 49. 20. Out of Aſher his bread ſhall be fat, and he ſhall yeeld royall dainties. So Moſes propheſie was likewiſe fulfilled, Deut. 33.24.

V. 27. Cabul] Some think this not to be the name of a city, but of a region or country, containing in it thoſe twenty cities which Solomon gave to Hirom, 1 King. 9. 11, 13. and the rather becauſe he reckoneth here but two and twenty cities, whereas if this were one of the number there ſhould be three and twenty. But it ſeemeth this Cabul was not that: for that was ſo firſt named by Hiram, becauſe it was diſpleaſing and dirty, or therefore diſpleaſing becauſe dirty. Beſides that Cabul was not a part of the land of promiſe, as this here ſpoken of was, but ſome place adjoyning to it; for otherwiſe it had been unlawfull for Solomon to alienate it by giving it to a ſtranger.

V. 28. Hebron] That in Judah, Chap. 15. 13. and this in Aſher in the originall are differenced by divers letters, this being written with Aijn that with Cheth.

Kanah] This is the great Kanah, not farre from Zidon, in Galilee of the Gentiles. The leſſer Kanah was in Zebuluns inheritance in the lower Galilee, where Chriſt wrought his firſt miracle, turning water into wine, Ioh. 2. 1. and where alſo he cured the ſon of a certain noble man at Capernaum, Ioh. 4.46.

unto great Zidon] See on ch. 11. 8. This Zidon was not a part of Canaan, but only bordered upon it. Yet was it given to Aſher, Iudg. 1. 31. See on Gen. 49.13.

V. 29. to the ſtrong City Tyre] This was a mart-city famous throughout the world, and ſo fortified both by nature and art that ſhe thought her ſelf invincible. It bordered on the Tribe of Aſher to the Weſt, but was not allotted to its inheritance, that we any where read of. Yet ſome think it belonged to Aſher by Gods gift (as divers other Countries neer Canaan) but could never be gotten out of the heathens poſſeſſion, no not in the time of David and Solomon, 2 Sam. 5. 11. 1 King. 5. 1. as a Juſt puniſhment of Iſraels ſin, becauſe they did not at firſt endeavour to conquer it as God had commanded, being diſcouraged (as it ſeemeth) by the ſtrength of the City, which, as its name Tſor ſignifieth, was built upon a rock, and environed with rocks and the Sea round about. See on Iſa. 23. 1.

Achzib] See on Mic. 1. 14. & on Gen. 38. 5.

V. 33. and the out-goings thereof were at Jordan] The Eaſt-border of Naphtali, beginning at Heleph, went along by Jordan, in a large extent as far as the lake of Geneſareth: Wherein Jacobs propheſie was fulfilled, Gen. 49. 21. Naphtali is an hinde let looſe, giving pleaſant words: Whereby is ſignified that the tribe of Naphtali ſhould inherit a ſafe and fruitfull country, with ſweet liberty and freedome; like an Hinde which being out of the danger of toyls and nets, wherewith huntſmen in purſuit of their game beſet woods and forreſts, doth ſecurely feed in pleaſant paſtures, skipping and playing as ſhe is feeding: So the tribe of Naphtali ſhould ſecurely enjoy all delights, and the rather becauſe being ingenuous in their carriage, they ſhould gain the favour of all by their courteſie and humanity, and give all men content by their fair language and pleaſing words. And their portion thus falling in a fruitfull ſoil, Moſes propheſie was alſo verified, Deut. 33. 23.

V. 35. And the fenced cities are Ziddim, Zer] Here are numbred up certain cities diſperſed here and there in the tribe of Naphtali, which are not (many of them) elſewhere mentioned in the Scriptures.

Hammath] A city in the utmoſt North-end of Canaan, from whence the length of the land is ſometimes deſcribed, 1 King. 8. 65. Numb. 13. 21.

Cinnereth] Afterwards called by Herod the great, Tiberias; which gave its name to the Sea of Galile. See on Num. 34. 11.

V. 41. And the Coaſt of their inheritance] We ſhall find ſome of theſe Cities here given to Dan in the number of thoſe which were given to Judah, Chap. 15. But all Judahs portion in that firſt diviſion at Gilgal was not ſetled upon them for perpetuall inheritance, but that for the preſent it might be under their protection againſt the incurſions of the common enemie. For upon a ſecond and more exact ſurvey their portion proving much too large, not only Simeons inheritance was wholly taken out of it, v. 1, 9. but divers Cities and places belonging to Judah were by this ſecond lot at Shiloh, taken out of that Tribe, and given to Dan.

Zorah] The place where Samſon was born, Judg. 13. 2. and he was buried between Zorah and Eſhtaol, in the burying-place of Manoah his father, Judg. 16. 31.

V. 43. Thimnathah] Here Samſon took a wife of the daughters of the Philiſtims Judg. 14. 1.

V. 46. Japho] Or, Joppa. See on Jon. 1. 3. Pomponius Mela ſaith this Town was built before the Floud, and that the King thereof was named Cepha, and his brother Phineus, and that both their names, with the heads of their religion, were found graven on Altars of ſtone.

V. 47. went out too little for them] Not becauſe the inheritance allotted unto them was not large enough, but becauſe for their great and grievous ſins, and eſpecially their abominable Idolatry, (for which they are branded above the other tribes) God ſuffered their enemies to prevail againſt them, and drive them out of the champion country, the chief part of their inheritance, into the mountains, Judg. 1. 34.

went up to fight againſt Leſhem, and took it] This hapned after Joſhua's death, and in the time of the Iſraelites Anarchie, Judg. 18. and, as ſome think, between the death of Joſhua and the time when Othniel, was Judg. Whence it appeareth that this Book was not written by Joſhua: unleſſe we will ſay ſome particulars related in it were afterwards inſerted by ſome other holy man, guided by the ſame Spirit, that lived in after-times. This ſtory is related in this place to remove a doubt, namely, how the Danites came to inhabit in the Northern parts of the land, when as the inheritance which by lot fell unto them was Southerly, neer the tribe of Judah. Now this was becauſe either by the Amorites or Philiſtims they were driven out of their inheritance, and were fain to plant themſelves where they could find room: And that they did at Leſhem, which was in the lot of Naphtali, but at that time under the protection of the Zidonians, though living in ſuch a diſtance from them that they were not able to keep them from ſuch a ſudding ſurpriſe. This city was ſituate at the bottom of mount Lebanon, in the uttermoſt Nothern border of the land, oppoſit to Beerſheba in the South, and was afterwards called Cæſarea Philippi. See on Judg. 18. 29.

V. 49. children of Iſrael gave an inheritance to Joſhua] Here we have an evidence of the peoples love, in their willing condeſcending to Joſhua's requeſt; and of his modeſtie and humility, in that he was pleaſed to acknowledge it the peoples gift, whereas it was onely their free aſſent to the word of the Lord delivered by Moſes, namely that Joſhua and Caleb, for their faithfull ſervice in eſpying the land, and giving a true teſtimony, contrary to that of all the other ſpies, ſhould have ſuch parts of the land, when it was conquered, as they deſired.

V. 50. even Timnah-Serah in mount Ephraim] Called Timnath-Heres, Judg. 2. 9. Here Ioſhua was afterwards buried, ch. 24. 30. This moſt noble Generall may be an example unto all of his rank and condition in all ages, of humility, modeſty and temperance, in that after all his famous exploits in war and peace, for which he might juſtly have challenged the chief honours and perferments of that kingdome, in the conqueſt whereof he had been the chief actor and inſtrument, he was ſo far from ambition and covetouſneſſe that he was content with a ſmall portion of land in his own tribe, and that not the richeſt and fruitfulleſt, but in a mountainous country, ſuch as others enjoyed amongſt whom he dwelt, and not a ſtately palace and royal citie adorned with ſumptuous buildings but an old ruinous town, which he was fain to build before he could inhabit it. And this mean preferment he did not eagerly, and haſtily deſire; much leſſe uſe violence to pull it from others, but was content to be laſt ſerved, not ſo much as deſiring to have this place of habitation allotted unto him before the land was divided among the tribes, and every one of them had their lot and inheritance.

V. 51. Theſe are the inheritances] This verſe is the concluſion of all which hath been ſaid concerning the diſtribution of the land of Canaan, from the fourteenth Chapter hitherto.

CHAP. XX.

Verſ. 1. THe Lord alſo ſpake unto Joſhua] Either appearing viſibly unto him, as chap. 5. 14. or by propheticall revelation, or by the mineſtry of the high Prieſt enquiring of God by Urim and Thummim.

V. 2. Appoint out for you cities of refuge] i. e. Places of Sanctuary, where thoſe that had killed any unwillingly, or at unawares, by ſome caſualty, might live in ſafety from the rage of the next kinſmen of him that was ſlain, who were the purſuers of blood, till their cauſe being heard and known, and their innocency appearing, they might be acquitted and freed from danger. Thus the law provided for the preſervation of the innocent, who had not ſhed the blood of his neighbour out of any maliciouſneſſe of will, but meer caſually, the Lord acting by him as a bare inſtrument in his hand, without his purpoſe & intention; leſt the next of kin to him that was ſlain ſhould fall upon and ſlay him in his furie, looking onely upon his own loſſe, and not upon his innocency who againſt his will had brought it upon him, not at the hand of God executing his righteous judgements by an unknowing and unwilling inſtrument. By ſuch revenge the land would be defiled with bloud, ſo as not to be cleanſed but by the blood of him who in his rage unjuſtly ſhed it.

whereof I ſpake unto you by the hand of Moſes] i. e. By his miniſtry, whom I uſed as my mouth to reveal my will unto you. Exod. 21. 13 35. 6, 11, 14, &c. Deut. 19. 2, 3.

V. 3. unawares and unwittingly] For no place might ſecure a wilful murderer, no not the temple, or altar, Exod. 21. 14: 1 Kings 2. 31, 34.

may flee thither] i. e. To that citie of refuge which is next unto the place where the party was ſlain; or to that whereunto he may flee with moſt ſafetie and conveniencie.

from the avenger of blood] i. e. From the kindred of the party ſlain, to whom the executing of juſt revenge belonged.

V. 4. ſhall ſtand at the entring of the gate] The gate was uſually the place appointed in thoſe dayes for judicature, as being moſt acceſſible for all comers, citie and country, forrainers and inhabitants, and moſt remote and quiet from the buſineſſe of the City, neither interrupting their trading and commerce, nor yet in the way to be interrupted by it. See on Job. 5. 4 & Jer. 38. 7.

and ſhall declare his cauſe in the ears of the Elders] i. e. The manner of his fact, and what moved him to flee thither, in the preſence and hearing of the Magiſtrates, that ſo they might judge whether or no he were fit to be received under their protection, till his cauſe might be brought to a juſt triall between his accuſers, the witneſſes, and himſelf the defendant.

they ſhall take him into the city] To wit, if at this firſt hearing it doth probably appear that he is not guilty of murder. See Numb. 35. 22, 23. Deut. 19. 4, 5.

and give him a place that he may dwell among them] This was not onely for the ſlayers ſecurity, but for his ſake alſo that purſued him, that the ſight of the ſlayer might not renew his grief, and exaſperate him to a deſire of revenge, but that he might have ſome time to digeſt his ſorrow, and bring his heart to a juſt moderation in ſeeking revenge.

V. 5. avenger of blood] So called, becauſe by vindicating his blood that is ſlain upon him that killed him, that taking away his life for his, he doth in a ſort free him from his unjuſt oppreſſion, and ſet him at liberty.

ſmote] Heb. killed.

V. 6. And he ſhall dwell in that City] Enjoying his life and liberty till his cauſe be tryed, yea, though afterwards he be found guilty of murder. For Gods law required that the murderer ſhould dye yet by no other means than either by the hand of the Magiſtrate in a legall proceeding or by one of kin to the party ſlain, whoſe blood in a ſort was ſhed in his, and who was thereby provoked in his juſt anger to take revenge.

untill he ſtand before the Congregation] i. e. Either in the City of refuge, when the accuſers and witneſſes are come thither to proſecute the cauſe againſt him; or elſe in the City next to the place where the fact was done. That if he were found guilty, the law might be executed or being acquitted and cleared, he might be returned to the City of refuge whence he came, where he was to live as an exile from his own houſe and Countrey; And that for theſe cauſes: I. That by this puniſhment God might ſhew how execrable the ſin of murder is in his ſight, ſeeing he will not let the leaſt appearance of it go unpuniſhed. II. Becauſe theſe caſuall acts are for the moſt part cauſed by ſome heedleſneſſe, careleſneſſe, and want of due providence; for which the offenders, though freed from capitall puniſhment, were made to ſmart, that they might learn to be more cautious and carefull for the time to come. III. For the preventing of further miſchief, when the avenger of blood had hereby ſome ſatisfaction, and was not by the ſight of the party who had ſlain his dear kinſman, incenſed againſt him, and his heart made to boyl with deſire of revenge.

untill the death of the high Prieſt] Becauſe, as ſome think, the whole Church and Common wealth ſuſtaining in his death a great and publick loſſe, (who being in greateſt power and authority ought to be moſt dear to the people) all private griefs were then to be moderated, and to give way unto it. But howſoever, we are to underſtand that the death of the high Prieſt was herein a type of our High-Prieſt Jeſus Chriſt who, by his precious death hath wrought a perfect reconciliation between God and us, and hath procured the full pardon of all our ſins, and perfect liberty from the purſuing wrath of God, and all the enemies of our ſalvation. Joh. 8. 36. See on Numb. 35. 25.

that ſhall be in thoſe dayes] This cannot be underſtood of him in whoſe dayes the fact was committed, but of him who lived in the dayes when the cauſe had been heard, the party cleared and remitted to the city of refuge. For otherwiſe the high Prieſt dying between the time of the fact and hearing of the cauſe, the party cleared ſhould not have lived at all in the citie of refuge, but might have immediately returned to his own home, the high Prieſt being dead in whoſe time the deed was done.

V. 7. And they appointed Kedeſh in Galilee] The places appointed for cities of refuge belonged to the Levites, that by the dignity of their calling all things belonging to this preſent buſineſſe might be carried on with more authority, the Levites and Prieſts being beſt acquainted with the laws of God, and therefore moſt able to judge in theſe and all other caſes between man and man, Mal. 2. 7. and becauſe alſo they were beſt able to ſuppreſſe all outrages and inſolencies in thoſe who were tranſported with paſſion, and to inſtruct both the ſlayers and thoſe that purſued them in their duties towards one another.

in mount Naphtali] Theſe cities were ſituate either upon high mountains or great plains, that being conſpicuous they might more eaſily be diſcovered by thoſe who had occaſion to flee unto them, and ſo the ſlayers not be indangered by inquiring the way, if at leaſt the avengers of blood did hotly purſue them.

in the mountain of Judah] i.e. In the mountainous country belonging to Judah, Luk. 1. 39. 65

V. 8. And on the other ſide Jordan] Deut. 4. 43. There were as many cities appointed for refuge in the two tribes and half beyond Jordan, as for the nine tribes and half on the other ſide, becauſe though that countrey were not of ſo great a circuit, being much narrower in breadth, yet it extended as far in length, and therefore it required as much time and labour to get unto the cities of refuge there as in Canaan. Theſe Cities were ſo ordered and appointed by Gods eſpeciall providence that they ſtood in all parts of the land, and for the moſt part in a like diſtance one from another; as for example, Hebron in the South, Kedeſh in the North, and Shechem in the middle way between them; that ſo the ſlayers might have the more conveniencie and better opportunity to flee unto ſome one of them, in what part ſoever of the land they inhabited. *S*ee on Deut. 19. 2.

V. 9. and for the ſtranger] i. e. Either the Proſelite living among them, and converted to their religion; or generally all ſtrangers, who upon occaſion of trafick or otherwiſe did come among them; ſeeing juſtice is to be adminiſtred to all without reſpect of perſons.

untill he ſtood before the congregation] i. e. Till his cauſe were heard in a legall and judiciall manner before the Magiſtrates and Judges in the great aſſembly of the people, and he found and pronounced guiltleſſe.

CHAP. XXI.

Verſ. 1. THe heads of the fathers of the Levites] i. e. The chief Elders among the families of the Levites, to wit, the Kohathites, Gerſhonites, and Merarites. *S*ee 1 Chron. 6. 54, 62, 63. For Levi, the third ſonne of Jacob and Leah, had three ſonnes, Gerſhon, Kohath, and *M*erari; Kohath had four, Amram, Izhar, Hebron, and Uzziel: Amram begat Aaron, Moſes, and Miriam: Aaron, beſides Nadab and Abihu, had two ſonnes, Eleazar and Ithamar, who ſucceeded their father in the Prieſthood; and of them came all the Prieſts, both the high Prieſts and thoſe of inferior order, by Gods own appointment and choice, Numb. 17. 5, 8. Theſe were called Aaronites, 1 Chron. 12. 27. to diſtinguiſh them from all the reſt of the Levites, Gerſhonites, Kohathites and Merarites; even as alſo they were diſtinguiſhed by office: But here they all joyn together in a common ſuit, That they might have cities and lands allotted to them for themſelves and their cattell. This they now came about, namely, as ſoon as the Rulers had made an end of dividing the land amongſt the other tribes. Neither had it been to any purpoſe for them to had come any ſooner, becauſe they were to have their cities out of the ſeveral tribes, which they could not have, hat till their inheritance were fallen unto them. Neither could they have put off this their ſuit any longer, but were to obtain it as ſoon as the cities and lands were by lot fallen to all the tribes, before they had taken poſſeſſion of them, in regard of the great and unneceſſary trouble which otherwiſe they ſhould have been put to, in making room for the Levites by their remove out of their habitations.

V 2. at Shiloh] Where now the tabernacle and ark were ſeated, and where they had made their ſecond diviſion of the land. See on Chap. 18. 1.

The Lord commanded by the hand of Moſes] i. e. By his miniſtery, God uſing him as his mouth to declare his mind and will unto the people, according to their own ſuit, Exod. 20. 19. Here the Levites do not challenge their cities and lands from the peoples gift, but as of due belonging unto them by virtue of Gods command. Neither was it onely a generall command, that they ſhould have Cities and lands, and the reſt left to the pleaſure of the people, but the number of the Cities is plainly expreſſed, that they ſhould be fourty eight, and the lands and ſuburbs belonging to them exactly meaſured in their extent, Numb. 35. 2. 7. Beſides, all other means of their maintenance are preciſely appointed, as being the portion which God had appropriated to himſelf, and allowed unto them as his Miniſters who did him ſervice; that ſo they might not ſtand to the will and devotion of the people, but acknowledge the Lord onely for their benefactor; Numb. 18. 9, &c.

V. 3. the children of Iſrael] They readily granted this ſuit, which came thus backed by Gods command, and gave unto the Levites Cities and ſuburbs in every part thoroughout the land. For as the cities of refuge given to the Levites were ſo ſeated that the ſlayers who needed them might eaſily flee unto them, (See on ch. 28.) ſo it is moſt probable that the reſt of the cities belonging to them were here and there ſituate in every part of the land, and in ſome ſuch proportion of diſtance one from another that the people with much eaſe might from all parts reſort unto them for inſtruction and direction in the waies of God.

V. 4. And the children of Aaron the prieſt] Here the good providence of God is obſerveable, who ſo diſpoſed of the lots, that Aarons poſteritie, whoſe ſervice was moſt uſefull and neceſſarie in the Tabernacle and Temple had, and their cities and inheritance allotted unto them out of the portions of Judah, *S*imeon and Benjamin, which were neereſt to the place of their ſervice, that ſo they might be ready at hand to perform it for the peoples better content and their own greater eaſe.

thirteen Cities] Theſe were not given for preſent uſe, ſeeing the Prieſts at this time were ſo few in number that one part of any of theſe Cities was too large for their habitation, (See on Numb, 18. 29.) but as an inheritance for their poſterity that ſhould ſucceed them, when they were increaſed to a number ſutable to their cities. Hereby their errour is confuted (in which I confeſſe my ſelf formerly was) that think theſe cities and lands were given the *L*evites onely for preſent uſe and habitation, and not in reſpect of title and dominion, which ſtil remained unto the tribe to which it was by lot firſt given. For hence it appeareth that the Prieſts had their cities in their own title and right, though they had no preſent uſe of them for habitation, and beſides it appeareth Lev. 25. 32 that the Levites had power to morgage their intereſt in their cities and houſes, even to the year of Jubilee, as men of other tribes had, although they had this priviledge above others, that they might redeem them at their pleaſure; and the reaſon is given, becauſe the houſes of the Cities of the Levites were their poſſeſſion among the children of Iſrael, Lev. 25. 33.

V. 5. the reſt of the children of Kohath] Which were onely Levites, and not Prieſts.

ten Cities] Every tribe gave more or fewer Cities according as their inheritance was great or little. Num. 35. 8.

V. 6. And the children of Gerſhon] The Kohathites were preferred before the Gerſhonites, though Gerſhon were the elder brother, becauſe the Aaronites or Prieſts deſcended of Kohath; (See on Numb. 3. 31.) and the Gerſhonites before the Merarites, becauſe theſe came of the youngeſt brother. *S*ee on v. 1.

V. 8 with their ſuburbs] i. e. Gardens, arable land, and paſtures adjoyning to the Cities, which were one thouſand Cubits from the walls round about Numb. 35. 4.

V. 9. Judah, and out of the tribe of the children of Simeon] Judah's and Simeons Cities are here joyned, becauſe *S*imeons inheritance did lye within Judahs, ch. 19. 1, 9.

V. 10. the children of Aaron, being of the families of the Kohathites] Aaron came of Kohath, and therefore the Prieſthood remained in that family, though none of them were Prieſts but onely the Aaronites. *S*ee on v. 1.

V. 11. the City of Arbah] Or, Kirjath-arba. See ch. 14, 15. and 15. 13.

which City is Hebron] The cities of the ſeverall tribes were generally given to them as their lots fell, but before they were ſingularly divided amongſt them according to their ſeveral families, the cities which were to be the Levites portion were by lot taken out of them; And ſo here, the countrey about Hebron was given to Caleb, but not the city it ſelf. Yea, but Debir, which was likewiſe given unto the Levites, v. 15. and was a ſtrong city, walled and fortified, was given to Caleb as well as the Country about it; or elſe why did he promiſe that he would give to him that ſhould take it, his daughter to wife, as a reward of ſo difficult a ſervice, ch. 15, 16. Why ſhould he invite any to take it, if it were not his, and to be enjoyed by him when it was taken? And the like may be ſaid of Hebron. To this it is anſwered by good Expoſitors, that it was neceſſary for Caleb, if he would enjoy the countrie about theſe cities, that he ſhould firſt take the cities themſelves and root out the inhabitans, though the Cities were given afterwards to others which were his friends. This city of the Prieſts, David made the ſeat of his Kingdome for ſeven years together, 2 Sam. 2. 1, 11. Neither is it to be thought that all that while he thruſt the Levites out of their habitations, but that as became a pious and propheticall Prince, he honoured the holineſſe of the Prieſthood with the Majeſty of the Kingdome. Some think Zacharias John Baptiſts father lived in this City, Luk. 1. 39. Joſeph. De bello Jud. l. 5. c 7.

V. 12. But the fields of the city] To wit, the reſt of the fields beſides or beyond the two thouſand cubits which were to be given to the Levites with the Citie, Numb. 35. 5.

V. 41. were fourty and eight cities with their ſuburbes] Levi was the leaſt of the tribes, and yet had eight and fourty cities allotted unto them, which was double, yea, treble, to divers tribes that were far more numerous then they. But we muſt conſider that the whole number of their cities are reckoned, whereas in other tribes many cities are left out, and onely thoſe mentioned which were chief and principall. Again the cities of other tribes had many towns and villages belonging to them, but the Levites had their cities only, unto which they were confined for their habitations, whereas they of other tribes were at their liberty to dwell in their villages and countrey-houſes. But the Lord (no doubt) would have this tribe provided for in a bountifull manner, ſeeing he himſelf took upon him to be their portion, and made choice of them to do him more peculiar and ſpeciall ſervices in his ſanctuary, and in all the parts of his worſhip, then any of the other tribes.

V. 43. and the Lord gave unto Iſrael all the land] For though the Canaanites as this time poſſeſſed many places in that country, yet the Lord, the Soverain of heaven and earth, who hath all at his diſpoſing, might be ſaid to have given them all the land, becauſe he had given them a full right unto it both by promiſe and lot, and had already by conqueſt poſſeſſed them of the greateſt part of it, and was ready to enter them into the poſſeſſion of that which remained, in that time when it ſhould be fitteſt for them to enjoy it. Neither had he ever promiſed to give them the poſſeſſion of the whole land at once, but by fitting degrees. Exod. 23. 29, 30. I will not drive them out from before thee in one year, leſt the land become deſolate, and the beaſt of the field multiply againſt thee. By little and little I will drive them out from before thee, untill thou be increaſed and inherit the land. In the mean while he did but make uſe of their enemies to keep out the wild beaſts, and to husband and manure the land, which otherwiſe would have turned into a wilderneſſe: Whom alſo he ſtruck with ſuch fear and aſtoniſhment that they durſt not riſe up againſt his people to diſturb their peace, or hinder them from the quiet enjoying of all they poſſeſſed.

and they poſſeſſed it] i. e. So much of it as they had ſubdued, or thought needful for their preſent uſe; and might poſſeſſe more when they ſhould deſire it, and were fit to receive it, if they did not hinder themſelves through their own default, if by their ſloth and cowardiſe, their ſin and rebellion, they did not make themſelves uncapable of Gods gift. See on ch. 17. 12.

V. 44. And the Lord gave them reſt] i. e. From war; and let them enjoy all they had conquered in peace and tranquillity.

there ſtood not a man of all their enemies before them] They were victorious in all their wars, and no enemy was able to reſiſt them or do them any hurt, namely, of all thoſe who aſſayled them, or were aſſaulted by them, whileſt Joſhua their Generall did lead their army.

V. 45. There failed not ought of any good thing] i. e. Which the Lord knew to be truly good for them to receive. And amongſt the reſt this is to be reputed one, that he would not preſently and at once expel all their enemies out of the land of promiſe. See on v. 43. and ch. 23. 15.

CHAP. XXII.

Verſ. 1. THen] i. e. When God had fulfilled all his promiſes, and, having ſubdued their enemies, had given unto his people peace and reſt.

Joſhua called the Reubenites] Namely, they having now performed all their covenants made with Moſes, & all the ſervice they undertook for the ſetling of their brethren in Canaan, he might diſband & diſmiſs them, and like a noble Generall, ſend them away with due praiſes and rewards unto their own inheritances on the other ſide Jordan.

V. 2. Ye have kept all that Moſes] In theſe words he giveth them a generall commendation, that they had obſerved all thoſe commands which they had received from God by Moſes miniſtery, Num. 32. 20. Deut. 3. 18. And then more ſpecially he praiſes them, firſt for their obedience to himſelf whom God had ſet over them as their Generall aud Commander in chief, like well-diſciplined ſouldiers; and particularly in this, that they had aſſiſted their brethren in all that warr, and gone armed before them.

V. 3. ye have not left your brethren theſe many dayes] Here he commendeth them for their duty performed to their brethren: Firſt, for their faithfulneſſe towards them, in that neither fear of danger nor the pains and labour of ſo great a work, nor the difficulties they met with in their undertakings could ſo diſcourage them as to cauſe them to forſake the ſervice, till they ſaw their brethren victorious over all their enemies. Secondly for their conſtancy in carrying on the work, not for ſome ſmall time, but for many dayes. For, (as expoſitors for the moſt part agree) they had from their coming over Jordan been imployed in this ſervice for the ſpace of fourteen yeares. ſeven yeares in conquering the land, and ſeven more in the diviſion of it; if at leaſt the things related were done according to that order here expreſſed, that is, if the two tribes and half tarried till the land was divided. But it is probable they were ſent away before, when they had finiſhed their ſervice in the conqueſt, ſeeing they had no cauſe to ſtay any longer from their own homes where their portion was fallen unto them, and expected no ſhare in the land of Canaan. Yet this is but my own conjecture, which I leave to better judgements; yet I am the more confirmed in it, becauſe though the two tribes & half made offer to Moſes Num. 32. 18. that they would not return to their houſes untill the children of Iſrael inherited theirs, yet Moſes in his anſwer doth not requi̇re ſo much of them, but only this which (they had alſo undertaken) that they ſhould go armed before the Lord to warr, untill he had driven out his enemies from before him, and ſubdued the land, and ſaith that afterwards they ſhould return to their own poſſeſſion, and be guiltleſſe before the Lord, and before Iſrael, verſ. 20. &c. And this condition alone they inſiſt upon in their reply, and do not mention the other, that they would ſtay with them till they were ſetled in their inheritance, verſ. 27. But howſoever, though they did ſtay onely the ſeven yeares ſervice of the war, it was a moſt commendable evidence of their fidelity and conſtancy toward their brethren, and of their truth in keeping covenant, in that for ſo long a time they were content to be deprived of the comfort of their wives, children and families, and the enjoying of their cities, houſes, goods and inheritances; yea, to hazard them all by leaving them in a country but lately conquered, out of their protection, where they might juſtly fear the inrodes and dangerous attempts of their diſaffected neighbours.

but have kept the charge] Here he commendeth them for their piety towards God, from which all their other vertues did flow, in that they conſcientiouſly obſerved them all, and all duties ariſing from them, (not as moſt ſouldiers, out of vain glory, covetouſneſſe, or a naturall fortitude and magnanimity, but) out of a religious fear of God, becauſe they looked upon all they did as upon a charge impoſed by him.

V. 4. now return you, and Get you unto your tents, and unto the Land of your poſſeſſion] i. e. When you depart from this aſſembly, go immediately to your tents, and then afterwards to your dwellings in your own inheritances. Others by tents underſtand their houſes and homes, but not ſo probably: For they did not leave their wives, children and goods in tents but in cities and ſtrong buildings: and beſides, this inverteth the order; for they muſt of neceſſity firſt go to the land of their poſſeſſions before they could come to their houſes.

V. 5. But take diligent heed] Having commended them for what they had well done already, he now admoniſheth them, like a moſt religious Generall, to perſevere in weldoing with all diligence and circumſpection; namely, to obſerve all Gods commandments, and chiefly to love the Lord their God, which is the great commandment from which all true obedience floweth, to walk in all his wayes, and not to reſt onely in the performance of ſome or many duties, and forſaking all falſe gods and idols, to cleave unto and ſerve him onely, and that not alone in an outward profeſſion, but in integrity with the whole man, in ſincerity and ſimplicity, in ſpirit and in truth, with a pure heart, a good conſcience, and faith unfaigned.

V. 6. So Joſhua bleſſed them] i. e. Prayed unto God for his bleſſing upon them. For men are ſaid to bleſſe men, when they wiſh unto them all happineſſe, and pray unto God that he will pour down upon them his bleſſings, ſeeing he is the fountain of all goodneſſe, from whom every good and perfect gift deſcendeth. And they are ſaid to bleſſe God, when they praiſe and magnifie him as the authour and donor of all bleſſings received, having nothing elſe to return unto him in lieu of all his benefits. But God is ſaid to bleſſe us, when he beſtoweth his gifts upon us, and ſanctifieth them to our uſe.

V. 8. Divide the ſpoyl of your enemies with your brethren] i. e. Thoſe that remain at home with your wives, children, goods and cattle, to protect and preſerve them from the inrodes of bordering enemies, and did not go out to the war. Hereby is not meant that thoſe who ſtaid at home, ſhould every one of them have as great a part of the ſpoils as they that went out to war: For there had been no equality or juſtice in this, that they who had born the brunt, and undergone the danger, and indured the pains, ſhould be no better rewarded then the other; yea, in this diviſion by poll, they ſhould have had far leſſe, ſeeing they that ſtaied at home did much exceed them in number. But this is meant, that they that went to war ſhould have one moitie or half-part for their own uſe, and give the other to them who ſtaid at home, to be divided amongſt them, according to Gods command, Numb. 31. 27. Which being (it ſeemeth) worn out by time and forgotten, David revived and re-eſtabliſhed, as a ſtanding law for future times, 1 Sam. 30. 24, 25.

V. 9. unto the country of Gilead] i. e. All that country in which Sihon and Og raigned. See Deut. 3. 15. & on Obad. 19.

according to the word of the Lord by the hand of Moſes] Which was; That after they had gone before their brethren in war, and ſeen them ſetled in the land of promiſe, they ſhould have leave to return and enjoy their inheritances on the other ſide Jordan, Num. 32. 20. 22.

V. 10. the borders] Heb. Geliloth. Which ſome take for a proper name, as Chap. 18. 17. and hold that this Altar was erected near Gilgal. If ſo, it is very like it was ſome occaſion of that ſuperſtition wee read was practiced there in after-times, Hoſ. 4. 15. & 9. 15. & 12. 11. Amos. 4. 4. & 5. 5. So Images, being at firſt but permitted in Chriſtian Churches, came at length to be worſhipped.

built there an altar by Jordan] i. e. On the borders of Jordan within the land of Canaan, before they paſſed over into their own inheritance, they built this great Altar, like that at the tabernacle. But this was not (as they profeſſe ver. 24.) to be uſed as that was, to offer upon it ſacrifices and oblations, but to remain as a monument to ſucceeding ages, to teſtifie in their behalf, that howſoever they were divided by the river Jordan from the land of Canaan and the reſt of the tribes, yet they were true Iſraelites deſcended from Jacob, and ſo in the number of Gods peculiar people, who had right and intereſt in all his promiſes, and both in the tabernacle and altar, and might reſort thither to worſhip God and offer ſacrifices as well as their brethren that dwelt in Canaan; ſeeing this would ſtand as a memoriall, and the meaning of it would by tradition paſſe to one age after another, that this altar was ſet up, when after the wars ended they departed into their own country, for no other end and purpoſe. Had they not done this of their own heads, but either acquainted their brethren beforehand with their purpoſe, or asked counſel of the High-prieſt, according to the law, Num. 27. 21. they had not given that ſcandal to others nor drawn that ſuſpicion upon themſelves that they did.

V. 12. And when the children of Iſrael heard of it] And thereupon believed that they intended to offer ſacrifices upon it, contrary to Gods expreſſe commandment, Lev. 17. 8, 9. Deut. 12. 4, 7, 13, 27. and ſo conceiving that this their act tended to ſet up ſuperſtition, falſ worſhip and Idolatry, they thought themſelves bound by Gods command to oppoſe them, and, if other means would not reclaim them, to make war againſt them, Deut. 13. 13. See on Lev. 17. 4.

the whole congregation of the children of Iſrael] i. e. The ten tribes. Levi being numbred with them. Yea, even the half tribe of Manaſſeh it ſelf which dwelt in Canaan, by the neereſt bond of conſanguinity tied unto the other half, yet in zeal to Gods glory joyned in this holy quarrel. See the like zeal Judg. 20. 1.

to go up to warre againſt them] Hereby it appeareth, that in thoſe times they thought a warre was juſt and lawfull againſt thoſe who were ſubverters of Gods true religion, if no other means would reclaim them. And if ſo here, then their zeal was commendable, in that they ſpared not to venture their lives for Gods glory and the maintenance of his true religion: Howſoever they cannot be excuſed of inconſiderate raſhneſſe in giving way to ungrounded jealouſies.

V. 13. And the children of Iſrael ſent] Knowing the unſpeakable miſeries that accompany a civill warre, they laboured to reform ſuch things as were amiſſe by counſell and advice, before they would take arms and imbrew their hands in one anothers blood, for which as they had good cauſe in the generall, ſo much more in reſpect of theſe their brethren, who had ſo long been faithfull unto them, fought ſo valiantly, and ventured their lives in their cauſe and quarrel, never leaving them till they ſaw them quickly ſetled in their inheritances: All which obligations, though worthily ſlighted when Gods glory and the puritie of his religion came in competition, yet did ſtrongly binde them to preſerve peace and love, if they might do it on lawfull terms. See Deut. 13. 14.

Phinehas the ſon of Eleazar the Prieſt] As being moſt fit and able to prevail with them, in reſpect of his eminencie in vertue and zeal for Gods glory, ſo much approved and applauded in that heroick act about Zimri and Cozbi, whereby Gods wrath was appeaſed: Numb. 25. 7. and in reſpect of his skill and knowledge in Gods law, which made him able to manage ſuch an ambaſſage.

V. 14. And with him ten Princes] Nine for the nine tribes, and one for the half tribe of Manaſſeh, himſelf being for the tribe of Levi; that ſo this great and difficult buſineſſe might be tranſacted and carried on by the full and joynt counſell of all, and to the good liking and contentment of all the people, ſeeing in theſe Princes repreſentatively they had their voice and hand.

V. 16. Thus ſaith the whole congregation] By us, whom they have ſent to repreſent all the reſt.

of the Lord] We are therefore to be hearkned unto, ſeeing we ſpeak in his cauſe, and are countenanced by his authority.

What treſpaſs is this] They took it for granted, that they had committed thoſe great ſins of apoſtaſie, rebellion, and falſe worſhip, before they had examined the matter; thereby ſhewing that good men, and otherwiſe godly and religious, may ſometimes paſſe falſe and uncharitable cenſures, being tranſported by raſh and inconſiderate zeal.

V. 17. Is the iniquity of Peor too little for us] When our people provoked Gods fierce wrath by their fornication and idolatrie, Num. 25. 3.

from which we are not cleanſed unto this day] For although the wrath of God was appeaſed by Phinehas his executing juſtice upon Zimri and Cozbi, ſo as for the time he ſtayed the plague, and would not have them go on in the mutuall ſlaughter one of another, yet their ſin might be ſaid to remain uncleanſed unto that very day; I. Becauſe they ſtill did bear the ſhame and reproach of it amongſt all that ever heard of that abominable wickedneſſe. II. Becauſe many of thoſe who were actors in that great ſin ſtil remained, from whom wrath & vengeance was for the preſent ſuſpended, that they might make uſe of Gods patience and long-ſuffering thereby to be brought unto him by unfained repentance, yet living ſtill in impenitency they lay under the guilt of that ſinne, and therefore when upon the committing of other ſinnes they provoked God to a new viſitation, he would call them to account, and puniſh them for all together, as appeareth Num. 4. 20, &c. III. Men may truly repent of ſome hainous ſins, & ſo be freed from the guilt of them, & yet remain lyable to temporary puniſhments as the chaſtizments of a reconciled father, that God may not be diſhonoured nor religion ſcandalized by their impunity, and that they may be made more cautious & fearfull to avoid ſin for the time to come: As we ſee in the example of David, who upon his repentance received pardon, yet was ſeverely corrected with ſharp afflictions, even to his laſt dayes, 2 Sam. 12. 9—14. IV. Laſtly, they were not throughly cleanſed from that ſin in reſpect of the faultineſſe and corruption contracted by it, which was ever and anon ready to break out, when they were not reſtrained by religious magiſtrates; as appeareth plainly in the ſtory of the Judges.

V. 18. to day againſt the Lord, that to morrow] Theſe words are not to be taken literally and preciſely for that very day and the morrow after but for ſome time neer unto them; as, to day, i. e. at this time, and to morrow, i. e. in time to come, and that very ſpeedily. So ch. 4. 6, Iſa. 22, 13. Mat. 6. 30. 1. Cor. 15. 32. See on Gen. 30. 33.

V. 19. if the land of your poſſeſſion be unclean] i. e. if you have any prejudice againſt your own inheritance beyond Jordan, as not being under Gods favour and protection, and imagine that in the land of Canaan you may more certainly injoy it, becauſe the tabernacle, ark and altar, the viſible ſignes of Gods preſence, are placed amongſt us, then leave your inheritance, and come and live with us. Hereby they expreſſed great zeal for Gods glory, and much love towards them, and an earneſt deſire to give them all lawfull content, in that they were willing to let them ſhare with them in their inheritance, though at this time it was ſtreight enough for their own uſe, ſeeing much of their countrey given unto them by lot was not yet come into their poſſeſſion.

but rebell not againſt the Lord] By which is implyed that to uſe any other ſervice then he hath appointed is to rebell againſt him, 1 Sam. 15. 23.

not rebell againſt us] By ſeparating from our communion and the publick ordinances, thereby bringing Gods heavy judgements both upon your ſelves and us.

V. 20. Did not Achan the ſon of Zerah] i. e. Of the poſterity of Zerah, ch. 7. 17, 18, 24.

and wrath fell upon all the congregation] i. e. If but one mans ſin made God angry with the whole army, then how much more ſhall his wrath be incenſed againſt his people, if ſuch a numerous multitude joyn together in ſo foul an apoſtaſie and rebellion?

that man periſhed not alone] But beſides him, his wife, children, familie, and ſix and thirty of the army, ch. 7. 5, 24.

V. 21. of the thouſands of Iſrael] For the children of Iſrael were divided into thouſands, which had their Colonels or Captains ſet over them See Exod. 18. 21. Judg. 6. 15.

V. 22. The Lord God of Gods] They appeal unto God the ſearcher of hearts, to clear themſelves from that unjuſt ſuſpition which their brethren had conceived againſt them. And to expreſſe how much they abhorred the crime laid to their charge, they repeat the words of their appeal with great vehemency, as abominating the very thought of ſuch an apoſtaſie and ſeparation, and deſiring it ſhould be believed that they had built the altar with a quite contrary intention, namely to prevent in time to come ſuch a ſeparation between them and their brethren.

and Iſrael he ſhall know] i. e. Howſoever we are now under a black cloud of jealouſie, yet in time God will bring the truth to light; and our ſuture carriage and ſincerity in Gods ſervice, and our firm adhering to his true worſhip and holy ordinances, holding therein communion with the reſt of our brethren in Canaan, ſhall clear our innocency, and ſhew how far we are from being guilty of this Crime whereof we are now ſuſpected.

ſave us not this day] i.e. If we be guilty of this haynous ſin, we deſire no favour, nor yet any delay in Gods execution of vengeance upon us.

V. 23. let the Lord himſelf require it] i.e. If we have built this Altar with an intention to offer ſacrifices upon it, or with a purpoſe of diviſion and ſeperation from the reſt of our brethren in godly duties, let the Lord, whom we call upon as Witneſſe and Judge, call us to account for it, and inflict upon us deſerved puniſhments.

V. 24. And if we have not rather done it] They ſhew that their intention in building the altar was quite contrary to that whereof they were ſuſpected; namely, that they had purpoſely done it to this end, that both themſelves for the preſent, and their poſterity in ſucceeding ages, might, with the reſt of the Tribes in Canaan, cleave cloſe unto God, and continue a perpetual communion with them in all the parts of his publick ſervice.

for fear of this thing] i.e. Of being debarred from the means of Gods publick ſervice, and ſeparated from having communion with the reſt of Gods people.

What have you to do with the Lord] i.e. Why do you claim any intereſt in the Lord, or in his Tabernacle, Temple, Altar, Sacrifices and publick ſervice, ſeeing you are not of Iacobs poſterity, nor members of Gods true Church, nor born in the land of promiſe, but in a country ſeparated from it by the River Jordan?

V. 25. ye have no part in the Lord] i.e. You have nothing to do with his inheritance, which belongeth peculiarly to his people and children. See the like expreſſions, 2 Sam. 20.1. 1 King. 12.16. Ezr. 4.3. Neh. 2.20 Joh. 13.8. Act. 8.21.

ceaſe from fearing the Lord] i.e. From continuing in the profeſſion and ſincere practiſe of his true religion.

V. 27 that it may be a witneſſe] i.e. A laſting and ſignificative monument to teſtifie to ſucceeding ages that we, as well as the Tribes within Jordan, have a true right in the ſame Jehovah, and in the means of his publick ſervice, &c. and do hold an inſeparable communion with his Church and people.

V. 29. God forbid that we ſhould rebel againſt the Lord] i.e. We utterly deteſt and abhor ſuch an abomination.

V. 30. it pleaſed them] i.e. They were fully ſatisfied with their pious and juſt apology, and rejoyced in it.

V. 31. we perceive that the Lord is among us] i.e. By his grace and bleſſing, ſeeing ye are of the ſame mind with us, as being guided by the ſame ſpirit, and have cleared your ſelves from all ſuſpition of rebellion and defection.

Now ye have delivered the children of Iſrael out of the hand of the Lord] i.e. Ye have by declaring your innocency freed us from the fear of Gods heavy judgements, which, had you been guilty of thoſe ſins whereof we ſuſpected you, would have attached and overwhelmed both you and us.

V. 33. the children of Iſrael bleſſed God] i.e. Gave thanks unto, and praiſed the Lord, for preſerving their brethren from the guilt of ſin, and themſelves from all fear of being lyable with them to grievous puniſhments.

V. 34. Called the Altar Ed] i.e. A witneſſe, which ſtanding on the border of Jordan between the Iſraelites on both ſides of the river, did hold out a joynt teſtimony from them all, that Jehovah is God, i.e. They acknowledged no other but Jehovah alone to be their God, whom they would worſhip by no other means then thoſe which he had preſcribed in his Word, nor publickly in any other place ſaving in his Tabernacle and Temple. See Chap. 24.26, 27.

CHAP. XXIII.

Verſ. 1. Stricken in age] Heb. Come into dayes; and therefore being now unable to get more of the land by conqueſt, he ſeeketh by counſel to ſet the people in a way whereby they might keep what they had gotten, and in time alſo gain all that remained unconquered.

V. 2. And Joſhua called for all Iſrael] Not for all the people, for it had been impoſſible for them all to have come and heard him, but (as it is expreſſed) for all the chief of them, under whoſe government the reſt were, and who repreſented the whole body of the Common-wealth; as, their Elders, i.e. the Sanedrim, conſiſting of ſeventy two choice men which chiefly managed all affairs of Church and State; their heads, i.e. the Princes and prime rulers in every Tribe; their Judges, i.e. not only thoſe who ſat in their courts to hear cauſes, and executed judgment between man and man; but all other magiſtrates, who in all parts of the land in their ſeveral places ruled over the people for their peace and welfare; and their Officers, to whom it belonged to ſee the ſentences and judgments of ſuperiour Magiſtrates duly executed. Thus all Iſrael was called repreſentatively in their Heads: And whoſoever elſe had a mind, no doubt had liberty to come.

V. 3. becauſe of you] i.e. For your ſakes; that he might fulfil his promiſes made to your forefathers, and give unto you their poſterity this land for a poſſeſſion.

V. 4. theſe nations that remain] Yet unconquered.

V. 5. And the Lord your God, he ſhall expell them[i.e. Though I dye, and cannot do it, yet the Lord Jehovah ever liveth to make good all his promiſes, and this eſpecially, of giving you this whole Land for a poſſeſſion, if ye will keep covenant with him and walke in all his wayes, not backſliding from him, nor rebelling againſt him.

V. 6. turn not aſide therefrom to the right hand or to the left] i.e. Keep on in the right path, and decline not from Gods law, neither to the right hand by adding to it, nor to the left by detracting from it: Deut. 5.32. & 28.14.

V. 7. Come not amongſt theſe nations] i.e. Have no acquaintance or familiar converſation with them, leaſt by degrees ye become like unto them, and learn their manners. Num. 25.1, 2. Pſal. 119.115. 2 Cor. 6. 14. Eph. 5.11.

neither make mention of the name of their gods] i.e. Have nothing to do with them, ſeeing idolatry is an infectious and catching ſin; and the very naming of idols cauſeth mens minds to run upon them, and to think them ſomething, contrary to 1 Cor. 8.4. Therefore the Lord would not be called Baali, but Iſhi, though they ſignifie the ſame thing, becauſe that name was common to idols, Hoſ. 2.16. And David ſaith, That he would not take the name of falſe gods into his lips, Pſal. 16.4. And on the ſame reaſon the Apoſtle would not have whordome and uncleanneſs to be ſo much as named among us, Eph. 5.3. And, as one obſerveth, the Jews would not ſuffer their children to name ſwine or hogs, leaſt they might have an appetite to eate their fleſh. See Deut. 12.3. & on Num. 32.38.

nor cauſe to ſwear by them] i.e. Do not provoke the men of theſe nations to ſwear by their idols, to juſtifie their ſayings, or confirm their promiſes: Neither let Judges admit of an oath by their idols in the tryal of any cauſe. Some infer hence the lawfulneſs of cauſing men to ſwear by the true God. See Jer. 5.7. Zeph. 1.5.

V. 8. But cleave unto the Lord] Or, For if you will cleave, i.e. embrace him with faith and love, and adhere unto him as your Head and Husband, with all your heart and ſoul.

as you have done unto this day] i.e. Since under my conduct you came into Canaan.

V. 9. For the Lord hath driven out] Or, Then the Lord will drive out, i.e. Though the nations remaining are ſo numerous and ſtrong that ye are not yet able to drive them out, yet, if ye will wholly adhere unto the Lord, he will do it hereafter according to his promiſe.

V. 10. One man of you ſhall chaſe a thouſand] i.e. He will ſo arm you with courage and ſtrength, and weaken your enemies with fear and faintheartedneſſe, that they ſhall not be able to make any reſiſtance. Lev. 26.8. Deut. 28.7. & 32.30. See Judg. 3.31. & 15.15. 2 Sam. 23.8.

V. 11. Take good heed therefore] i.e. Be not ſecure and careleſſe, but watchful over your ſelves, and earneſt in performing theſe duties, ſeeing they ſo much concern both your preſent and future good.

V. 12. Elſe, if you in any wiſe go back] i.e. If backſliding and apoſtatizing from your religion, ye be ſo far from obeying Gods command for the rooting out of theſe nations that remain, that ye entertain friendſhip and familiarity with them, adhere unto them with your hearts and affections, as a man to his wife, and making marriages with them, perform the duties of holy wedlock to theſe profane and curſed nations.

V. 13. Know for a certainty] i.e. Be aſſured that you ſhall find God no leſſe true in his threatnings to bring, all evils upon you for your apoſtacy and rebellion, then you have hitherto found him true in his promiſes.

they ſhall be ſnares and traps unto you] i.e. They ſhall catch you with their wiles, and by their baits and allurements entice you to commit both corporal and ſpiritual whoredom with them. So Num. 25.1, 2, 18.

and ſcourges in your ſides] He alludeth unto that ancient cuſtome of beating ſlaves and malefactors upon their ſides, Eccleſ. 30.12. & 42.5. Whereby is meant, that if they could not prevaile with allurements, they would by vexations thruſt them on in wicked wayes, and be unto them as whips aud ſpurs to haſten their ſpeed.

and thorns in your eyes] i.e. They ſhall be a continual grief to you, and as vexatious as a thorn to the eye. Or, as others, they ſhall put out your eyes, and ſo deprive you of the ſight and light of your underſtandings, that not being able to diſcern the truth, they ſhall eaſily miſleade you into any way of wickedneſſe. See on Numb. 33. 55.

until you periſh from off this good land] And what can be more bitter and grievous unto you, then if after all the miſeries ye endured in Egypt and the wilderneſſe, and all the pains and perils ye have ſuſtained in the conqueſt of Canaan, and being now but lately come to injoy it, and to taſt the ſweetneſſe and pleaſure of it, you ſhould for your ſins be juſtly caſt out of it?

V. 14. And behold this day I am going] i.e. I am ready in the courſe of nature to dedart this life; and therefore ſeeing I can but a ſmall time to continue to govern and guid you in the wayes of God, I will do what I am able for your good, by admoniſhing, counſelling & exhorting you. And becauſe the words of a dying man are of greateſt efficacy and authority, as being ſpoken out of all his former experience, with moſt ſimplicity, without ſelf-ſeeking or ſiniſter ends, and are of thoſe that hear him moſt attentively and carefully obſerved, therefore I will bequeath theſe words unto you as my laſt will and teſtament, that you may remember and obſerve them after I am gone; 2 Pet. 1. 13.

the way of all the earth] i.e. Of all men that live upon the earth. So 1 King. 2. 2. For all men walk in the path that leadeth to death: Heb. 9. 27. Pſa. 89. 48.

ye know in all your heart] i.e. Moſt certainly.

V. 15. as all good things are come upon you] i.e. As you have found by experience that God hath not failed in any of his promiſes, ſo reſt aſſured, that you ſhall find him no leſſe true in bringing upon you all the evils he hath threatned, until you be utterly deſtroyed from off this good land which he hath given you, if you break covenant with him, and leaving his pure ſervice, fall into idolatry, and rebel againſt him.

Verſe 1. AND Joſhua gathered all the Tribes] See on Chap. 23. 2.

to Shechem] Which was ſituate neer mount Gerazim, about ſix miles from Samaria. Some think, that by Shechem we are to underſtand Shiloh (and ſo alſo I ſometimes thought, as appeareth in my former brief annotations) becauſe Shiloh ſtood in the territories of Shechem, where the Tabernacle now was, and it is not unuſual to put the name of the Country for ſome chief City therein ſituated, as will appear if we compare v. 32. with Gen. 33. 18. So Hebron is ſaid to be given to Caleb, chap. 14. 14. yet the city it ſelf was not given, but the territory belonging to it, chap. 21. 13. And ſome ſuppoſe theſe two Conventions were one and the ſame, but continued two dayes; and ſo that it was but one ſpeech which Joſhua in theſe two chapters made to the heads of the people. But now it ſeemeth to me (and others alſo are of the ſame mind) that both the places, times of meeting, and ſpeeches are all ſeveral: Firſt, and chiefly, becauſe they are diſtinctly expreſſed in the ſtory, and are therefore not to be altered and confounded but upon neceſſary grounds and reaſons. Secondly, the copulative And, which coupleth the two chapters, ſignifieth alſo, or moreover; i.e. Over and above all that hath been ſpoken and done in the former chapter, they were again called together, and Joſhua again did ſpeake unto them. Thirdly, the ſubject of the ſpeeches in theſe two chapters, and the ſcope of them are divers: for the former is exhortatory to ſincerity, integrity and conſtancy in Gods ſervice; this perſwaſory to renew the covenant with God, which was firſt contracted with their father Abraham. Fourthly, it is expreſly ſaid, that they were called to Shechem, and that, I. Becauſe it was the chief and moſt noble City belonging to the Ephraimites, and therefore fitteſt to entertain ſuch a Congregation, of the chiefeſt aud nobleſt of all the Tribes. II. Becauſe it was neereſt to Joſhua, whoſe eaſe was to be reſpected, being the Prince of the people, and now very aged and infirm. III. Becauſe Joſhua thought that place fitteſt for renewing the Covenant between God and the people, where it was firſt made with Abraham, Gen. 12. 6, 7. and afterwards renewed in Joſhua's time, chap. 8. 30, 33. But it is objected, that it is here ſaid, they preſented themſelves before God, i.e. before the Ark, the viſible ſign of Gods preſence, and ver. 26. that they were now by the Sanctuary of the Lord, where Joſhua pitched a great ſtone; and Shiloh, not Shechem, was the place of the Ark and Sanctuary. To which it is anſwered, that though Shiloh was their place in ordinary, yet upon ſuch an extraordinary and ſolemn occaſion, as the contracting of a covenant between God and the people, it was at the pleaſure and in the power of the ſupream Governour to remove it upon good grounds and reaſons: Of which we have examples under the government of Eli, Samuel, Saul and David.

and they preſented themſelves before God] i.e. Before the Tabernacle the ſign of Gods preſence, that being affected with his awful majeſty, they might perform the action intended, and now in hand with more reverence and ſpiritual devotion.

V. 2. And Joſhua ſaid unto all the people] i.e. To the Elders, Princes, Judges and Officers, that they might afterwards relate what he ſaid to all the people reſpectively under their government.

God of Iſrael] i.e. Who hath not only given you your being, but alſo your well-being in the fruition of innumerable bleſſings which he hath heaped upon you his peculiar people above all other nations, and therefore ought to be hearkened unto and obeyed by you in all that he ſpeaketh and commandeth.

your fathers dwelt] i.e. Abraham, Nachor and Terah, the progenitors of all your Nation, both by the fathers and mothers ſide. Of them this is to be underſtood, and not of their Anceſtors more remote, as Noah, Shem, ſeeing they were no idolaters.

on the other ſide of the floud] i.e. Euphrates, uſually ſo called by way of eminency.

and they ſerved other gods] i.e. They were all alike groſſe idolaters, Abraham as well as the reſt, till God out of an eſpecial grace called him to the knowledg of the true God, and the profeſſion of his religion, and ſo made a difference between him and them: Which free grace of God may ſtrongly oblige you to hear and obey him.

V. 3. from the other ſide of the floud] i.e. From Charran in Meſopotamia neer Euphrates, where he lived with his father Terah, his brother Nahor, his wife Sarai, and his nephew Lot for certain years. And when after the death of Terah Nahor would not accompany him into the land of Canaan, he himſelf by the conduct of Gods ſpirit paſſed over the River into Canaan with Sarah and Lot, and left his brother in Meſopotamia; Of whom deſcended Bethuel, Laban, and Rebekah.

and led him throughout all the land of Canaan] Not only that he might take a view of that land which he had given to him and his poſterity for a poſſeſſion, but alſo for his preſent uſe and comfort. Where Gods goodneſſe towards him is magnified, in that he did not only preſerve him in peace and ſafety amongſt ſuch a wicked people, but alſo gave him ſuch favour in their eyes that he found opportunity to inrich himſelf greatly with Gods bleſſings.

and multiplyed his ſeed] Not only by giving him a numerous poſterity by Hagar and Keturah, whom he paſſed over, but alſo that promiſed ſeed Iſaac, as heir by ſpecial covenant-grace and power by Sarah, in whom all the nations of the earth are bleſſed, and from whom all the people of Iſrael were deſcended.

V. 4. And I gave unto Iſaac, Jacob and Eſau] He nameth Eſau with Jacob: but though he were the elder brother, and had for the preſent mount Seir given him for an inheritance, when as Iacob lived as a pilgrim and ſtranger on the earth, and his poſterity as bondmen in Ægypt, yet he giveth unto Iacob here the precedence and preeminence before him; to ſhew how God loved and choſe the one, and hated and rejected the other; and that the people might give unto him the glory of his free grace, and acknowledg themſelves much obliged unto him for it in all love and obedience. For the ſame cauſe Iſaac is preferred before Iſhmael, 1 Chron. 1. 28. Abraham before Nahor and Haran, Gen. 11. 26. and Shem before Ham and Iaphet, Gen. 5. 32.

V. 5. I ſent Moſes alſo and Aaron] To free you out of the miſerable bondage of Ægypt by a ſtrong hand, when as in humane reaſon there was not the leaſt hope of deliverance.

V. 7. darkneſs] i.e. A dark cloud.

and your eyes have ſeen] i.e. So many of you as were under twenty years of age when you came out of Ægypt, in which number were many of the Elders and chief Magiſtrates, unto whom he now ſpake. All above that age dyed in the wilderneſſe, ſaving Caleb and Ioſhua, Num. 14. 29.

and you dwelt in the wilderneſſe] Where I out of meer grace and love, preſerved you miraculouſly by my providence, feeding you with bread from heaven, and with water out of the rock, keeping your cloaths from waxing old, and giving my righteous laws unto you as a rule of your lives, for your preſent direction and future happineſs.

a long ſeaſon] Even fourty years.

V. 8. I brought you into the land of the Amorites] i.e. The Kingdoms of Sihon and Og; and gave them unto the two tribes and half for an inheritance.

V. 9. aroſe and warred againſt Iſrael] i.e. He intended and prepared to raiſe war againſt Iſrael, Num. 22. 11. though he never (that we read of) actually fought with them; yea, the contrary appeareth by Jeptah's ſpeech, Judg. 11. 25. So that the intention is taken ſometime for the very act, as Joh. 10. 32, 33.

V. 11. and the men of Jericho fought againſt you] i.e. The magiſtrates and other inhabitants of Jericho prepared to fight, and fortified themſelves and their city in an hoſtile manner, which is a defenſive war, though they never came out againſt the Iſraelites in battel, yea they were ſo aſtoniſhed with terrour that they durſt not (as we read of) make any warlike reſiſtance when they were entred into the City. Some think it is attributed to them in relation to the other nations who are here joyned with them, and who did fight againſt Iſrael.

V. 12. And I ſent the hornet before you] According to my promiſe, Exod. 23. 28. Deut. 7. 20. Hereby is meant either metaphorically ſuch ſtinging terrors as at their approach, like hornets, did ſting and dead their enemies hearts; or literally very hornets indeed, as Wiſd. 12. 8. Which is the more probable, becauſe the Lord hath been pleaſed to uſe ſuch contemptible creatures to puniſh his and the Churches enemies, as we ſee in the plagues of Ægypt, that he himſelf might have the whole praiſe of the victory, and not the arm of fleſh, or their own ſword and bow.

even the two Kings] Sihon and Og.

but not with thy ſword, nor with thy bow] This is a proverbial ſpeech, for all manner of warlike preparations. So Pſal. 44. 3, 6. & 7. 12, 13. Hereby is meant, that they prevailed not againſt their enemies by their own policy and power only or chiefly: otherwiſe they would have gloryed in themſelves, had not God as the principal agent given victory, and uſed them only as inſtruments to ſerve his providence.

V. 13. Cityes which you built not] For they deſtroyed only Jericho and Hazor, and left the reſt for themſelves to dwell in, chap 11. 13 Now how deeply were they obliged to God, who not only bleſſed their own labours, and ſuffered them to injoy them and eat the fruit of their hands, but alſo gave them to injoy the labours of their enemies, their Cities, Vineyards and oliveyards, which they took no pains to build or plant.

of the vineyards] i.e. Of the fruit of them. So Gen. 3. 1, 3. Rev. 2. 7.

V. 14. ſerve him in ſincerity] i.e. With a pure heart, without out the mixture of hypocriſie or will-worſhip.

and in truth] i. e. In ſimplicity, without any diſſimulation, and with an honeſt and well-meaning ſpirit, without any falſe pretences or counterfeit ſhews of Godlineſſe.

and put away the gods which your fathers ſerved] i. e. The Idols which Terah, Nahor, and even Abraham himſelf before his calling and converſion worſhipped, whileſt they lived beyond Euphrates in Ur of the Chaldeans; and the Idols which your fathers and ſome of your ſelves ſerved in Egypt: All theſe Joſhua would have them put away, that is, forſake and abominate: Not that they had ſtill amongſt them the ſame Idols and Images, (as Jacobs father had before he buried them under an oak, Gen.35.4.) but he meaneth any ſuch of the like kind, or rather the falſe deities repreſented by them, which they might ſecretly worſhip and not be diſcovered. But how is it probable that he thought the Iſraelites ſhould ſtill ſerve thoſe falſe gods, of whom he had before given this teſtimony, that they had cleaved unto the Lord to that very day, chap. 23.8. and of whom it is ſaid, v.31. that they ſerved the Lord all the daies of Joſhua, and who were ſo zealous of Gods pure worſhip that they were ready to commence a war againſt their brethren for a bare appearance of ſuperſtition and will-worſhip? To this I anſwer, that he did not direct this ſpeech, or rather this paſſage of it, to the whole body of the people, much leſſe to the elders and magiſtrates, who at this time would with all ſeverity have puniſhed ſuch groſſe idolatry, but he ſpeaketh it for the ſake of ſome particular perſons amongſt them, who were guilty of this ſin: And intending to make a covenant between God and them, which ſhould not only reſpect the time preſent, but the future alſo, and knowing how prone they would be to idolatry, if left to their own liberty, who ſtill hanckered after it now they were reſtrained, and when they durſt not openly for fear of puniſhment, yet acted in ſecret theſe works of darkneſſe, as they in the wilderneſſe, Amos 5.25, 26. Act.7.42,43. and as they did after Joſhua's death, which he now feared; intending therefore, I ſay, to reſtrain them by covenant from falling into idolatry, as a preparation thereunto, he perſwadeth ſome to caſt away their idols, and all of them to a firm reſolution never again to fall into this ſin.

and in Egypt] See on Exod.1.11.

V. 15. And if it ſeem evil unto you to ſerve the Lord, chooſe you this day whom you will ſerve] He doth not in thus ſpeaking leave them to their choice whether they would ſerve God or idols; for being the ſupream magiſtrate, he was bound by the law to advance Gods pure worſhip, and puniſh idolatry; but comparing that which is beſt with that which is worſt, the ſervice of God with the ſervice of devils, as it were light with darkneſſe, life with death, hell with heaven; he leaveth them to their choice, becauſe no man in his right wits could make any doubt which to chooſe. And this he doth, not to blunt their zeal by any demur, but to ſet an edge on their appetite, and to quicken and haſten their choice, and that they might chooſe more freely, and delighting in their choice, be more firm and conſtant in their covenant. For it much ſtrengtheneth the bond, when a man binds himſelf freely and willingly, and makes him much the more unexcuſable if he do not obſerve it. So Naomi dealt with her daughter in law, Ruth 1.8.15. and Elijah with the Iſraelites, 1 King 18.21. If the Lord be God, ſaith he, as ye ſee it apparent by this miracle wrought in his name, follow him: But if Baal, who can neither hear nor act any thing at their ſuit that call upon him, then follow him. So Joſhua here propoundeth it to their choice, whether they would follow the ſuperſtition of their idolatrous anceſtors, or worſhip the falſe gods of the Amorites who had not been able to deliver their people out of their hand, or, with him and his family, ſerve Jehovah the only true God, who had according to his promiſe deſtroyed the Canaanites before them, and given them their land for an inheritance.

but as for me and my houſe] In which reſolution he doth not only ſhew his zeale in glorifying God, by doing him faithful ſervice, though all others ſhould forſake him, (after the example of Noah and Lot, who remained juſt in their generations that abounded with wickedneſſe, which was alſo the reſolution of Peter, Mat.26.33, 35. Joh.6.67,68.) but alſo and chiefly, like a prudent governour, draweth them on to imitate him, of whom they had juſtly ſo great an opinion for his wiſdome and piety. See Pſal.73.28.

V. 16. God forbid that we ſhould forſake the Lord] i.e. Be it far from us to do ſo wickedly; where they ſhew both their reſolution not to do it, and withal that it was not grounded upon a preſumptuous opinion of their own ſtrength, like Peters, but upon Gods power aſſiſting their weak endeavours.

V. 18. will we alſo ſerve the Lord, for he is our God] i. e. We have choſen him to be our God, and none other; and he hath choſen us to be his peculiar people above all the nations of the earth; and therefore we will wholly devote our ſelves to his ſervice.

V. 19. Ye cannot ſerve the Lord] To wit, if you retain your idols either in your houſes or in your hearts, and mingle falſe worſhip with the true, as v.23. This he ſpeaketh, not to diſcourage and deter them from Gods ſervice, but ſeemingly pulleth them a little back, that they might go on with more eagerneſſe and courage; withall minding them of their weakneſſe and proneneſſe to Idolatry, that they might not ſecurely reſt on their own ſtrength; and that they might not be raſh in their undertakings, which is uſually accompanied with faint and feeble proſecutions, but ſeriouſly conſidering before hand what they purpoſed and promiſed, might be more firm and conſtant in their performances; and that hereby he might draw and (as it were) ſcrew them up to make a more firm covenant with God, to ſerve him with ſo much the more courage and ſtrong reſolution.

for he is an holy God] Hebr. Elohim Kedoſhim, i. e. Holy Gods himſelf; (from which conjunction of the Plural Number with the Singular ſome Collect the Trinity in Unity. See on Gen. 1. 1.) and therefore will never indure a prophane people, nor be ſatisfied with a bare profeſſion of piety ſevered from the power of godlyneſſe.

he is a jealous God] And therefore can no more admit of any mixture of true and falſe religion than a jealous husband of a corival in his love, or that his wife ſhould communicate her ſelf between him and a ſtranger.

he will not forgive your tranſgreſſions] i. e. So long as you continue in theſe ſins, and do not turn unto him by unfeigned repentance. Heb. he will not take away your tranſgreſſions; which others read, he will not bear, or not ſuffer, i. e. he will ſeverely puniſh you for them, Exod. 23.21.

V. 20. If ye forſake the Lord] Namely, after you have ingaged your ſelves by covenant to ſerve and cleave unto him only.

then he will turn] Not in himſelf, who is unchangeable, but in his actions towards you: i. e. After he hath done for you all the good things formerly related, he will do you hurt and conſume you, and that not only for your other ſins, but alſo for your breach of covenant added unto them.

V. 21. Nay, but we will ſerve the Lord] q. d. All this which thou haſt ſaid ſhall not hinder us from entring into covenant with God; for we are fully reſolved to ſerve the Lord only.

V. 22. And Joſhua ſaid] He Concluded and ratified the covenant between God and the people.

ye are witneſſes againſt your ſelves] i. e. There ſhall need no other proof to convince you of rebellion and apoſtaſie, if you forſake the Lord and ſerve other gods, but your own words and covenant, and the teſtimony of your own conſciences.

V. 23. Now therefore put away] i. e. Make no delay, but preſently put your covenant in execution.

the ſtrange gods that are among you] i. e The idols which ſome of you ſtill do (though ſecretly) retain and worſhip (and that they ſo did, appeareth, Amos 5.25,26) let them be put away, eſpecially let them have no place in your hearts and affections. See on v.14.

V. 25. So Joſhua made a covenant with the people] i. e. As Gods ſervant and Deputy he renewed and ratified a covenant between God and the people.

and ſet them a ſtatute and an ordinance in Shechem] i. e. He did confirm and ratifie it as a ſtanding and perpetual law for them and all their poſterity, that they ſhould as Gods peculiar people ſerve him only, and utterly renounce all Idols and idolatry.

V. 26. And Joſhua wrote theſe words] i. e. He either wrote himſelf, or cauſed ſome of the Prieſts to write the words of this covenant, with the whole ſtory relating all the circumſtances that did concern it, and all theſe paſſages between him and the people.

in the book of the law of God] To wit, which was written by Moſes, and put in the ſide of the ark of the covenant, that it might be a witneſs againſt them, Deut.31.25,26. With this Joſhua adjoyned this covenant for the ſame end and uſe, that it might be in ſafe cuſtody, and ready to be copied out with the law it ſelf upon all occaſions; that hereby the people might be made more careful to obſerve the law and this covenant, and the better convinced of their ſin, if they ſhould tranſgreſſe it by their apoſtacy and rebellion.

and took a great ſtone and ſet it up there] That it might ſerve for a monument to put them in minde of this ſolemn covenant renewed and ratified between God and his people: as it was the cuſtome of thoſe dayes, chap. 4. 3. Gen.28.18. and 31.45. and 35.14. Exod.24.4. Deut.27.2.

under an oak] Which (as ſome conceive) was the ſame under which Jacob buried the Idols and images that were found in his family, Gen. 35.4. It is called the plaine of the pillar, Judg.9.6.

that was by the Sanctuary] That is, near, or it may be in the outer Court of the Tabernacle, which was on this occaſion brought thither for the gracing and ſolemnizing of this action in renewing the Covenant.

V. 27. this ſtone ſhall be a witneſſe unto us] i. e. It ſhall ſerve as a witneſs to convince you of your ſin, if you do not keep your covenant, ſeeing all men will in future ages take notice that it was purpoſely erected to be a monument and memorial of it.

for it hath heard] By a figurative ſpeech ſenſe is emphatically aſcribed to a ſenſeleſſe ſtone. So Deut.4.26. & 32.1. Pſal.19.1. Iſa.1.2. Jer.22.29. Luke 19.40. As though he ſhould ſay, This ſtone, when you ſee it, ſhall repreſent to your minds and conſciences the covenant which ye have now made, as well as if it could both hear and ſpeak; and if that will not move you, you ſhall ſhew your ſelves more ſenſeleſſe than the very ſtone it ſelf.

all the words of the Lord] i. e. Of the covenant between the Lord and you.

leſt ye deny your God] i. e. Fall into Idolatry, and forſake Gods pure worſhip, contrary to your covenant.

V. 29. Joſhua the ſon of Nun the ſervant of the Lord dyed] This is his Epitaph, which ſummarily comprehended all praiſes that could be given unto him, ſeeing in his life and death he approved himſelf the faithful ſervant of the Lord, living in his fear and dying in his favour, and ſo in expectation of the crown of righteouſneſs, which God of his free grace reſerved for him as the reward of all his faithful labour, 2 Tim. 4. 8. Rev.14.13. See on Deut.34.5.

V. 30. in Timnath-Serah] Called Timnath-Heres, Judg.2.9. ſome letters being tranſpoſed. It ſignifieth, the figure of the Sun: Some think it was ſo named by the Iſraelites from the figure of the Sun placed upon Joſhua's monument in that City, to preſerve the memorial of that great miracle of the Suns ſtanding ſtill at his prayer: but it had its name before Joſhua was buried there, and that, as others think, from the Idolatry formerly there committed in worſhipping the Sun.

V. 32. brought up out of Egypt] Exod.13.19. As he had made them ſwear at his death, Gen.50.25. even as Jacob his father had made him ſwear the like, Gen.49.29,30.

buried they in Shechem] They buried him not in the field of Machpelah, the common burial-place of his anceſtors, where Abraham, Sarah, Iſaac, Rebekah, Leah, Jacob were laid, but in a parcel of ground which Iacob on his death-bed gave unto him as a ſpecial legacy; becauſe they uſually deſired to be buried in their own inheritance. See the Appendix to the Annotations upon Geneſis.

pieces of ſilver] Or, lambs. See on Gen.33.19.

V. 33. which was given him in mount Ephraim] This hill fell not unto him by lot (for the inheritance of the Prieſts lay within the Tribes of Iudah, Simeon and Benjamin only) but by an extraordinary gift was conferred on the high Prieſt in Ioſhua's time, that he might be neer unto him, and the more ready to inquire of God for him upon all occaſions; and alſo that he might be neer unto Shiloh, where the Tabernacle was now ſeated; where he was to be reſident, that he might be at hand to perform unto God the duties of his publick worſhip.

On the Book of JUDGES.

The Argument.

Within which ſpace we are to comprehend the years attributed to the ſeveral oppreſſions mentioned in this Book: See on chap.3.11. Yet ſome, that they may make the Apoſtles account Acts 13.19,20. agree with the Chronologie of this Story, will have the years of the Oppreſſors diſtinct from the years of the Judges: Now Cuſhan-riſhathaim is ſaid to have oppreſſed Iſrael eight years,* chap.3.8. Eglon, eighteen, chap. 3.14. Jabin, twenty chap.4.3. the Midianites, ſeven, chap.6.1. the Ammonites, eighteen, chap.10.8. the Philiſtims, fourty, chap.13.1. All which amount to an hundred and eleven. Which years, if ſeveral indeed from thoſe of the Judges, would make this Book a ſtory of four hundred and ten years, which having the fourty years of Eli's Judicature, 1 Sam.4.18. added to them, would juſt make up the ſumme Paul ſpeaketh of, four hundred and fifty years. But, as hath been ſaid, the times of the ſix Oppreſſions muſt be made to run in amongſt the times of the twelve Judges, and ſome other ſupputation would be found out for the Apoſtles account; otherwiſe, by unhandſome avoyding the inconvenience of that place we ſhould meet with as great, if not greater, 1 King.6.1. There be, that make quick work, and think to ſalve up the matter, and ſolve the doubt, by blaming the Scribe that Copied out the Book of the Acts, and ſay he miſtook, and wrote τετρακοσιοις for τριακοσιοις, four hundred, for three hundred: But this ſeemeth more haſte then good ſpeed, and rather a cutting then an untying the knot. Others underſtand that account, not of the times of the Judges, but of the times before, from the Birth of Iſaac to the Conqueſt of Canaan. Some reckon from the beginning of Moſes government to the end of Samuels. See on Acts 13. 20. But let us to our purpoſe, Concerning the Judges mentioned in this Book, we are to take notice, that they were not ordinary Magiſtrates, but extraordinarily called by God in times of great extremity, when all things ſeemed deplorable and deſperate, and endowed with heroick gifts of the Spirit fitting them for thoſe ſervices in which he was pleaſed to imploy them; Which was uſually to fight his battels, and by vanquiſhing their enemies, to give his people deliverance from their grievous oppreſſions; as alſo to reſtore and rectifie the Government, when through the peoples inſolencies and unrulineſſe all things were brought to diſorder and confuſion. Neither had theſe Judges Supreme and Regal power committed unto them (for all the while God was their King, and kept the jura regalia or Royall rights in his own hand, unto whom as ſupreme they were to appeal in caſes of greateſt difficulty, Exod.18.15,19. till in Samuels time they rejected him and his Government, 1 Sam.8.7. and would have a King of their own to reign over them, like other Nations) but they were only Gods Lievtenants, to go out and in before the people at his command, to execute his deſignes, and at his appointment (when their work was done) to lay down their Authority and Rule, as we ſee in Gideons example, chap.8.23. Now theſe were called Judges, becauſe they were Gods Miniſters appointed by him to execute his righteous judgements; both in ſubduing, puniſhing and deſtroying the wicked enemies of his Church, and when his people were delivered from tyranny and oppreſſions, to adminiſter juſtice unto them according to his Laws, and preſerve unto them Gods true Religion in purity and ſincerity, without any tainture of Idolatry and Superſtition. The main ſcope of this Hiſtory is to ſet forth, and leave to the uſe of all poſterity, the ſtate and condition of the Church and Commen-wealth of Iſrael from their firſt ſetling in Canaan to the time of Eli; That all ſucceeding Ages might learn by their example to imitate ſuch things in them as are worthy imitation, and ſhun the contrary: For it diſcovereth their proſperous ſucceſſe in all their enterpriſes, whileſt they profeſſed and maintained Gods true Religion, and valiantly executed his commands in fighting his battels and driving out their enemies; But when out of ſloth and love of eaſe, or cowardly fear, they neglected Gods charge, and ſuffered them to live amongſt them, the Lord, as he had threatned, Exod.23.33. Joſh.25.13. Num.33.55. cauſed them to become ſnares and traps unto them, ſcourges to their ſides, and thorns in their eyes, to vex and grive them, as plainly appeareth by this Hiſtory: For by converſing with theſe curſed Nations, they learned their works, Pſal. 106. 35. They took their daughters to be their wives, and gave their daughters to their ſons, and worſhipped their gods, Baalim and Aſhteroth, chap.3.6 and 2. 13. and ſerved their Idols, which were a ſnare unto them; yea, they ſacrificed their ſons and daughters unto devils, Pſalm 106. 36, 37. By which fearful apoſtacy they ſhewed their horrible ingratitude unto God, who by ſuch mighty wonders had delivered them out of the Egyptian bondage, ſubdued their many and mighty enemies, and performed all his gracious promiſes in bringing them into, and giving them poſſeſſion of that good land of Canaan, which flowed with Milk and Honey; and alſo their ſhameful perfidiouſneſſe in breaking their ſolemn Covenant with God, into which Joſhua a little before his death had cauſed them to enter. By all which provocations they fearfully kindled Gods juſt wrath againſt them, as the Story ſheweth; ſo that he made them unſucceſſeful in all their enterpriſes, delivering them into the hands of ſpoilers that ſpoiled them, and ſold them into the hands of their enemies round about, ſo that they could no longer ſtand before them, chap.2.14,15. but being ſubdued, were grievouſly oppreſſed by them. Yet in all this juſt ſeverity the Lord was ſtill mindeful of his Covenant, and did not utterly reject them, as their ſins deſerved, but in his great mercy and goodneſs did thus ſharply correct them to bring them to repentance. Which was no ſooner performed, but preſently he raiſed up Judges to deliver them out of the hands of their oppreſſing enemies. And though they often relapſed into their Idolatrous and ſinful courſes, and were as often ſeverely puniſhed, yet returning unto God, who ſmote them, by ſerious repentance; they ſtill found him alike gracious and merciful in pardoning their ſins, and ſending them deliverance. Laſtly, by that horrible corruption of Religion and manners which was at this time in the Common-wealth of Iſrael, ſpecially inſtanced in that bloody maſſacre of Gideons ſons, and the Sodomitical filthineſſe of the men of Gibeah countenanced and maintained by the whole Tribe of Benjamin, is declared unto all poſterity the miſerable condition of ſuch a State and people as live in an Anarchy, or (which is almoſt as bad) under the Government of wicked Magiſtrates, who either out of fear dare not execute Juſtice upon offenders, being over-awed with the inſolencies of a ſtiff-necked and rebellious people, or out of favour will not, becauſe they like their courſes, as being ſuitable to their own diſpoſitions; Or through negligence, or love of their own eaſe, will not trouble themſelves to examine and take notice of any wickedneſſe, that it may be puniſhed, but, as if there were no King in Iſrael, ſuffer every one to do that which ſeemeth good in his own eyes.

CHAP. I.

Verſ. 1. N*Ow after the death of Joſhua*] i.e. Not many years after. For the firſt Judge after his departure was Othniel, who married Calebs daughter, and lived in Joſhua's time.

the children of Iſrael] Being deprived of an head and Commander in chief, who might direct and lead them in all things concerning the war which they now intended.

asked the Lord] This they did, I. Becauſe the buſineſſe in hand was of great weight and importance, ſeeing if they miſcarried in their firſt attempts, it would be a great diſcouragement to themſelves, and heartning to their enemies, who would be ready to think that all their good ſucceſs in their former wars, had proceeded from the wiſdome and valour of Joſhua their General, and that he being dead, all their hopes dyed with him. II. Becauſe they would hereby acknowledg God to be their Soveraign Lord and King, who retained in his own hand all the regal Rights and Royalties, and therefore had the whole power and priviledge to manage the war, and to appoint whom he pleaſed to be his Lievtenants and Deputies. III. Becauſe they knew, he being infinite in wiſdom was beſt able to direct them, and that there was little hope of proſpering in their undertakings, unleſſe he did guide and aſſiſt them. IV. They did it to prevent diviſions and emulations amongſt the Tribes, which might have happened about precedencie and preferment of one before another, if the Lord himſelf had not appointed and determined it. Therefore they would conclude nothing in this matter, but asked the Lord, namely by the mediation of the high Prieſt, conſulting with his Oracle by Urim and Thummim, according to the Law, Num. 27. 21. Exod. 28.30. So chap. 20. 18. 1 Sam. 23. 9.

Who ſhall go up for us] The people being now ſatiate with reſt, and having enjoyed their fill of eaſe and pleaſure, and beginning to find themſelves ſomewhat ſtreightned in their inheritances, becauſe the Canaanites did ſtill hold a great part of them in their poſſeſſion, begin to think and reſolve of renewing the war, and therefore do not here inquire whether or no they ſhould go out to fight againſt their enemies, (for this God often had expreſly commanded, and Ioſhua a little before his death had perſwaded them to) but which of the tribes ſhould firſt begin and be a precedent to the reſt.

againſt the Canaanites] i.e. Not thoſe only who were properly and particularly ſo called, but all the curſed nations. For Iudah and Simeon do by virtue of their Commiſſion attempt firſt the ſubduing of the Jebuſites and Perizzites, and not the Canaanites that lived on the Sea-Coaſt.

V. 2. And the Lord ſaid, Judah ſhall go up] i.e. Not as a Captain over the other tribes, (for this was not the peoples inquiry) but ſhall begin this warre againſt theſe nations, and ſo be a precedent unto all the reſt. By going up, is either meant the preparing themſelves to ſet upon the work, or becauſe they were to march into an high and mountainous country. Now Judah was appointed to be firſt in this expedition. I. Becauſe it was the moſt numerous, valiant, able and active of all the tribes; and God uſually chuſeth the fitteſt means to ſerve his providence: yet ſometimes he doth otherwiſe, that by the weakneſſe of the Inſtruments he uſeth he may have the more glory, and keep men from boaſting. II. Becauſe he would honour this tribe above the reſt, out of which the Meſſiah was to come, who ſhould be King, and by his Scepter rule all nations, Jews and Gentiles, according to Jacobs Prophecy, Gen 49. 8. And therefore here, as alſo in the war againſt the Benjamites, chap. 20. 18. and alſo when they pitched their camp in the wilderneſſe, when they offered, when they marched, Judah ſtill had the firſt and chief place, Numb. 2. 3. & 7. 12. & 10. 14.

V. 3. And Judah ſaid unto Simeon his brother] They were brethren not only in a generall relation, as all the other tribes, but in a more ſpeciall manner, becauſe deſcended both of the ſame father and mother, and alſo becauſe Simeons inheritance was taken out of Judahs, Joſh. 19. 1. and ſo being intermixed one with another they were tyed by this neer bond of neighbour-hood to joyn together in their defenſive and offenſive wars.

Come up with me into my lot] Before the land was divided, the tribes were bound to fight all together againſt the common enemie: But when every tribe had their own inheritance allotted unto them, they were to be at that care and charge that was requiſite for expelling thoſe enemies which lived amongſt them, and held part of that which belonged unto them in their poſſeſſion. And for the better enabling of them to performe it, they might call another Tribe unto their aſſiſtance. Yea, but they had an expreſſe promiſe from God, that if they would attempt it they ſhould have good ſucceſſe, and none of their enemies ſhould be able to ſtand againſt them; what need then was there for Judah to call in Simeon to his ayd? I anſwer, they might lawfully do it; becauſe Gods promiſes of the iſſue and ſucceſſe do not hinder from uſing all lawfull means for fullfilling of them; yea rather we are bound to uſe them as ſerving his providence to effect and bring them to paſſe.

V. 4. and they ſlew of them in Bezek] i.e. In the City ſo called, and the territories belonging to it. This was part of Judahs inheritance, and neer unto Jeruſalem. Here Saul muſtered his Army when he went to relieve Jabeſh-Gilead againſt the Ammonites, 1 Sam. 11. 8.

V. 5. And they found Adoni-Bezek] Who was Lord and King of Bezek, as his name ſignifieth. See on Joſh. 10. 1.

V. 6. But Adoni-Bezek] i.e. When he ſaw his Army diſcomfited and ten thouſand of them ſlain on the place, and the remainder flying to ſave their lives, he likewiſe fled with them.

and cut off his thumbs and his great toes] In their ordinary way of execution they ſhould have ſlaine him out-right, and not have reſerved him alive thus mangled; yet, though they had, as it ſeemeth, no intention to let him live, (for they carried him away thus wounded to Ieruſalem, and neglecting his cure he there dyed) they thus tortured him, contrary to their uſuall manner of dealing with their vanquiſhed enemies, which was not like Barbarians delighting in cruelty, to torture them to death, but to make a quick diſpatch, by hanging, or ſlaying them with the ſword: But it ſeemeth that either they had heard of the like cruelty, he exerciſed upon others, or were eye-witneſſes of it, when ſacking Bezek they might find ſome of thoſe miſerable Kings thus uſed, and their hearts earning at the ſight of ſo horrid a ſpectacle, they might think themſelves juſtly bound by the law of retaliation to requite like for like Exod. 21 24. Or if none of theſe, then this came to paſſe by a ſpeciall providence of God, ſecretly inclining their hearts to inflict upon him theſe unuſuall, but yet deſerved, puniſhments. See on 2 Samuel 12. 31.

V. 7. Threeſcore and ten Kings] It is not at all unprobable that this one King, being a great Souldier, more mighty and powerfull than all his neighbours, tyrannicall, active and violent in his attempts ſhould vanquiſh ſo great a number of Kings. For in thoſe times and countries (as now in the Weſt-Indies) almoſt every City had its King to govern it. So it is ſaid that Joſhua vanquiſhed one and thirty Kings in that little Country of Canaan, beſides all thoſe who were not ſubdued by him. Yet it is not likely that Adoni-bezek had ſeventy Kings at once in this ſubjection and baſe ſlavery, but throughout the whole courſe of his conqueſts, ſome ſucceſſively after others having their thumbs and their great toes cut off] This cruelty he exerciſed upon them, not, as ſome think, that being made unſerviceable for the warres they might not again riſe and rebell againſt him: For this there might be ſome colour, if he had ſet them at liberty to live in their own Countries; but none at all, ſeeing they were kept ſtill under his power to kill them at his own pleaſure. He thus uſed them rather either out of an innate and more then barbarous cruelty, ſporting himſelfe in the calamities and miſeries of others; or out of pride and vain glory, uſing them as trophies of his victories; or by ſuch examples to terrifie all other Kings from making any reſiſtance when he invaded their dominions. The like examples we find recorded in our latter ſtories: as of Sapores King of Perſia, who having taken Valerian the Emperour priſoner, uſed him as his footſtool or ſtirrop to mount up on horſeback; and of Tamberlaine the Scythian King, who having taken Bajazeth in battel, carried him about in an iron cage as a trophy of his victory, and uſed other Kings to draw his Chariot.

And they brought him to Jeruſalem] That he might be a publick ſpectacle of Gods heavy and juſt vengeance upon barbarous and bloudy tyrants to deterre others from following his example.

V. 8. Now the children of Judah had fought againſt Jeruſalem, and had taken it] Here he gives a reaſon why they brought Adonibezek to Jeruſalem, becauſe it was now in Judahs poſſeſſion. For Joſhua and his Army had fought againſt it, and taken it, as ſome gather from Joſh. 10. 42. & 15. 63. that is, the Southerne part of the City, called Jebus but not the Northern, called Salem, Joſh. 15.8. 63.& 18.11.28. and here ver. 21. For Jeruſalem was a double city, beſides the Fort or Caſtle, (and therefore its name is of the duall number) of which one part, namely the Southern, was in Judahs lot, and the other, to wit, the Northern, with the caſtle, was in Benjamins. See on chap. 19. 1. 10.

and ſet the City on fire] Heb. Caſt the City into the fire. Hypallage, for, they caſt fire into the City. So Pſal. 74. 7. They have ſent thy Sanctuary into the fire, for they have caſt fire into thy Sanctuary. By this phraſe of caſting fire into the City is implyed, that they burnt not all, but only ſome part, and left the reſt for their habitation. Now upon this occaſion of ſpeaking what was done in Joſhua's time for the winning of this City, he maketh a digreſſion from the former ſtory in hand, and repeateth divers other paſſages reſpecting the tribe of Judah, which are tranſlated out of Joſh. 15. 13. 19. with explanation of ſome particulars. The which digreſſion is continued unto v. 16.

V. 9. went [went down to fight againſt the Canaanites that dwelt in the mountain] i. e. They deſcended from Jeruſalem, ſituate on a mountain, into the valleys and champion countrey, and then aſcended to fight with the Canaanites which dwelt upon other mountains For in that mountainous countrey, they muſt needs deſcend from one mount, before they could aſcend up to another.

V. 10. And Judah went againſt the Canaanites that dwelt in Hebron] To wit, under the conduct of Joſhua and Caleb, Ioſh. 10. 36. & 15. 13. 14. For the things here related to v. 16. were done in Ioſhuahs time, but here in ſome paſſages expreſſed more fully and particularly.

V. 11. And from thence he went] See on Ioſh. 15. 15. 19.

V. 16. the Kenite Moſes father in law] Moſes father in law in the Scripture is called by divers names, Jethro, Hobab, Reuel, and here Kenite which ſeemeth to be a patronymick, or his ſirname; or rather the name of his nation, Numb. 24. 21.

out of the City of Palm-trees] i. e. Jericho, Deut. 34. 3. ſo called from the plenty of Palm-trees that grew in that fruitfull territorie belonging to it. Here the poſterity of Iethro firſt ſeated themſelves. For howſoever Iethro himſelfe would not be perſwaded to accompany Moſes unto Canaan in reſpect of his great age, and the difficulty of the action of conquering the land, but went back into his own countrey, and there dyed, Ex. 18. 27. yet before his death it is probable that he gave in charge to his kindred and poſterity, that they ſhould follow the Iſraelites thither, and there plant themſelves, that they might enjoy the benefit of the promiſe made unto him by Moſes; Numb. 10. 32. If thou go with us, it ſhall be, that what goodneſſe the Lord ſhall do unto us, the ſame will we do unto thee. Or it may be when God had commanded Moſes to deſtroy the Midianites, that he ſent firſt for Iethro his poſterity and kindred to come away to him from them, that they might not be involved in the common deſtruction; as Saul did in like caſe, 1 Sam. 15. 6. By city are meant the Territories, hamlets and villages belonging to the city: for Iericho it ſelfe was burnt, and not reedified, and therefore no fit place for their habitation.

with the children of Judah] Unto which Tribe the Kenites chiefly adhered, and being at liberty to chooſe the place of their habitation, Num. 10. 32. and dwelling allwayes in tents, which were eaſie to remove from place to place, they removed with them into the wilderneſſe of Iudah, or that mountainous country adjoyning unto it. From theſe Kenites the Rechabites deſcended, Ier. 35. 2.

which lyeth in the South of Arad.] A certain place neer to the land of Canaan and to the countrey of the Amalekites, whoſe King and people joyning with the Amalekites, made war againſt Iſrael, Exod. 17. 8. Num: 21, 1, 2. Here the Kenites dwelt in the time of Saul, till he being appointed by God to deſtroy Amalek, gave them warning to prevent their deſtruction by departing from among them 1 Sam. 15. 6.

among the people] i. e. With them of the tribe of Iudah.

V. 17. And Judah went with Simeon his brother] i. e. To aſſiſt him for the recovering of his inheritance by driving out the Canaanites, as Simeon in the like kinde had formerly aſſiſted him. v. 3.

ſlew the Canaanites that inhabited Zephath] This City was in the dominion of King Arad, and was now anathematized and devoted to utter deſtruction, and therefore called Hormah; either becauſe the Iſraelites had bound themſelves by ſome preſent vow to deſtroy it utterly, if the Lord would deliver it into their hands; or rather, becauſe they had vowed to do ſo, if the Lord would be pleaſed to deliver the King of Arad and his Army into their hands; which accordingly they then did Num. 21. 1. 3. and now it being re-edified, they do it again the ſecond time.

V. 18: And Judah took Gaza, &c.] Theſe cities fell to the lot of Iudah, Ioſh. 15. 45. 47. and were in the land of the Philiſtims bordering on the Mediterranean Sea, and were afterwards recovered from Iſrael for their ſins, ch. 3. 3. & 14. 19. & 16, 1, 2. & 1 Sam. 6. 17. For the Iſraelites and the Philiſtims having continuall wars one with another, accordingly as either party prevailed, theſe Cities were in the poſſeſſion of the ſtronger ſide. Gaza had its name, not from the Perſian word Gaza, as ſome would haue it, ſignifying treaſure, becauſe Cambyſes there laid his treaſures when he intended a warre on Greece; but from the Hebrew Azza, the firſt letter Ajin, as the Greeks are wont, being turned into Gamma. This city was ſo ſtrong in Alexanders time, that it coſt him two moneths ſiege to take it.

V. 19. And the Lord was with Judah] i. e. To proſper and aſſiſt them in all their undertakings in a ſpecial manner. So Gen. 39. 21. 1 Sam. 18. 14. Whereby as it is implyed, that they had all their good ſucceſſe from God, ſo they are ſecretly taxed for their fear and cowardiſe, ſeeing they durſt not attempt the driving out of the Canaanites from the valleys, becauſe of their iron chariots, they having had ſo great experience of Gods gracious aſſiſtance.

becauſe they had Chariots of iron] See Joſhua 17. 16. This was no juſt cauſe to deterre them from following their conqueſt; for they had Gods promiſe of victory, notwithſtanding thoſe iron Chariots, Joſh. 17. 18. It was only their want of valour, their ſinful fear, and want of faith in Gods promiſes that hindred them, as alſo the neglect of Gods commands, who enjoyned them to drive them out, Joſh. 23. 6.

V. 20. And they gave Hebron unto Caleb] See the ſtory of it, Joſh. 14. 6, &c. and the Annot. on that place.

V. 21. And the Children of Benjamin] See on Joſh. 15 63.

dwell with the children of Benjamin in Jeruſalem] i. e. In their part of the City, and the caſtle or fort. For theſe remained unconquered till Davids time, 2 Sam. 5 6, 7.

V. 22. the houſe of Joſeph] i. e. The Tribes of Ephraim and Manaſſeh.

went up againſt Bethel] i. e. To fight againſt and take it, becauſe it belonged to their lot, ſee on Joſh. 16. 2.

V. 23. was Luz] i. e. A Filburd-nut; ſo called (as ſome think) becauſe it reſembled a nut in its figure. See Gen. 28. 19.

V. 24. the entrance into the City] Not the gate (which might eaſily be found without a guide, but it may be was now ſhut, bolted and blocked up, the enemy approaching neer it) but the weakeſt part of the city, where it might moſt eaſily be aſſaulted, ſcaled and taken.

and we will ſhew thee mercy] Namely, in ſaving thy life, with theirs that belonged unto thee, and alſo rewarding thee for this ſervice. For though the law commanded generally to put all the Canaanites to death yet the rigor of it might upon occaſion be moderated by common equity and the law of nature, which requireth we ſhould do well to them that have dealt well with us, as we ſee in the example of Rahab. See on Joſh. 6. 25.

V. 25. But they let go the man, &c.] i. e. Set them at liberty to diſpoſe of themſelves as they thought good.

V. 26. and the man went into the land of the Hittites] i. e Not thoſe that dwelt in the land of Canaan, who were to be deſtroyed ſoon after, but others of that name further off and free from that danger. Others think that here are meant the Hittites of Canaan, who inhabited on the North ſide of mount Ephraim, where the Iſraelites permitted him to build and live for doing them this ſervice.

and built a City] Being potent and rich, either of himſelfe, or by the reward given him for his ſervice, and accompanied with his family, friends and allies, who were ſpared for his ſake, he built a City for his and their habitation.

and called the name of it Luz] Out of his love to his native Country where he was born and bred, he called the City he built by the ſame name, that the memory of it might not periſh, but by this means be preſerved unto poſterity; in which he had his deſire, as appeareth by the words following.

V. 27. Neither did Manaſſeh] Namely, that part of the tribe that dwelt in Canaan.

drive out] Having diſabled themſelves by their ſins, which had deprived them of Gods aſſiſtance. See Joſh. 17. 11,12.

Beth-ſhean] called Beth-ſhan, 1 Sam. 31. 13.

Taanach] A Royall City neer mount Gilboa, Joſh. 17,11. whoſe King Joſhua ſlew, Joſh.12.21.

Dor] A Royall City with large Territories, whoſe King was ſlaine, Joſh 11. 2.& 12. 23.

Ibleam] Both theſe places lay neer the mid-land Sea, and in the tribe of Manaſſeh, Joſh. 17. 11.

Megiddo] A great and royall City, Joſh. 12. 21, in the lot of Manaſſeh, Joſh 17.11. in whoſe Territories the good King Joſiah was ſlaine, 2 King, 23. 29.

would dwell in that land] Either by force or compoſition.

V. 28. they put the Canaanites to tribute] Either out of cowardiſe, becauſe they durſt not, or out of ſloth and covetouſneſſe; because they would not drive them out, they made peace with them upon this onely condition, that they ſhould pay them tribute; and that when they were become ſtrong, and ſo able to have driven them out if they had had an heart to doe it: Which did much aggravate their ſinne of neglecting Gods expreſſe command, Exodus 23.32. Deutr.7.2.

V. 29. Gezer] A City within the lot of Ephraim, Joſh. 16. 10 given to the Levites, Joſh. 21.21. on the River Gaas neer unto the mid-land Sea, foure miles from Nicopolis, i. e. Emmaus.

dwelt in Gezer among them] i.e Not intermingled one with another in the ſame city, but in the ſame Province or Territories. For the Canaanites alone poſſeſſed the City till Pharaoh killed them and burnt it, 1 King 9. 16.

V. 33. Beth-ſhemeſh] See on Joſh.15. 10.

he dwelt among the Canaanites] Not in the ſame cities or towns, but in the ſame province, wherin their cities were intermingled one with another.

the inhabitants of the land] i.e. The ancient Inhabitants of the land, and who now alſo held a great part thereof in preſent poſſeſſion.

V. 34 forced the children of Dan into the mountain] i. e. Though the children of Dan had at the firſt prevailed, againſt the Amorites, and poſſeſſed themſelves of their Countrey, yet afterwards the Amorites recruiting their Army, & getting more ſtrength, recovered the beſt part of the countrey, namely the valleys & forced the Danites into the mountains; Where being much ſtraightned, they took occaſion to inlarge their poſſeſſions by making that expedition unto Laiſh, related ch. 18.

V. 35. But the Amorites would dwell in mount Heres] i e. They were not content to poſſeſſe themſelves of the fruitfull valleys, but alſo took into their poſſeſſion mount Heres in Aijalon, as being better (it ſeemeth) than the mountains which they left to the Danites, and ſo the more ſtreightned them in their habitations.

yet the hand of the houſe of Joſeph prevailed] i.e Aſſiſting the Danites with their forces they thus far prevailed, that they became tributaries to the Danite, though they could not recover their poſſeſſions from them nor drive them out of their Country.

V. 36. Akrabbim] A montainous place called, The aſcent of Scorpions, lying Southerly on the ſalt Sea, & eaſternly on mount Seir & the uttermoſt borders of Canaan towards the South. But it ſeemeth to me that he ſpeaketh not here of that Akrabbim in the lot of Iudah, Ioſh 15.3. but of another in which the Amorites dwelt, neer unto the tribes of Ephraim and Manaſſeh.

CHAP. II.

Verſ. 1. AND an Angel of the Lord] Some underſtand a meſſenger ſent from God, who was either Prophet, or Prieſt, or both. And indeed Prophets in the Scriptures ſomtimes are called angels, Hag. 1. 13, and ſo are likewiſe Gods Prieſts and Miniſters, Mal. 2. 7. 1 Cor.11. 10. And they think this angel was ſuch an one, and not an an angel ſent from heaven, ſeeing it is ſaid he came from Gilgal to Bochim, whereas if he had been ſent from heaven, it would have been ſo expreſſed. Some particularly pitch upon Phinehas, and ſay he is here underſtood. Others think it was a created angel, who taking upon him a humane ſhape had motions from place to place attributed unto him. But for my own part, I do not approve of either of theſe opinions, but rather think he was the Angel of the Covenant, even the Lord Ieſus Chriſt, I. Becauſe he ſpake not, as an Angel, or a Prophet, in the name of the Lord, but in the perſon of the Lord himſelfe, appropriating the works of the Lord, as done by him, namely the peoples deliverance from Ægypt, and bringing them into Canaan, and ſo keeping his covenant with them. II. Becauſe it is moſt probable, this was the ſame Angel that appeared to Ioſhua at Gilgal, Ioſh. 5. 14. (and therefore is here ſaid to have come up from Gilgal) & to Gideon, ch. 6. 11. and to Manoahs wife, ch. 13.3. But that was Chriſt the angel of the covenant, as ſhall appear hereafter in due place. III. Becauſe he thus appearing, it is ſaid, v. 5. they ſacrificed there, that is, in Bochim, unto the Lord; as alſo Gideon and Manoah did in the like caſe. Now it was not lawfull to offer any ſacrifices ſaving in the Tabernacle, and upon that one Altar there, or at the apparition of this Angel of the covenant, or onely peace-offerings and gratulatory oblations, but not burnt-offerings, unleſſe upon great and extraordinary occaſions they had a ſpeciall diſpenſation from God.

came up from Gilgal to Bochim] This though here related, yet was done, as likewiſe all the reſt of this ſtory, to v.11 in the time of Joſhua & the Elders that ſurvived him, but is here inſerted to make way for the following hiſtory concerning the peopls ſins, apoſtaſy & idolatry, Gods ſevere puniſhments in delivering them into the hands of their malicious in and tyrannous enemies and his gracious deliverance of them upon their repentance. And this appeareth, becauſe the ſins for which the Angel reproved them, were ſuch as they had committed in Joſhua's time, namely, leagues and familiar friendſhip with the curſed nations and not demoliſhing their altars as God had commanded, though their good Generall Joſhua had earneſtly perſwaded them unto it, and uſed all the indeavours, backed with the authority, of his place, to ſee it duly executed But not ſuch as they fell into immediately after the death of him and the Elders, namely apoſtaſy and idolatry, which the Angel ſurely would have reproved them for, had they now been guilty, as they were preſently afterwards in the time of the Judges. Secondly, becauſe Gilgal is here mentioned, where he firſt appeared to Joſhua, Joſh.5. 13. and which was formerly the place of their ſtanding camp, from which it ſeemeth they were not yet all come away, although the land was now divided by lot, ſeeing after this meeting they went every man to his inheritance, v. 6. And laſtly becauſe it is expreſſely ſaid that Joſhua diſmiſſed the people from this aſſembly, that the people ſeaved the Lord all his dayes, and all the daies of the Elders alſo that ſurvived him, and then preſently after the death of Joſhua & the Elders they forſook the Lord, and committed Idolatry with Baalim and Aſhteroth, verſe 11. 12 .13.

I will never break my covenant with you] To wit if you will not breake yours with me.

V. 2. And you ſhall make no league] Exod. 23.33.& 34. 15, Deut.7 2. & 12. 3.

why have ye done this?] q. d. I will not condemne you till I hear what you can ſay in your own defences Therefore ſtand forth and produce what reaſon you can to juſtifie theſe your doings. But I am ſure you have not ſo much as a colour of any cauſe for it, being convinced and condemned in your own conſciences of ſhamefull breach of covenant with your God.

V. 3 . as thornes in your ſides] Or, as ſcourges. See on Joſh. 23. 13. & Num.33.55.

their gods ſhall be a ſnare unto you] To intangle you in their idolatry to your perdition. See Exod. 23. 33. & 34.12. Joſh. 23.13.

V. 4. the people lift up their voyce, and wept] This ſpeech of the Angel convincing them of their ſin, and threatning them with deſerved puniſhment, did work ſo effectually upon them that it brought them to repentance; Which they expreſſed in their prayers to God, and ſorrow for their ſinne, partly ariſing out of true contrition and compunction of heart, becauſe they had offended their good God, and partly out of fear of having thoſe judgements here threatned inflicted upon them.

V. 5. And they called the name of the place Bochim] i. e. Weepers; ſo called by anticipation, v.1 and here from the event, becauſe the Iſraelites did weep abundantly in this place.

and they ſacrificed there unto the Lord] In the place where the angel appeared; as Gideon and Manoah did: or, as ſome others would have it, in Shiloh, neer unto this place, where the Tabernacle at that time was.

V. 6. And when Joſhua had let go the people] i. e. As they were aſſembled by his authority, being the ſupream Magiſtrate, ſo they did not depart to their own places before he had diſmiſſed them.

V. 7. And the people ſerved the Lord all the dayes of Joſhua] From hence to v. 10. is repeated out of Joſh. 24. 28, 32, and here inſerted to clear the way to the enſuing ſtorie. The ſumme whereof is the defection of the people from God to idolatry, where by they provoked him in his juſt diſpleaſure to afflict them grievouſly by giving them over into the hands of their malicious enemies; and then Gods grace and favour towards them upon their repentance, in ſending Judges to deliver them out of their grievous ſervitude. Theſe things are ſummarily and in a generall manner ſet down from this place to ch. 3.7. and afterwards amplified in many particulars to the end of the book. See on Joſh.24.28,32.

V. 9. In Timnath-Heres] Called Timnath-Serah; Ioſh. 24. 30.

V. 10 And alſo all that generation] i. e. All the Iſraelites of Joſhua's age, which were under twenty yeares old when they came out of Ægypt, and had ſeen Gods great works in delivering them out of bondage in carrying them through the red ſea, and the wilderneſſe, and over Jordan, in granting them victorie over their enemies, and giving the land of Canaan into their poſſeſſion.

which knew not the Lord] To wit, by his miraculous works; of which they had not been eie witneſſes, as their fathers were, nor had any holy impreſſion of them in their hearts by their relation; nor had any effectuall and experimentall knowledge of God in himſelfe, his goodneſſe, greatneſs and power, by all that they had heard or ſeen, ſo as it wrought their hearts to faith, love and obedience.

V. 12. And the children of Iſrael did evill] i. e. In forſaking the true God, and adhering unto Idols.

and ſerved Baalim] Baal ſignifieth a lord, husband, patrone, protector. In the plural number (as in this place) it was generally uſed by idolaters for all their gods; Which being many, they were wont to diſtinguiſh them one from another by ſome addition or ſirname; as Baal berith, ch. 8.33. Baal peor, Num.25.3. Baal zebub, 2 Kin.1.6. The original of which name and Idol, Baal, or Bel, was taken from an image of Belus or Bel, king of Babylon, which Ninus his ſon and ſucceſſor after his death cauſed to be worſhipped. See on Iſa. 46.1. & Jer. 2.23. under this title the heathens worſhipped the Planets, to every of which Aſtrologers attribute a certain proper Lordſhip or rule in his own houſe in heaven.

V. 12. And they forſook the Lord] Either becauſe he reputeth himſelf forſaken when joyned with idols, ſeeing he will be worſhipped alone or not at all; or becauſe they were ſo beſotted in their idolatry that they did indeed quite forſake him to follow their idols; herein worſe then thoſe Samaritans, who feared the Lord and ſerved alſo their idols, 2 Kin.17. 33. But the former is more probable, ſeeing the Iſraelites excuſed their idolatry under this pretenſe, that they worſhipped the true God in idols, Exod 32.4. Hoſ.2.16.

which brought them out of the land of Egypt] Under that main benefit all the reſt are comprehended: and their apoſtacy and idolatry were exceedingly aggravated by their grand ingratitude for ſo many and great benefits.

and followed other gods] Or, ſtrange gods: i. e. Not the God of their fore-fathers, but the gods of the Canaanites, in whoſe land they dwelt, yea the Gods alſo of other nations that dwelt in the countries round about them, as the Syrians, Chaldeans, and others which were altogether unknowen unto their anceſtors.

and provoked the Lord to anger] This is ſpoken in reſpect not of the affection it ſelf (for God is free from all paſſion) but of the effect. They provoked the Lord to puniſh; which is the effect of a man that is angry.

V.13. Aſhtaroth] The heathens called this idol Aſtarte. And it was the common name of all their female Deities, as Baal of the males, and is therefore alſo here expreſſed in the plural number. But more ſpecially this was the idol of the Sidonians, 1 Kin.11.5.33. 2 Kin.23.13. and of the Philiſtims, 1 Sam.31.10. which they worſhipped in the form of a ſheep. And under this ſome think they worſhipped Venus; others Diana, or the Moon. Auguſtine ſaith the Carthaginians, who came out of Phœnicia into Africk, and whoſe language held much affinity with the Hebrew, called Juno their tutelar Goddeſs by this name.

V.14. he ſould them into the hands of their enemies] i. e. He gave them over, as the ſeller the thing ſold into the hands of the buyer. So ch.4. 2,9. Pſal 44.12,13. Iſa.50.1. Or, as they uſually ſell captives taken in war. And this he did, either by caſting them out of protection, Pſal.91.1. or by giving their enemies occaſion to riſe againſt and afflict them, ch.14.4. or taking away their courage and ſtrength, Lev.26.17. This their miſery was much aggravated, in that they were thus ſold and given up, not to ſtrangers that came in as conquerors for glory or ſpoil, who out of common humanity might have ſhewed ſome mercy, but unto thoſe enemies, who being incenſed againſt them by the former wars, breathed nothing but malice and revenge.

V.15. the hand of the Lord was againſt them for evil] i. e. They had no poſſible means to eſcape, ſeeing God himſelf oppoſed them in all their undertakings, and did croſs them in all their enterpriſes at home and abroad, and did bring upon them all miſchiefs threatned, Lev. 26. and Deut.28.

V.16. Nevertheleſs the Lord raiſed up judges] Pitying his people for his own ſake, he brought them by afflictions to repentance, and then raiſed up Judges to deliver them out of the hands of their enemies, and that not in an ordinary way, but by the ſingular motion of his Spirit, nor for a ſetled courſe of government, but for ſpecial uſes upon extraordinary occaſions, God firſt fitting them for this ſervice, and then calling them thereunto. And this he did by giving them gifts and graces neceſſary for that calling, as wiſdom, magnanimity, courage, fortitude of minde, and ſtrength of body; and then either endowing them with an Heroick ſpirit, he called them immediately to ſet upon the work, as he did Gideon, Shamgar, and Samſon; or elſe made them ſo eminent by his gifts and endowments above others, that the people taking notice of them, called them to be their Captains and leaders, as we ſee in the example of Jephtah. See ch.3.9,10. & 8.23. & 11.5. And theſe Judges were not continued by ſucceſſion, ſo as that as ſoon as one was dead another was raiſed up to ſucceed him in his office, but were raiſed up upon extraordinary occaſions, as the ſtate of the people did require in reſpect of their miſeries and oppreſſions. See on ch.9.1.

V. 17. And yet they would not hearken to their Judges] Though they had by them deliverance out of all their miſeries, yet they would no longer retain the purity of Gods true religion then they were under their government, and reſtrained from idolatry by their authority; but as ſoon as they were by their death let looſe to their own liberty, they relapſed into their old courſes, and became much worſe then they were before.

but they went a whoring after other gods] Though they were in covenant with God, and united unto him as it were by a conjugal bond, yet they brake this bond of wedlock, and like adultereſſes defiled themſelves with idolatry, which is ſpiritual adultery.

which their fathers walked in] i. e. Who lived in the daies of Joſhua, Joſh.24.31.

V.18. it repented the Lord] i. e. Upon their altering their courſe, and returning unto God by repentance, he alſo altered his courſe, from executing judgement to ſhewing mercy. See Gen.6.6. And this was the continuall courſe which they held with God, and God with them, as appeareth throughout this whole book.

V.19. When the judge was dead, they returned and corrupted themſelves more then their fathers] i. e. Though their fathers, who lived after the death of Joſhua and the Elders had gone out of the way of their predeceſſors, and corrupted themſelves by their apoſtaſie and idolatry; yet theſe who were delivered by the Judges, and had made ſome ſhew of repentance and reformation, when the Iudges were dead, revolted, and became more abominable idolaters then they were before, or their fathers before them.

V.21. I alſo will not henceforth drive out any] i. e. Although they attempt to drive out the nations which Ioſhua left unconquered, it ſhal be all in vain, ſeeing I will not give them courage and ſtrength to do it; but they ſhal remain ſtill to vex them, as their abominable ſins have juſtly deſerved: Which (as all other Gods threatnings) is to be underſtood upon condition of their continuing in their ſinnes without repentance, Ier. 18. 7, 8. Or though they did repent, yet God was ſo much diſpleaſed with their idolatry, that he would not caſt out this people; and ſo eaſe the Iſraelites of this temporall judgement, ſo ſoon as otherwiſe he would have done, if they had continued conſtant in his true religion.

V. 22 That through them I may prove Iſrael] i. e. Not that my ſelf may better know them, who with one ſimple act of knowledge know all things paſt, preſent, and to come; but that I may make them better known to themſelves and to all men, and thereby juſtifie my righteous judgments, when I puniſh them according to their deſerts and my former threatnings, *Ioſh.*23.13. So Gen 22. 1. 2 Chron.32.31. Or elſe theſe words may be referred to the end of the former verſe, Which Joſhua left when he died i. e. The nations were left unſubdued by Ioſhua, that the Iſraelites might hereby be tryed, whether they would continue in Gods pure worſhip, or fall into idolatry, according to the example of thoſe curſed nations that lived among them.

without driving them out haſtily] i. e. Not ſubduing them to the Iſraelites preſently, though he did it afterwards, in the time of David and Solomon, 1 Chron.18. & 2 Chron.8.7.

neither delivered he them into the hand of Joſhua] Not becauſe, though he attempted it, he was unable to ſubdue them; for he prevailed in whatſoever he undertook, and was victorious over all thoſe againſt whom he fought; but becauſe the Lord did purpoſely reſtrain him from going on in his conqueſts, that by the remainder of thoſe nations he might prove the Iſraelites, as v.22.

CHAP. III.

V.1 N*Ow theſe are the nations*] Ch 2.21. it is ſaid, that the Lord would not caſt out before Iſrael ſome of the nations that remained, And the ends of his ſo doing were, to puniſh Iſrael for their backſliding and idolatry, and when thereupon they returned unto the Lord, to make further trial of them, whether they would continue in faith and obedience, and ſtill cleave cloſe unto God in the profeſſion and practice of his pure religion. And here is ſet down who thoſe remaining nations were, and withall another cauſe or end added to the former, why God ſuffered them ſtill to continue in the land, namely, to exerciſe his people in martial diſcipline.

as had not known all the wars of Canaan] To wit in the time of Joſhua; and that to this end, that God might keep the people in the exerciſ of faith and obedience, ſeeing they ſtill needed his aſſiſtance againſt theſe enemies.

V.2. might know to teach them war] That by this continual exerciſe of war they might be able to teach their poſterity the uſe of arms and art of war, that ſo they might not grow effeminate by pleaſure, ſloth and eaſe, nor weak-hearted with peace and reſt and thereby be diſabled to reſiſt their enemies in time to come.

V.3. Namely, the five lords of the Philiſtims] Three of the countries over which theſe lords ruled, to wit, Gaza, Askelon, and Ekron, were formerly ſubdued in that expedition of Judah and Simeon, ch.1.18. but were recovered again by the Philiſtims, for the ſins of Gods people, with whom they had continual war, ſometime the one party, and ſometimes the other prevailing: Neither were theſe enemies wholly vanquiſhed till the dayes of David and Solomon, ch.15.11. 1 Sam.4.3. & 6.17.

and all the Canaanites] This is not ſimply to be underſtood of all, taken largely, but ſtrictly of thoſe Canaanites properly ſo called, or rather of thoſe alone whoſe countries and habitations are here expreſſed.

and the Sidonians] i. e. thoſe countries which belonged to the Sidonians: For the great city Sidon it ſelf was never in the poſſeſſion of the Iſraelites. But that a good part of the country adjoyning thereunto was conquered by the Iſraelites under the conduct of Ioſhua, and that many Phœnicians the inhabitants thereof were, according to Gods promiſe Joſh.13.6. driven out of their poſſeſſions, and forced to plant themſelves on the ſea-coaſts of Africk, appeareth by the two pillars which Procopius ſaith were to be ſeen in that part of Mauritania that is called Tingitana, whereon there was an inſcription in the ancient Phœnician language to this ſenſe, VVe are thoſe that fled from that robber Joſhua the ſon of Nave. Procop. in Vandalicis, lib.2.

Lebanon] A great mountain on the north of Canaan, abounding with Frankinſenſe, from which it hath its name both in Greek and Hebrew.

1 Chron. 5.23. and Mount Hermon on the Weſt end of Lebanon, Deut. 3. 8 & 9.48. Some think Baal-Hermon to be that mountain which by the Greeks is called Antilibanus.

V. 4. to prove Iſrael] See ch. 2. 22.

to know] i. e. To make known. So Deut. 8 .2.

V. 5 And the children of Iſrael dwelt]Here,& v. 6,7. are expreſſed the ſinnes for which the Iſraelites were given into the hands of their enemies; &firſt,their familiar converſation&acquaintance with theſe curſed nations.

V. 6 And they took their daughters] This was the ſecond ſin,making interchangeable marriages with them, contrary to Gods expreſſe command,Exod.34.16.Deut.7.3. And this was attendedwith many other ſins.

V. 7. and forgat the Lord their God, and ſerved Baalim] Contrary to that duty which they owed to their ſupream Lord, to the many obligements whereby they were bound to Gods ſervice above all other nations, and to that Covenant they had made with him in mount Sinai, and lately renewed and ratified in the days of Joſhua.

and the groves] i. e. The idols which they had ſet up and worſhipped in thick & dark groves,under the goodlieſt ſhady trees,which they had conſecrated to the honour of their falſe gods,contrary to Ex.34.13 Deut.7.5.

V. 8. Therefore the anger of the Lord] i. e Like a man that is angry being much abuſed and wronged, he reſolved to puniſh them for their ſins. See on ch. 2. 12.

and he ſold them] See on ch. 2. 14.

Chuſhan-Riſhathaim] This is a compounded name, and the latter, as ſome think, a ſirname to the other. See Hab. 3. 7. This was the Iſraelites firſt ſervitude after their coming out of the land of Ægypt.

Meſopotamia] Heb. Aram-Naharaim; or, the country of Syria ſituate between two rivers, i. e. Tigris and Euphrates, whence it hath its name, Naharaim, of the duall number, i. e. of the two rivers. In this country Abraham lived with Terah Nahor and Lot, before he went into the land of Canaan: And afterwards Jacob ſojourned there with Bethuel and Laban, and from thence had his wives.

V. 9. the children of Iſrael cried unto the Lord] i. e. Being brought into great miſeries by reaſon of their ſervitude, and finding no help from their idols whom they had ſerved, they returned unto the Lord by repentance, and cryed unto him for mercy and forgiveneſſe.

the Lord raiſed up a deliverer] Or, a ſaviour and redeemer: whom,when they were ſold into the hands of their enemies,God ſent to redeem them and give them deliverance. Herein Othniel,as alſo the reſt of the Judges, was a type of our Saviour Chriſt, who was ſent of God to deliver us out of the hands of all our ſpiritual enemies.

V. 10. And the Spirit of the Lord came upon him] i e. The Lord by an extraordinary inſtinct and motion of his Spirit ſtirred him up,and called him to undertake this great work, and fitted him for it, by endowing him with wiſdome, fortitude and courage, to make war againſt this tyrannous oppreſſour, and having vanquiſhed him, to govern his people in peace, according to his law, in the profeſſion and practice of his true religion. So ch. 6. 34. & 11. 29. See on ch. 2. 16.

and his hand prevailed againſt Chuſhan Riſhathaim] To wit, for the ſubduing of him,and keeping him and his people in ſubjection.

V. 11. And the land had reſt] War and ſervitude being ended, true religion being reſtored, and the land flouriſhing in peace and plenty.

fourty years] Or, to the fourtieth year, reckoning from the death of Joſhua to the death of Othniel, as may be gathered from 1 King. 6. 1 where are expreſſed four hundred and eighty years from the coming of Iſrael out of Ægypt to the building of Solomons Temple. But if (as ſome do) we ſhould take the yeares of the Iſraelites reſt and peace, and the years of their oppreſſions under their enemies, and the years of their Judges by whom they were delivered, ſeverally and diſtinctly one from the other, the ſpace between their coming out of Ægypt and the building of the Temple, would amount to about ſix hundred years. But we muſt neceſſarily maintain that computation of four hundred and eighty years to be true, and therefore not take the times here mentioned, of the peoples oppreſſion under enemies,and of their reſt under their Judges,ſeverally,but joyn themſelves together in one, and reckon ſtill from the death of the former Judge to the death of him that next ſucceded, letting the times of the oppreſſions for the moſt part run into the account of the Judge that put an end to them; as Chuſhan-Riſhathaim eight years,into Othniels fourty, and the Moabites eighteen, into Ehuds eighty, v. 14, 30. For thoſe eighty years are not ſo to be taken as if Ehud ruled ſo long; but that the death of Ehud happened in the eightieth year after the death of Othniel: The ſpace between being ſpent by the Iſraelites after divers faſhions. At the beginning, it may be, for a while after Othniels death they lived quietly & orderly of themſelves; then they fell to Idolatry,and continued ſome ſpace therein, God in the mean while forbearing to inflict on them deſerved puniſhments then they lived in ſervitude under the Moabites for eighteen years;at laſt Ehud reduced them to liberty & order, and ſo kept them till his death. In like manner Othniels fourty years here,& Deborahs, ch.5.31. &Gideons ch.8. 28.are to be computed. Now if it be demanded how in this and other places it can be ſaid that the land had reſt for ſo many years, ſeeing the people ſpent ſome part of them under the oppreſſion of cruel enemies,to this it is anſwered, That it is uſual in the Scripture to denominate the whole from the beſt or the greateſt part,& under it to include the reſidue. See Gen.35.36.& compare Acts. 7. 14. with Gen. 46. 27.

V. 12. And the children of Iſrael did evil again] Notwithſtanding the experience they had of the manifold miſeries which they by the like ſins had brought upon themſelves,and of Gods great mercy in delivering them out of them.

and the Lord ſtrengthened Eglon king of Moab] By giving him courage and fortitude, and alſo willingneſſe and reſolution to fight againſt them; and contrariwiſe by weakning the Iſraelites, and making them cowardly and faint-hearted through the guilt of their ſin.

becauſe they had done evill] Becauſe they had provoked the Lord to anger by their ſhamefull apoſtaſie and idolatry, therefore he raiſed up againſt them ſuch malicious enemies as ſhould bring them into moſt grievous ſervitude. For they were their ancient enemies, who ſought their ruine before they had provoked them by making war againſt them: They were enemies to God and his true religion, and were excluded, even to the tenth generation, from coming into the Congregation: And now they were incenſed againſt Iſrael, becauſe for hiring Balaam to curſe them, and following his curſed counſell of proſtituting their daughters, and drawing them thereby to idolatry; the Iſraelites by Gods command had made war againſt them, and therein prevailing,had ſlaughtred and deſtroyed a great part of them. In all which reſpects the Iſraelites could look for no mercy at their hands, now they had got them under their ſubjection.

V. 13. And he gathered unto him the children of Ammon and Amalek] It may be underſtood, either that the Lord (of whom he laſt ſpake, v. 12.) gathered them to puniſh his people; or, that Eglon, as his inſtrument,did gather them, they being neighbour nations in confederacie with him,and in like enmity againſt Gods people, ch. 11.4. Exod.17. 8—16. 1 Sam 15.2.

and poſſeſſed the City of Palm-trees] i. e. Jericho. See on ch. 1.16. For howſoever the city Jericho was burnt and utterly ruined, yet in the Territories belonging to it there might remain divers hamlets and villages fit for habitation. Or it may be,it being a place very fruitfull and pleaſant, he had ſeated himſelf there, and built ſome forts and ſtrong holds neer unto Jericho,to keep in them his Garriſons to over-awe the Iſraelites and hold them in ſubjection, and alſo to ſecure the foords and paſſages over againſt Jericho into his own Country,not only for continuall commerce, but alſo that he might have ſupplies from thence upon all occaſions,or a ſafe retreat,if at any time he ſhould be overpowred. Which was the reaſon that Ehud,when he was confident of victory,cauſed in the firſt place theſe foords to be taken,that ſo the Moabites might not eſcape by flight,v. 28.

V. 14. ſerved Eglon the King of Moab eighteen years] They ſerved the King of Meſopotamia eight years; and now Eglon eighteen;and afterwards Jabin, twenty, ch.4.3. So their ſins increaſing,their ſervitude alſo was increaſed; and when leſſer corrections would not prevail to reſtrain them from ſin and keep them in obedience,the Lord laid heavier upon them; and when they abuſed his mercy and readineſſe to deliver them out of their miſeries when they cryed unto him, the Lord would not heare them when again they called upon him,but prolonged their afflictions to keep them from preſuming on his mercy for the time to come.

V. 15. a Benjamite] Or, the ſon of Jemini, whoſe family belonged to the tribe of Benjamin.

a man left-handed] Heb. Shut of his right hand: i. e. Not having the like uſe of it as others have that are right-handed,even as they have not the like uſe of their left. And this cometh to paſſe either from ſome weakneſſe and infirmity of nature,or (and that moſt ordinarily) from an ill cuſtome in childhood,which in time becometh a ſecond nature: and ſometimes it is affected, and attained unto by practice, by thoſe who are martially diſpoſed, that they may with more advantage handle their weapons;as thoſe Benjamites,ch. 20.16. In many,to be left-handed, is a ſign of force and courage.

and by him the children of Iſrael ſent a preſent] Not their ordinary tribute, but a gift of free bounty and homage to gain his favour, that he might not rule with rigour. With this preſent by Gods providence Ehud was ſent, that he might gain the more free acceſſe,and execute his deſign without ſuſpicion.

V. 16. but Ehud made him a dagger which had two edges] That it might the more eaſily and ſpeedily pierce, and make the deeper wound.

of a cubit length] Which was long enough to do the deed, and ſhort enough to be covered under his garment.

upon his right thigh] Both becauſe he was moſt likely that it would not be obſerved there where a weapon is not uſually worn, and that being left-handed he might draw it out with more nimbleneſſe.

V. 17. And he brought the preſent unto Eglon] Though he had many aſſociates for the gracing of the Embaſſie, yet he was the man that preſented the gift, to ingratiate him the more with the tyrant, and to gain acceſſe when he came again.

Eglon was a very fat man] Therefore the more unable to make reſiſtance,or avoide the ſtroke when he was aſſaulted.

V. 18. he ſent away the people that bare the preſent] After he had accompanied them as far as Gilgal,he ſent them homewards,and he himſelf alone returned, that ſo he might do the fact with more conveniency, being more likely to have acceſſe without ſuſpicion when he came alone, than if he had brought many in his company;& that he might himſelf run the hazard,and ſecure all the reſt of his company from the danger which might attend ſuch an execution;and that having none to take care for but himſelf,he might make the better ſhift to eſcape when the deed was done, and ſlip away with more ſecrecie.

V. 19. from the quarries that were by Gilgal] Or, the graven images: i e. either a place where Eglon had ſet up his idols, the more to vex the children of Iſrael,or to allure them to imbrace his Idolatrie;or the quarrie out of which they digged their materialls and ſtones whereof they made theirgravenimages Some conceive they might be thoſe twelve ſtones erected, Joſh. 4.20.

I have a ſecret arrand to thee] Which Eglon underſtood ſhould be delivered by word of mouth; but Ehud meant it of an handy act to be executed on him by commiſſion from God.

who ſaid, Keep ſilence] i. e. If it be a ſecret from God, then hold thy peace till the company be departed that are about me, and then privately acquaint me with it. Others think that he ſpake this to his attendants, commanding them to withdraw till Ehud had delivered his ſecret meſſage.

V. 20. and he was ſitting in a ſummer parlour] Heb. a parlour of cooling; Wherein uſually in thoſe hot countries they did refreſh themſelves, as we in our banqueting-houſes. See on Jer. 36. 12.

which he had for himſelf alone] Into which he went when he deſired to be private, and therefore now more fit for the hearing of a ſecret errand.

I have a meſſage from God unto thee] Therefore to be hearkened unto with more reverence and attention. This he ſpeaketh to amuze and amaze him, that he might be leſſe heedfull in attending to that action which he intended.

And he aroſe out of his ſeat] He was (though an heatheniſh king) ſo much affected with the name of God, that though he were corpulent and unweildy, he roſe out of his ſeat and reverently ſtood upon his feet to hear his meſſage, and thereby gave unto Ehud the fitter opportunity of giving him that mortall wound.

V. 21. and thruſt it into his bellie] For this he had a ſpeciall commiſſion from God, who raiſed him up to deliver his people, v. 15. Therefore it is no precedent warranting any to murder Princes, although they be hereticks, idolaters and tyrants.

V. 22. And the haft alſo went in] The wound was ſo deep and large that the haft followed the blade.

and the dirt came out] Or, it came out of the fundament: i. e. not out of the wound, which was cloſed up, but out of the common paſſage, as it uſually doth in, or a little after, the pangs of death, when nature hath loſt its retentive faculty.

V. 23 Then Ehud went forth through the porch] i. e. He paſſed by the kings ſervants, that attended there, with a compoſed countenance, and not over-haſtie gate, as one not guilty of ſuch a fact, nor in the leaſt meaſure to be ſuſpected of it, being in this extremity of danger ſupported with an undaunted courage and good conſcience, which bare him witneſſe that he had done nothing but what God commanded, and that therefore he was ſafe under his protection.

and ſhut the doores] Which having, it is probable, a ſpring-lock, locked in the ſhutting: for otherwiſe it is not likely that he could have locked the doores and carried away the key without ſome ſuſpition, if any ſaw him. Others think he ſtole out ſecretly, none eſpying him; which made them think he was ſtill with their lord: but this is not ſo probable.

V. 24. Surely he covereth his feet] i. e. He doth his eaſement: which the Hebrews modeſtly expreſſe by this phraſe, 1 Sam. 24. 3. becauſe, ſitting down, the feet were covered with the upper garment, which uſed to belong in thoſe countries. Some others think that his ſervants ſuppoſed he lay down to ſleep in his ſummer-room, and on that occaſion covered his feet, as Boaz did, Ruth. 3. 7. and that therefore they haſted not to come in for fear of awakening him; which opinion hath the more probability, not onely becauſe it was the cuſtome ſo to do in thoſe hot countries, as we ſee in the example of Iſhboſheth 2 Sam. 4. 5. and David, 2 Sam. 11. 2. but becauſe this better ſuited with a ſummer parlour and place of delight than the other did.

V. 25. And they tarried till they were aſhamed] i. e. Now beginning to fear, becauſe he was ſo long before he opened the door, that ſome evil had befallen him, and that this might be imputed unto them as a fault, and neglect of their lord, they were aſhamed of their long ſtaying and not looking after him.

therefore they took a key] It being uſuall in kings houſes to have divers keys for the ſame door.

V. 26. and eſcaped unto Seirath] Neer unto mount Ephraim, not far from the place where Eglon was ſlain.

V. 27. and the children of Iſrael] Not all, but as many as could be gathered together about mount Ephraim, and the places adjoyning.

V. 28. took the foords of Jordan toward Moab] To wit, that neither the Moabites in Canaan might eſcape into their own countrey, nor they in the land of Moab paſſe over Jordan to aid them in Canaan.

and ſuffered not a man to paſſe over] Becauſe the Iſraelites were a great and well ordered body to make good the place, and the Moabites a ſcattered and routed army in flight.

V. 30. and the land had reſt fourſcore years] i. e. Unto the eightieth year; reckoning from the death of Othniel, and ſo taking into the account the time of the peoples defection after his death, when they had no Judge over them, wherein they proſpered in their apoſtaſie, and the eighteen years in which they were oppreſſed by the Moabites. *S*ee on v. 11. *S*ome count from the death of Othniel to the death of Shamgar; others, from the diviſion of the land, caſting-in the fourty years, v. 11. into this ſumme. Others, in ſtead of eighty years, read eight years.

V. 31. And after him was Shamgar the ſon of Anath] Concerning this Shamgar the Scripture ſpeaketh very little. For it doth not expreſſe of what family or tribe he was, onely that he was the ſon of Anath, who it may be was ſo famous in thoſe dayes that they which knew him knew alſo his tribe and familie. Neither doth it clearly ſhew whether he were one of the Judges or no; or, if he were, how long he held this place of government; but only that he ſucceeded Ehud, and delivered Iſrael from the Philiſtims when they invaded the lan. Nor doth it relate any more acts of his or victories obtained by him, although it is very probable there were divers more, though this onely is mentioned, as being the moſt famous, if not miraculous. See on ch. 4. 1. Joſephus ſaith he ruled about one year. If ſo, it is added either to Ehuds or Deborahs account. *S*ee ch. 5. 6.

which ſlew of the Philiſtims ſix hundred men with an ox-goad] Or, as the vulgar Latine hath it, with the coulter, or ſhare, of a plow. But the beſt reading is, as we have it, with a goad. Which *S*ome, thinking too too weak meanes to atchieve ſuch a conqueſt, ſuppoſe that many of the country people joyned with him, though he was their Captain and Commander, and ſo armed as is here ſaid, for want of better weapons. See ch. 5. 8. 1 *S*am. 13. 19, 22. But it is not likely, that bordering upon ſuch enemies, and at this time not in their power, they were ſo ſlenderly provided of better weapons; and it is not ſafe to go from the words of the text upon weak and ungrounded conjectures. And therefore ſeeing when God is with us, one is ſufficient to chaſe a thouſand, and the weakeſt weapon ſtrong enough when he puts ſtrength into it, I ſee no reaſon why we may not take the very letter of the text, and think that *S*hamgar himſelf alone might as well ſlay ſix hundred Philiſtims with an ox-goad, as Samſon a thouſand with the jaw-bone of an aſſe, ch. 15. 15. And to this I the rather incline, becauſe this here is recorded as a ſtrange and miraculous victorie, whereas there ſhould be no ſuch wonder if he being aſſiſted with many others had atchived it.

CHAP. IV.

Verſ. 1. AND the children of Iſrael again did evil in the ſight of the Lord] i. e. Notwithſtanding the manifold miſeries they had found their ſins had brought upon them, and the great mercy of God in delivering them upon their repentance, yet no ſooner was Ehud dead, but they returned to their vomit, and ſinned more hainouſly than before. No mention is here made of Shamgar, who was between Ehud and Barak, becauſe of his ſhort time, and the few things done in his dayes, which tended onely to a preventing of ſuch miſeries and ſervitude as the Philiſtims were ready to bring the Iſraelites into, and not to any perfect deliverance out of them. *S*ee on ch. 3. 31.

V. 2. And the Lord ſold them] See on ch. 3. 14.

into the hand of Jabin] We read of another Jabin king of Hazor, which was the head-City in the North of Canaan, and their king the chief in that confederacie againſt Iſrael, Joſh. 11. 1. whom Joſhua vanquiſhed, ſlew, and burnt his city to the ground. But this Jabin who perhaps was Grand-childe or Nephew to the other, ſucceeding him, gathered ſtrength and re-built Hazor, and making war againſt Iſrael, ſubdued them, and for their ſins brought them into grievous ſervitude.

king of Canaan] i. e. Either of that part of the land properly ſo called or of all the North-part of the country, becauſe his city was chief and head of all the reſt, Joſh. 11. 10.

which dwelt in Haroſheth of the Gentiles] This was a vaſt woody ſtrong place, whither the relicks of the conquered nations reſorted to inhabit as being moſt ſafe and defenſible againſt the Iſraelites. And it being (as the Hebrews report) of a large and ample circuit, they built in it divers cities and ſtrong caſtles.

V. 3. And the children of Iſrael cried unto the Lord] No doubt they cryed long before the Lord gave them deliverance, in the ſenſe of their grievous miſeries and oppreſſions, but not with their hearts, like thoſe, Hoſ. 7. 14. and all that while the Lord did not hear and deliver them; but now joyning with their cries, faith and unfained repentance, he heareth and ſendeth deliverance. So ch. 10. 10.

chariots of iron] *S*ee on Joſh. 17. 16.

and twentie years he mightily oppreſſed the children of Iſrael] Not onely as a conquerour, but alſo as a malicious enemy, out of bitter and ſharp revenge, becauſe they had formerly caſt his people out of their inheritance, ſlain his Royall anceſtour, and utter ruined and burnt his royal city. Moreover theſe his cruel oppreſſions were much embittered to the Iſraelites, becauſe they ſuffered them under the Canaanites, that curſed nation, whom God had promiſed to caſt out before them: for this was unto them a likely ſign that God for their hainous ſins had utterly rejected them.

V. 4. And Deborah a Propheteſs, the wife of Lapidoth] Some read, a woman of Lapidoth, taking it for the name of a place. Others, a woman of Lamps, becauſe, ſay they, ſhe provided Lamps for the ſervice of the Tabernacle, or becauſe her face ſhone, as Moſes his did, Exod. 34. 30. while ſhe was propheſying.

She judged Iſrael at that time] Not governing chiefly and properly as a Judge, whoſe office was to hear and determine cauſes, and in theſe times principally, to make war againſt the enemies of Gods people for their deliverance; but, as a Propheteſſe, counſelling and directing the people that came unto her in hard and difficult cauſes, revealing unto them the will of God by the ſpirit of Prophecie. And of her, who was of the weaker ſex, God makes choyce to effect this great work of the peoples deliverance, to manifeſt his power in the weakneſſe of the meanes, that he alone might have the whole glory of it.

V. 5. palm-tree of Deborah] So called becauſe ſhe dwelt there.

between Ramah and Bethel in mount Ephraim] i. e. Upon the edge or utmoſt border of mount Ephraim. For this Bethel was in the tribe of Benjamin, Joſh. 18. 13. Neither was this that Ramah or Ramathaim in which Elkanah and Samuel lived, 1 Sam. 1. & 2. 11. For this was in Benjamin, Joſh 18. 25. that in Ephraim, as ſome think.

came up to her for judgement] i, e. To learn of her the will of God concerning things which themſelves knew not, and at theſe times when publique judicature failed by reaſon of oppreſſion, ſometimes alſo for judgement in ſome difficult caſes, ſhe being a Propheteſſe.

V. 6. And ſhe ſent and called Barak] In the authority of a Propheteſſe, ſummoning him in the name of God, from whom ſhe had ſpeciall direction ſo to do, as appeareth by the words following.

out of Kedeſh-Naphtali] There were three cities of this name one in Iſſachar, 1 Chron. 6. 72. a ſecond in Judah, Joſh. 15. 23. and this in Naphtali. It was ſeated between the waters of Merom and the lake of Geneſareth, and was a city of refuge and belonged to the Prieſts, Joſh. 19. 37. & 20. 7. & 21. 32.

Hath not the Lord God of Iſrael commanded] By this interrogation ſhe inforceth an affirmation; as is uſuall with the Hebrews q. d. The Lord hath aſſuredly commanded. So v. 14. & ch. 6. 14. Gen. 13. 9.

mount Tabor] See on Joſh. 19. 12.

and take with thee ten thouſand men] This command doth not ſtrictly tie him to this number, nor to theſe tribes alone: for there came in to their aſſiſtance voluntarily of divers other tribes, as of Ephraim, Benjamin, Manaſſeh and Iſſachar, and the reſt which withdrew are reproved, ch. 5. 14, 15. and Meroz is curſed for neutrality, ch. 5. 23. but theſe tribes more eſpecially are called in to this ſervice, firſt, becauſe being neer at hand, they were in greateſt readineſſe to be ſuddenly raiſed; and ſecondly, becauſe they were more intereſſed in this warre, ſeeing they were under greater oppreſſion than the other tribes, eſpecially Naphtali, unto which Hazor and Haroſheth, belonged: And unto this might be added, that Barak being of this tribe and in good eſteem, they would be more willing to give him aſſiſtance.

V. 7. And I will draw unto thee] Not by any force or outward compulſion, but by inclining his heart to make war againſt thee. So Cant. 1. 3. Joh. 6. 44.

V. 8. If thou wilt go with me, then I will go] Hereby he doth not ſhew that he had no faith to believe her meſſage from God; for the apoſtle commendeth him, with other Worthies, for his faith, Heb. 11. 32. but onely that his faith was aſſaulted with doubting, and needed this help for its confirmation. And ſecondly, he would have Deborah to accompany him in this ſervice, that being a Propheteſſe ſhe might on all occaſions counſell and direct him, and alſo pray unto God for a bleſſing upon his endeavours.

V. 9. ſhall not be for thine honour] i. e. Becauſe thou doſt hereby diſcover thy diffidence, thou ſhalt not have that honour, that is due to a Generall for obtaining ſo great a victorie, but a poor weak woman ſhall ſhare with thee in the glorie of it, becauſe out of thy fear and weakneſſe of faith thou wouldſt not go out to battle, according to Gods command, unleſſe ſupported by a woman. Yea, but God had promiſed, v. 7. that he would deliver Siſera into Baraks hand, if he would go out to fight againſt him, and how was this promiſe verified, when as Jael killed him? I Anſwer, There was a twofold kind of delivering; one, when he and his army were delivered by victory; another, when his perſon and life were delivered to death; and Barak ſhould have had the honour of both, had it not been for his diffidence; but for want of faith and affiance he was deprived of the latter, howſoever he had the honour of the former.

V. 10. to Kedeſh] Here Barak was borne; and here he muſtered his army, as being neer unto mount Tabor, whither he was commanded to go. See on v. 6.

with ten thouſand men at his feet] i. e. Who marched after him as their Generall in due order, and as it were treading in his ſteps. The like Hebraiſme we have, Exod. 11. 8. 1 King 20. 12.

V. 11. Now Heber the Kenite] This digreſſion is made to ſhew how Jael the wife of Heber came to dwell in the land of Naphtali, and there did this exploit, ſeeing the Kenites dwelt in the lot of Judah, ch. 1. 16. namely, becauſe Heber, for ſome cauſes not expreſſed in Scripture, had ſevered himſelf from the reſt of the Kenites, and here pitched his tent in the tribe of Naphtali.

V. 13. Kiſhon] It ariſeth out of the hils Tabor, and Gilboa, and afterwards divideth it ſelf into two parts, one whereof runneth into the midland ſea, the other into the lake of Geneſareth. See ch. 5. 21. Pſal. 83. 9.

V. 14. Up] i. e. Preſently ſet upon the work, and fear not to enter into the battle in reſpect of the great ſtrength and multitude of thy enemies.

the Lord hath delivered Siſera] i. e. He will as certainly deliver him into thy hand as if it were already done. See on v. 9.

Is not the Lord gone out before thee] i. e. Moſt certainly the Lord is gone out before thee, as Generall of the army, to fight for thee and give thee the victory. See v. 6. ch. 5. 20. 2 Sam. 5. 24.

V. 15. And the Lord diſcomfited Siſera] i. e. howſoever he uſed Barak and the army of the Iſraelites as meanes and inſtruments to ſerve his providence in the obtaining of this victory, yet the Lord himſelf was the chief agent that effected it, Prov. 21. 31. partly by taking away the courage and ſtrength of the enemy, and poſſeſſing them with fear and aſtoniſhment, and contrariwiſe by putting courage and fortitude into the hearts of his people; and partly (as Joſephus relateth Antiq. l. 5.) by fighting againſt the Canaanites from heaven, ſending into their faces an impetuous ſtorm of hail, as Joſh. 10. 11. & 1 Sam. 7. 10. unto which Deborah alludeth, ch. 5. 20.

V. 16. there was not a man left] i. e. In the field to make any reſiſtance; but all were routed, ſcattered and ſlaughtered, Pſal. 14. 3. & 13. 3. Rom. 3. 12.

V. 17. For there was peace between Jaben——and the houſe of Heber] i. e. No open hoſtility, Heber ſtanding in a neutrality, in reſpect of martial undertakings, between Jabin and the Iſraelites, although he joyned with Gods people in the profeſſion and practice of the true religion; So he enjoyed peace with both, but not with the Canaanites by oath and covenant, for then Jaels act had been faulty.

V. 18. Turn in, my Lord turn in to mee, fear not] i. e. I will paſſe my promiſe to hide and ſecure thee from them that purſue thee. By which fair words ſhe deludeth him, intending nothing but his utter ruine, as the ſequele ſheweth. Therefore howſoever her cauſe was good for the matter of it, in that ſhe ſought to deſtroy an enemy to God and his Church, who was already proſcribed and deſtinated to death, and not out of any ſelf-end and reſpect; for he and ſhe were in peace together; yet ſhe in the manner failed, carrying on her deſign with lying and treachery. In which regard the ſame may be ſaid of her that we ſay of the Ægyptian Midwives and Rahab, that God accepted her work, and bleſſed her for it, and of his free grace pardoned her ſin and failings in the carriage of it.

ſhe covered him with a mantle] Pretending herein a double care, both to hide him from thoſe that purſued him, if any happened to come into the tent, and alſo, he being now in a great heat, to keep him from catching cold; but indeed intending hereby to bring him the ſooner to fall aſleep, that with more conveniency ſhe might execute her deſigne.

V. 19. for I am thirſty] To wit, through grief and vexation of heart, and through heat, faintneſſe and wearineſſe, by reaſon of his haſty flight on his feet.

and ſhe opened a bottle of milk] i. e. Either becauſe it was next at hand, or to ſhew unto him the greater reſpect, or as fitter for him to drink than cold water, being in a great heat; but in her own intention to bring him the ſooner aſleep, that ſhe might ſet upon her intended work. At this Deborah ſeemeth to aym in her ſong, ch. 5. 25. as a ſpecial act of her wiſedome and policie.

V. 20. thou ſhalt ſay, No] This he requireth; but ſhe prudently giveth no promiſe unto it.

V. 21. Then Jael Hebers wife took a nayl of the tent] i. e. A long pin pointed with iron, uſed to faſten the cords of the tent, when they ſpread it abroad, unto the ground, to keep it firm againſt wind and weather, and therefore long and ſtrong enough for her intended uſe.

and ſmote the nayl into his temples] This act proceeded from a ſingular zeal to Gods glory, and to the welfare of his Church and people, which had been cruelly oppreſſed by this tyrant, who was now by God deſigned to deſtruction. Jael was inſpired in an extraordinary manner and meaſure by Gods ſpirit, ſeeing ſhe is ſo highly commended, and pronounced bleſſed above women, ch. 5. 24.

V. 22. Jael came out to meet him] Namely to congratulate his victory, and to bring unto him the good news of Siſera's death, who if he had lived and eſcaped might have renewed his ſtrength, and raiſed a new war againſt Gods people.

V. 23. So God ſubdued on that day Jabin] i. e. By the ſlaughter of his army, the deſtroying of his chariots and horſe, and the death of his Generall, that he was now ſo farre from having any power to oppreſſe Gods people that he was not able to defend himſelf againſt them.

V. 24. And the hand of the children of Iſrael proſpered] Heb. going went and was heard, i. e. Prevailed ſo long, untill they had brought him and his people to an utter and finall deſtruction.

CHAP. V.

Verſ. 1. Then ſang] After this great victorie they ſang praiſes unto God, the chief author of it; as Moſes and Miriam did, when they ſaw the Ægyptians drowned in the red ſea, Exod. 15.

Deborah and Barak] Deborah, as a Propheteſſe, and a chief inſtrument alſo uſed by God for the obtaining of this victorie, breaketh out into Gods praiſes by ſinging this ſong compoſed by her, to the glory of God, who had ſubdued their foes before them; and Barak joyneth with her in this holy muſick, as chief Commander when this battle was fought and the victorie obtained.

V. 2. Praiſe ye the Lord for the avenging of Iſrael] i. e. For executing his juſt judgements, in the deſtruction of Siſera and his army, and ſubduing the Canaanites and their king Jabin, who had been for twenty years grievous oppreſſors of his people.

when the people willingly offered themſelves] Hereby are chiefly underſtood the two tribes of Zebulun & Naphtali, v. 18. & ch. 4. 10. but with them alſo the other tribes that came in to aſſiſt them in the day of battle as Ephraim, Manaſſeh, Iſſachar, v. 14, 15. But Zebulun and Naphtali firſt appeared, coming in as volunteers at the ſound of the trumpet, Barak having no authority to preſſe them to the ſervice.

V. 3. Hear, O ye Kings, give eare, O ye Princes] In a rapture of joy poetically expreſſed ſhe calleth in Kings to be her auditors, and ſpectators of thoſe works of wonder which God had done for his people in avenging them on their mighty enemies, that they might learn not to glory in their own ſtrength, ſeeing it is God alone that giveth victorie; nor preſuming on their own power, uſe cruelty and pride in their oppreſſions, ſeeing there is one mightier than they, who can give deliverance unto the oppreſſed even when they are helpeleſſe and hopeleſſe, Eccleſ. 5. 8.

V. 4. Lord, when thou wenteſt out of Seir] i. e. When the Edomites denying thy people paſſage through their country, thou didſt cauſe them to fetch a compaſſe about it, and going before them in a cloudie pillar, didſt lead them in a long circuit into the land of promiſe, after they had ſubdued king Arad, Numb. 20. 21. & 21. 4.

the earth trembled] i. e. Either the earth it ſelf, in a poeticall expreſſion, or the nations inhabiting that part of the earth, i. e. the Edomites, Amorites, Canaanites, trembled for fear of the Iſraelites neer approach. See Deut. 2. 25. Joſh. 5. 1.

the heavens dropped] With extraordinarie ſhowers and ſtorms, Pſal. 8. 8.

V. 5. The mountains melted] By theſe poeticall and hyperbolical expreſſions is ſhewed how the nations were affrighted and amazed when God ſhewed viſible ſignes of his power in protecting his people as they travelled towards the land of promiſe. So Pſal. 68. 15, 16, &c.

even that Sinai] i. e. Even as Mount Sinai had formerly done, when God gave and proclamed his law. Others conceive theſe words are to be underſtood of thoſe thunders, lightnings, earthquakes and tempeſts whereby God manifeſted his glory and Majeſtie at the giving of the law upon mount Sinai, becauſe then alſo he is ſaid to have come from Seir, Deut. 33. 2. and the ſhaking of Sinai is here expreſſed, and alſo Pſal 68. 7, 8. But leaving every man to his choyce, and ſubmitting my ſelf to better judgements, I ſtill rather incline to the former interpretation, I. Becauſe the former wonders were far more remote than theſe laſt, which were but of late, and being ſtill freſh in the peoples memories, were fit to make the deeper impreſſion. II. Becauſe this dread, fear and trembling which fell upon the nations was not propheſied of, and promiſed at the giving of the law, which was long before, but when the Iſraelites took their journey towards Canaan, and had paſſed over the river Amon, Deut. 2. 24, 25. III Becauſe we read of much fire, ſmoak and darkneſſe at the giving of the law, but of no ſtorms, dropping of the clouds, and raining. But IV. this eſpecially moveth me to be of his mind, becauſe this going out of Seir cannot be meant of Sinai in this place, ſeeing God is never ſaid to have come out of Sinai, and the next words following do expound the former, and plainly ſhew, out of what place God went, namely, When thou marchedſt out of the field of Edom, then the earth trembled, &c.

V. 6. In the dayes of Shamgar] i. e. Though Shamgar had begun a great deliverance by a wonderful victorie, ch. 3. 31. and though Jael, who lived at the ſame time, was accepted of God for her great zeal in ſeeking the good of the people, and freeing them all ſhe might from cruel oppreſſions; the which now ſhe hath more clearly manifeſted, in putting her ſelf upon that great and dangerous work of killing Siſera their chief enemy; yet in the time of both of them, notwithſtanding their good indeavours, Gods people lay under the great oppreſſions of their enemies, ſo as the high-wayes remained unoccupied, becauſe there was no commerce nor intercourſe of trading, men not daring to travel to and fro about their buſineſſe for fear of enemies and robbers. See Lev. 26. 22. 2 Chron. 15, 5. Iſai. 33. 1. Lam. 1. 4. &. 4. 18.

and the travailers walked through by-wayes] i. e. If their occaſions were of that importance that they were neceſſitated to go out about them, they were fain to forſake the beaten roads, and find out ſecret and unhaunted by-pathes, that the enemies might not diſcover them, and that they might eſcape robbers.

V. 7. the inhabitants of the villages ceaſed] i. e. Unwalled towns lay waſt and forſaken, becauſe the Country people not daring to dwell in them, as being undefenſible againſt enemies, were conſtrained for the ſafeguard of their lives and goods to retire themſelves into walled cities and places of ſtrength.

untill that I Deborah aroſe, that I aroſe a mother in Iſrael] i. e. Till I, as a Governneſſe and a Propheteſſe, teaching them Gods will, and with no leſſe care ſeeking their good than a loving mother her dear childrens, have encouraged them to this war, which hath freed them out of all their calamities.

V. 8. They choſe new gods] i. e. Becauſe by their ſhamefull apoſtaſie they fell away from God and his pure worſhip, and worſhipped heathen Idols, therefore he raiſed againſt them on every ſide cruell enemies, and plagued them with all the miſeries of war, chap. 2, 10. and 4. 1.

then was war in the gates] i. e. Warre with the miſeries thereof extended not only to their villages and unwalled towns, but even to their cities and places of chiefeſt ſtrength; yea, their very gates, the place of their going out and coming in for commerce, and of their judicature, were not free from the enemies in-roades: ſo as there was no exerciſe of trading, or execution of juſtice.

was there a ſhield or ſpear ſeen] Either becauſe their enemies had quite diſarmed them of all their weapons and ammunition, 1 Sam. 13. 19. 22. or elſe had brought them into ſuch a ſlaviſh fear that not one among fourty thouſand of Iſrael durſt be known to have them. And this is more probable, being implyed in the text: For it is not ſaid that they had not ſhield or ſpear, but that they were not ſeen among them: Levit. 26. 36.

V. 9. My heart is towards the Governours of Iſrael] i. e From my heart I honour and love the Governours and Heads of the tribes, who offered themſelves to be Captains and Leaders in this war, by their example encouraging the common people.

V. 10. Speak ye that ride on white aſſes] i. e. Such as were fat and fair, bright, ſlick and ſhining, upon which Princes and Governours uſed in thoſe dayes to ride, as an enſign of their honour, ſtate and power; let ſuch bleſſe the Lord, and ſpeak of his great acts. See ch. 10. 4. & 12. 14.

ye that ſit in judgement, and walk by the way] i. e. Ye that are chief Magiſtrates and Judges among the people, and ye alſo of the common ſort who uſually walk on foot about your buſineſſe, and travel in the high-wayes, do you all joyn together in praiſing the Lord for this great deliverance, by which you have recovered all your priviledges; So that ye, Princes, who were abaſed by Jabins tyranny, may now again ride in honour; ye, Judges and Magiſtrates, who had all your power and authority in executing juſtice and judgement taken from you, are now reſtored to your places, and have power to execute your office and juriſdiction; and ye, common people, who durſt not travell in the high-waies about your buſineſe for fear of cut-throat Souldiers and robbers, may now ſecurely travell from place to place according to your ſeverall occaſions.

V. 11. They that are delivered from the noyſe of the Archers in the places of drawing water] i. e. They who were affrighted and indangered when they went out of their cities to their pits and Wels to draw and fetch-in water, (a commodity ſcarce, yet more neceſſarie in thoſe hot and dry countries) by reaſon that their enemies ſcouting and hiding themſelves about thoſe places, aſſaulted them when they came out to draw water with hidious out-cries and fearful alarums, took them priſoners and brought them into ſlavery; or, if they filled before they could come ſo neer, ſhot their arrows at them, wounded and killed them; ſo as they could not come to draw without eminent danger. From which they are now wholly ſecured by this victorie. See on Neh. 4. 23.

there ſhall they rehearſe the righteous acts of the Lord] i. e. In avenging his people on their enemies, and delivering them from their oppreſſions.

of his villages in Iſrael] The villages were in moſt danger, becauſe leaſt defenſible, v. 7. but now by this victory ſafe for habitation.

then ſhall the people of the Lord go down to the gates] i. e. They ſhall now enjoy free liberty to go out and in by the gates of their cities; all ſorts of people, both citizens and Countrey-men, may have free commerce one with another, and come without danger to their markets and courts of juſtice, whereas before this victory there was war in the very gates, v. 8.

V. 12. Awake, awake, Deborah] In a Rhetorical elegancie of ſpeech ſhe ſtirreth all to praiſe and thanſgiving, and beginneth with her ſelf rowſing up her own ſpirit, that ſhe might be a precedent and example for their imitation; like a cock who awaketh himſelf by clapping his wings, before by his crowing he awaketh others.

lead thy captivity captive] i. e. Now after thy victorie lead them captive that kept thee and thy people in captivity, Pſal. 68. 18. Neither doth that hinder, that the people of Iſrael were bound by Gods law to kill all of theſe curſed nations which they ſubdued, ſeeing after their triumphing over them they might put them to death, as appeareth in the example of the five kings of Canaan thus uſed by Joſhua, Joſh. 10. 24, 26.

V. 13. Then he made him that remaineth have dominion over the nobles] i. e. The Lord hath now made the remainder of the children of Iſrael, reſcued by this victorie out of the tyranny of the Canaanites, to have dominion over their nobles.

the Lord made me have dominion] i. e. Me Deborah, though of the weaker ſex, he hath made to have dominion over the mightie, and by my counſel and incouragement to ſubdue great Princes and Commanders.

V. 14. Out of Ephraim] Here Deborah beginneth to relate how the ſeveral tribes acquitted themſelves in this expedition, praiſing or blaming them according to their merit or demerit.

was there a root of them againſt Amalek?] Some take this root to be Deborah, a Ephraimite, and dwelling upon mount Ephraim, Ch. 4. 5. the root and firſt mover in this expedition againſt the Amalekites the ancient enemies of Iſrael, who joyned with the Canaanites in this war. Others, but with leſſe probability, take it to be Joſhua an Ephraimite, who ſubdued Amalek, Exod 17. 13. For the Authors ſcope here is not to commend Joſhua for that which was done ſo long ago, but thoſe who had engaged themſelves in this preſent warr, and amongſt the reſt, the Ephraimites, who were termed a root, becauſe Deborah dwelling among them, they by her counſel and inſtigation, had an hand in the firſt beginnings of this war. Some will have the tribe of Judah to be here meant, whoſe root, or Southern part, extended to Amalek, ch. 1. 16. 1 Sam. 15. 6. See on ch. 12. 15.

after thee Benjamin] Some underſtand this as an apoſtrophe to the Lord; q. d. Benjamin, O Lord, came next after Ephraim, to aſſiſt thy armies in this war. Others more probably take it as ſpoken to thoſe of Ephraim, who came firſt out in this expedition, and were followed by Benjamin.

out of Machir] i. e. The Manaſſites deſcending from Machir the onely ſon of Manaſſeh, Joſh.17.1. This muſt be underſtood of that half of the tribe which dwelt within Canaan, and not of that beyond Jordan; for they are afterwards reproved for deſerting Gods people in this warre, v.17.

came down governours] i.e. Prime men, who were either Magiſtrates in their own country, and therefore very praiſe-worthy, for hazarding themſelves in ſuch a dangerous expedition; or elſe ſuch as were fit for the place of Captains and Commanders, and therefore men moſt neceſſarie at ſuch a time and for ſuch a ſervice.

and they out of Zebulun that handle the pen of the writer] i. e. Not onely ſuch as by their profeſſion were fit to be Captains and ſouldiers, but even Scribes and Scholars, men addicted to ſtudies, with unanimous conſent joyned with the reſt in taking up armes to fight Gods battles, and help their brethren.

V. 15. And the Princes of Iſſachar were with Deborah] i. e. Agreed with her to give her their aſſiſtance when they were required.

even Iſſachar, and alſo Barak] i e. Not onely the Princes, but alſo a great part of the tribe, together with Barak, who was their Generall and chief Commander.

he was ſent on foot into the valley] i. e. Being ſo commanded by God, he left mount Tabor, a place of ſtrength and advantage, and went down on foot into the valley: i. e. He with his army, being all footmen, were very willing to take any pains in this ſervice, and content to fight with the Canaanites in a place of great diſadvantage; for their iron chariots and horſe-men were in the valleys of greateſt uſe.

For the diviſions of Reuben there were great thoughts of heart:] Or, in the diviſions of Reuben. If we take the words according to the former reading, the meaning is, There were great reaſonings among the other tribes that favoured the cauſe, and much muttering and murmuring againſt Reuben, in that being a rich and powerfull tribe, they ſhould deſert their brethren, and with them the cauſe of God, either for love of eaſe or cowardly fear. But if we take the latter reading, then the meaning is, The Reubenites had reaſonings and diſputes one with another; one party holding that they ought not to deſert their brethren and with them the cauſe of God and his true religion; and the other, which were the ſtronger and more prevalent, that they ought chiefly and in the firſt place to provide for their own peace and ſafety, which they could not do, if they engaged themſelves in this war: Thoſe, being weary of ſervitude under the cruel tyrant, thought they ſhould take this opportunity of freeing themſelves out of it; But theſe maintained they ſhould run a deſperate danger in riſing againſt a mighty and potent King, unto whom alſo they had ſubmitted themſelves as tributaries and vaſſals; ſeeing if they miſcarried in the action they ſhould be utterly loſt and ruined; therefore they held it better to forbear till they did ſee the iſſue, and in the mean time to enjoy their eaſe, with their wealth and pleaſures in peace and ſafety, and not unneceſſarily run themſelves into ſuch deſperate hazards. Others think they deſerted the cauſe out of the pride of their hearts, becauſe they would not follow the conduct of a woman.

V. 16. Why abodeſt thou among the ſheepfolds] i. e. Why didſt thou, O Reuben, deſert thy brethren, and ſtay at home under ſo poor and baſe a pretence as tending thy flocks, becauſe thou art rich in them and aboundeſt in cattle. Num.32. 1, 2, 4. which muſt be carefully looked unto to preſerve them from miſcarriage.

to hear the bleatings of the flocks] She upbraideth them for being more affected with the bleatings of their ſheep then with the out-cryes, grones and complaints of their brethren under Jabins tyranny, and therefore chooſing rather by ſtaying at home to let them continue ſtill under grievous oppreſſion, than by aſſiſting in this war to hazard the loſſe of all, in caſe the tyrant prevailed: Which argued their covetouſneſſe and baſeneſſe of ſpirit, in that under ſo ſordid a pretence they would deſert the cauſe of Gods people, which was of ſuch weight and concernment. See the like, Luk. 14.18.

V. 17. Gilead abode beyond Jordan] i. e. The tribe of Gad and the other half-tribe of Manaſſeh, unto whom, together with Reuben, Gilead was given, Num. 32. 22, 40. Deut. 3. 12, 14. Joſh. 13. 24, 25, 31. ſtayed at home under the ſame pretences, and becauſe living beyond Jordan they were not yet oppreſſed by Jabin, nor like to be, unleſſe they provoked him by joyning with their brethren in this war againſt him, which they might forbear to do under a fair pretence, that they were ſeparated from them by the River, and in ſuch a diſtance that they could not come time enough to their aſſiſtance.

why did Dan remain in ſhips] Dans inheritance lay on the ſea-coaſt of Canaan, Joſh.19.40. having Japho or Joppa in their lot, an haven upon the Mediterranean, from whence they traded with other countryes; Which they pretended ſo wholly tooke them up that they had no leaſure to aſſiſt their brethren. But one of the Rabbins affirmeth this to be the true cauſe which made them hold back, becauſe out of cowardiſe and fear they durſt not aſſiſt them againſt ſo powerfull a tyrant, but rather thought of fleeing away by ſea, having ſuch ſtore of ſhipping, if he ſhould prevail againſt their brethren; though hereby they did willfully baniſh themſelves out of the promiſed land, and the place of Gods preſence, where they enjoyed his holy ordinances.

Aſher continued on the Sea-ſhore] Their inheritance alſo lying for the moſt part on the ſea-coaſt, Joſh. 19.24, 29. they pretended the like excuſes to deſert the ſervice.

and abode in his breaches] Or, creeks Either from thence to follow his merchandiſe, or under pretence of his neceſſary ſtaying at home to mend thoſe breaches which the ſea-floods had made, and which if neglected would be quickly enlarged, and put their country in danger of drowning.

V. 18. in the high places of the field] i. e. Deſcending from mount Tabor, whither God had ſent Barak to begin the war, into the valleys neer the river Kiſhon, to fight the battle, they greatly hazarded themſelves in the cauſe of God and for the good of his people, the plain champion being far more fit for Siſera his horſe and chariots than for their foot-army: ch.4.10, 14.

in Taanach by the waters of Megiddo] Theſe two were rivers, in the tribe of Manaſſeh, which had two cities adjoyning to them called by their names, Joſh.17.11. For Jabins army was ſo hugely vaſt and numerous that it filled all the champion country: and therefore though it is ſaid this battle was fought neere Tabor and the river Kiſhon, ch.4.6, 7. Pſal.83.9. and here, in Taanach by the waters of Megiddo, both may well ſtand, ſeeing theſe places were neer one another, though in divers tribes, and the battle might begin in one place, and through the retreat or flight of the enemy end in the other.

They took no gain of money] i. e. They voluntarily came to aſſiſt Jabin in this ſervice, not expecting from him any pay, but meerly out of malice towards Gods people, from whoſe overthrow they looked for much ſpoil; but they utterly failed in their hopes, for they got nothing by the bargain, but loſt all they had and themſelves alſo.

V. 20. They fought from heaven] i. e. The meteors from heaven, as wind, thunder, hail, as it were conſpired to work their ruine. See on ch.4.15. Or it may be they were terrified from heaven with the noiſe of an approaching army, as the Philiſtimes 2 Sam.5.24. and the Syrians, 2 King.7.6.

the ſtarrs in their courſes fought againſt Siſera] i. e. They in their ſtations, like Souldiers ranged in a battle, as the hoſt of God, with their influences raiſing ſtorms and horrible tempeſts, conſpired all together with earthly creatures, to work the ruine of Siſera and his army. By which kind of rhetorical expreſſions ſhe would ſhew, that not onely the Iſraelites, but even the Lord himſelf, both from heaven and on earth, by all manner of means and creatures, did fight againſt them. See annot. 2. on Gen.2.1.

V. 21. The river of Kiſhon ſwept them away] i. e. This river famous (though not for greatneſſe, yet) for antiquity did alſo help to deſtroy them, and ſwept them away, even as a broom, duſt and filth out of an houſe. And this it did when by reaſon of the mightie ſtorm of rain and hail being ſuddenly riſen to a great height, it drowned thoſe who in their flight ſought to paſſe over it: or ſwelling over its banks, it did carrie and ſweep away many dead bodies that were ſlain in the battle.

V. 22. Then were the horſe-hoofs broken by the means of the praunſings] i. e. Though they had many goodly horſes, ſo fed and pampered that for meer wantonneſſe and greatneſſe of ſpirit they could not ſtand ſtill upon the ground, yet they became unſerviceable, and could not hurt the Iſraelites, by reaſon that through their pride and ſtomack they brake their hoofs, and foundred their feet in that hot, hard and ſtony ground with their pawings and praunſings. Others take it that they brake their hoofs in their headlong and furious poſting away to ſave their lives: And ſo the vulgar Latine expreſſeth it.

V. 23. Curſe ye Meroz ſaid the angel of the Lord] What this Meroz was, no man can determine, ſeeing there is no mention to be found of it elſewhere, neither in former nor ſucceeding ages. Which ſeemeth to me to be one effect of this curſe, that the very name and memoriall of Meroz is wholly extinct and blotted out. So Prov.10.7. Pſal.109.13. But it is apparent that it was ſome city neer the place where this battle was fought; which being of conſiderable ſtrength, and able to aſſiſt in this war, were called in to give their aſſiſtance, but refuſed to do it, and rather choſe to ſtand in a cold neutrality, out of baſe and cowardly fear in reſpect of the power of their enemy. And this was an hainous ſin: For the weaker Gods people were, the more need they had of aid. And their infidelity and diſtruſt was the greater, in that they refuſed to help the Lord, that is, Gods people; for he himſelf being omnipotent needed not their help, and was able alſo to protect his ſervants, and them alſo, if they would have adventured themſelves in his quarrell. And hence it is that whereas other tribes are onely reproved for holding back, Meroz is curſed with a bitter curſe: And that it might not ſeem to have proceeded from paſſion and ſpleen, it is added that it was backed by Divine authority, and pronounced by the command of an angel, even the Angel of the covenant, Ieſus Chriſt, who is moſt zealous in the cauſe of his Church. See ch.6.11. & 2.1. Some think Meroz was a name transformed, to ſignifie obſcurely ſome city; as Mic.1.10, 11, 12. or, that the three conſonants, M, R, Z, were the initiall letters of the names of three cities that beeing near to the place of this battle, yet afforded no aſſiſtance to their brethren.

not to glory in their own ſtrength, ſeeing it is God alone that giveth victorie; nor preſuming on their own power, uſe cruelty and pride in their oppreſſions, ſeeing there is one mightier than they, who can give deliverance unto the oppreſſed even when they are helpeleſſe and hopeleſſe, Eccleſ. 5. 8.

V. 4. Lord, when thou wenteſt out of Seir] i. e. When the Edomites denying thy people paſſage through their country, thou didſt cauſe them to fetch a compaſſe about it, and going before them in a cloudie pillar, didſt lead them in a long circuit into the land of promiſe, after they had ſubdued king Arad, Numb. 20. 21. & 21. 4.

the earth trembled] i. e. Either the earth it ſelf, in a poeticall expreſſion, or the nations inhabiting that part of the earth, i. e. the Edomites, Amorites, Canaanites, trembled for fear of the Iſraelites neer approach. See Deut. 2. 25. Joſh. 5. 1.

the heavens dropped] With extraordinarie ſhowers and ſtorms, Pſal. 8. 8.

V. 5. The mountains melted] By theſe poeticall and hyperbolical expreſſions is ſhewed how the nations were affrighted and amazed when God ſhewed viſible ſignes of his power in protecting his people as they travelled towards the land of promiſe. So Pſal. 68. 15, 16, &c.

even that Sinai] i. e. Even as Mount Sinai had formerly done, when God gave and proclamed his law. Others conceive theſe words are to be underſtood of thoſe thunders, lightnings, earthquakes and tempeſts whereby God manifeſted his glory and Majeſtie at the giving of the law upon mount Sinai, becauſe then alſo he is ſaid to have come from Seir, Deut. 33. 2. and the ſhaking of Sinai is here expreſſed, and alſo Pſal 68. 7, 8. But leaving every man to his choyce, and ſubmitting my ſelf to better judgements, I ſtill rather incline to the former interpretation, I. Becauſe the former wonders were far more remote than theſe laſt, which were but of late, and being ſtill freſh in the peoples memories, were fit to make the deeper impreſſion. II. Becauſe this dread, fear and trembling which fell upon the nations was not propheſied of, and promiſed at the giving of the law, which was long before, but when the Iſraelites took their journey towards Canaan, and had paſſed over the river Arnon, Deut. 2. 24, 25. III Becauſe we read of much fire, ſmoak and darkneſſe at the giving of the law, but of no ſtorms, dropping of the clouds, and raining. But IV. this eſpecially moveth me to be of his mind, becauſe this going out of Seir cannot be meant of Sinai in this place, ſeeing God is never ſaid to have come out of Sinai, and the next words following do expound the former, and plainly ſhew, out of what place God went, namely, VVhen thou marchedſt out of the field of Edom, then the earth trembled, &c.

V. 6. In the dayes of Shamgar] i. e. Though Shamgar had begun a great deliverance by a wonderful victorie, ch. 3. 31. and though Jael, who lived at the ſame time, was accepted of God for her great zeal in ſeeking the good of the people, and freeing them all ſhe might from cruel oppreſſions; the which now ſhe hath more clearly manifeſted, in putting her ſelf upon that great and dangerous work of killing Siſera their chief enemy; yet in the time of both of them, notwithſtanding their good indeavours, Gods people lay under the great oppreſſions of their enemies, ſo as the high-wayes remained unoccupied, becauſe there was no commerce nor intercourſe of trading, men not daring to travel to and fro about their buſineſſe for fear of enemies and robbers. See Lev. 26. 22. 2 Chron. 15, 5. Iſai. 33. 1. Lam. 1. 4. & 4. 18.

and the travailers walked through by-wayes] i. e. If their occaſions were of that importance that they were neceſſitated to go out about them, they were fain to forſake the beaten roads, and find out ſecret and unhaunted by-pathes, that the enemies might not diſcover them, and that they might eſcape robbers.

V. 7. the inhabitants of the villages ceaſed] i. e. Unwalled towns lay waſt and forſaken, becauſe the Country people not daring to dwell in them, as being undefenſible againſt enemies, were conſtrained for the ſafeguard of their lives and goods to retire themſelves into walled cities and places of ſtrength.

untill that I Deborah aroſe, that I aroſe a mother in Iſrael] i. e. Till I, as a Governneſſe and a Prophetеſſe, teaching them Gods will, and with no leſſe care ſeeking their good than a loving mother her dear childrens, have encouraged them to this war, which hath freed them out of all their calamities.

V. 8. They choſe new gods] i. e. Becauſe by their ſhamefull apoſtaſie they fell away from God and his pure worſhip, and worſhipped heathen Idols, therefore he raiſed againſt them on every ſide cruell enemies, and plagued them with all the miſeries of war, chap. 2, 10. and 4. 1.

then was war in the gates] i. e. Warre with the miſeries thereof extended not only to their villages and unwalled towns, but even to their cities and places of chiefeſt ſtrength; yea, their very gates, the place of their going out and coming in for commerce, and of their judicature, were not free from the enemies in-roades: ſo as there was no exerciſe of trading, or execution of juſtice.

was there a ſhield or ſpear ſeen] Either becauſe their enemies had quite diſarmed them of all their weapons and ammunition, 1 Sam. 13. 19. 22. or elſe had brought them into ſuch a ſlaviſh fear that not one among fourty thouſand of Iſrael durſt be known to have them. And this is more probable, being implyed in the text: For it is not ſaid that they had not ſhield or ſpear, but that they were not ſeen among them: Levit. 26. 36.

V. 9. My heart is towards the Governours of Iſrael] i. e From my heart I honour and love the Governours and Heads of the tribes, who offered themſelves to be Captains and Leaders in this war, by their example encouraging the common people.

V. 11. They that are delivered from the noyſe of the Archers in the places of drawing water] i. e. They who were affrighted and indangered when they went out of their cities to their pits and Wels to draw and fetch in water, (a commodity ſcarce, yet more neceſſarie in thoſe hot and dry countries) by reaſon that their enemies ſcouting and hiding themſelves about thoſe places, aſſaulted them when they came out to draw water with hidious out-cries and fearful alarums, took them priſoners and brought them into ſlavery; or, if they filled before they could come ſo neer, ſhot their arrows at them, wounded and killed them; ſo as they could not come to draw without eminent danger. From which they are now wholly ſecured by this victorie. See on Neh. 4. 23.

V. 12. Awake, awake, Deborah] In a Rhetorical elegancie of ſpeech ſhe ſtirreth all to praiſe and thanſgiving, and beginneth with her ſelf rowſing up her own ſpirit, that ſhe might be a precedent and example for their imitation; like a cock who awaketh himſelf by clapping his wings, before by his crowing he awaketh others.

For the diviſions of Reuben there were great thoughts of heart:] Or, in the diviſions of Reuben. If we take the words according to the former reading, the meaning is, There were great reaſonings among the other tribes that favoured the cauſe, and much muttering and murmuring againſt Reuben, in that being a rich and powerfull tribe, they ſhould deſert their brethren, and with them the cauſe of God, either for love of eaſe or cowardly fear. But if we take the latter reading, then the meaning is, The Reubenites had reaſonings and diſputes one with another; one party holding that they ought not to deſert their brethren and with them the cauſe of God and his true religion; and the other, which were the ſtronger and more prevalent, that they ought chiefly and in the firſt place to provide for their own peace and ſafety, which they could not do, if they engaged themſelves in this war: Thoſe, being weary of ſervitude under the cruel tyrant, thought they ſhould take this opportunity of freeing themſelves out of it; But theſe maintained they ſhould run a deſperate danger in riſing againſt a mighty and potent King, unto whom alſo they had ſubmitted themſelves as tributaries and vaſſals; ſeeing if they miſcarried in the action they ſhould be utterly loſt and ruined; therefore they held it better to forbear till they did ſee the iſſue, and in the mean time to enjoy their eaſe, with their wealth and pleaſures in peace and ſafety, and not unneceſſarily run themſelves into ſuch deſperate hazards. Others think they deſerted the cauſe out of the pride of their hearts, becauſe they would not follow the conduct of a woman.

V. 16. Why abodeſt thou among the ſheepfolds] i. e. Why didſt thou, O Reuben, deſert thy brethren, and ſtay at home under ſo poor and baſe a pretence as tending thy flocks, becauſe thou art rich in them and aboundeſt in cattle. Num.32.1,2,4. which muſt be carefully looked unto to preſerve them from miſcarriage.

to hear the bleatings of the flocks] She upbraideth them for being more affected with the bleatings of their ſheep then with the out-cryes, grones and complaints of their brethren under Jabins tyranny, and therefore chooſing rather by ſtaying at home to let them continue ſtill under grievous oppreſſion, than by aſſiſting in this war to hazard the loſſe of all, in caſe the tyrant prevailed: Which argued their covetouſneſſe and baſeneſſe of ſpirit, in that under ſo ſordid a pretence they would deſert the cauſe of Gods people, which was of ſuch weight and concernment. See the like, Luk.14.18.

V. 17. Gilead abode beyond Jordan] i. e. The tribe of Gad and the other half-tribe of Manaſſeh, unto whom, together with Reuben, Gilead was given, Num. 32. 22, 40. Deut. 3. 12, 14. Joſh. 13. 24, 25, 31. ſtayed at home under the ſame pretences, and becauſe living beyond Jordan they were not yet oppreſſed by Jabin, nor like to be, unleſſe they provoked him by joyning with their brethren in this war againſt him, which they might forbear to do under a fair pretence, that they were ſeparated from them by the River, and in ſuch a diſtance that they could not come time enough to their aſſiſtance.

why did Dan remain in ſhips] Dans inheritance lay on the ſea-coaſt of Canaan, Joſh.19.40. having Japho or Joppa in their lot, an haven upon the Mediterranean, from whence they traded with other countryes; Which they pretended ſo wholly tooke them up that they had no leaſure to aſſiſt their brethren. But one of the Rabbins affirmeth this to be the true cauſe which made them hold back, becauſe out of cowardiſe and fear they durſt not aſſiſt them againſt ſo powerfull a tyrant, but rather thought of fleeing away by ſea, having ſuch ſtore of ſhipping, if he ſhould prevail againſt their brethren; though hereby they did willfully baniſh themſelves out of the promiſed land, and the place of Gods preſence, where they enjoyed his holy ordinances.

and abode in his breaches] Or, creeks Either from thence to follow his merchandiſe, or under pretence of his neceſſary ſtaying at home to mend thoſe breaches which the ſea-floods had made, and which if neglected would be quickly enlarged, and put their country in danger of drowning.

V. 18. in the high places of the field] i. e. Deſcending from mount Tabor, whither God had ſent Barak to begin the war, into the valleys neer the river Kiſhon, to fight the battle, they greatly hazarded themſelves in the cauſe of God and for the good of his people, the plain champion being far more fit for Siſera his horſe and chariots than for their foot-army: ch.4.10,14.

in Taanach by the waters of Megiddo] Theſe two were rivers, in the tribe of Manaſſeh, which had two cities adjoyning to them called by their names, Joſh.17.11. For Jabins army was ſo hugely vaſt and numerous that it filled all the champion country: and therefore though it is ſaid this battle was fought neere Tabor and the river Kiſhon, ch.4.6,7. Pſal.83.9. and here, in Taanach by the waters of Megiddo, both may well ſtand, ſeeing theſe places were neer one another, though in divers tribes, and the battle might begin in one place, and through the retreat or flight of the enemy end in the other.

They took no gain of money] i. e. They voluntarily came to aſſiſt Jabin in this ſervice, not expecting from him any pay, but meerly out of malice towards Gods people, from whoſe overthrow they looked for much ſpoil; but they utterly failed in their hopes, for they got nothing by the bargain, but loſt all they had and themſelves alſo.

V. 20. They fought from heaven] i. e. The meteors from heaven, as wind, thunder, hail, as it were conſpired to work their ruine. See on ch.4.15. Or it may be they were terrified from heaven with the noiſe of an approaching army, as the Philiſtimes 2 Sam.5.24. and the Syrians, 2 King.7.6.

the ſtarrs in their courſes fought againſt Siſera] i. e. They in their ſtations, like Souldiers ranged in a battle, as the hoſt of God, with their influences raiſing ſtorms and horrible tempeſts, conſpired all together with earthly creatures, to work the ruine of Siſera and his army. By which kind of rhetorical expreſſions ſhe would ſhew, that not onely the Iſraelites, but even the Lord himſelf, both from heaven and on earth, by all manner of means and creatures, did fight againſt them. See annot.2. on Gen.2.1.

V. 21. The river of Kiſhon ſwept them away] i. e. This river famous (though not for greatneſſe, yet) for antiquity did alſo help to deſtroy them, and ſwept them away, even as a broom, duſt and filth out of an houſe. And this it did when by reaſon of the mightie ſtorm of rain and hail being ſuddenly riſen to a great height, it drowned thoſe who in their flight ſought to paſſe over it: or ſwelling over its banks, it did carrie and ſweep away many dead bodies that were ſlain in the battle.

V. 22. Then were the horſe-hoofs broken by the means of the praunſings] i. e. Though they had many goodly horſes, ſo fed and pampered that for meer wantonneſſe and greatneſſe of ſpirit they could not ſtand ſtill upon the ground, yet they became unſerviceable, and could not hurt the Iſraelites, by reaſon that through their pride and ſtomack they brake their hoofs, and foundred their feet in that hot, hard and ſtony ground with their pawings and praunſings. Others take it that they brake their hoofs in their headlong and furious poſting away to ſave their lives: And ſo the vulgar Latine expreſſeth it.

V. 23. Curſe ye Meroz (ſaid the angel of the Lord] What this Meroz was, no man can determine, ſeeing there is no mention to be found of it elſewhere, neither in former nor ſucceeding ages. Which ſeemeth to me to be one effect of this curſe, that the very name and memoriall of Meroz is wholly extinct and blotted out. So Prov.10.7. Pſal.109.13. But it is apparent that it was ſome city neer the place where this battle was fought; which being of conſiderable ſtrength, and able to aſſiſt in this war, were called in to give their aſſiſtance, but refuſed to do it, and rather choſe to ſtand in a cold neutrality, out of baſe and cowardly fear in reſpect of the power of their enemy. And this was an hainous ſin: For the weaker Gods people were, the more need they had of aid. And their infidelity and diſtruſt was the greater, in that they refuſed to help the Lord, that is, Gods people; for he himſelf being omnipotent needed not their help, and was able alſo to protect his ſervants, and them alſo, if they would have adventured themſelves in his quarrell. And hence it is that whereas other tribes are onely reproved for holding back, Meroz is curſed with a bitter curſe: And that it might not ſeem to have proceeded from paſſion and ſpleen, it is added that it was backed by Divine authority, and pronounced by the command of an angel, even the Angel of the covenant, Ieſus Chriſt, who is moſt zealous in the cauſe of his Church. See ch.6.11. & 2.1. Some think Meroz was a name transformed, to ſignifie obſcurely ſome city; as Mic.1.10,11,12. or, that the three conſonants, M,R,Z, were the initiall letters of the names of three cities that being near to the place of this battle, yet afforded no aſſiſtance to their brethren.

in the tent] By his is meant either that God would multiply his bleſſings upon her in her tent, i. e. in all domeſticall affaires; or, that ſhe dwelling in a tent, as all the Kenites did, ſhould be bleſſed above all the reſt.

V. 25. ſhe brought forth butter] i. e. Either cream, in which the butter is; or elſe, after ſhe had given him milk to drink, ſhe gave him alſo butter to eat. All which kindneſſe ſhe uſed to make him reſt the more ſecure under her protection.

in a lordly diſh] i. e. In a rich and fair bowl befitting a man of his honour and dignity; or elſe, ſo large as that ſhe might drink his fill out of it.

V. 26. and with the hammer ſhe ſmote Siſera] Heb. She hammered him, i. e. with the hammer ſhe ſtroke the nail through his temples.

V. 27. At her feet he bowed, he fell] Here are rhetorically expreſſed the poſtures and motions of a man that hath received a mortall wound: Not that every particular could be ſaid of Siſera in the very letter; for being faſtned unto the earth with a pin driven through his temples, he could not riſe, and bow, and fall; but that in the pangs of death he did ſomething in reſpect of the ſubſtance ſuitable to all theſe, that is, he lay proſtrate at Jaels feet having the convulſions of death upon him.

V. 28. The mother of Siſera] Here we have another figurative amplification befitting a poeticall hymne, whereby is ſuppoſed how it was likely that Seſera's mother and her Ladies behaved themſelves in their words and actions upon this occaſion of his not preſent comming; i. e. She looked out of a window, expecting his approach; ſhe cryed out, when ſhe could not diſcover him, as one impatient of his delay and reaſoned with her ſelf and her Ladies what the cauſe might be why he ſtayed ſo long: And then is ſhewed what was likely to be ſpoken, by her Ladies or her ſelf, to quiet their minds and remove theſe fears, namely the hopes they had of his proſperous ſucceſſe, and that the cauſes of his ſtay were the fruits of his victory and the dividing of the ſpoyl. Where we have a lively and ironicall repreſentation of pride and carnall confidence, preſuming of ſucceſſe in enterpriſes upon ſenſuall grounds without any reſpect to Gods power and providence.

V. 30. Have they not ſped] i. e. They have ſurely ſped and obtained the victory, and therefore cannot come ſo ſoon, becauſe they muſt have ſome time allowed them to divide the ſpoyl.

needle-work on both ſides] i. e. Both ſides alike, and of equall beauty.

V. 31. be as the Sun when he goeth forth in his might] i. e. As the Sun when it riſeth in glory and brightneſſe, and from the morning to high noon therein increaſeth more and more; ſo let them that love the Lord increaſe daily in glory and happineſſe: Prov. 4, 18. Pſal. 37. 6. 2 Sam. 23. 4. Dan. 12. 3.

And the land had reſt fourty years] i. e. Unto the fourtieth year, reckoning from Ehuds death, or thoſe eighty years mentioned ch. 3. 30. See ch. 3. 11.

CHAP. VI.

Verſ. 1. AND the children of Iſrael did evill in the ſight of the Lord] i. e. They provoked God to juſt diſpleaſure by their other ſins, but chiefly by their Idolatry, which was that eminent evill for which they are reproved v. 10. and for which God inflicted upon them this preſent judgement.

and the Lord delivered them] From this expreſſion and ſome others that follow, ſome gather that neither they were now fallen into ſo deep a degree of apoſtaſie and Idolatry as themſelves formerly and their fathers before them, nor that they were now ſo ſeverely puniſhed as in times paſt. For it is not ſaid, as ch. 3. 8. & 4. 2. that God ſold them, as ſlaves and bond-men to the Midianites, but only that he delivered them, i. e. ſo withdrew his protection and aſſiſtance as that they prevailed againſt them, and pillaged their Country. Neither did he ſuffer them to lye under theſe oppreſſions for eighteen or twenty years, as ch. 3. 14. & 4. 3. but only for ſeven. And for their ſin, it is not ſaid that they added unto their former wickedneſſe, and corrupted themſelves more than their fathers, as ch. 2. 19. but ſimply, that they did evill only.

into the hand of Midian] The great anceſtor of this people was Midian the ſon of Abraham by Keturah, Gen. 25. 2: who gave name to a City and country ſituate beyond Arabia towards the South, neer the red Sea. And likewiſe his poſterity after him were called Midianites. Here Zipporah Moſes wife was born, and the Kenites that deſcended from Jethro. And this (as ſome think) is the Country from whence thoſe whom we call Gypſies do come. In thoſe dayes they dwelt in Tents, and lived upon the ſpoil of other nations, removing themſelves, their wives, children, families and cattle from country to country, as it beſt liked them. Againſt theſe the Iſraelites made war, and deſtroyed many of them, when as they laboured to ſupplant them with their wiles: And now it ſeemeth, having gotten ſtrength, they make that their quarrell of ſeeking revenge. See on Hab. 3. 7.

V. 2. and becauſe of the Midianites] i. e. For fear of being ſurprized and plundred by them.

the children of Iſrael made them the dens, &c.] Partly for ſecrecy to hide themſelves and their goods from the Midianites, and partly for defence, if they happened to be diſcovered by them. Theſe Dens and Caves remained unto Sauls and Davids time, 1 Sam. 13. 6. and, it is very likely, long after.

V. 3. the Midianites came up, and the Amalekites, and the children of the eaſt] i. e. Not the Midianites alone, but alſo the Amalekites, who were of Eſaus poſterity, Gen. 36. 12. and alwayes malicious enemies to the Iſraelites and with them alſo the children of the Eaſt, that is, the Arabians, who lived Eaſternly in reference to Canaan, ch. 8. 10, 11. Job 1. 3. Iſa. 13. 20. All theſe in a joynt confederacie conſpired together to make yearly inroads into the land of Canaan, bringing with them their wives, families and cattle, before their corn was ripened, partly that they might live upon the ſpoil as long as it laſted, or they liſted; and partly out of malice towards the Iſraelites, ſpoiling all which they could not ſpend, and carrying away their ſheep, oxen and aſſes, that they might have no ſuſtenance to live upon when they were gone.

V. 4. till thou come unto Gaza] Lying in the utmoſt border of Canaan neer the Mediterranean: whereby it appeareth they waſted the whole Country, even from the eaſt, on which they bordered, to the very borders on the weſt-ſide.

V. 5. and they came as graſhoppers] By which hyperbolicall expreſſion is noted their multitude, their Army conſiſting of an hundred thirty five thouſand able fighting men, beſides women and children and the common raſcality that followed the camp, ch. 8. 10. and withall, the horrible ſpoyl which they made in the country, ſeeing like graſhoppers, they fell upon every place, and where they came devoured all, and left nothing behind them.

without number] An Hebraiſme: i. e. So many that they were hardly to be numbred. So ch. 7. 12. Whereas a ſmall company is expreſſed by the contrary phraſe, that they are men of number. See Gen. 34. 30.

V. 6. and the children of Iſrael cryed unto the Lord] i. e. When all the means in which they had truſted did fail them, and their dens and caves could not protect them, then ſeeing their folly they ſought unto the Lord their only rock and refuge, and returning unto him by true repentance they cried unto him for help and deliverance.

V. 8. the Lord ſent a Prophet] Heb. A man, a Prophet. Before he would give them deliverance, he fitteth them for it, by uſing the Miniſtery of a Prophet to bring them to repentance. He is ſaid to have been a man, a Prophet, that it might not be thought he was an Angel. For Angels in Scripture are not called Prophets, though Prophets are called Angels, Mal 3. 1. And it may probably be thought that this Prophet was ſent unto them before they cryed to the Lord, ſeeing the words may be read in the more-than-perfect-tenſe, as well as in the perfect, thus, The Lord had ſent a Prophet, namely, to exhort them to repentance, and to cry unto the Lord for pardon and help.

I brought you up from Ægypt] This he firſt mindeth them of, as being the prime and principall benefit upon which depended all the reſt following.

V. 9. and out of the hand of all that oppreſſed you] i. e. Not only the Ægyptians, but alſo all thoſe nations which raiſed war againſt you in the wilderneſſe, as the Amalekites, Arad, and the Canaanites, with the Midianites.

and draue them out from before you] i. e. The Amorites and Canaanites.

V. 10. Fear not the gods of the Amorites] i. e. Do not worſhip and ſerve them, out of an opinion that they are able to do you hurt, ſeeing they are but ſtocks and ſtones, and are able to do nothing againſt thoſe who ſerving me only are under my protection.

V. 11. And there came an Angel of the Lord] i. e. The Angel of the Covenant, the Lord Chriſt, the eternall Sun of God. For he is called Jehovah, v. 14. and the Lord, v. 16. and to him Gideon built an altar, which is peculiar to God, v. 24. So chap. 2. 1. Gen. 18. 17. & 48. 16. Thus Chriſt of old uſed to take upon him the ſhape of a man to typifie his Incarnation. And here appearing unto Gideon as a man, he alſo reſembleth a man in his poſtures and actions: For as a weary travailer he cometh with his ſtaff in his hand, and repoſeth himſelf under a tree to reſt him.

in Ophrah] There were two Ophrahs, one in Benjamin, Joſh. 18. 23. and this in Manaſſeh.

Joaſh the Abi-ezrite] i. e. Of the Family of Abiezer, and of the tribe of Manaſſeh, Joſh. 17. 2. See v. 24. 34.

threſhed wheat by the wine-preſſe] Which was under or neer unto the oak where the Angel ſat. Here appeareth the ſimplicity and humility of thoſe times, in that men of ſpeciall note, ſuch as Gideon was, being the ſon of a chief Magiſtrate, and having many ſervants at his command, v. 27. thought it no diſparagement to work with their own hands, and imploy themſelves in honeſt labours.

to hide it from the Midianites] Heb. To cauſe it to flee; to wit, out of the Midianites ſight, that they might not find it, To which end he made choice of this ſecret place, and there did not beat out the corn from the eares in the ordinary manner, by uſing oxen to tread it out, which would have been more ſubject to ſight, but he beat it out with a ſtaff, as being the more ſecret way whereby he might conceal it.

V. 12. The Lord is with thee] An ancient form of ſalutation, whereby is ſignified and wiſhed Gods preſence to aſſiſt us in all our labours and endeavours, and to protect us from all evill and danger. So Boaz ſaluted his reapers, Ruth 2. 4. and the Angel the bleſſed Virgin, Luk. 1. 28. The Angel here uſed it to encourage Gideon to undertake with confidence this great and difficult work which he was now to perſwade him unto thou mighty man of valour] This is ſpoken not ſo much in reſpect of that fortitude that was naturally in him, as of that courage and valour wherewith the Lord would now endow him, that he might fit him for ſo great a work.

V. 13. if the Lord be with us, why then is all this befallen us?] i. e. Why hath he expoſed us to all theſe miſeries, and forſaken us in them? Which is the uſuall complaint of Gods deareſt children in their extream afflictions, and the cauſe of all their expoſtulations, Pſal. 13. 1. & 22. 1. & 73.2——14. & 77.2——9. Jer.12.1,2. and where be all his miracles] q. d. Wee have he much ſpeech of the wonders he formerly did in the deliverances of our forefathers; but our ſelves in this our miſerable condition can have no experience of them, or reaſon to hope that he remaineth the ſame to us that he was to them.

V. 14. And the Lord looked upon him] i. e. Not in an ordinary manner, but virtually and efficaciouſly, as he did upon Peter, Luk.22. 61. by his Spirit ſpeaking powerfully to his heart the ſame things which he uttered to his ear.

Go in this thy might] Which I now give thee, and with it my promiſe to aſſiſt thee in this great work which thou art to undertake at my command; namely the deliverance of my people out of the hands of the Midianites.

have not I ſent thee,] i. e. I have aſſuredly called thee to this work, therefore pretend no difficulties or diſcouragements, ſeeing I am al-ſufficient to give thee ſuch wiſdom and power as may inable thee to effect it. See on ch.4.6.

V. 15. O my Lord, wherewith ſhall I ſave Iſrael?] Theſe words proceeded not from a totall want of faith, but from weakneſſe of it; for Gideon is one of thoſe great Worthies whoſe faith is commended, Heb.11.32. Nor ſpake hee thus meerly out of diſtruſt in God, as though he would not perform what he had promiſed, but as a man apprehenſive of his own weakneſſe, he deſired direction how to carry on the work, and what means he ſhould uſe for the atchieving of it, and the further ſtrengthening of his faith in the aſſurance of good ſucceſſe So Luk.1.34. Jud.13.12.

behold, my family is poore] Heb. my thouſand is the meaneſt. i. e. As I am weak in my ſelf, ſo alſo in my friends and allies. See Exod.18. 25. Mic.5.2. 1 Sam.9.21.

V. 16. thou ſhalt ſmite the Midianites as one man] i. e. As eaſily as if thou hadſt to do but with one man, and not with a great army.

V. 17. then ſhew me a ſigne that thou talkeſt with me] To wit, that thou art ſent of God thus to ſpeak unto me, whereby I may be the better enabled to undertake this dangerous expedition with good conſcience, as being called unto it by God, and with reſolution and courage, being aſſured of good ſucceſſe by his aſſiſtance.

V. 18. and bring forth my preſent] Or, meat-offering. And the word may ſignifie both, and ſo is diverſly taken in divers places; but it cannot here be underſtood in the latter ſenſe, as appeareth by the things here preſented, namely, a boyled Kid, and the broth in which it was ſod, fit food for a weary traveller, but not to be uſed in meat-offerings; beſides, here is no mention made of the fat, flower or oyl required unto them, Lev.6.12.14. For Gideon thinking this perſon to be onely a man, he deſireth to give him ſuch entertainment as was fit for a travailer, namely, by ſetting meat before him, as Abraham, Lot, and Manoah in like caſe did, chap. 13.15. Gen.18.5——8. & 19.3. See on 1 Sam 9.7.

V. 19. preſented it] As a dinner prepared for his repaſt, and not as a ſacrifice, ſeeing here is no mention of divers things neceſſarily required to a ſacrifice.

V. 20. poure out the broth] To wit, upon the fleſh and cakes. This he required, that the miracle which he intended might appear to be the greater: For the more the fleſh and cakes were moyſtened with the broth, the leſſe apt they were to be conſumed with the fire. So Elijah 1 Kings.18 33,34.

V. 21. there roſe up fire out of the rock, and conſumed the fleſh] So that which Gideon intended for a feaſt was by the Angel miraculouſly turned into a kind of burnt-offering, that thereby Gideons faith might be confirmed in this aſſurance, that the ſervice unto which God called him ſhould be accepted and have good ſucceſſe. See 1 Kings.18.38. 2 Chron. 7.1.

V. 22. And when Gideon perceived that he was an Angel] i. e. By his fetching fire out of the rock to conſume the things laid upon it, and his ſudden vaniſhing out of ſight.

Gideon ſaid, Alas, O Lord God] The cauſes of ſuch like affrightments when God gave viſible ſignes of his preſence, were partly the guilt of ſin and mans corruption, Iſa.6.5, partly Gods purity and glorious Majeſty, which maketh the Angels themſelves to cover their faces, Job 15.15, 16. Iſa. 6. 2. and partly Gods ſpeech to Moſes, Exod. 33. 20. There ſhall no man ſee me, and live. For theſe reaſons Gideon here, & Manoah, ch.13.22. were ſo affrighted becauſe they had ſeen the Lord, that they cried out through weakneſſe of faith, as though they ſhould have preſently dyed, and thought it a wonder that having ſeen the face of God, their lives were preſerved. But howſoever in this ſtate of mortality man cannot live and ſee God in his glory, Majeſty and infinite perfections, yet he may ſee him in the face of a Mediatour, the Angel of the Covenant, Jeſus Chriſt, by whom we have acceſſe unto God, and are accepted of him, Rom. 5. 2. Eph. 1. 6. & 2. 18. & 3. 12. And thus the Saints of old ſaw God, and yet lived. See Gen.16.13. & 32.30. Exod.24.11. Deut.5.24.

V. 23. And the Lord ſaid unto him] Namely, the ſame night after he was thus affrighted, v, 25. Some conceive he thus ſpake as he was in departing from him.

Peace be unto thee] i. e. Life, health, and all happineſſe; all which the Hebrews uſually expreſſe by this phraſe, and called it Jehovah-Shalom] i. e. The Lord ſend peace This altar Gideon built, and dedicated it to Chriſt himſelf, the Angel of the Covenant that had appeared unto him, which he called Jehovah-Shalom, I. Becauſe he is our peace, and Prince of peace, Iſa.9.6. and the author and giver of all our peace, Iſa.53.5. Luk. 2. 14. Heb.7.2. John.14.27. & 16.33. Acts 10.36. II. Becauſe he had peaceably ſaluted him in his affrightment and fear of death, and comforted him by promiſing that he ſhould live, ver. 23. III. Becauſe he had aſſured him of his deliverance and peace to him and his people by their victory over the Midianites. Now what is here ſaid is ſaid by anticipation. For Gideon built not this altar before he received a command from God for it, the night following the apparition, v. 26. when God gave him divers other directions for the whole carriage of the enſuing buſineſſe. And this is uſuall in the Scripture, firſt to ſet down a thing in the groſſe, and then afterwards the manner how it was to be done. Such like titles as this here, ſee, Exod. 17.15. Jer. 33.16. Ezek. 48. 35. then afterwards the manner how it was to be done.

V. 24. then Gideon built an altar there] Namely, upon the top of the rock, by Gods ſpeciall command, v. 26. Of the lawfulneſſe of building extraordinarie altars upon extraordinarie occaſions, ſee on ch. 13.16. & 21.4.

V. 25. Take thy fathers young bullock, even the ſecond bullock] Or, and the ſecond bullock. And if ſo, then two were commanded to be ſacrificed. But v. 28. mention is made but of one; therefore the firſt reading is thought to be better. Now it is not apparent why he was called the ſecond; only men diverſly gueſſe at it; as, becauſe either he ſtood uſually in the ſecond place in the ſtall, or at the plow or cart; or becauſe he was ſecond in age, or in price or worth; or ſecond of thoſe which were prepared and fatted to be ſacrificed to Baal. And that this bullock was deſtinated, not for Joaſh his private ſervice, but for the publick uſe in the peoples Idolatrous worſhip, ſeemeth the more probable, in that they complain of it as a ſacrilegious act committed by Gideon, becauſe having pulled down Baals altar, he had ſacrificed this bullock on the altar which himſelf had built, v.28,30.

of ſeven yeares old] Bred the ſame year in which the Midianites began their tyranny; and therefore, it may be, he was choſen the rather by the Lord for a ſacrifice, to ſignifie that now this tyranny ſhould have an end.

and throw down the altar of Baal, that thy father hath] i. e. Standing in his ground, as in an eminent place, he being a chief Magiſtrate.

and cut down the grove that is by it] Dedicated to idolatry. Begin thy calling with the rooting out of idolatry, and reſtoring of Gods true worſhip; that ſo thou mayeſt go on againſt the Midianites with confidence, courage, and hope of victory, when thou haſt begun a reformation in religion, and ſuppreſſed idolatry and ſuperſtition amongſt thy own people, which were the cauſes that moved God to give them up to their tyranny.

V. 26. And built an altar unto the Lord thy God] Firſt, idolatry muſt be aboliſhed before Gods true worſhip could be ſet up, becauſe they cannot ſtand together, ſeeing there is no concord between Chriſt and Belial, between the Temple of God and idols, 2 Cor.6.15,16. If we will ſerve God, the ſervice of Baal muſt be firſt rejected, 1 King. 18, 21.

upon the top of this rock] On which God had ſhewed that great miracle in cauſing fire to aſcend out of it, v. 20, 21. thereby conſecrating it to himſelf in a ſpeciall manner for this ſervice, i. e. to honour and praiſe him for delivering Gideon from that fright in which he was v. 22. and for promiſing his people deliverance from the Midianites, v.16. and alſo to pray unto him to make good his promiſe, and to ſpeed and perfect this great work.

in the ordered place] Or, in an orderly manner. i. e. Either, in the place of the rock which was before appointed for the fleſh, cakes, and broth to be laid upon, as fitteſt for this ſervice; or, he was to build it as was commanded by the law, Exod. 20. 24, 25. of earth or unhewen ſtones fitted for the ſacrifice in an orderly manner, by laying the wood upon it, and the Sacrifice upon the wood, that it might be burned thereon.

and offer a burnt-ſacrifice] This office was proper to the Prieſts; yet in a caſe extraordinary, Gideon, who was no Prieſt, did lawfully execute it, having Gods ſpeciall command for the ſame.

with the wood of the grove] To wit, which grew neer Baals altar. The Patriarchs of old, and the heathens in imitation of them, had high places and ſhady groves, both for privacie, that they might not be interrupted by any wordly diſtractions, and alſo to make them more intent in their devotions, being affected with a kind of awfull fear by that ſhady ſolitarineſſe.

V. 27. Then Gideon took ten men of his ſervants] i. e. He executed Gods command in a prudentiall manner, taking ſo many of his ſervants for the quicker diſpatch, becauſe it was to be done in that one night before the morning, making choyce of ſuch as were (like himſelf) affected with a deteſtation of the idolatry of thoſe times. And though it ſeemeth he was a man of more than ordinary rank, ſeeing he had ſo many ſervants to attend his command, yet becauſe both the city and alſo his fathers houſhold were much corrupted with Idolatry, in a provident fear and care to avoid danger and tumults, he doth ſecretly in the night what God had commanded him, that he might not be hindred whileſt he was doing it. For he did not act this work in the night that it might not be known who had done it, ſeeing that he could not poſſibly be long concealed which had ſo many hands in the acting of it.

V. 30. Then the men of the City ſaid unto Joaſh, Bring out thy ſon, that he may dye] With a joynt vote they complained to Joaſh, as being their Magiſtrate, of his ſon, and would by no other means be ſatisfied than by his death, becauſe the injury he had done concerned the publick ſtate, the Idol of Baal, the altar, the grove, and the bullock belonging in common to the whole people and city, howſoever they were in the cuſtody of Joaſh, as being chief amongſt them. Nothing can ſeem unreaſonable to men tranſported with an idolatrous rage, as we ſee in the example of the Epheſians all in a confuſed uprore about their goddeſſe Diana, Act. 19. 28, &c. and in theſe men here, who in their blind zeal to Baal, would have the life of Gideon before they would hear what he could ſay for himſelf, and required that the father ſhould give up his own ſon to their rage and violence; having herein no more reſpect to Joaſh, though a Magiſtrate or chief man amongſt them that if he had been of ordinary and common rank.

V. 31. And Joaſh ſaid——Will ye plead for Baal] Some think he onely prudently endeavoured to ſtop them in this uprore and commotion (as the town-clark the Epheſians, Act. 19.) by telling them that if there were a fault committed, it did not belong unto them to puniſh the offendors, being private men, but to the Magiſtrates who were to judge of it.

he that will plead for him] Namely, in this tumultuous way which diſturbeth the common peace.

let him be put to death] Joaſh himſelf had been a worſhipper of Baal, but now it ſeemeth his mind was changed by hearing from his ſon (as may be probably thought) that God had appeared unto him in that wonderfull manner before related, and had commanded him to do all that which he had done: Or elſe his naturall affection exceeding his idolatrous zeal maketh him thus to plead for his ſon to preſerve his life.

if he be a God, let him plead for himſelf] i. e. If he hath ſuch a divine power as you imagine, he is able to maintain his own cauſe, and to right and revenge the wrongs that are offered him: but if not, then he is not worthy to be defended by you, who is unable to defend either you or himſelfe.

V. 32. Therefore on that day he called him Jerubbaal] i. e. Joaſh called his ſon Gideon by the name of Jerubbaal. For Jerubbaal ſignifieth, Let Baal plead for himſelf. He is called Jerubbeſheth, 2 Sam. 11. 21.

If thou wilt ſave Iſrael by my hand] He deſireth not more ſignes out of infidelity to tempt God, but being ſenſible of his own weakneſſe, in all humility he deſireth theſe helps for the further confirmation of his faith concerning his calling from God to this preſent work, and the good iſſue and ſucceſſe of it. For though the Apoſtle commendeth him for his faith, Heb. 11. 32. yet he did not attain to the height and ſtrength of it all at once, but by degrees, as he was more and more confirmed by God, and in the mean time he needed all theſe helps to ſupport him in all his weakneſſe and wants, and to ſtrengthen him againſt all his diffidence and doubtings. Some think he required theſe laſt ſigns, not ſo much for himſelf, as for thoſe who followed him in this expedition: And if we ſay, that it was both for them and himſelf alſo, I think we come neereſt to the truth.

V. 37. and it be dry on all the earth beſide] i. e. On all the floore round about the fleece, no dew falling upon it, but on the fleece only. By the dew, which at firſt fell upon the fleece onely, and after upon all the ground, leaving the fleece alone dry; Ambroſe, Auguſtine, and divers others hold, that the grace and favour and word of God was ſhadowed out and ſignified, which at firſt was vouchſafed to the Jews alone, but afterward was extended to all other nations, and the Jews onely for their ingratitude and impenitence rejected and excluded.

V. 38. for he roſe up early on the morrow] i. e. As one longing to ſee a return of his prayers, and alſo becauſe he might have a more ſure triall of his experiment, by coming to the place where the fleece was ſpread before the *S*un was riſen, which otherwiſe might have drawn up this morning dew, Hoſ. 6. 4.

V. 2. The people that are with thee are too many] The whole army of the Iſraelites conſiſted but of two and thirty thouſand, and the Midianites were at leaſt an hundred thirty and five thouſand, yet though they were above four to one, the Lord ſaith the Iſraelites were too many for him to give the victory unto them; and the ſame is ſaid when the number was abated to ten thouſand, ver. 4. and the reaſon here is given, Becauſe otherwiſe the Iſraelites would have boaſted that they had gotten the victory by their own hand, i. e. their own valour and ſtrength, and ſo have robbed God of the glory which was due to him alone. So prone men are upon any good ſucceſſe to glory in themſelves, rather then in the Lord from whom they have it.

V. 3. Whoſoever is fearfull and afraid, let him return] According to the law, Deut. 20. 8. leſt by the example of the cowardly and fearfull thoſe who were in their own diſpoſition valiant might grow faint-hearted; as is uſuall in warrs and battles.

from mount Gilead] Or, as the word may ſignifie, towards mount Gilead, beyond Jordan, whence the half-tribe of Manaſſeh comes chap. 6. 35. and which did lye over againſt Gideons camp. Others think there were two mounts of this name, one beyond Jordan, frequently mentioned in *S*cripture, the other in the tribe of Manaſſeh within Jordan, neer the valley of Jezreel, where the Midianites now lay, this (if there were any ſuch Gilead) is likely to be here meant, ſeeing Iſraelites of all ſorts and tribes might depart from this place, where they were now encamped all together; but it is not ſo probable that all theſe two and twenty thouſand departed to Gilead beyond Jordan, ſeeing the moſt of this number were of thoſe tribes that dwelled in Canaan. Of Gilead ſee on Obad. 19.

and there returned of the people twenty and two thouſand] Who though before they were willing to fight for their liberty and deliverance from their grievous oppreſſions, yet now ſeeing the mighty army of the Midianites, and the paucitie and weakneſſe of their own party, were grown fearfull and faint-hearted.

Now if this were not onely a meer ſign which God ordered at his pleaſure to ſever theſe men, but had ſome reality and reaſon in it ſelf in reſpect of mens different diſpoſitions, then we may gueſſe it to be this, That the falling flat to drink, and putting the mouth to the water, argued either faintneſſe and wearineſſe, or ſloth and greedineſſe of appetite, which could not leave till it had drunk its fill; the other, more temperance, being contented with a little, and more ſtrength, courage and eagerneſs in proſecuting their intention and deſign, upon which they preſently fall again as ſoon as they have a little relieved their preſent neceſſity. See Pſal.110.7. Some gather hence allegoricall obſervations as, That thoſe only are fit to follow the Lord and to fight under his colours who out of zeal to his ſervice, like Gideons three hundred ſouldiers, curb their ſenſuall appetite, and (as the dogs about Nile) ſettle not themſelves to drink a full draught of the pleaſures and profits of this life, but only lap and taſt a little thereof as they paſſe along, rather out of pure neceſſity then any great delight, ſtill uſing this world as if they uſed it not, 1 Cor. 7.31. V. 13. and lo, a cake of barly-bread tumbled into the hoſt] The analogie and ſimilitude obſervable in this dream ſtandeth thus; That as it were a great miracle if ſo poor a thing as a barley-loaf rolled down upon a well-pitched tent, ſhould overturn and ruine it, ſo it was no leſſe wonderfull that ſo contemptible a man as Gideon, held lately under ſuch vaſſallage that he durſt not ſhew his head, with a ſmall handfull of deſpiſed fugitives gathered together, ſhould rout and ruine ſuch a huge Army as that of the Midianites; yet as he ſaw the one done in his dream, ſo the other repreſented by it ſhould as ſurely come to paſſe.

V. 21. And there ſtood every man in his place] To ſhew that the Lord only fought the battle and got the victory, as Exod. 14. 13. 2 Chron. 27.17. And withall, to make the Midianites think they ſtood there to give light to that Army which came with them to enter upon and ſurprize their camp.

V. 22. and the Lord ſet every mans ſword againſt his fellow] i. e. The Lord ſtruck them with ſuch ſudden terrour and amazement, being frighted out of their dead ſleep, that they knew not what they did, nor could diſcern friends from enemies but miſtaking the one for the other ſlew their friends inſtead of their foes. V. 23. And the men of Iſrael gathered themſelves together] i. e. Hearing of this defeat and routing of the Midianitiſh army, they came preſently in to aſſiſt Gideon in the purſuit, as they eaſily might, being ſo lately disbanded, and as yet haply but in their return to their own Country, or at leaſt but newly come home, and therefore ſtill armed and in readineſſe to fight.

V. 24. And Gideon ſent meſſengers throughout all mount Ephraim] Not only to have their aſſiſtance for the compleating of the victory, but alſo out of his humility and modeſty, that they might ſhare with him in the honour of the day, not being willing to ingroſſe the glory of the victory to himſelf alone.

take before them the waters unto Beth-barah] Which lying neer unto Jordan, as ſome conceive, but ſhort of it, the Midianites muſt needs paſſe before they came unto it. And here it may be Oreb and Zeeb were taken in their flight, and many others with them. Others think that here are meant the foords and paſſages of Jordan even to Beth-barah: Unto which I rather incline, becauſe we do not read of any ſuch great rivers neer Jordan as could hinder their paſſage. Some think this Beth-barah to be that Bethabara mentioned, Joh. 1. 28. But that ſeemeth to be on this ſide Jordan, and this is ſaid to be beyond it. See on Joſh. 3.16.

and brought the heads of Oreb and Zeeb to Gideon] It muſt not be underſtood that they brought them unto him preſently as ſoon as they had ſlain them, but afterwards, when Gideon was paſſed over Jordan to purſue the remainder of the Midianites that were fled over with Zebah and Zalmunna, ch. 8. 4. But it ſeemeth to me, that here and in the beginning of the next chapter to verſe 4. there is ſome tranſpoſition in the order of the ſtory as it is here expreſſed; which was done it may be to this end, that the acts of the Ephraimites might be continued without any interruption.

Some do wittily and profitably allegorize on this victory, as typifying Chriſts conqueſt over ſin and Satan, with all other our ſpirituall enemies: For which they have good warrant, ſeeing the Prophet himſelf, propheſying of Chriſts victory over them, doth elegantly and largely allude unto it, Iſa.9.1—6. In both theſe victories there are divers reſemblances one with another. The Midianites, in reſpect of their multitude and malice, reſemble the many and malicious enemies of our ſalvation; Chriſt, like Gideon, overcoming and triumphing over them; The broken pitchers reſemble the breaking of his body with the ſorrows of death, and his crucifying on the Croſſe, Iſa.53.5. Heb. 2.14. The ſhining of the lamps when the pitchers were broken, the glory of his Godhead glorioufly ſhining forth, after he was broken by death, in his reſurrection, Rom. 1. 4. Now the benefit of this victory by Chriſts death and reſurrection is conveyed unto us by the light of the Goſpel, which is hid in pitchers or earthen veſſels, 2 Cor.4.7. And the Miniſters of the Word, lifting up their voyces like trumpets, proclaim this war againſt our ſpirituall enemies, and put into our hands the ſword of of the Spirit, the word of God, whereby we put all our enemies to flight and obtain the victory, Eph. 6. 17. 2 Cor 10. 4. Their crying out, The ſword of the Lord, reſembleth our fervent prayers unto God, by whoſe ſtrength alone we do prevail; and their ſtanding ſtill in their places, our waiting and expecting ſalvation from God, acknowledging that we have no ſtrength in our ſelves to reſiſt and over come ſo many and mighty enemies, but that all our might and hope of prevailing is from the Lord, that he alone may have all the glory of his own work, according to that, 2 Cor 4.7. But we have this treaſure in earthen veſſels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us.

CHAP. VIII.

Verſ.1. AN*d the men of Ephraim ſaid unto him*] i. e When they brought the heads of Oreb and Zeeb unto Gideon on the other ſide Jordan, and ſome think, before he had vanquiſhed and ſlain Zebah and Zalmunna with their army, becauſe he doth not mention that victory v. 2, 3. which would have made him equall with the Ephraimites in the number of Kings ſlain, who was already much ſuperiour to them by his routing the whole hoſt, and ſo expoſed him to greater envy. But if they had come unto him beyond Jordan, and their anger were appeaſed by his humble ſpeech, it is more than probable they ſhould have accompanied him in his ſecond expedition (which they did not;) ſeeing this quarrel was, becauſe they were not called to aſſiſt him in the former.

Why haſt thou ſerved us thus?] Heb. What thing is this that thou haſt done unto us? They were not contented with Gideons victory, in which they had equall benefit with the reſt of their brethren, being delivered thereby from the tyranny of the Midianites, becauſe they were not ſharers with him in the glory of it. This their pride and ambition did ariſe partly from the greatneſſe and power of their tribe, and partly from that priority and precedencie that they had above Manaſſeh by Jacobs bleſſing, and alſo in their encamping Num. 2.18, 20. where Manaſſeh is marſhalled under the ſtandard of Ephraim. Moreover, it is probable they aſſumed no ſmall honour to themſelves, for having had Joſhua the famous Generall of the Iſraelites, deſcended from their tribe, and for having the Tabernacle and ark ſeated at Shiloh, in their inheritance; and no doubt they were now extraordinarily puffed up with the good ſucceſſe they had in ſtopping and ſlaying the Midianites with their two Kings when they fought a paſſage over Jordan. And this made them emulate the tribe of Manaſſeh, of which Gideon was, as unworthy to be preferred before them, by having the chief honour of that expedition. And thus afterwards they proudly quarrelled with Jephthah upon the ſame ground, ch. 12.1. See the like 1 Sam. 19.41.

Is not the gleaning of the grapes of Ephraim] i. e. Is not your rich gleaning to be better eſteemed than our poor vintage? In which allegory he compareth the fight and the ſucceſſe of it to a vintage; the victory himſelf had gained by the aſſiſtance of the Abiezrites, his allies and friends, to the firſt gathering of the grapes, at leaſt in the Ephraimites eſteem; and the Ephraimites ſlaughtering of the Midianites in their flight, to the gleanings after the vintage: and he preferreth this before the other, both becauſe it was acted by their own valour, whereas he and his friends were only lookers on whileſt the enemies maſſacred and killed one another; and becauſe alſo the Ephraimites had taken their two Kings and ſlain them, which had eſcaped out of his hands. And withall, by the very naming of the actors in this expedition, Ephraim and Abiezer, he ſeemeth to magnifie and extol them, as a great and famous tribe, and to abaſe and viliſie his own party, as ſpringing out of the poor family of Abiezer, ch. 6.15

V. 4. yet purſuing them] i. e. Zebah and Zalmunna, with fifteen thouſand of their army, that were fled, and had gotten over Jordan towards their own country.

V. 5. And he ſaid unto the men of Succoth] Not that Succoth in the land of Ægypt, Exod. 12.37. Num. 33.5. but a city in the tribe of Gad, Joſh. 13.27. Situate at the River Jabbok neer Jordan, ſo called becauſe Jacob coming homewards from Laban built his booths there, Gen. 33.17.

for they be faint] He inforceth his requeſt by two ſtrong arguments; I. Becauſe he and his followers were faint and weary, and therefore it would be a work of mercy to relieve them, though they had been ſtrangers and not brethren, in ſuch diſtreſſe: II. Becauſe they were in purſuit of the common enemy; and therefore it would be a work of juſtice to ſtrengthen their hands in ſuch a deſign. *S*ee on Gen. 14.18.

V. 6. And the princes of Succoth ſaid] i. e. They refuſed to relieve them partly becauſe they ſaw ſuch weakneſſe and wearineſſe in Gideons few men, and ſuch number and ſtrength in the army of their enemies; and, partly becauſe they feared the Midianites would, after they had recruited their army, return again, and revenge themſelves upon them for relieving their enemies.

Are the hands of Zebah and Zalmunna now in thy hands] q. d. Are they already in thy power as thy priſoners, that we ſhould reſpect thee as victor, and not rather fear their revenge? Thus they incenſe Gideon by rejecting his requeſt with contemptuous ſcorn. *S*ee the like 1 *S*am. 25.10.

V. 7. I will tear] Heb. threſh. i. e. I will revenge this foul ſcorn and proud contempt which you have upon me with extream, yet juſt, ſeverity, ſeeing you refuſe to relieve my faint and wearied followers fighting in a common cauſe againſt Gods enemies, and herein grievouſly ſin againſt God, the Common-wealth, my ſelf, and all my followers your brethren; and do all this in a proud, ſcornfull and contemptuous manner againſt us, and in favour of our tyrannous enemies.

your fleſh with the thorns of the wilderneſſe] i. e. Lying between *S*uccoth and penuel, at the brook Jabbok, Gen. 32. 2, 22, 30. is called alſo the wilderneſſe of Mahanaim, as lying neer unto it, 2 *S*am. 17.27, 29. This wilderneſſe abounded with thorns and briers. This Threatning Gideon denounced againſt them, being as confident through Gods aſſiſtance of prevailing againſt his enemies as if already he had obtained the victorie.

V. 8. And he went up thence to Penuel] A City alſo in the tribe of Gad, neer the brook Jabbok, ſo called by Jacob, becauſe there he ſaw God and wreſtled with him, Gen. 32.30. 1 King. 12.25.

and the men of Penuel anſwered him as the men of Succoth] i. e. Denyed his requeſt with like ſcorn and contempt: And this they the rather did, preſuming on the ſtrength of their tower, which cauſed Gideon to threaten the pulling of it down, when he returned with victory.

V. 9. when I come again in peace] *i. e. S*afe and victorious.

for the hoſt was ſecure] Not ſeeing themſelves purſued by the Iſraelites, not fearing it, ſeeing they were now come ſo far on the way towards their own country.

V. 12. and diſcomfited] Heb. terrified. i. e. Coming upon them on the ſuddain, they were frighted, routed, put to flight, and ſo ſlaughtered and utterly ruined.

V. 13. Before the Sun was up] Whereby is implyed that he came upon them in the night, as he had done before, ch. 7.19. and ſo being awakened out of their dead ſleep, they were frighted and amazed, ſo as they could not ſtand in their own defence: Which could not have ſo ſucceeded, if he had attempted them in the day: for the light would have diſcovered the weakneſſe of Gideons army and their own ſtrength.

V. 14. and he deſcribed unto him the princes of Succoth] Heb. writ. i. e. He gave to Gideon their names in writing who were chiefly guilty. For in ſo weighty a matter he would not truſt his memory, leaſt he might haply puniſh the innocent with the guilty.

V. 15. Behold, Zebah and Zalmunna] q. d. I have purpoſely reſerved them alive, and here brought them unto you, to convince you of your confidence in the arm of fleſh, and your diffidence in God, as though he had not been able to have delivered them into my hand in reſpect of their ſtrength and my weakneſſe.

V. 16. And he took the Elders of the city, and thorns] Hereby is meant that he tortured them to death with theſe thorns and briars, by cauſing them to be caſt naked, and ſo trampled upon, or dragged them amongſt them, or elſe to be ſcourged with them till they dyed. For being equal in guilt with the men of Penuel, their puniſhment was alike capital with theirs.

with them he taught the men of Succoth] Or, he threſhed; or, he made to know. i. e. By this ſevere puniſhment he made theſe Princes and Elders an example to all the reſt, and ſo taught them more wit or experimental knowledg for the time to come, then to commit again the like ſins which were ſo hainous and offenſive againſt God and their brethren.

V. 17. and ſlew the men of the city] i. e. The Princes and Elders, who were chiefly or onely guilty; as v. 16.

V. 18. What manner of men were they whom ye ſlew] When they ſlew theſe men is not plainly expreſſed, whether in this or in ſome former invaſion: but it is more likely it was in this, ſeeing though Gideon thought his brethren were ſlain, yet he underſtood not the matter and circumſtance of their death; or elſe hearing that the Midianites had ſlain divers of the Iſraelites in thoſe holds and caves of mount Tabor where they had hid themſelves, ch. 6.2. and miſſing his brethren, and not knowing whether they might not be in the number of thoſe who were there ſlain, he putteth theſe Kings to deſcribe what manner of men they were, and upon their deſcription findeth they were his brethren.

at Tabor] *S*ee on Joſh. 19.12.

As thou art, ſo were they] q. d. They were like thee, and both thou and they like the children of a King, goodly and Majeſtical perſons. And this they ſaid (as it is like) to humor him and get favour.

V. 19. if ye had ſaved them alive, I would not ſlay you] i. e. Had they been merciful unto his brethren, where they fell into their hands, it would have been lawful for Gideon to have pardoned them, not being canaanites, though they were enemies; but now he could not, ſeeing by the law of God he was bound, being next of blood and alſo a Magiſtrate, to puniſh them with death that had murdered his brethren, Numb. 35.19.

V. 20. And he ſaid unto Jether his firſt-born, Up, and ſlay them] This he did to hearten him to proceed againſt Gods enemies with all ſeverity, and alſo to make him ſhare with himſelf in the honour of the victory. See Joſh. 10.24.

But the youth drew not his ſword] Not out of neglect of his fathers command, but meerly out of fear, being but a youth.

V. 21. Riſe thou, and fall upon us] This they deſire, I. That they might dye nobly, by the hand of one like themſelves, and not by a boy, in an ignominious manner. II. For a more quick diſpatch, which could not be made by the weaker hand of a boy, who would have hagled them with many blows, and ſo put them to more torment, whereas a man of ſtrength ſtriking them would quickly rid them out of their pain.

and took away the ornaments that were on their Camels necks] Or, ornaments like the moon. Their Camels (on which in thoſe countries men ride, as we here do on horſes) being according to their dignity adorned with chains and jewels, he ſeized upon them as a lawful prize taken in war, and as an enſign or memorial of his victory.

V. 22. Rule thou over us] Namely, as a King that hath ſovereign power, and leaveth it ſucceſſively to his poſterity.

V. 23. And Gideon ſaid, I will not rule over you] i. e. I will not take upon me the place and power of a King over Gods people, nor intaile it to my children after me; but the Regal rights ſhall ſtill, for me remain in Gods hand, till he ſhall be pleaſed to change the government, and according to his promiſe chooſe a King for you, Deut.17. 14,15. Hereby it appeareth that the Judges in this book were not abſolute Lords and Kings over the people, but extraordinarily raiſed for their defence and deliverance when oppreſſed by enemies, and to govern them as Gods Vicegerents (they ſtill retaining their liberties intire) according to the preſcript rule of Gods Law. And this made Gideon here to reject their offer, becauſe it trenched upon Gods royall prerogative, and there accepting him for their King would have been to reject God that he ſhould not reign over them; as it is plain, 1 Sam.8. 6,7. & 12. 12 *S*ee on ch.2.16. & 9.1.

V. 24. give me every man the earings of his prey] i. e. The golden ornaments, whether worn in the ear or on the fore-head: for the Hebrew word is uſed for both. *S*ee Gen.24.22,47. & 35.4. Neither doth he deſire all, but that every man ſhould give him one of thoſe which he had gotten for his prey, as the Hebrew text hath it.

becauſe they were Iſhmaelites] The Midianites and Iſhmaelites were ſo intermingled both in their habitation and alſo in their converſation and intercouſe of dealing and trading, that their names are promiſcuouſly uſed, as if they had been both but one nation. See Gen. 37. 25,28,36. Theſe frequently uſed to wear golden ear-rings; which is here rendred as the reaſon how there were ſo many of them taken as a prey.

V. 26. a thouſand and ſeven hundred ſhekels of gold] See Gen.24. 22.& Numb.7.14.

V. 27. And Gideon made an Ephod thereof] An Ephod was a veſtment that covered the ſhoulders and compaſſed the breaſt, like a ſhort ſtrait coat without ſleeves, put utmoſt upon the garments to keep them cloſe. And there were two ſorts of them; One, a rich garment, peculiar to the high Prieſt, made of blew, purple, ſcarlet, and twined linen, cunningly wrought and imbroydered with gold, in which was a breſt-place beſet with precious ſtones, wherein was put the Urim and Thummim whereby the high Prieſt inquired of God, Exod. 28. 4. The other was made in the like figure of fine linen, uſed not onely by the Prieſts, but by the Levites, and others alſo in ſolemn divine ſervice; as we ſee in the example of Samuel, who was only a Levite, and of David, who was of another tribe, 1 *S*am.2.18. & 17.16: & 2 *S*am.6.14.Of the former ſort was this rich Ephod which Gideon cauſed to be made and ſet up.

and put in his City, even in Ophrah] In which himſelf was born, and dwelt; namely, that it might there remain as a monument of this great victory and deliverance. Now if herein he aimed at Gods glory, the act was the more excuſable; but not ſo, if he intended thereby to perpetuate his own fame. Howſoever it is mentioned as an aſperſion caſt upon the glory of his former acts, whether we conſider the thing done, or the event and iſſue of it. For. I. An Ephod was no fit monument to repreſent a victory, but rather a ſtone or pillar erected to this end, 1 Sam.7.12. II. There could be no right or lawful uſe of ſuch an Ephod in ſuch a place, ſeeing it was proper for the Tabernacle and the uſe of the high Prieſt. And it may be that he ſet it up in his own City, that there upon all occaſions he might by ſome Prieſt uſing this Ephod enquire of God without going to the Tabernacle, as ch. 18.5,6. not conſidering that this was a priviledge belonging unto the high Prieſt alone, and peculiar to Aarons Ephod and breſt-plate, in which was put the Urim and Thummim. III. Becauſe it was a ſcandal given by Gideon to the people, to draw them to ſuperſtition, unto which they were naturally ſo much addicted. The event alſo ſhewed it was a great fault and failing, in that it proved a means to draw the people to groſſe idolatry; and beſides, in that it moved God in his juſt diſpleaſure to make it a ſnare to Gideon and his whole family, both in reſpect of ſin and of puniſhment, ſeeing it was the cauſe of their ſuperſtition and of their ruine.

and all Iſrael went thither] i.e. After the death of Gideon they did groſly abuſe it to will-worſhip ſuperſtition and idolatry, either reſorting unto it to inquire of it in all their doubts and difficulties concerning Gods will, or uſing it as the place where they offered Sacrifices, at leaſt peace and meat-offerings; or being taken with the glory and beauty of it, they uſed to fall down before it and worſhip it; and in proceſſe of time growing worſe and worſe, they abuſed it to the groſſeſt idolatry in the worſhip of Baal, v.33.See Lev.17.7. & 20.5.*S*o was Moſes his brazen Serpent abuſed, 2 Kings.18.4.

V. 28. ſo that they lifted up their heads no more] i.e. They no more recovered ſuch ſtrength as to be able to invade and vex the Iſrailites in their land.

And the country was in quietneſſe] i. e. The inhabitants of the country injoyed peace and proſperity, and were not diſturbed and diſquieted with the noyſe and clamors of Souldiers, the ſounding of trumpets and alarms of war, the claſhing of arms and weapons, the ſhouts of the victors, and the hideous out-cries of the vanquiſhed.

V. 29. went and dwelt in his own houſe] i.e. He reigned not, as King, v. 23. nor yet led altogether a private life, but (though ſomewhat retired) as a Judg he maintained Gods true worſhip, defended the laws and liberties of the people, and did all good ſervice to the Common wealth, v. 28, & 33. *S*ee on v.23. & ch. 2.16.

V.30. of his body begotten] Heb. going out of his thigh: Which is added to ſhew that they were his own natural children, and not ſons by adoption: *S*ee Gen.46.26.

V. 31. And his Concubine] i. e. His wife, though in an inferiour degree, married unto him when he had another wife before, who was miſtris of the family, and it ſeemeth advanced to this honour out of a mean condition, having been his maid-ſervant, as Zilpah and Bilhah, Jacobs Concubines, had been to Laban.

that was in Shechem] i. e. That was born in that City, and (as it ſeemeth) ſtill lived in it among her kindred, even after ſhe was Gideons Concubine. Shechem was ſituate upon an hill in Ephraim neer Samaria. See Gen.12.6. & 33.12. Joſh.20.7.

whoſe name he called Abimelech] That is, a Kingly father; the uſual title of the Philiſtine Kings. This ſome conceive Gideons Concubine out of pride and ambition perſwaded him to give, and in the event it proved to be a ſad omen and a fatal name to all his family. Here it is mentioned as an introduction to the following ſtory of Abimelechs uſurpation and tyranny to the utter ruine of Gideons houſe.

V.32. dyed in a good old age] i. e. Lived out his time allotted unto him in the courſe of nature, being not cut off by an immature and unnatural death; as alſo his life was proſperous, accompanied with health, ſtrength, riches, honours, and the reſt of Gods bleſſings, which make the life truly vital and to be deſired: See Gen.15.15.

V. 33. And made Baal-berith their god] The idol of the *S*hechemites ſignifying the lord of the covenant, ſo called it may be, when making choice of him to be their idol-god they did enter into covenant with him to do him ſervice: and ſo by adhering to him, they brake their covenant with God, and proſtituted themſelves to commit ſpiritual whoredome, which the Lord had ſo often and earneſtly forbidden, and ſo ſeverely puniſhed.

V. 34. remembred not the Lord their God] Neither his goodneſſe in multiplying his bleſſings upon them, nor his juſt judgements in puniſhing their former ſins, eſpecially their apoſtaſie and idolatry, nor his mercies in giving them deliverance out of their oppreſſions, when they turned unto him by true repentance: but either polluted his pure worſhip by worſhippiug God in idols, or by joyning them together with him; of which he is impatient, as not induring any corrivals; or finally they were ſo beſotted with idolatry, that they worſhipped idols only, and forgat the only true God altogether, and wholly neglected his ſervice.

V. 35. neither ſhewed they kindneſſe to the houſe of Jerubbaal] i. e. They did not requite his love with love, nor ſhewed themſelves grateful unto him according to his deſerts, in ſeeking the good and welfare of his poſterity.

CHAP. IX.

Verſe 1. AND Abimelech the ſon of Jerubbaal went to Shechem] In the former chapters we have ſeen one while the heavy hand of God upon his people, puniſhing them for their apoſtacy and idolatry, by raiſing up againſt them both forraign nations, and alſo the Canaanites which lived among them, by whoſe cruelties and oppreſſions they were grievouſly afflicted; another while, his mercy and goodneſſe towards them in ſending deliverance upon their repentance. Now, after the death of Gideon, they returning to their former wickedneſſe God puniſheth them with a civil war, wherein they murder and maſſacre one another, imbruing their hands in the blood of their brethren, and ſheathing their ſwords in their bowels. To this end he giveth up Abimelech to be ruled with an evil ſpirit of ambition, whereby he thirſted after Soveraignty, and Regal power, which having been offered to his noble father for his well-deſerving of the Common-wealth, had been by him modeſtly refuſed. For the attainment hereof Abimelech preſently after his fathers death and funerals goeth to Shechem, the City in which he was born, having no hope to compaſſe and effect his project and deſign by ſtaying in his fathers family among his many brethren, the meaneſt and youngeſt of them having a better title unto Regal power then himſelf: Although indeed neither he nor they had any right to it, ſeeing the Lord had eſtabliſhed the preſent government, in which he ruled himſelf, and kept all the Royal rights in his own hand. Unto him the people were to reſort in all caſes and cauſes of moment in which there was difficulty, and were therein to be ordered by the judgement of Urim and Thummim; and in ordinary matters, more plain and of leſſe weight, by thoſe Judges whom when he pleaſed he extraordinarily raiſed up and furniſhed with wiſdome and fortitude, to adminiſter juſtice and judgement, to protect them from their enemies, and to give deliverance when for their ſins they groaned under their oppreſſions. This government was to continue till the Lord himſelf was pleaſed to change it. And when he thought fit to place a King over them, he retained power in his own hands to chooſe one according to his own mind, and would not leave it to the peoples choice, much leſſe permit any out of their own ambitions to affect and aſpire unto Soveraignty.

unto his mothers brethren, and communed with them] He made choice of his mothers kindred, allies and friends, in whom (as being ſtrangers unto them) his own brethren, the ſons of his father, had no intereſt, to promote his plot; and he adviſed with them what might be the likelieſt means to further him in his deſign of attaining unto the Kingdome.

V. 2. Speak, I pray you, in the ears of all the men of Shechem] i. e. Seeing this buſineſſe is not to be carried on by a few, but by the common vote of the whole people, communicate your reaſons, by which they may be perſwaded to further my ſuit, unto all, one as well as another.

Whether is better for you either that all the ſons of Jerubbaal, which are threeſcore and ten perſons, reigne over you, or that one reigne over you?] Her in the firſt place he ſecretly and cunningly implieth, that they were weary of the preſent government, and would have a King, as appeared by their offering it to Gideon his father, ch. 8. 22. which though he refuſed to accept, yet in all reaſons they ought to have their deſire. Secondly, he falſly and ſlanderouſly intimateth, that the threeſcore and ten ſons of Gideon would not let that motion fall, but would aſpire unto Royall Soveraigntie, and divide the Kingdom amongſt them; whereas the contrary is plainly implyed in Jothams parable, that ſhould it be offered unto them they would all refuſe it. And thirdly, upon theſe falſe ſuppoſitions, he putteth them to Judge, whether it were not better to be governed by one in a free Monarchy, then in ſuch an Ariſtocracie to be forced to ſerve and pleaſe ſo many Lords, lye under ſuch a multiplyed tyrannie, groan under their oppreſſions, and hazard the Kingdom to be rent and ruined by civill wars, out of their mutuall jealouſies one of another, whileſt they ſought to preſerve their own ſtates from the intruſions of an ambitious neighbour, or were themſelves ready to incroach upon them.

Remember alſo that I am your bone and your fleſh] This is ſpoken ſometimes of a whole nation who have deſcended from the ſame grand & common parent, as Iſrael from Jacob, 1 Chro. 11. 1. ſometimes of the ſame City, in which oftentimes brethren and kindred co-inhabited, as I think here it is to be underſtood; ſometimes of kindred who were of the ſame blood, as Laban and Jacob, Gen. 29. 14. David and Amaſa, 2 Sam. 19. 13. and thus many of the Sechemites were of Abimelechs fleſh and bone. And this argument he uſeth to perſwade them to make him their King, ſeeing they might have much honour and many priviledges above others, who had a King to rule over them who was knit unto them in ſo neer relation. Where, whileſt he ſeeketh to wind himſelf into their affection for his own ends, he diſcovereth his corruption, partiality, and unfitneſſe to be a King, who ought to govern and execute juſtice and judgment equally to all men without reſpect of perſons or relations

V. 3. And their hearts inclined to follow Abimelech] i. e. To chooſe him before any other to be their King, becauſe he was their kinſman.

V. 4. pieces of ſilver] See on Gen. 20. 16.

out of the houſe of Baal-berith] i. e. The idolatrous temple of this Idol, which ſtood upon an high hill neer Shechem. Now the treaſure here mentioned was reſerved there, either becauſe it was raiſed out of oblations to the Idol, or becauſe that place was the Cities treaſury. For in ſome places they did in thoſe and after ages make their Idol-temples their treaſure-houſe, as the Romans did the temple of Saturn. Here it is obſervable, that theſe monies which were conſecrated to idolatrous uſes, through Gods providence became the inſtrument to bring upon the idolaters the puniſhment of their ſin, by imbroyling them in a civill war, which cauſed their utter ruine.

wherewith Abimelech hired vain and light perſons] i. e. A deſperate, beggerly and raſcally crew, ſons of Belial, who had no fear of God. And none but ſuch were fit to execute ſuch a barbarous and bloody deſign and ſuch an horrid maſſacre as Abimelech intended. So 2 Chron. 13. 7. See on Gen. 46. 4.

V. 5. ſlew his brethren —— being threeſcore and ten perſons] The whole number deſigned to the ſlaughter is named, though one of them, namely Jotham, eſcaped. And this is uſual in the Scripture. So Gen. 42. 13. Num. 14. 32, 33. 1 Cor. 15. 5.

upon the ſtone] They were not killed in ſeverall places as they found them, but being attached, they brought them out publickly to be executed all in one place. Which formality ſheweth that Abimelech cauſed it to be done under ſome pretence of Juſtice, as if they had conſpired together to commit ſome notorious wicked fact tending to the ruine of the whole ſtate. See the like cruelty and ambition, 2 Kings. 11. 1, 2.

V. 6. And all the men of Sechem gathered together] i. e. They and all their friends whom they could perſwade to joyn with them out of other tribes: Neither is it likely that they durſt preſume of themſelves to make a King without the conſent of many others, eſpecially ſeing it was an act expreſly contrary to Gods Word, he having appropriated this choyce unto himſelf, Deut. 17. 14, 15.

and all the houſe of Millo] Hereby ſome underſtand ſome ſmall City adjoyning to Shechem; others, the ſtrong hold ſpoken of v. 20, 46, 49 uſed for the town-houſe, where the Elders and full Counſel met together to debate of and order affairs of State, being guarded with a garriſon for their better ſecurity in thoſe troubleſome times. See 2 Sam. 5. 9.

and made Abimelech King] Whereby I conceive, that howſoever the Sechemites intention was that he ſhould reign over all Iſrael, yet being but one City, though backed with many friends, they durſt not attempt it at the firſt, but choſe him onely for their own King, to rule over that City and the parts lying about it. For the reaſon moving them to hearken to his ſuit reached no further, I am your bone & your fleſh, and Jotham ſaith that they had made him King over the men of Sechem, becauſe he was their brother, v. 18. But afterwards obſerved that all Iſrael were weary of the preſent government, and deſiring a King, were willing to accept of him, eſpecially having thus far proceedeg, and gathered daily more ſtrength to cruſh and quell all that ſhould oppoſe him, he uſurped the title of being King over the whole nation and took upon him to reign over all the tribes; whence it is that he is, ſaid to have reigned three years over Iſrael, v. 22.

by the Plain of the Pillar] Or, by the oak of the Pillar i. e. In that field neer Sechem where Joſhua erected the great ſtone under an oak; it being the cuſtome of thoſe times to anoynt their Kings in ſome famous noted place by reaſon of ſome tree or fountain, or ſtone erected for a monument, for the more ſolemnity of the action. See Joſh. 24. 26, 27.

V. 7. in the top of mount Gerizim] See on Joſh. 8. 30, 33. Of the top of this mountain Jotham made choyce, becauſe it ſeemeth the Sechemites were aſſembled at the bottom of it to inaugurate their new-choſen King, and becauſe ſpeaking aloud he might from thence beſt be heard and make an eſcape if he were purſued.

lift up his voyce, and cryed, and ſaid unto them] By divine inſpiration and the ſpirit of prophecy, as the event ſhewed.

Hearken unto me, ye men of Sechem] Namely, who am ſent of God to convince you of your hainous ſin in committing theſe horrible murders and maſſacres, that ſo you may repent, and avert Gods heavy judgments which hang over your heads.

that God may hearken unto you] To wit, when you call and cry unto him in the time of your deſtreſſe: Which he will not doe if you go on in your ſins, ſhutting your ears and hardening your hearts when by his meſſenger he giveth you warning to turn unto him by unfained repentance.

V. 8. The trees went forth on a time to anoint a King] He uſeth a parable, that he might more effectually convince them of their folly and ſin, ſeeing they might unpartially judge of it when as it was not directly charged upon them, but ſhadowed under this vail. So Nathan dealt with David, 2 Sam. 12. 1. and our Saviour Chriſt often with the Jews, the Prieſts, Scribes and Phariſees. In this parable Jotham I. taxeth the Iſraelites generally, and more eſpecially, the Sechemites, for their being weary of Gods government, and deſirous to be under the rule of a King. II. He ſetteth forth the modeſty and piety of his father, who did not accept of it when offered unto him, and of himſelf and his brother, who reſted contented with their condition, and did never ambitiouſly affect or aſpire unto Kingly Soveraignty. III. He ſheweth the pride and ambition of Abimelech, who, though wicked and worthleſſe, ſo thirſted after it, that he made way unto it through a field of blood. IV. He foretelleth the manifold miſeries and miſchiefs which both he and the Sechemites would bring upon themſelves in the cloſe and epilogue of this woſull tragedie. See the like parable, 2 Kings. 14. 9.

and they ſaid unto the olive-tree] By the Olive and the reſt of the fruitfull and uſefull trees here named are meant both, the Judges who ruled in former times, and alſo Gideon and his ſeventy ſons, who never affected, but utterly refuſed, this Kingly government.

V. 9. wherewith by me they honour God and man] i. e. By the oyle which cometh from me, God is honoured, ſeeing oyl is uſed in his ſervice, which tendeth to his honour, both in oblations and ſacrifices, and alſo for the nouriſhing of the lamps and lights in the Sanctuary. And men alſo are honoured by it, ſeeing it is uſed in the anointing of Kings, Prieſts and Prophets, and is profitable unto all ſorts and conditions, both for meat and medicine, food, face, and feature, Pſal 104. 15.

go to be promoted over the trees] Or, go up and down for other trees, The Kingly office is no eaſy calling but obligeth to great pains and care: for Kings, like the Sun, muſt oft viſit the regions under them, and go from place to place to keep all in good order.

V. 11. ſhould I forſake my ſweetneſſe, and my good fruit] When men leave their private places and callings wherein they are fruitfull and ſerviceable to God and men, and ambitiouſly affect high preferments and Soveraignty, they uſually grow fruitleſſe and barren in grace and goodneſſe.

V. 13. which cheereth God and man] Not that God uſeth wine, as man doth, to cheer him by drinking of it, but becauſe alſo it was uſed in Sacrifices and oblations, in which God delighted, as being duties of his ſervice. But man is cheered by it when temperately uſed, as being a ſingular means to renew and refreſh his ſpirits, eſpecially when they ſink with ſorrow, or droop under the preſſure of any great calamity, Pſal. 104. 15. Prov. 31. 6.

V. 14. Then ſaid all the trees unto the bramble] i. e. A baſe, worthleſſe and fruitleſſe ſhrub, good for nothing but to ſtop gaps, and with its pricks to keep men and beaſts from entring into the pleaſant fields, and afterwards to be burned, and with its blaze to kindle a fire. By the Bramble Jotham meaneth all proud and ambitious men, and particularly Abimelech, who was baſe in his birth, vicious and wicked in his life, barren in all grace and goodneſſe, and tyrannicall and cruel in his diſpoſition and nature; and by the trees, the Sechemites and other Iſraelites who offered to make him their King.

V. 15. come and put your truſt under my ſhadow] i. e. Reſt and rely wholly upon me for ſhelter, ſafety and protection. Such ſpecious ſhews tyrants make when they ſue and ſeek after Soveraignty, yet do nothing leſſe when they have attained unto it; like a bramble, which promiſeth ſhelter to the ſilly ſheep that commeth under it in a ſtorm, but ſcratcheth off his wool and teareth his skin, when deſiring to be at his liberty he would go from under it; Or like a Rider, who deſiring to back a wilde skittiſh horſe, clappeth and ſtroaketh him at his getting up, but ſpurreth and galleth him when he findeth himſelf ſure in the ſaddle. And ſuch an one was this cruel tyrant Abimelech, and alſo Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. 4. 12.

Let fire come out of the bramble] *S*ome write that this ſhrub beeing violently ſhaken by the winds, is, by reaſon of its dry ſubſtance apt to kindle of it ſelf and burn, and that thereby ſometimes whole woods are ſet on fire. *S*ee Ezek. 19. 14. Jam. 3. 5. Pſal. 58. 9.

and devour the Cedars of Lebanon] i. e. The moſt illuſtrious Nobles, and chief Elders and Magiſtrates, when they ſtand in his way, and refuſe to be inſtruments of his tyrannie & cruelty. Theſe are compared to the cedars of Lebanon, becauſe they were the goodlieſt and talleſt in all thoſe Countries.

V. 16. Now therefore] In theſe words he unfoldeth and applyeth the Parable.

if yee have dealt well with Jerubbaal] i. e. If you have gratefully requited him for all the benefits received from him.

his houſe] i e. His ſons and poſterity.

V. 17. adventured his life far] Heb. caſt his life, i. e. Neglected and deſpiſed his life for the common good. So chap. 12. 3. and 5. 18.

V. 18. becauſe he is your brother] i. e. Not becauſe he was the ſon of Jerubbaal, or for any goodneſſe in himſelf which might make him worthy of ſuch an honour, but meerly out of ſelf-love, becauſe he is of your kindred and alliance.

V. 19. then rejoyce ye in Abimelech] i. e. Live happily and joyfully with him, as with a King juſtly elected, and let him have all joy and content in you, as in his lawfull and loyall ſubjects. This Jotham wiſheth, not as thinking ſuch happineſſe would befall them, (for he knew they had done wickedly in all their proceedings) but by way of ironie and reproach.

V. 20. let fire come out from Abimelech] That curſed bramble fit for nothing but to be burnt and to burn others, and let fire come out from the men, &c. i. e. Let a wicked ſpirit of diſſenſion, hatred and revenge poſſeſſe them, and carry them on to ruine and deſtroy one another.

V. 21. And Jotham ran away and fled, and went] This variety of words expreſſing the ſame thing implyeth his great haſte in flying.

to Beer] This ſome conceive was a town in the tribe of Ephraim; others, and that more probably, think it was Baalath-beer in the tribe of *S*imeon, as being in a greater diſtance from Shechem, and ſo further out of the reach, and it may be out of the power and government of Abimelech. *S*ee Joſh. 19. 8.

V. 22. When Abimelech had reigned three years] To wit, as a uſurping tyrant, and not as a Judge delivering the people from their enemies, or exerciſing judgement and juſtice among them, or doing any other good to the Common-wealth; Then, when he leaſt thought of it, as ſuppoſing that he was ſecurely ſetled in his government, God began to execute upon him the curſe threatned by Jotham, and to make him an example of that common maxime, that there is no tyranny of long continuance.

over Iſrael] Not that he had the ſame dominion over the whole nation that he had over the Shechemites, but ſome autority and ſway he might have over all, being looked upon as the heir and ſucceſſour of Gideon. See on v. 6.

V. 23. Then God ſent an evil ſpirit between Abimelech and the men of Shechem] i. e. Either Satan himſelf, the chief author of all diſorders and diviſions in a common-wealth, as 1 Sam. 10. 9. & 19. 9. or the evil affections of malice, envy and diſcord. And this he did, not by infuſing into them theſe ſinfull corruptions, but as a juſt Judge puniſhing their former wickedneſſe, eſpecially that horrid maſſacre of Gideons ſons, he gave them up to their own vile affections and the devils temptations, to be hurried on in wicked courſes to their own mutuall ruine and utter deſtruction. Deut. 2. 30. 1 Sam. 2. 25. 1 Kings 12. 15. and 22. 21, 22. 2 Chron. 18, 19. & 20, 22. See on Hoſ. 10. 2.

and the men of Shechem dealt treacherouſly with Abimelech] i. e. They brake their covenant with him, and rebelling againſt him ſhook off the yoak of his government.

V. 24. That the cruelty done] i. e. The juſt revenge of that cruelty.

and their bloud be laid upon Abimelech] i. e. The guilt and puniſhment of their bloud unjuſtly ſhed. So 2 Sam. 1. 16. 1 King. 2. 31, 32, &c. Unto which, though they had not the leaſt reſpect in their mutual murders, yet it ſo came to paſſe by a juſt and overruling hand of Gods providence puniſhing them for their ſin.

V. 25. And the men of Shechem ſet liers in wait for him] i. e. Reſolving to rebell and caſt him off from being any longer their King, they laid a plot by way of ambuſh to ſurprize his perſon, if he hapned to come that way weakly attended.

and they robbed all that came along] Chiefly thoſe whom they knew to be of Abimelechs party, thereby to weaken them, or revenge themſelves upon them for their maſters ſake; or, if others with them, then to ſupply their preſent wants whileſt they lay there in wait.

and it was told Abimelech] i. e. That the Shechemites had rebelled and laid ambuſh to ſurprize him. Whereupon he prepared for war, and ſend ſome of his army into thoſe parts, which reſtrained the Shechemites from going out of their city to gather their vintage, till Gaal came in to their aſſiſtance.

V. 26. And Gaal the ſon of Ebed] Who this Gaal was appeareth not, but it ſeemeth he was ſome famous Commander, ſeeing the *S*hechemites put ſuch confidence in him that they made choice of him to be General of their forces. *S*ee on ver. 28.

with his brethren] i. e. He, his kindred and alies, came in to their aſſiſtance, with an intention it may be, after he had overcome and caſt out Abimelech, to take the government upon himſelf.

V. 27. they went out into the fields, and gathered their vineyards] To ſhew how much, out of their confidence in Gaal, they now ſlighted Abimelech, whom before they ſo much feared that they durſt not go out of the city.

and made merry] Or, ſung ſongs; as they uſed to do in the time of vintage, Iſai. 16. 10. Jer. 25. 30. Pſal. 4. 7.

and went into the houſe of their god] Namely, to praiſe Baal-berith for delivering them from the yoak of Abimelech, and to offer ſacrifice, and feaſt in his temple, as it was the cuſtom of thoſe times.

and curſed Abimelech] In their merrie mood they reviled Abimelech, wiſhing him all miſchiefs and misfortunes.

V. 28. Who is Abimelech, and who is Shechem] i. e. How baſe is he and unworthy of *S*overaignty? and how unfit is it that ſo ancient and famous a city as Shechem ſhould be enſlaved under his tyranny? Others think this is not ſpoken of the city *S*hechem, but of *S*hechem the ſon of Hamor, who in Jacobs time was governour of it, Gen. 34. and make this to be the meaning; What have we to do either with the one or the other, ſeeing neither can lay any juſt title or claim unto it? Not Shechem, or any of his poſterity, ſeeing they are caſt out, and their inheritance given to Gods people; nor Abimelech, who hath got the ſoveraignty over it by his own tyranny and uſurpation, which in it ſelf is a free city, and to be governed by no other than its own Magiſtrates.

Is not he the ſon of Jerubbaal?] His ſon by a concubine and ſo hath leſſe title unto it than any of the reſt of his ſons that came of his wives. And though Jerubbaal was worthily eſteemed for his worthy acts, yet what is this to Abimelech, ſeeing he refuſed to be king when it was offered unto him? And yet his very name Jerubbaal may make his memory of leſſe eſteem, who being but a mean private man got his name by that act of his, in deſtroying the altar of your God, whom you now worſhip and ſerve with unanimous conſent.

and Zebul his officer?] Whom he in his abſence hath conſtituted his Deputy. This he ſpeaketh to upbraid them of their baſe ſervitude, ſeeing they had not only enſlaved themſelves to Abimelech the ſon of a concubine, but alſo to Zebul his ſervant, and ſo to any other whom he in his proud humor ſhould be pleaſed to ſet over them. And of this he purpoſely mindeth them to work Zebul out of favour, that they might caſt him out of his government, and make choyce of him to rule in his room.

Serve the men of Hamor the father of Shechem] This he ſpeaketh by way of ironie and ſcorn, q. d. If ye will needs make your ſelves, who are a free people, to become bondmen and ſlaves, you had better ſeek out ſome of the progeny of the noble and ancient lords of this city then vaſſallage your ſelves to ſuch a baſe and new upſtart as Abimelech. And thus perſwading them to make choice of ſome one of Hamors progenie, ſome think he pointed at himſelf, whom he pretended to be deſcended of him. Others, more probably, thus; If ye will needs ſerve, then chooſe ſuch as will not tyrannically rule over you, like Abimelech, but in a fatherly manner, as Hamor did of old.

V. 29. And would to God this people were under my hand] i. e. Under my ſole government. Whereby it appeareth that howſoever many adhered to Gaal, as having great confidence in him, yet there were others that cleaved ſtill to Abimelech, and were content to ſubmit unto Zebul as his officer.

then would I remove Abimelech] i. e. I would quickly diſpatch him out of the way, and not ſuffer him any longer to be king over you.

And he ſaid to Abimelech, Increaſe thy army] In a bold, bragging and Thraſonical manner he ſpeaketh unto him being abſent, Make thy ſelf as ſtrong as thou canſt with all thy alies and friends, and then come out and fight with me, for hereby my victorie over thee ſhall be ſo much the more glorious.

V. 30. And when Zebul] when he had heard Gaal reproach his lord, and alſo diſgrace him who was his Officer and Lieutenant, howſoever he had made before ſome ſemblance and ſhew that he would not croſſe the Shechemites in their courſes againſt Abimelech, yet now he was ſo much incenſed with Gaals inſolence, that he could no longer indure him, but falleth, though ſecretly, to practiſe againſt him.

V. 31. Privily] Leſt being diſcovered to be wholly for Abimelech, the Shechemites ſhould riſe up againſt him, and either kill him, or wholly caſt him out of his place of government, and alſo that they not knowing of it, Abimelech might come upon them ſuddenly and find them unprovided. Hebr. craftily: or, to Tormah. And ſome conceive Tormah to be the name of the city which v. 41. is called Arumah, where Abimelech dwelt.

V. 32. Now therefore up by night] That thy coming may not be diſcovered; and lay ſecretly an ambuſh againſt the Shechemites, that they might fall into it in the morning, when ſome of thy company appearing the ſhall ſet upon them, and they making their retreat, as though they were not able to maintain the fight, ſhall draw them into the ambuſh.

and the peoole that is with thee] i e. Stay not to gather more forces, but come with thoſe thou haſt already, ſeeing they will be ſufficient to execute this deſign.

V. 33. as thou ſhalt find occaſion] Heb. as thine hand ſhall find; i. e. as thou ſhalt get opportunity in fighting againſt Gaal and thoſe that ſhall come out of the city with him. *S*ee the like phraſes, having the like ſignification, Lev. 25. 28. 1 Sam. 10. 7. & 25. 8. Eccl. 9. 10.

V. 34. and they laid wait againſt Shechem in four companies] Namely, that but one of the four appearing to their view, the Shechemites might be drawn out of the city, and being come out to fight with this one, might fall into the ambuſhments that were laid by the other three.

V. 35. and the people that were with him] i. e. One of the four companies.

V. 36. And when Gaal ſaw the people, he ſaid to Zebul] Who came in his company, counterfeiting himſelf to be of his partie, that he might encourage him to go out and fight, and ſo fall into the hands of the liers in wait.

Thou ſeeſt the ſhadow of the mountains as if there were men] He jeereth and derideth him, as though his ſight ſo failed him that he could put no difference between mountains and men, or rather that he was ſo faint-hearted that he was afraid of very ſhadows.

V. 37. by the middle of the land] Heb. Navil: a metaphorical ſpeech borrowed from the reſemblance: For as the navil ſtandeth out above the belly, ſo the mountains above the ground about them.

V. 38. Then ſaid Zebul unto him, Where is now thy mouth] i. e. Thy former great brags and boaſtings when thou ſaweſt no enemy? q. d. Is thy courage ſo ſoon quailed, that that thy heart fainteth and faileth thee before thou comeſt to fight? And with theſe ſcorns and reproaches he putteth him on to adventure the fight for very ſhame, and not daſtarly to return into the city, and there ſtand on his defence.

V. 39. And Gaal went out before the men of Shechem] Being partly put forward by Zebuls ſcorns, and partly conceiving ſome hopes of prevailing upon ſight of Abimelechs ſmall Army, ſuppoſing it to be no more but thoſe two Companies which he had diſcovered, whereas indeed two others lay ſtill in ambuſh.

V. 40. he fled before him, and many were overthrown] i. e. More were ſlain in the flight than in the fight, ſeeing they purſued them to the very gates of the City, and ſlaughtered them all the way.

V. 41. And Abimelech dwelt at Arumah] A City neer Shechem Southerly. Hither Abimelech retired himſelf with his army, either to refreſh themſelves after their fight, or to get ſome better opportunity of ſurpriſing Shechem.

Zebul thruſt out Gaal and his brethren] Taking the advantage of his defeat, which had wrought him out of the hearts of the people, becauſe they thought it had happed either through his cowardiſe or his ill managing of their martial affairs.

V. 42. And it came to paſſe on the morrow] i.e. After they had thruſt out Gaal and his brethren, as thinking his inſufficiencie to act the part of General to have been the cauſe of their great defeat, they having made choice of a new Commander, in whom they had more confidence, and recruited their army, go out again againſt Abimelech to revenge upon him their former loſſe, and, if it were poſſible, to drive him out of the country that they might not ſtill be indangered by having ſo malicious an enemy ſo neer a neighbour.

V. 43. and divided them into three companies] Appointing two of them to fight with ſuch as ſallied out of the citie, and keeping the third with himſelf, he lay in ambuſh neer the gates of the city, that when their chief ſtrength were iſſued out, he might aſſault and ſurprize it, being but weakly guarded, or at leaſt might keep them within from going out to ſecond thoſe who were engaged in the fight, and them that were without in the field from making any retreat, if put to the worſe.

V. 44. and ſtood in the entring of the gate of the city] That he might ſlay them that being eſcaped out of the battle thought to ſecure their lives by getting into the city.

V. 45. beat down the city, and ſowed it with ſalt] i.e. Did not only wholly demoliſh the wals without and the buildings within, but alſo ſowed it with ſalt. This ceremonie was uſed by conquerours, being highly provoked by the reproches and inſolencies of their enemies, not onely to raſe their cities, but alſo to ſow them with ſalt, in ſign of an utter vaſtation and perpetual deſolation. For ſalt is taken to be both a cauſe and ſign of barrenneſſe, Deut. 29. 23. Pſal. 107. 33, 34. Zeph. 2. 9. Yet I have heard there are ſome kind of ſoyls, even in our own land, of that nature, that they uſe to manure them with ſalt, as with dung or marl, and by experience find it maketh them fruitful. But ſalt had the quite contrary Operation in thoſe hot and drie countries, making the earth more hot and drie; and therefore Abimelech uſed it as as a ſign of barrenneſſe and utter deſolation. But herein he failed of his end; For Shechem afterwards was rebuilt by Jeroboam, 1 King. 12. 25. and inhabited, 2 Chron. 10. 1. Jer. 41. 5. After the captivity it was named Sychar. See on John 4. 5.

V. 46. they entred into an hold of the houſe of the god Berith] Called Baal-berith. v. 4. Hither they went from the tower of Shechem for better ſecurity againſt the power and rage of Abimelech, truſting both in the ſtrength and alſo the religion of the place, uſing it as their ſanctuary in this extremity of danger. This hold is probably thought to be the ſame with the houſe of Millo, v. 6. unto which Jothams propheticall curſe extended, as joyning with Abimelech in that horrid conſpiracy againſt Gideons ſons, v. 20. It was the ſtrongeſt and moſt impregnable fort, both by nature and art, neer unto Shechem, like the Romane Capitoll, in which was the temple of Jupiter, and which was of ſuch ſtrength that it was able to hold out againſt the enemy when all the city was taken; even as alſo the temple was the ſtrongeſt hold, unto which the Jews reſorted when Jeruſalem was beſieged by Titus Veſpaſian.

V. 48. mount Salmon] This lay Weſtward from Shechem, towards Jordan. On it were ſtore of trees, and ſnow that ſeldome melted, Pſal. 68. 14.

What ye have ſeen me do, make haſte, and do as I have done] This he did, knowing that Princes examples are more prevalent with the people than their Commands.

V. 49. died alſo] i. e. Were all burnt and deſtroyed, as well they in the ſacred Fort as they in the tower.

V. 50. Thebez] Situate in the territory of Shechem Northerly, between the mounts of Samaria and Gilboa. Some think it was the place where Elijah was born. See on 1 Kings 17. 1.

V. 5. and ſhut it to them] i. e. Made faſt the gates with locks, bolts and bars.

V. 52. fought againſt it] i. e. Beſieged and aſſaulted it.

V. 53. And a certain woman caſt a piece of a milſtone] Which, with the like materials, they had purpoſely carried up to the top of the tower to beat off the aſſailants. So Pyrrhus was ſlain by a woman caſting a tyle upon his head at the taking of Argos.

V. 54. that men ſay not of me, A woman ſlew him] Thus his wicked life was attended with as bad a death. For with a ſouldier like bravery he took care for his credit, but none for his ſoul; yet all in vain: for by this means whereby he thought to ſmother it was the more divulged: 2 Sam. 11. 21. See the like paſſage, 1 Sam. 31. 4.

V. 55 the men of Iſrael] i. e. Which followed Abimelech in this expedition.

V. 56. the wickedneſſe of Abimelech which he did unto his father] In murdering his ſons, his own brethren.

V. 57. And all the evil of the men of Shechem] i. e. Their aſſiſting Abimelech in all his bloudy practiſes againſt the houſe of Gideon: Wherein they ſhewed themſelves as impious againſt God, ſo barbarouſly ungratefull towards Gideon for all his wel-deſerving. Theſe abominable wrongs and outrages God ſharply revenged both upon him and them according to the propheticall curſe denounced by Jotham v. 20.

CHAP. X.

Verſ. 1. TO defend Iſrael] Heb. ſave, or, deliver i. e. to preſerve them in peace, liberty, and purity of religion againſt all that did oppoſe them.

Tola] Some think he was not, as the other Judges, called extraordinarily by God, but after the death of Abimelech choſen by the people to be their Governour, becauſe there is no mention made of any enemies that oppreſſed them, out of whoſe hands he ſhould deliver them. From whence they alſo gather, that throughout all his time they lived in peace. But ſeeing it is ſaid, v. 2. he judged Iſrael, and ſeeing all the former Judges were called extraordinarily by God to deliver the people when they were under oppreſſions, and being delivered to govern them in peace, to aboliſh idolatry, and to reſtore Gods pure worſhip, I conceive that he had the like calling, though not immediately, as Gideon, by perſonall appearance yet by inward inſtinct and the collation of heroicall gifts, as courage and fortitude, wiſdome, zeal, and the reſt. Neither doth it follow that they had no enemies, from which Tola delivered them, becauſe none are mentioned, ſeeing there might be enemies and oppreſſions, though not ſo notorious and vexatious as in former times. See on v. 11. And though there had been none at all, yet the people in thoſe times needed a Judge, to reduce them to the former government, which was ſuppreſſed by Abimelechs tyranny, to aboliſh idolatrie which much raigned and increaſed in his licentious, profane and anarchicall Monarchy, to reſtore religion and Gods worſhip to its native purity and perfection, and vindicate the ſeat of judgement from arbitrarie injuſtice and oppreſſion.

And he dwelt in Shamir] A town of Iſſachar bordering on Ephraim. There was another *S*hamir in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. 15. 48. Or ſuppoſe this Shamir was in mount Ephraim, as it is in the letter of the text, yet Tola, though of another tribe, might inhabit there, being Judge, for more conveniencie, as being neer the heart of the land, and not far from the Tabernacle. Though I incline rather to the former expoſition, ſeeing it is expreſſely ſaid he was alſo buried in Shamir, v. 2. which ſtrongly implyeth that it was in his own tribe, and bordering onely on mount Ephraim, ſeeing it was the cuſtome of thoſe times to be buried in their own inheritance. See on Joſh. 24. 32.

V. 3. And after him aroſe Jair a Gileadite] i. e. Dwelling in Gilead in the tribe of Manaſſeh beyond Jordan, Joſh. 17. 1, 5. Numb. 32. 39. Gen. 31. 48. This was not that Jair mentioned, Numb. 32. 41. & Deut. 3. 14. though he carried the ſame name, and alſo got and poſſeſſed towns or villages called Havoth-Jair. For that Jair lived above three hundred years before this, and had twenty three Cities 1 Chro. 2. 22. whereas this mans ſons had thirty, the old number being thus increaſed either by themſelves, their father, or grand-father. And this Jair being deſcended from the other, both he and his inheritance kept the old names.

V. 4. And

V: 4. And he had thirty ſons, that rode on thirty aſſe-colts] This is added to ſhew that he was a man of great wealth and worth, and that his ſons were alſo of an honourable condition, ſeeing riding on aſſe-colts was a token of dignity and authority. See on chap. 5. 10. and on Exod. 13. 13.

Havvoth-Jair] Or, the villages of Jair, ſo called by Jair the ſon of Manaſſeh, Numb. 32. 41. and continned by this Judge in the ſame name.

V. 5. in Camon] A city belonging to Manaſſeh, in the land of Baſhan lying North from mount Gilead.

V. 6. ſerved Baalim and Aſhtaroth] Theſe are eſpecially named above the reſt, becauſe the chief and moſt common idols. See on chap. 2. 13.

and the gods of Syria] This is added to tax the Iſraelites of their abominable idolatrie, who were not ſatisfied by committing ſpiritual whoredome with one or two idols, of this or that people, but gave themſelves up to commit unſatiable uncleanneſſe with all the idols of every nation that lived about them. So Ezek. 16. 25, &c.

and the gods of Sidon] i. e. Aſtarte. See ch. 2. 13.

and the gods of Moab] i. e. Chemoſh, 1 Kings 11. 33.

and the gods of the children of Ammon] i. e. Milchom, or Molech, 1 Kings 11. 5, 33. & Chemoſh. ch. 11. 24.

and the gods of the Philiſtims] i. e. Dagon, 1 Sam. 5. 2. and Aſhtaroth. See ch. 2. 13.

and forſook the Lord, and ſerved not him] i. e. They were ſo addicted to idolatry that they joyned not idols with God in his ſervice, or ſerved him in idols, like their fore-fathers, but utterly renounced Gods ſervice, and gave themſelves wholly up to the worſhip of idols.

V. 7. the anger of the Lord was hot.] See. on ch. 3. 8.

and he ſold them] See on ch. 2. 14.

V. 8. And that year they vexed and oppreſſed [or cruſhed] the children of Iſrael eighteen yeares, all the, &c.] That is, as ſome think, in that year wherein they fell from the true worſhip of God to this idolatry, they vexed them; and ſo from that time to the end of eighteen years. Others reckon theſe eighteen years from the death of Jair. But this cannot ſtand with that chronology 1 Kings 6. 1. Others read, they vexed them that year, that is, the eighteenth, or the laſt year of the eighteenth. But this is as far ſhort of the time of that chronology as the other above it. The right ſenſe of the place, as I take it, is this That the Philiſtims & Ammonites vexed thoſe two tribes & a half that lay without Jordan for the ſpace of eighteen years, with inrodes and incurſions into their countrey, waſting and ſpoyling all that came in their way: The greateſt part of which time they living under Jairs government, their enemies ſtill by his prudence and proweſſe were beaten out again. But now in that year wherein Iair died, growing more bold and preſumptuous upon the death of the Judge, they extend their vaſtations and oppreſſions, and make them more general and univerſal: contenting themſelves with the ſpoyls of the Iſraelites that dwelt beyond Jordan, they entred alſo upon the land of Canaan, and diſtreſſed Judah, Benjamin, and Ephraim. v. 9.

which is in Gilead] See on Obad. 19.

V. 10. And the children of Iſrael cried unto the Lord] No doubt they often cried unto the Lord before, being ſo long time under ſuch grievous oppreſſions, but he regarded them not, becauſe their prayers were not joyned with true repentance, ſeeing they ſtill continued in their groſſe idolatry; but now they repent, not onely of their ſins in general, but alſo of their ſpecial and boſome ſins, their neglect of Gods worſhip and ſerving of idols, and humbly confeſſe them with deteſtation. So chap. 4. 3.

V. 11. And the Lord ſaid] i. e. Either the Lord Chriſt appearing in humane ſhape, as ch. 2. 1. & 5 23. & 6. 23. or by ſome created Angel, or ſome Prophet, ſent with this meſſage; or finally by his oracle related unto them by the high Prieſt.

from the children of Ammon] Divers of theſe deliverances here expreſſed we do not find related before in this holy hiſtorie; whereby it appeareth this people received at Gods hands many more favours and bleſſings than are here recorded.

V. 12. and the Maonites] Some read, the inhabitants of the land, to wit, Canaan. Others underſtand hereby the inhabitants of a City called Maon, upon the South of Judah, Joſh. 15. 55. to which the wilderneſſe of Maon adjoyned, 1 Sam. 23. 25. From whence the Canaanites which did inhabit it, and in the time of Chuſhan-riſhathaim it may be did afflict and oppreſſe the Iſraelites, are here called Maonites.

V. 13. Wherefore I will deliver you no more] This threatning was not abſolute, as the ſequel ſheweth, but conditionall, namely, if they did not forſake their Idolatry, and imbrace Gods pure worſhip; unto which he provoketh and quickneth them by this threatning. So Jer. 18. 7, 8.

V. 14. Go and cry unto the gods which ye have choſen] This is no reall command, (For the holy and righteous God doth never require any man to commit ſin) but an ironical upbraiding of them for their folly in committing idolatry, which now they found ſo fruitleſſe in their greateſt need, their idols being no wayes able to ſend them deliverance, though they did cry unto them never ſo loud. So Deut. 32. 37, 38. Thus Elijah derideth Baals Prieſts, 1 Kings 18. 27. See on Jer. 2. 28.

V. 15. do thou unto us whatſoever ſeemeth good unto thee] i. e. Puniſh us hereafter as thou pleaſeſt, if we do not perſiſt in thy true and pure worſhip, and utterly renounce our idolatry and all our falſe gods. Onely make triall of us this once, by giving us deliverance out of the hands of our enemies.

V. 16. his ſoul was grieved] Heb. ſhortned, contracted, or ſtraightned For as the heart is dilated and enlarged with joy, ſo it is contracted and ſtraitned with grief. Not that God can properly be ſaid to joy or grieve, who in his ſimple and perfect nature is free from all humane paſſions; but that we may the better conceive of his dealing with us, by a figurative ſpeech grief is aſcribed to him, as if he acted after the manner of men, who uſually grieve for thoſe that are in miſery before they give them help and deliverance. See on Iſa. 63. 9.

V. 17. encamped in Gilead] Which they now challenged as their ancient inheritance, ch. 11. 13. and alſo becauſe it was neereſt to their country.

in Mizpeh] The Hebrew word ſignifieth an high place convenient to ſet watches or watch-towers upon, both to ſee and to be ſeen a far off, like our Beacons ſeated on the top of high hills, There were many places of this name; as in Judah, Joſh. 15. 38. in Benjamin, Joſh. 18. 26. of which ſee on ch. 20. 1. and Mizpeh of the Moabites, 1 Sam. 22. 3. But this did lye upon mount Gilead, ch. 11. 29. Gen. 31. 49. See on Hoſ. 5. 1.

what man is he that will begin to fight] i. e. Who will undertake to be our leader in this expedition againſt Ammon? and for his better incouragement, he ſhall ever after be our Generall, Judg and Governour, ch. 11. 8, 9. And when none would accept of it, as thinking the ſervice dangerous and deſperate, they reſolved to ſend unto Jephthah, being of known valour and a skilful Commander. This is here ſpoken as an introduction to the following ſtory.

CHAP. XI.

Verſ. 1. N*Ow Jephthah the Gileadite*] See on ch. 10. 3. He is ſaid to be a Gileadite, not becauſe his fathers name was Gilead but becauſe he was born in Gilead. But of what tribe he was, it appeareth not, though it be very probable he was of Manaſſeh, ſeeing the greateſt part of that country was in their poſſeſſion, and the old Gilead was the ſon of Machir, Joſh. 17. 1. 3. 1 Chron. 7. 14.

was a mighty man of valour] Both in reſpect of fortitude of mind and ſtrength of body, whereby he was inabled to atchieve noble acts, and to endure thoſe hard labours that are incident to a warlike profeſſion.

and he was the ſon of an harlot] Heb. A woman an harlot. Baſtards by the law of God were forbidden to come into the congregation unto the tenth generation, Deut. 23. 2. Which is not ſo to be taken as though they were not to be preſent in the aſſemblies met together for Gods publike worſhip, but that they would not be admitted to any publike office, either ſacred or civil, though they were the baſtards of Prieſts or Princes. But this caſe of preſent neceſſity diſpenſed with the ſtrictneſſe and rigour of this law, the end and equity whereof was only to ſhew how much God abhorred whoredom and uncleaneſſe, that the people might avoid it, and not to inflict a puniſhment upon the perſon thus begotten, if he abhorred and forſook his parents ſin, and ſerved God in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe.

and Gilead begat Jephthah] i. e. One of the poſterity of Gilead mentioned Joſh. 17. 1, 3. and of his name.

V. 2. they thruſt out Jephthah] From having any part not onely in their fathers inheritance, in which by the law he had no right, but alſo in his goods for his preſent maintenance, in which he might have lawfully ſhared. And this he counted as a wrong done unto him, and that not acted in a violent courſe by his brethren alone, but alſo in a legall way, being countenanced and aſſiſted by their Elders and Magiſtrates, as he chargeth him v. 7.

V. 3. in the land of Tob] A part of a country lying along mount Gilead, not far from the Ammonites, at the entrance of Arabia the deſart, 2 Sam. 10. 6, 8. Some think Tob to be a proper name of the man, who was owner of that country. See 1 Macc. 5. 13. & 2 Macc. 12. 27.

vain men] i. e. Idle fellows, that had no calling nor means of maintenance, or ſuch as were in debt and danger, and in a deſperate condition, 1 Sam. 22. 2. Unto ſuch Romulus opened ſanctuarie; and Julius Cæſar ſaid ſuch ſtood in need of a civil war, See on ch. 9. 4.

and went out with him] Namely, as their Captain in military expeditions, to fetch in prey and booty, on which they might live, wanting other means; and it is likely from the Ammonites; and that with ſuch good ſucceſſe, that the Gileadites were moved to think him the fitteſt man to be their General, having already approved himſelf in theſe wars againſt them. See the like 1 Sam. 27. 8.

V. 4. The Elders of Gilead went to fetch Jephthah] i. e. Either by Gods ſpeciall command, or ſome extraordinarie inſtinct, or in regard of preſent neceſſity: for otherwiſe a baſtard might not bear any publike office. See on. v. 1.

V. 7. expell me out of my fathers houſe] i. e. Gave ſentence againſt me at the ſuit of my brethren, that I ſhould be expelled.

and why are ye come unto me now] q. d. You never made me any amends for the wrong you then did me, nor would do it yet out of any reſpect of juſtice or love towards me, but all ye do is out of meer neceſſity, becauſe you are in diſtreſſe, and no body elſe will run the danger to help you out of it. See the like Gen 26. 27.

V. 8. Therefore we turn again to thee now] q. d. We cannot deny but that thou doſt juſtly accuſe us of unjuſt proceeding againſt thee; but let that be forgotten, Seeing we are now come to make thee amends. For by turning again they do not mean that they had been with him before about this buſineſſe, but that they repented of their former actions of unkindneſſe, and now returned unto him with their hearts and affections.

and be our head over all the inhabitants of Gilead] At firſt he was choſen to be their General onely; but afterwards, having ſo well acquitted and approved himſelf in this warlike expedition, he was choſen to be Judge over all Iſrael, ch. 12. 7.

V. 9. ſhall I be your head?] i. e. Not onely your General in this ſervice, but alſo Judge and chief Magiſtrate over all your countrey for ever after, or as long as I live. This he doth not ſpeak as a man that ambitiouſly thirſted after rule, but out of meer equity and honeſty, that having adventured his life in ſuch a deſperate and dangerous ſervice, he might be ſure of that juſt reward which of their own free accord they had offered unto him, and being become a publike perſon might no more be expoſed to the injuries of his brethren.

V. 10. The Lord be witneſſe between us] Heb. be the hearer between us. i. e. We call God as a witneſſe, who is preſent every where, and heareth all our diſcourſe, and is a juſt Judge to puniſh us if we do not keep our covenant with thee, that we will be unto thee as good as our words, and make thee our head in time to come as well as now.

V. 11. and Jephthah uttered all his words] Which had paſſed between him and the Elders of Gilead in the land of Tob.

before the Lord in Mizpeh] i. e. In a ſolemn and religious manner, as in Gods preſence; before the whole aſſembly of the people encamped in Mizpeh, ch. 10, 17. he repeated the covenants agreed upon between them, that hereby they might be the more ſtrictly bound to obſerve and keep them.

V. 12. And Jephthah ſent meſſengers unto the king &c.] i. e. Proceeded according to the law of God, of arms, and of nations, which require firſt to ſeek peace upon lawfull conditions before the proclaming of a juſt war, and if this cannot be obtained, then to proclame it before they made an entrance into it. This was the cuſtome of the ancient Romanes, and, before them, the practiſe of Jephthah in this place: Deut. 20. 10, 11.

What haſt thou to do with me?] i. e. What juſt cauſe of war haſt thou againſt me, and of invading my country? He ſpeaketh this in the name of all the people, as their Generall. *S*ee the like expreſſion, 2 *S*am. 16. 10.

come againſt me to fight in my land] i. e. The land which is now under my protection, being intruſted unto me by the general conſent of the people, who have choſen me to be their Captain and Governour.

V. 13. Becauſe Iſrael took away] This was a falſe claim, ſeeing he had no right to the land he challenged: For it belonged firſt for the moſt part to the Moabites: and that part which the Ammonites had was won from them by the Amorites, in whoſe poſſeſſion it was by right of conqueſt untill it was gotten out of their hands by the Iſraelites, who had now held it in their poſſeſſion for a long time, not onely by right of conqueſt but alſo by Gods free donation, who being Lord of the whole earth hath power to diſpoſe of it according to his good pleaſure. *S*ee Numb. 21. 24, 25, 26, 29, &c. Deut. 2. 19, 37. & 3. 11. and on Joſh. 13. 25.

from Arnon even unto Jabbok, and unto Jordan] i. e. That tract that lyeth upon theſe rivers, from mount Gilead Eaſtward unto Jordan Weſtward.

V. 14. And Jephthah ſent meſſengers again] i. e. Further to clear his cauſe, for the quieting of his own conſcience, when he was aſſured that he fought in a juſt quarrel, the incouraging of his army, and the convincing of his enemies, that their war was unjuſt and naught.

V. 15. Iſrael took not away the land] Jephthah layeth open the untruth of the King of Ammons plea; and ſheweth that the Iſraelites at their coming out of Ægypt did neither meddle with the Moabites nor the Ammonites land, God having expreſly forbidden it, Deut. 2. 9, 19.

V. 16. Kadeſh] Called alſo Zin, to difference it from Kadeſh-barnea, Num. 13: 26. & 20. 11, 14. & 33. 36.

V. 17. Then Iſrael ſent meſſengers unto the King of Edom] Numb. 20. 14. Jephthah relateth theſe ancient paſſages, to ſhew how fairly the Iſraelites had carried themſelves to all the nations round about them, when they travailed towards the land of Canaan, nor had offered no wrong to any of them.

and Iſrael abode in Kadeſh] i. e. They quietly bare this unkindeneſſe and injury, and did not ſeek to revenge themſelves by taking up arms.

V. 18. Then they went along through the wilderneſſe, and compaſſed] i. e. They put themſelves to a tedious and troubleſome journey by compaſſing about their country, that ſo they might enter into the promiſed land, rather then they would give them the leaſt cauſe of offence.

and pitched on the other ſide of Arnon] But were ſo far from invading the Moabites country that they would not make entrance ſo much as within the border of it, Numb. 21. 13, 24. & 22. 36.

V. 19. And Iſrael ſent meſſengers unto Sihon] When they could not prevail either with Edom or Moab for obtaining a paſſage into Canaan, they in a fair courſe aſſaied *S*ihon.

King of the Amorites] So called, not becauſe he was King of all the Amorites, (for there were many Amorites on both ſides of Jordan that were not under his dominion) but becauſe all thoſe over whom he ruled were Amorites.

unto my place] i. e. The land of Canaan, which God hath given me for an inheritance. For unto this only they pretended, and by this right; and therefore laid no claim to *S*ihons country, which lay without Canaan, but in a peaceable manner deſired only a paſſage through his land.

V. 20. but Sihon gathered all his people together] i. e Not onely denied them paſſage, but alſo in an hoſtile manner came out againſt them, the Iſraelites not having provoked by any injury which they had offered to him or his people.

V. 21. So Iſrael poſſeſſed all the land of the Amorites] i. e. Having vanquiſhed them in a lawfull war, they had juſt title unto it by law of arms, as being gotten by conqueſt.

V. 22. And they poſſeſſed all the coaſts of the Amorites] i. e. All that region which now the Ammonites unjuſtly challenge, or all the country within theſe coaſts; Arnon on the *S*outh, Jabbok on the North, the wilderneſs of Arabia on the Eaſt, and Jordan on the Weſt; Deut. 2. 36.

V. 23. So now the Lord God of Iſrael] This he alledgeth as another argument, that they had right to this land, Becauſe God the owner and Lord of the whole earth had given it unto them, and that not only in an abſolute way of intereſt and right, but by giving them victory over the Amorites in a lawfull war, Deut. 2. 30, 31, 33.

V. 24. Wilt not thou poſſeſſe that which Chemoſh thy God] So he calleth him, not becauſe he was a God in truth, but only in their opinion. He was the God or Idol of the Moabites, Numb. 21. 29. 1 Kings 11. 7. Jer. 48. 13. over whom he ſeemeth that the King of Ammon now reigned, and in that reſpect Chemoſh is here ſaid to be his God: For otherwiſe Molech or Milchom was the chief Idol of the Ammonites, 1 Kings 11. 7, 33. & 2 Kings. 23. 13.

giveth thee to poſſeſſe] The Lord hath given unto the children of Moab the Emims land for a poſſeſſion, as the land of the Zamzummims to the children of Ammon, Deut. 2. 9, 10, 19, 20. But they aſcribed their victories to their Idols, and poſeſſed their land as their gift.

So whomſoever the Lord our God ſhall drive out] i. e. As thou thinkeſt thou maiſt juſtly poſeſſe all that which thy Idol Chemoſh (as thou falſly conceiveſt) hath given thee, ſo much more may we lawfully poſeſſe all, that Jehovah the only true God hath given unto us.

V. 25. art thou any thing better than Balak] i. e. Haſt thou better right to this land, or more power and policy to maintain it, than Balak who never yet made any ſuch claim unto it? And this he uſeth as another reaſon to evince their right to the land, ſeeing they poſſeſſed it not only by right of conqueſt in a lawfull war, but alſo by long preſcription of divers preceding generations.

Did he ever ſtrive againſt Iſrael?] i. e. Though he hired Balaam to curſe Iſrael, and, if that had ſucceeded, would have raiſed war againſt them, thinking (though falſely) that they intended to invade his land yet when the Iſraelites had conquered the country of the Amorites, and were ſetled in it as their juſt poſſeſſion, he never went about to recover it out of their hands, nor ſo much as made any claim unto it, notwithſtanding it did in former times belong to the Moabites: Numb. 21. 24, 26. & 22. 2. Deut. 23. 4.

V. 26. While Iſrael dwelt in Heſhbon] He reckoneth up ſome chief places of the country which the Iſraelites after they had conquered it did peaceably poſſeſſe, and by them underſtand all the reſt. Heſhbon was the Metropolis and chief city of Moab, in which Sihon dwelt; and Aroer, another city towards the Eaſt of this land. Of theſe See on Joſh. 13. 9, 16, 17.

three hundred years] The time in a juſt computation, taking it from Judge to Judge, came not to ſo much by above thirty years. But it is uſuall in the ſcriptures to make the ſumme round, and not to reſpect odd numbers, more or leſſe: And of this cuſtome Jephthah here made uſe, it being for his advantage to ſpeak of the longeſt time when he pleaded preſcription. But ſome conceive Jephthah reckoneth from the departure out of Egypt, ſeeing there began his narration, v. 16. and then his account rather falleth ſhort of, then exceedeth, the juſt number.

V. 30. And Jephthah vowed a vow] i. e. Before he undertook the execution of his deſign, he made a ſolemn vow to God, thereby to move him to proſper his expedition. This was uſual among heathen Emperours and great Commanders, when they undertook warlike enterprizes; and was alſo the practiſe of Gods people, Numb. 21. 2. Of vows ſee on John. 1. 16.

V. 31. whatſoever cometh forth of the doors of my houſe to meet me] This is a perplexed and confuſed vow, altogether unlimited to any ſubject, ſaving that it ſeemeth he intended ſome reaſonable creature; for none elſe could propound to its ſelf this end of coming forth, to meet him.

ſhall ſurely be the Lords, and I will offer it for a burnt-offering] Or thus; or I will offer it for a burnt offering, This vow ſeemeth to conſiſt of two branches; the firſt generall, That he would conſecrate and devote it to the Lord howſoever, the ſecond more ſpecial, intimating the nature of the ſubject and the manner of devoting it, namely, That if it were fit for ſacrifice, as clean beaſts, and the turtle-dove, and young pigeon, then he would offer it up for a burnt-offering. Or if his intention was to limit his vow to a humane creature, as is ſuppoſed, then his meaning was that it ſhould be devoted and conſecrated to the Lord, but not in the way of a burnt-offering, which was abominable to God, but ſet apart and ſequeſtred from the world, in a ſpeciall manner to perform unto him more ſpecial and religious ſervice. For if he meant by theſe words, ſhall ſurely be the Lords, that it ſhould be ſacrificed for a burnt-offering, then are the branches of this vow both one and the ſame, and no difference between them. But take this vow in what ſence we will, we muſt needs confeſſe, as it is here propounded, that it is very confuſed and perplexed, raſh and unconſiderate. For howſoever it was moſt likely that an humane creature ſhould come out firſt to meet him, yet it was poſſible that a dog or ſome other unclean creature might have done ſo; and to have offered ſuch in ſacrifice, or otherwiſe devoted it unto Gods ſervice, would have been abominable. Concerning the performance of this vow hath riſen a grand queſtion amongſt the learned, Whether Jephthah offered his daughter for a burnt-offering, or onely conſecrated her to the ſervice of God in a ſtate of virginity. And ſurely the parties are very ſtrong on both ſides, both in their parts and proofs. Of the former opinion we have Joſephus, moſt of the ancient Rabbins, the beſt of the Latine fathers, as Ambroſe, Auguſtine, &c. with divers learned and godly men amongſt our late writers: Of the later we have divers of the later Rabbins, and many judicious divines above exception. It were therefore well worthy our pains, if thereby we could add ſome light to the deciding of this intricate and difficult queſtion. To which purpoſe I will a little more largely inſiſt upon it than will well ſtand with our intended brevity. And I will firſt premiſe ſome propoſitions, as poſtulata and neceſſary requiſites, grounded on equity and charity, which being granted will much tend to the clearing of the point in controverſie. The firſt is, That we do not involve Jephthah in a deeper degree of ſin than the Scripture doth evidently charge upon him, nor aggravate his faults by ungrounded ſurmiſes. And this I ſuppoſe will amount to no more than to render him blame-worthy firſt for making an inconſiderate vow out of blind ignorance and ſuperſtitious devotion, and afterward for performing it. The ſecond is, That we willingly entertain all advantages the text will afford us to clear him from having committed ſuch an abominable wickedneſſe as is laid to his charge, ſeeing the Holy Ghoſt hath been pleaſed ſo much to honour him as to inroll him amongſt his greateſt worthies, and to eternize his name for his exemplary faith, Heb. 11. 32. Theſe being granted, as I cannot excuſe him for his making and keeping a raſh vow, (though the beſt men have their failings, and there is not one who liveth and ſinneth not) ſo I cannot but acquit him of that horid act of offering his daughter for a burnt-offering; and that upon theſe reaſons. I. This had been ſuch a wickedneſſe as is not onely condemned with all deteſtation in the word of God as the moſt heinous and tranſcendent kind of idolatry, but alſo is againſt even the light of nature, and therefore abhorred by the very heathens, ſaving ſome few who were ſo blinded with a diveliſh zeal that they put off all humanity and natural affection. II. Though Jephthah ſhould have made ſuch a wicked vow, yet he was no way bound to keep it, when he ſaw the reſult quite contrary to his intention. For vows bind onely to that which is good: And if the thing vowed ſeemed good, but afterwards proveth evil, they do not bind; but as it was a ſin to make them, ſo it is a greater to keep them, the one proceeding from raſhneſſe, the other from mature deliberation. Again, God in his law had plainly expreſſed upon what conditions he would diſpence with ſuch vows, and how the thing vowed might be redeemed, and at what rates, Lev. 27. 3, 4. But whereas it is anſwered, that Jephthah by profeſſion a Souldier, and much living and converſing among heathens, was ignorant of this law, I reply though he were, yet he had time enough between the making and executing of his vow to have informed himſelf, if not by his own reading, yet at leaſt by asking counſell of the Prieſts, which it is not any way probable he would neglect, when it concerned him ſo neer as the preſervation of his only child. And whereas it is further objected, that by that law of redemption a thing devoted of men could not be redeemed, but muſt be put to death Lev. 27. 28, 29. and that this was it which might bring Jephthah into his errour; to this it is anſwered, That the things there ſpoken of were only ſuch as were anathematized and accurſed for execrable wickedneſſe, and therefore devoted to utter deſtruction, as Jericho and the ſpoyls of it, Ioſh. 6. 17, 18. and the Amalekites, 1 Sam. 15. 3. and ſo that place concerned not Iephthahs daughter, who was, as it appeareth, an innocent and pious virgin. III. There is nothing clearly expreſſed in the text which may make us conclude, that he either vowed to ſacrifice his daughter as a burnt-offering, or performed his vow in that ſenſe, ſeeing the word might be taken not onely conjunctively, and I will offer, but alſo disjunctively, or I will offer. So it is uſed Gen. 26. 11. Exod. 20. 10. and 21. 15. and in divers other places. And if any where the word may be ſo taken, then ſurely charity it ſelf bindeth us to take it ſo here. And then the ſence of the vow will be no more but this, If it be ſuch a thing as may lawfully be offered, then I will offer it for a burnt-offering; or if not, it ſhall howſoever be conſecrated unto God. But by the law not onely humane ſacrifices were forbidden, as abominable, but all things that were unclean, Lev. 27. 11. 12, 13. Deut. 12. 31. Iſai. 65. 3. IV. It was not in Iephthahs power to have offered up his daughter as a burnt-offering, unleſſe he could have involved others alſo in the ſame wickedneſſe. He could not have offered her up himſelf, ſeeing it belonged only to the Prieſts to offer ſacrifices: and what probability is there, he could perſwade the Prieſts to joyn with him in ſuch an horrid action? Again, what legal power had he to kill an innocent, and take away the life of his dear daughter without any offence by her committed againſt God or man? Or though it ſhould (which indeed ought not) be ſuppoſed he might do it, having a right to diſpoſe of his daughter at his pleaſure, yet how could he have offered another, if another had come out to meet him, over whom he had no ſuch colour of right, as his wife, or the wife of one in his familie? Or doing it, how could he be excuſed of wilful murder? But it is objected, that if we ſhould underſtand his vow to be a devoting of his daughter to Gods ſervice in a ſtate of perpetuall virginity, it would much countenance Monaſticall vows of ſingle life, for which we find no warrant in Scripture before or after the dayes of of Jephthah, yea, the clean contrary in Samuel, who though devoted to Gods ſervice yet had wife and children. And this I conceive the chief reaſon that hath induced godly learned men to think Jephthahs vow ſhould rather be underſtood of a burnt-offering than of devoting his daughter to perpetual virginity. But why may they not as well fear, that if we take it in their ſenſe, it might be abuſed to countenance humane ſacrifices, which were far more frequent than the other? For in truth there is no better ground from hence to countenance this rather than that. For ſeeing there is in Scripture neither precept nor precedent for this Monaſtical vow of virginity, this example of Jephthah can be but a poor ſandy foundation to build it upon, who lived in times of ſuperſtition and ignorance, and was himſelf infected therewith. In which reſpect his example may well be thought much fitter to ſerve as a ſea-mark to make us keep off from falling upon theſe rocks and ſands, than to be a precedent for our imitation. Other reaſons and objections might be added, but ſeeing we ſhall have occaſion to conſider them in the latter part of this chapter, I wil refer them to be ſpoken of in due place.

But though many came out with her, yet his vow reached not to any but one of his own family.

beſide her he had neither ſon nor daughter] Or, he had not of his own either ſon nor daughter. Heb. of himſelf. Which is added as a reaſon why he made ſuch great lamentation.

V. 35. he rent his clothes] i. e. In ſign of his bitter grief. See on Gen. 37. 29. Numb. 14. 6. 2 Sam. 1, 2. and 13. 19. Job 1. 20.

thou haſt brought me very low] i. e. I am not ſo much exalted by my great victory as humbled and depreſſed with this ſad and unexpected accident, whereby I am become utterly hopeleſs of any poſterity. From this paſſionate grief of Jephthah ſome conclude ſhe was offered for a burnt-offering, and not only devoted to ſerve God in a ſtate of virginity. But if we conſider how great a bleſſing it was counted in thoſe times to be fruitfull, and how great a curſe the barren womb was eſteemed, and that all hope was cut off from Jephthah, the chief Magiſtrate in the Common-wealth from living, in his poſterity, we cannot but confeſſe he had great cauſe of bitter grief. See Gen. 30. 23. 1 Sam. 1. 6. Luk. 1. 25.

I have opened my mouth unto the Lord] i. e. I have vowed.

and I cannot go back] i. e. I dare not break my vow; not knowing in thoſe dayes of ignorance and ſuperſtition that the law of God gave him liberty in this caſe to have redeemed his daughter with thirty ſhekels of ſilver, Lev. 27. 4.

V. 36. And ſhe ſaid unto him] Namely, in all probability, when he had firſt acquainted her with the nature and ſubſtance of his vow.

do to me according to that which hath proceeded out of thy mouth] i. e. Seeing thou haſt conſecrated me as holy to the Lord, to live a Virgin and a Nazarite all my dayes, I willingly agree unto it, and ratifie my vows, devoting my ſelf wholly unto God. So Anna, Luke 2. 36. See 1 Cor. 7. 34, 36, 37. Neither can we probably think, that Jephthah, commended for his faith, Heb. 11. 32. ſhould offer his daughter for a burnt-offering, ſeeing that would have been much more odious to God than to have offered unto him Swines blood, or a dogs head. Iſa. 65. 4. and was expreſly forbidden as moſt abominable, Deut. 12. 31. and ſeeing God required that the firſt-born children, which were his, Exod. 13. 12. and 22. 29. ſhould not be offered, but redeemed. Numb. 18. 15. Exod. 13. 13.

V. 37. Let me alone two moneths] Why, ſay ſome, doth ſhe deſire two moneths, if at the end of them ſhe was not to be offered up in the ſtate of virginity, ſeeing ſtill living ſhe had time enough to do it afterwards? Becauſe this lamentation was then moſt ſeaſonable when ſhe was firſt deſigned and adjudged unto this condition, and now ready to enter into it.

that I may go up and down upon the mountains] As being ſolitary places, and therefore the fitter for mourning and the expreſſions of her grief in her bitter and paſſionate lamentations for this great affliction laid upon her, which cut off all hope of having any poſterity. Capellus, De voto Jephthæ, compareth Jephthah with Agamemnon, whoſe daughter Iphigenia ſhould have been ſacrificed, had not Diana turned her into an Hind. He fetcheth her name from Jephthah, qu. Jephthigenia; and ſaith the fable of her tranſmutation aroſe from the ſtorie here, of Jephthahs daughter wandering on the mountains. He ſheweth alſo that Jephthah and Agamemnon lived much about a time.

and bewail my virginity] Here note, that ſhe ſpeaketh not of bewailing her approaching death, or being ſacrificed, but her virginity and barrenneſſe.

V. 39. who did unto her according to his vow] i. e. Did not redeem her, according to the law, but conſecrate her unto the Lord, as a virgin to ſerve him in ſingle life, 1 Cor. 7. 32.

and ſhe knew no man] He doth not ſay, and ſhe was offered for a burnt-offering; but, and ſhe knew no man, i. e. lived a virgin, as her father had vowed and ſhe aſſented. See on Gen. 4. 1.

And it was a cuſtome] Or, an ordinance.

V. 40. went yearly] Heb. from year to year.

to lament the daughter of Jephthah] Or, to talk with her: that is they did go to viſit her four dayes in a year, that they might commune and diſcourſe with her, comfort and cheer her in this her ſolitary condition.. See ch. 5. 11. where the ſame word is uſed to ſignifie ſpeaking or relating.

CHAP. XII.

Verſ. 1. AND the men of Ephraim gathered themſelves together] Heb. were called i. e. Being moved with vain-glory, and envying Jephthahs and the Gileadites victory and good ſucceſſe, as they had done Gideons. ch. 8. and on the ſame ground, becauſe they were Manaſſites, whom they emulated, and diſdained that that they ſhould in any thing be preferred before them, in a tumultuous way they aſſemble themſelves together to quarrell and make war againſt them; whereas if they had not been wholly tranſported with thoſe vicious and helliſh furies of pride and envie, they would with all thankfulneſſe have congratulated their victory, whereby they as well as others were delivered from the grievous oppreſſions of a common enemy.

and they northward] i. e. After they had paſſed over Jordan, they marched with their army into Gilead (which was on the North of Ephraim,) where Jephthah lived. See on. 2 Sam. 18. 6.

wherefore paſſedſt thou over to fight] i e. Waſt not content to drive out the Ammonites out of your country, but alſo didſt invade their land, without making us acquainted with it? This was but a ſilly quarrell, had it been true; ſeeing herein they had been the more beholding unto them, for doing the work themſelves, and ſaving them the labor, and freeing them from the danger of it. But they backed their inſolencie and ungratitude with a lie: for v. 2. Jephthah telleth them he had at the firſt called them unto their aſſiſtance, and had they come, they might have accompanied them in the whole expedition; but they refuſed.

V. 2. I and my people were at great ſtrife] i. e. The quarrel was chiefly between the Ammonites and us, and not between you and them; and out of my reſpect to you, as being our brethren, and out of the opinion I had of your valour, which was in ſuch a caſe ſo needfull for us, I called you in to our aid: but you helped us not, either out of your neglect of us, or elſe your fear to run the ſame hazard with us.

V. 3. I put my life in my hands] Heb. in my palm. i. e. I expoſed my life to great danger. A metaphor borrowed from one that carrieth a precious jewel in his open hand, which is eaſily ſnatched away; or a glaſſe, that is apt to fall out of it, and be broken. So 1 Sam. 19. 5. and 28. 21. Job. 13. 14. Pſal. 119. 109.

So Jotham expounds this metaphor, ch. 9. 17. My father fought for you, and adventured his life far, &c. neither did Jephthah in this ſenſe put his life into his hands, to lay it down, or deliver it up to the Ammonites, but onely by fighting with them upon great diſadvantage, in reſpect of his ſmall army and their great multitude, he put it upon a hazard of a dangerous war.

and the Lord delivered them into my hand] i. e Confirmed my calling by crowning my attempts with victory: And why then do you, having no reaſon for it, quarrel againſt my proceedings, which God himſelf hath approved by giving me ſuch good ſucceſſe.

V. 4. Then Jephthah gathered together] i. e. When no perſwaſions would move them to lay down their unjuſt quarrel, he prepareth to ſtand in his own defence. But why did not Jephthahs ſpeech prevail with the Ephraimites as well as Gideons? Surely it was not becauſe it was leſſe prevalent in it ſelf, or not backed with a ſtrong reaſon; but partly becauſe Gideons was more meek and humble, and ſo better pleaſed their proud humour, and partly becauſe they had ſome glory of that victorie by taking of the two kings, Zeeb and Oreb, and in that reſpect had the chief honour of the day by Gideon aſcribed unto them. chap. 8. 2, 3.

Ye Gileadites are fugitives &c.] i. e. The refuſe and ſcum of Ephraim and Manaſſeh, and ſo a mungrill generation out of the mixture of both, and therefore caſt out of Canaan, as unworthy the priviledge of dwelling there, and ſo fain to have your habitation upon the paſſages of Jordan, juſt between theſe two tribes, but with no eſteem with either. And in this regard ye ought not to have undertaken a matter of ſuch importance as this war was, without our knowledge, you being ſo baſe, and we ſo noble and ſuperiour unto you.

V. 5. And the Gileadites took the paſſages of Jordan] i. e After the Ephraimites, being entred their country, were beaten in battle, and wholly routed and put to flight, they took theſe paſſages to hinder them from eſcaping into their own country, as the Ephraimites before had done on the other ſide Jordan to Zeeb and Oreb, chap. 7. 24.

Let me go over] i. e. Pretending they were paſſengers of ſome other tribe going that way on their buſineſſe.

If he ſaid Nay] To eſcape the danger, and ſave his life.

V. 6. Then ſaid they unto him] i. e. That they might put him upon the triall, and diſcover whether he were an Ephraimite or no, by his proper dialect and manner of pronunciation.

Say now, Shibboleth] Which ſignifieth a ſtream, foord, or water-courſe, and ſo was a word fit for the preſent occaſion; they deſiring to paſſe over the foords of Jordan.

And he ſaid, Sibboleth] Speaking upon the ſudden according to the dialect of his own country, unto which they were ſo acuſtomed and habituated that they could not well pronounce it otherwiſe; eſpecially not knowing what they intended in putting him upon this triall. And thus it is with other nations, as the French and Iriſh, at this day, who in moſt words cannot pronounce the aſpirate letter. But this was but an hard triall, eſpecially upon life and death, ſeeing an innocent that had the infirmity of liſping or ſtuttering might ſo have periſhed.

V. 7. in one of the cities Hebr. in the cities The like Ellipſis we have 2 Chron. 35. 24. 1 Sam. 18. 21. Pſal. 1. 3. Zech. 9. 9. John. 1. 5. Matth. 27. 44 John 6. 45. Rev.. 18. 17 16.

V. 8. And after him Ibzan of Beth-lehem] There were two cities of this name; one, in Judah, called Beth-lehem-Judah; another, on the North-borders of Zebulun, Joſh. 19. 15. which it ſeemeth is meant here; But if (as ſome think) This Ibzan were Boaz, then the other Beth-lehem is here meant.

V. 9. thirty daughters, whom he ſent abroad] Out of his own family, beſtowing them upon husbands in other families.

and took in thirty daughters from abroad for his ſons] To be their wives, and live with them in their fathers family. For the husband being the wives head, ſhe is to follow him, and not the husband the wife.

And he judged Iſrael ſeven years] Ibzan, it ſeemeth, as alſo the two Judges following, living in peaceable times, and doing nothing of ſpeciall note in the time of their government againſt forraign enemies, nothing is recorded of them; onely they are thought worthy to be mentioned as Judges, becauſe they adminiſtred juſtice and judgement to the people, and maintained the purity of Gods true religion.

V. 12. in Aijalon] Where the Moon ſtood ſtill, Joſh. 10. 12.

in the country of Zebulun] This is added to diſtinguiſh it from other cities of the ſame name, as that in the tribe of Dan, ch. 1. 35. and ſome others, 1 Chron. 6. 69. and 8. 13. and 2 Chron. 11. 10. and 28. 18.

V. 13. a Pirathonite] Pirathon was a city upon an hill Weſtward from Samaria and Shechem, where Benajah Davids worthy was born, 2 Sam. 23. 30.

V. 15. in the mount of the Amalekites] The Amalekites own land lay without the borders of Canaan South-eaſt, over againſt Egypt, at the Red ſea, by the deſart of Havilah, as we may ſee by comparing 1 Sam. 15. 7. with Exod. 17. 8. but it ſeemeth ſome of that nation had their dwelling in Ephraim, if not, as ſome will have it, till the dayes of Saul, yet at leaſt before the conqueſt of Canaan. And hence this mount bore their name. Some gather from chap. 5. 14. that the inheritance of Ephraim extended to the Countrey of the Amalekites.

CHAP. XIII.

Verſ. 1. Did evil again*] Heb. added to commit. i. e. apoſtatized from Gods pure worſhip, and fell to Idolatrie. See on ch. 2. 11. & 3. 7. & 4. 1. & 6. 1. & 10. 6.

into the hand of the Philiſtims] To be ſubdued, vexed and oppreſſed by them.

forty years] Theſe forty years muſt not be ſo computed as to make an interregnum of that ſpace between Abdon and Samſon; for that would not ſtand with the chronologie 1 Kings 6. 1. See the Preface to this book, & on ch. 3. 11. Neither can they be all meant of Samſons time, who judged Iſrael only twenty yeares, ch. 15. 20. But one twenty of them being allowed to Samſon, the other twenty muſt be taken out of the times of other Judges. And ſome will have them taken from the years of the precedent Judges: and ſo the account reacheth upward to the fifth year of Ibzan. Others, more probably, make them run down into the times of Eli & Samuel: For which they have theſe reaſons: I. The over-numbers in this book are ſtill reckoned to the following Judges, who delivered the people from their troubles and oppreſſions. II. It muſt needs be that the Iſraelites ſin, for which they were delivered into the hands of the Philiſtines forty years, was after the daies of Abdon, ſeeing it is ſo plainly ſaid, after the death of Abdon, the children of Iſrael did evil again. III. Under theſe three laſt Judges it ſeemeth the people fell not into idolatry or troubles but lived in peace, and were not delivered into the hands of their enemies; Whence it is that there is no mention made of any war in their times, nor of their victories, or deliverances of the people. IV. It is manifeſt that the Iſraelites were under the oppreſſions of the Philiſtims a great part of the time wherein Eli judged Iſrael, even till after his death Samuel ſucceeded him, 1 Sam. 7. 9, 10, 11, 12. There is yet another way of computing theſe forty years of the Philiſtims tyranny, and that perhaps no leſſe probable then any of the other, namely, by making them to begin at the fourteenth year of Jair, and end at Samſons wedding, ch. 14. After which account Samſons twenty years are no part of theſe forty, but immediately ſucceed them, and all that is related in this chapter happened in the dayes of the former Judges.

V. 2. A certain man of Zorah] A city on the Weſt-ſide of that hill which parteth Judah and Dan, Joſh. 15. 33. and 19. 41. in whoſe fields or territorie it ſeemeth Manoah dwelled, and not in the city it ſelf, v. 25: & ch. 16. 31.

of the familie] i. e. Of the tribe. So Amos 3. 1. Jer. 1. 15. & 8. 3. & 10. 25. Mic. 2. 3.

of the Danites] Who bordering upon the land of the Philiſtims were moſt ſubject to their incurſions and oppreſſions, and therefore the Lord raiſeth up a Judge out of this tribe to defend their Country, and to quell their enemies; Which he did with ſuch courage and ſucceſſe that ſome think Jacob had reſpect to his victories, Gen. 49. 16.

V. 3. And the angel of the Lord appeared] Some think he was a treated angel, becauſe he would not have Manoah ſacrifice unto him, but to the Lord, v. 16. Which reaſon is not good: For he ſaith this, not becauſe he was not God, but becauſe Manoah conceived he was but a man. So our Saviour taxeth the man for calling him good, becauſe there is none good but God, Matt. 19. 17. ſpeaking according to his opinion of him, who thought him to be a meer man. But it is very probable this was the Angel of the covenant, the eternall Word of his Father, who uſually in thoſe times appeared in humane ſhape: For he is afterwards called Elohim by Manoah, and his wife calleth him Jehovah, v. 23. and himſelf ſaith his name was ſecret or wonderful, which is one of the names or titles given to our Lord Chriſt, Iſai. 9. 6. See on ch. 6. 11.

Behold now, thou art barren, &c.] i. e. Unfruitful and unfit to bear or conceive a child in courſe of nature; but thou ſhalt have a ſon by vertue of Gods promiſe and covenant.

V. 4. and eat not any unclean thing] Unclean meats were forbidden to all, Lev. 11. but wine and ſtrong drink, and all that cometh of the grape, moiſt or drie, from the kernels even to the husk, were forbidden to the Nazarites, Numb. 6. 2, &c. by which was ſignified their renouncing of all ſenſuall pleaſures and worldly delights, that they might wholly devote themſelves to the ſervice of God. And theſe meats and drinks were forbidden to Samſons mother, both while ſhe was with childe of him and while ſhe gave him ſuck, becauſe all that time he had his nouriſhment from her, and God had called him even from his conception to be a Nazarite unto him, unto whom ſuch meats and drinks were unlawful. By which is implyed that he himſelf much more ſhould abſtain from them when he came to his own diet, ſeeing they were inhibited to his mother onely for his ſake.

V. 5. no raſour ſhould come on his head] This law was given the Nazarites Numb. 6. 5. 1 Sam. 1. 11. that the hair, which was alwaies in their ſight, might ſtill put them in mind that they were conſecrated to God, and therefore muſt not do any thing unbeſeeming their calling and alſo to ſignifie that they were mortifyed to the world, and contemned all earthly delicacie, and neglected the trimming and tricking of their bodies, that they might wholly intend Gods ſpirituall ſervice.

For the child ſhall be a Nazarite] The word ſignifieth one ſeparate, i. e. ſuch an one as is ſeparated from worldly and earthly things, that he may in a ſpecial manner attend Gods ſervice. The name Phariſee is of the ſame ſignification, but not given of God, but arrogated out of pride and hypocriſy. Now the Nazarite was thus devoted either perpetually from the beginning of his life to his death, or onely for a time. The former ſort were ſet apart either by God himſelf, as Samſon in this place, and John the Baptiſt, Luk. 1. 15. or by their parents, as Samuel. The other were conſecrated by their own ſpeciall vow onely for a time, as ſome moneths or years, at their own choyce: And of theſe thoſe laws concerning Nazarites, Numb. 6. are chiefly to be underſtood. In both we may obſerve the legal ceremonies required to their conſecration, their outward carriage in their calling, and a moral equity conſiſting in this, that in ſpecial manner they did dedicate themſelves to Gods ſervice; and this did perpetually bind them to all due obſervance, even to the end of their life. Now Samſon was a Nazarite by Gods ſpecial reſignation and command, that he might begin to ſave his people. And herein he was above all Nazarites a ſingular type of Chriſt, and that in many reſpects. I. He was called, ſealed and ſanctified even from and in the womb, Luk: 1. 35. Heb. 7. 16. II. The end why he was thus ſet apart and deſigned was, that he might ſave and deliver his people out of the hands of all their enemies, Matth. 1. 21. III. He performed (like Samſon) this work of ſalvation in his own perſonal ſtrength alone, without the help and aſſiſtance of any other, Iſai. 63. 1, 2, 3. IV. As Samſon prevailed againſt his enemies in a manner without arms or weapons, ſo did Chriſt as was foretold, Hoſ. 1. 7. V. Chriſt reſembled Samſon both in his birth and alſo in his death. For as Samſons birth was above the courſe of nature, by virtue of Gods power and promiſe: ſo Chriſt alſo was born of promiſe, conceived in a ſupernatural and miraculous manner by the Holy Ghoſt; and as Samſon ſlew more of his enemies at his death than he had done in all his life-time: So likewiſe did Chriſt. See on Matth. 2. 23.

and he ſhall begin to deliver Iſrael out of the hand of the Philiſtines] Samſon did onely begin this deliverance, ſeeing the Philiſtines did Lord it over the Iſraelites all his life, and it was continued by Samuel and Saul, and not perfected before Davids time. See 1 Sam. 7. 13. 2 Sam. 21. 22. 2 Kings 18. 8. So Chriſt at his firſt coming began to redeem us from our enemies, at his ſecond he ſhall compleate his victorie, 1 Cor. 15. 25, 26. and our redemption, Rom. 8: 23.

V. 6. A man of God] i. e. An holy Prophet ſent of God. For the ſcriptures uſually honour Gods Prophets and meſſengers with this title, Joſh. 14. 6. 1 Sam. 2. 27. 1 Kings 13. 1, &c. 1 Tim. 6. 11.

very terrible] i. e. Glorious, majeſtical, and fearful to frail mankind.

V. 8. and teach us what we ſhall do unto the child] q. d. He hath already ſhewed what my wife ſhall do whileſt ſhe is with child; but our humble deſire is, that he may again appear unto us to inſtruct us more fully and perfectly how we ſhall order the child when he is born.

V. 10. And the woman made haſte and ran] i. e. Knowing how earneſtly her husband had deſired and prayed, that the Angel, or Prophet, ſhould come again to give them further inſtruction how to carrie themſelves towards the child according to the will of God, now when he appeared unto her again, ſhe made all poſſible ſpeed to acquaint her husband with it, that he himſelf might come and ſpeak with him about it.

V. 12. Now let thy words come to paſſe] This is a prayer of faith laying hold on the former promiſes.

V. 14. All that I command her let her obſerve] i. e. Let her abſtain from all thoſe things which I forbad her whileſt ſhe is with child and giveth ſuck, and afterwards take care that her ſon refrain from the uſe of them, ſeeing God hath called and conſecrated him as a Nazarite, unto whom in his law all thoſe things are forbidden: therefore what hath been inhibited unto her, he muſt alſo abſtain from ſeeing they are interdicted to her but for his ſake. See v. 4, 5.

V. 15. untill we have made ready a kid for thee] Heb. before thee Manoah thinking him to be a Prophet, deſiring to ſhew him due reſpect by giving him entertainment and feaſting him. The which he utterly refuſeth; not becauſe angels appearing in humane ſhape; did not ſometimes eat; for we ſee the contrarie in thoſe that appeared to Abraham Gen. 18. 8. and to Lot, Gen. 19. 3. But he moveth Manoah, that if he would needs be at that coſt, he ſhould beſtow it in ſuch a way as would be more acceptable to God, and profitable for himſelf, namely, by offering his kid for a ſacrifice to God, to ſhew his thankfulneſſe for ſo great a benefit as he had promiſed unto him. And this he doth alſo, both that he might take occaſion hereby to ſhew himſelf, that he was not a meer man, but the Angel of the covenant, that had appeared unto him, by aſcending up to heaven in the flame of the ſacrifice, and withal that he might further confirm Manoahs faith in the aſſurance of Gods promiſe.

V. 16. of thy bread] i. e. Of any of thy meat which thou ſhalt provide for me. For bread in Scripture uſually ſignifieth all manner of food fit for mans nouriſhment. So 2 King. 6. 22, 23. Matth. 6. 11.

thou muſt offer it unto the Lord] O how could Manoah do this, ſeeing he was no Prieſt, unto whom onely it appertained to offer ſacrifices? R. Becauſe the Lord commanded him to do it, who might diſpenſe with his own law. How was it lawfull for Manoah to build an altar, for ſacrifice, ſeeing the law appointed there ſhould be but one onely altar for this uſe? R. One onely was commanded in ordinary, but in extraordinary caſes there might others be erected, as when God gave a ſpecial command for it, either by viſion, as ch. 6. 26. or by viſible apparition, as here; or by a prophetical inſtinct of his ſpirit, as 1 Kings. 18. 30. Some think that command of offering upon one altar took not full effect, whileſt the ark of God was in the tabernacle in a flitting condition from place to place, till it was ſetled in Solomons temple at Jeruſalem: and they ground their opinion on Deut. 12. 13. Take heed to thy ſelf that thou offer not thy burnt-offerings in every place that thou ſeeſt, but in the place which the Lord ſhall chooſe in one of thy tribes, there thou ſhalt offer thy burnt-offerings. See on ch. 21. 4.

V. 17. that when thy ſayings come to paſſe we may do thee honour] i. e. That we, and others unto whom we ſhall relate it, may do thee honour, by acknowledging thee a true Prophet ſent of God, and by preſenting thee with ſome gift to teſtifie our thankfulneſſe, (So 1 Sam. 9. 8. 1 Kings. 14. 3.) which we cannot do unleſſe we know what thou art, where thou dwelleſt, and what thy name is.

V. 18. Why askeſt thou thus after my name, ſeeing it is ſecret] Or, Wonderfull. The Hebrew word ſignifieth both, and may here be taken in either ſenſe. My name is ſecret, therefore not curiouſly to be inquired after, Deut. 26. 29. and wonderful, i. e. ſo far above the reach of humane underſtanding, that it is rather to be adored then ſearched into. This is not ſo true of any created angel as of the Angel of the covenant who is entituled Wonderfull, Iſa. 9. 6. and whoſe name and nature, as he is God, is ſecret, wonderful and incomprehenſible. And therefore he telleth Manoah, that his name and nature were not curiouſly to be pried into, ſeeing he is not thus to be known, but only, and that according to our ſhallow capacity, by his word and works. And ſo he revealed himſelf unto Manoah and his wife in his wonderfull actions preſently afterwards, v. 19. 20. See Gen. 32. 29.

V. 19. So Manoah took a kid] See on v. 16.

unto the Lord] As the Lord had directed him, v. 16.

20. when the flame went up toward heaven] Some think this flame was ſupernatural and miraculous, like that which at Elijahs prayer came down from heaven, 1 Kings 18, 38. or like that which aroſe out of the rock and conſumed Gideons ſacrifice, ch. 6. 21. becauſe nothing is ſaid of fire or wood prepared by Manoah for this ſervice. Others think (and I ſuppoſe more probably) that it was ordinary fire and wood from which this flame aſcended, I. Becauſe if it had been miraculous, it would have been noted to be ſo, as thoſe others are, ſeeing miracles are not ſlighted over and ſmothered in ſilence. II. Becauſe Manoah and his wife being at ſuch a ſight would have fallen upon their face, as they afterwards did. III. Hereby they would have diſcovered the man to be an angel of God, whom they thought to be a prophet, till they ſaw him aſcending in the flame.

the angel of the Lord aſcended in the flame] i. e. The great Angel of the Covenant, who aſcending up into heaven carrieth with him our prayers, our ſervices and ſacrifices, and putting them into the golden vials or cenſers full of the odours of his own merits and obedience, preſenteth them unto God, unto whom they are acceptable being thus perfumed, Rev. 5. 8. & 8. 3. And this alſo evinceth, that this was not a created angel, but our Lord Chriſt.

and fell on their faces to the ground] Being affrighted with the ſight of this miracle, and affected with the ſenſe of their own frailty and mortality.

V. 21. Manoah knew that he was an angel of the Lord] i. e. The eternal Word, the Angel of the covenant: which he calls Elohim, or God; and his wife, Iehovah. v. 22. 23.

V. 22. We ſhall ſurely dye, becauſe we have ſeen God] See on ch. 6. 22. Deut. 5. 26. Exod. 33. 20. Pſal. 45. 6. Gen. 32. 30.

V. 23. If the Lord were pleaſed to kill us] She uſeth three arguments to comfort her husband, and to ſtrengthen his faith in this aſſurance, that they ſhould not die, as he feared: I. God had accepted their ſacrifice, as appeareth both by his commanding them to offer it, (and he requireth nothing but what is pleaſing unto him) and alſo by his aſcending in the flame of it, to carry it up as it were to heaven with him, that he might preſent it unto God. II. If he had purpoſed to kill them, he would not have reſpected them ſo much as to ſhew them ſuch a miraculous ſign of his gracious favour, as was his aſcending up in their ſight in the flame of their ſacrifice. III. He would not have promiſed them they ſhould have a ſon who ſhould begin to ſave Iſrael; nor have given directions how ſhe ſhould order her ſelf and the child when he was born: All which muſt needs have been falſe and frivolous, if he had not intended they ſhould live to execute what he had given them in charge.

V. 24. the Lord bleſſed him] i. e. Indued him with an heroick ſpirit, invincible valour, miraculous ſtrength, with all other gifts and graces befitting his calling.

V. 25. And the ſpirit of the Lord began to move him] i. e. To inſpire into him magnanimous thoughts, and to indue him with miraculous ſtrength of body, thereby inciting him to attempt, and enabling him to execute wonderful and more then humane acts, only fit for him that was ſo called to be ſuch a deliverer of Gods people.

in the camp of Dan] This place was near unto Hebron & had its name either from that expedition of the Danites, ch. 18. 11, 12 (and then the things recorded in that ſtory were done before the dayes of Samſon, though related afterwards: See on ch. 17. 1.) or elſe becauſe there the Danites at this preſent had their ſtanding-camp, to preſerve their country from the inroads and vaſtations of the Philiſtims: And here Samſon in his youth had occaſion to ſhew his ſtrength and valour.

CHAP. XIV.

Verſ. 1 AND Samſon went down to Timnah] See Gen. 38. 12. Joſh. 15. 10. 2 Chron. 28. 18. This City lay weſtward from Zorah, toward the Mediterranean, and was at firſt allotted to Judah, Joſh. 15. 57. but afterward by lot given to Dan, Joſh. 19. 43. But the Danites not being able, it ſeemeth, to drive out the inhabitants, the Philiſtims, they lived there ſtill (as is very probable) untill and long after Samſons time. Unto this City Samſon went. For though the Iſraelites and the Philiſtims had oftentimes war one with another, yet now the Philiſtims having gotten the better, and brought them into ſubjection upon condition of paying tribute, or otherwiſe, they now lived in peace, and married and traded together: So that Samſon might with ſafety go down to Timnah, though inhabited by the Philiſtims.

V. 2. now therefore get her for me to wife] i. e. Becauſe I dare not take a wife without your conſent, who are my parents, though I much like and love her, therefore I pray you let it ſtand with your liking, and uſe your beſt endeavours to procure her for me. Hereby it appeareth, that even in thoſe daies, which were times of ignorance and much profaneneſſe, even by the dim light of nature and of the law, their conſciences were convinced of this truth, that children ought not to marry without conſent of their parents, Gen. 21. 21. and 24. 3. and 26. 34. 35.

V. 3. Is there never a woman among the daughters of thy brethren] This is not to be taken literally and preciſely, (for it had been unlawfull for him to have married his brothers daughter) but, as it is commonly uſed by the Hebrews, for one of the ſame kindred: q. d. Thou haſt choice enough, and art no wayes neceſſitated to marry a Philiſtim: for thou maiſt marry one of thy kindred and allies, or if there were none of them, yet one of the ſame tribe, or if alſo there were never a Danite to be found, thou ſhouldeſt rather chooſe any that pleaſeth thee among all the people of Iſrael, then ſeek a wife among ſtrangers.

the uncircumciſed Philiſtims] The ground of their reaſon was, becauſe God had ſtraitly forbidden his people to make marriages with theſe curſed nations, of which the Philiſtims were a part, Deut. 7. 3. Exod. 34. 16. And if it were unlawfull generally for the Iſraelites thus to marry, then how much more unbeſeeming him who was a Nazarite, and devoted to Gods ſervice in a ſpeciall manner; from which an Heathen and Infidel wife would withdraw him, 1 Cor. 7. 32. 2 Cor. 6. 14. Now they call them uncircumciſed by way of ſcorn and reproach, becauſe ſuch were ſlighted and vilified by the people of Iſrael, 1 Sam. 14. 6. & 17. 26, 36. Gen. 34. 14. And that they might the more ſtrongly diſſwade him from this match, ſeeing if he had any reſpect either to the law of God or his own honour and reputation amongſt his people, he had no reaſon to think of it.

ſhe pleaſeth me well] Heb. She is right in my eyes] i. e. I ſo like her perſon that I have ſet my heart and affection upon her. Wherein as nature had its work, ſo there concurred a ſecret operation of Gods ſpirit, carrying him on towards the effecting of what he intended ſhould come to paſſe.

V. 4. knew not that it was of the Lord] See 1 Kings. 12. 15. 2 Chron. 10. 15. & 22. 7. & 25. 20.

that he ſought an occaſion againſt the Philiſtims] Some conceive theſe words to be ſpoken of the Lord, that he ſought an occaſion to revenge the wrongs the Philiſtims had offered his people, and therefore in his wiſe providence inclined Samſons heart to take this occaſion to fall at enmity with them, that out of their private quarrell he might proceed to publike and hoſtile actions ſuitable to his calling. As of old God had made uſe of the malice and envie of the Patriarches for the accompliſhment of Joſephs dreams and his own decrees, Gen. 50. 20. ſo here he uſeth the youthfull affection that Samſon bore to this Timnathite as a means or occaſion of bringing to paſſe his own purpoſes of being avenged on the Philiſtims. But then the ſpeech ſeemeth improper, that the Lord ſhould ſeek an occaſion by this means of revenge, ſeeing he might juſtly puniſh them at his own pleaſure, either himſelf, or how, and by whom he would. Therefore others, and that very probably, underſtand it to be ſpoken of Samſon, that he ſought this occaſion againſt the Philiſtims, to avenge the cauſe of Gods people upon them. For though in reſpect of the publike there was cauſe enough to do it, ſeeing the Philiſtims not onely poſſeſſed a great part of that inheritance which God had given his people, and out of which they were ſtraightly charged to diſpoſſeſſe them, but alſo had made war againſt them and held them under ſubjection, yet this was no plea for Samſon in his private and perſonall way of taking revenge, they having, in reſpect of the publike, concluded a peace between them, unleſſe he had ſome juſt cauſe and quarrel to revenge himſelf, and the people of God together, upon occaſion of ſome great wrong offered unto him in reſpect of his own particular intereſt. But againſt this expoſition there is alſo a ſcruple to be removed, namely, If it were his end and aim to ſeek an occaſion of revenging the cauſe of Gods people in a private way, how is it ſaid that he deſired to marry her out of his great love and liking of her perſon, v. 3. and that ſhe pleaſed him well, v. 7 eſpecially conſidering that he not only ſaid ſo, but alſo evidenced the truth of his love by his carriage towards her, till ſhe had juſtly incenſed him by betraying his ſecret to her country-men, to his great prejudice, and alſo afterwards by returning unto her, intending to preſent her with a Kid, when that wrong was digeſted, and his wrath appeaſed, chap. 15. 1.

for as that time the Philiſtims had dominion over Iſrael] This is added as a reaſon why Samſon ſought a private occaſion to be avenged of the Philiſtims, namely, becauſe he would take the whole blame upon himſelf, and not exaſperate them againſt his whole nation, ſeeing they had dominion over them, and therefore would revenge themſelves upon them, if they ſaw they had any hand in Samſons actions againſt them. See ch. 15. 9 —— 12.

V. 5. and his father and mother to Timnah] They had now changed their minds, and yielded to their ſonnes deſires, either being perſwaded by ſome reaſons he had given them, that what he did was of the Lord, and that he was moved thereunto by ſome ſecret revelation or ſpeciall inſtinct of his ſpirit, or elſe being moved by their naturall affection to pleaſe and give him content, though the thing he deſired were contrrary to their own judgement and liking.

and behold, a young Lion roared againſt him] Being gone aſide from his father and mother (as is implyed v. 8.) upon ſome occaſion not expreſſed, this Lion meeting him, as the Originall hath it, roared, as they uſed to do after their prey.

V. 6. And the ſpirit of the Lord came mightily upon him] i. e. Inſpired him in an extraordinary and ſupernaturall manner with courage and ſtrength, that by this eſſay he might confirm him in his calling (as it befell David in the like caſe, 1 Sam. 17. 34.) and to incourage him to take up enmity againſt the Philiſtims, truſting upon Gods power aſſiſting him, and that he might have matter ſupplyed for his riddle; which proved the occaſion and cauſe of their quarrel.

and he rent him as he would have rent a Kid] i. e. He tore in pieces this fierce ſtrong Lion with as little difficulty as if he had been a tender weak Kid not able to make any reſiſtance.

and he had nothing in his hand] i. e. Neither weapon nor ſtaffe, but did it only with his bare hands. Herein Samſon was a notable type of Chriſt vanquiſhing and triumphing over Satan that roaring Lion, 1 Pet. 5. 8. Heb. 2. 14. by the ſole vertue of his own power.

but he told not his father or his mother what he had done] Becauſe he would not have them ſpeak of his heroick act, manifeſting his ſtrength and courage, among the Philiſtims at Timnah, which might tend to his prejudice, by filling them with jealouſies and fears.

V. 7. And he went down] Namely, being accompanied with his father and mother.

and talked with the woman] Concluding on the marriage between them, and the time when it ſhould be ſolemnized.

V. 8. And after a time he returned to take her] He came accompanied with his parents, v. 9. to ſolemnize the marriage which they had agreed upon, v. 7. This ſome ſay was a type of the calling of the Gentiles: Hoſ 2. 19.

and he turned aſide to ſee the carcaſe] Namely, out of the common way into the place where he had ſlain the Lion.

and behold, there was a ſwarm of bees, and honey in the carcaſe] Which came to paſſe by the ſpeciall providence of God, acting this in a ſupernaturall way. For it was never known among naturaliſts that bees ſhould breed in the carcaſe of a Lion, but only of an ox or bullock; or though they ſhould, yet it cannot be imagined that in an ordinary and naturall way the carkaſe ſhould be conſumed, the bees bred, and the honey made in ſo ſhort a time as we can reaſonably think was between the concluding of the marriage and the ſolemnizing of it.

V. 9. but he told not them] Neither where he had the honey, nor of the killing of the Lion, partly becauſe he would not have it reported among the Philiſtims, and partly that keeping it ſecret it might be the ſubject of his riddle, v. 16.

V. 10. So his father went down] To wit, as the chief of his company; but with him his mother went alſo and the chief of his friends.

and Samſon made there a feaſt] i. e. A wedding-feaſt, laſting ſeven dayes, as young men or their parents for them, uſed to do in thoſe times when they married wives, Gen. 29. 22.

V. 11. And it came to paſſe, when they ſaw him, that they brought thirty companions to be with him] i. e. When in a ſpecial manner they obſerved him, his perſon, ſtature, ſtrength, countenance, poſture, and carriage, all very remarkeable, they brought thirty companions, in outward ſhew and ſemblance to honour him, but indeed to have an eye over him, and to provide for their own ſafety whatſoever ſhould happen. This I think to be the moſt probable expoſition and ſo it is approved by the moſt: For it is expreſly ſaid, that when they ſaw him, they choſe thirty companions; And though they had ſeen him before and were not afraid, that is to be underſtood of his wives father, family, and ſome ſpeciall friends, who ſaw him when he came as a ſuiter; and not of all theſe gueſts which were now come to the marriage. And though they had all ſeen him before and were not afraid of him, yet it doth not follow but that now they might, looking then upon him in a ſlight and ordinary manner, but now obſerving him more ſeriouſly and adviſedly. And though the text make no mention of any thing extraordinary and remarkable in Samſons perſon which might cauſe fear in the beholders, yet it followeth not that therefore no ſuch thing was obſervable in him, ſeeing the Scriptures do not mention every particular. And though he acted his famous exploits when the Spirit of God came upon him and inabled him thereunto, yet I make little doubt but he had both naturall ſtature and ſtrength very obſervable above the moſt men: Neither doth the principall cauſe take away the inferior cauſes and means, but uſually worketh by them. And whereas it may be ſaid that Samſon purpoſely kept ſecret his killing of the Lion leſt the Philiſtims ſhould be afraid of him, ſeeing his ſtrength and courage: this ſtrongly argueth that they had him in jealouſie, and were apt to fear him, ſeeing he was ſo carefull to conceal that from them. And though they knew not his ſtrength by his killing the Lion, yet they might ſuſpect it when they obſerved his perſon and carriage, and alſo it is very probable they had heard ſome famous exploits done by him when the ſpirit moved him at times in the camp of Dan, ch. 13. 25. Beſides, it is not likely that though he ſhould have bride-men to grace his wedding they ſhould attend him in ſo great a number. And if indeed it had been for Samſons honour to have had ſuch a train, then they ſhould have been choſen by himſelf out of his own people and familiar friends, and not put upon him by ſtrangers aud reconciled enemies.

V. 12. And Samſon ſaid unto them, I will now put forth a riddle unto you] A riddle is a dark ſpeech, in which ſomething lyeth hidden under the literall ſenſe, that is to be found out by the wit of the hearers. And this was a pleaſant and innocent exerciſe of the wit, fit for feaſts, to keep the gueſts from worſe imployments, Ezek. 17. 2. 1 Kings 10. 1. And being as it ſeemeth, uſuall in thoſe times, it was thought therefore fit by Samſon to be propounded to his companions, that under the colourable ſhew of cuſtome, he might ſeek an occaſion of having a juſt quarrel againſt them: And therefore ſurely he took them not for friends that came to honour his wedding, but for an ill-affected guard that were ſet to watch him. Samſons propounding a riddle to the Philiſtims, ſome will have to be a type of the Goſpel, which is a dark and myſterious doctrine to fleſh and blood, and was preached to the world at the time of the calling of the Gentiles: 1 Cor. 2. 7.

within the ſeven dayes of the feaſt] The uſuall time for the keeping of marriage-Feaſts, Gen. 29. 27.

Then I will give you] As a reward of your wit and induſtrie.

thirty ſheets] Or, ſhirts. That is, fine linnen clothes, which in thoſe Eaſt-Countries they uſed for ſundry purpoſes, both by day and night. Of this we read, Matt. 27. 59. Mark 14. 51. So here the ſame is uſed in the Greek.

and thirty change of garments] i. e. Upper veſtments, which they often changed, putting them on and off according to their occaſions, as we do our cloaks or gowns. See on Gen. 45. 22.

V. 13, ye ſhall give me] By way of penaltie for your dulneſſe and ignorance. So the condition was on both ſides equall.

And they ſaid unto him, Put forth thy riddle] q. d. accept of my wager, therefore propound thy riddle.

V. 14. Out of the eater] i. e. Which lives by prey, and devours all, and is food for none, came forth meat, fit to preſerve the life of others; and out of the ſtrong, i. e. the ſtrongeſt of beaſts that live by prey, came forth ſweetneſſe, i. e. that which is moſt ſweet. Which ſeverall branches ſignifie the ſame things, to wit, the Lion and honey, but it may be were in the riddle purpoſely repeated, that they might diſtract and diſturb their mind and judgment in finding out the meaning, whileſt they imagined they were ſeverall things. An expreſs figure we here have of the ſweet and wholeſome food of the ſoul delivered from the death of Chriſt, by the which the Devil and Death are both deſtroyed by him; Joh. 6. 51. Heb. 2. 14.

And they could not in three dayes expound the riddle] i. e. They tired their wits in vain for the three firſt dayes of the feaſt to find out the meaning: And from thence to the ſeventh day they began to work with Samſons wife by inticements; but not prevailing with her, or rather ſhe not prevailing with her husband, on the ſeventh day they provoke the uttermoſt of her indeavours by terrours and threats, which though (being ſo terrible) they meant not to execute, ſeeing ſhe gave them not the leaſt cauſe of offence, but did her beſt to ſatisfie their deſire, yet they uſed this ſpur to put her on the utmoſt of her power and skill, that ſhe might prevail with her husband. Thus Satan employed Adams, Jobs, Solomons wives to tempt their husbands.

V. 15. And it came to paſſe on the ſeventh day] i. e. When the laſt houre approached in which they muſt make known the meaning of the riddle or elſe loſe their wager.

that he may declare unto us the riddle] i. e. That making it known to thee, thou maiſt declare the meaning of it unto us, Thus the myſterie of the Goſpel can never be comprehended by mans naturall underſtandnig; but muſt be revealed by the Spirit of Chriſt, 1 Cor. 2. 10. and the miniſterie of the Church.

have ye called us to take that we have :] Heb. to poſſeſſe us, or to impoveriſh us. i.e. Have you, your father and friends, under colour of love invited us to your feaſt, that you may make a prey of us to our undoing? Though the ſhare of every particular man in this loſſe came but to a ſhirt and an upper garment, yet they account themſelves utterly undone, and in the mean time (ſo partiall they were and full of ſelf-love) they regard not Samſons caſe, who was to loſe thirty for their one, if he miſcarried in his wager.

V. 16. Behold, I have not told it my father nor my mother] i. e. Whom I ought moſt to reverence, and of whoſe piety and faithfulneſſe I have had long experience; and ſhall I tell it thee, although being my wife thou art in a neerer relation, ſeeing I have been but a little while acquainted with thee, and have ſmall knowledge of thy fidelity and ſecreſie?

V. 17. And ſhe wept before him the ſeven dayes] Or, unto the ſeventh day; or, the reſt of the ſeven dayes, that is, from the day when his thirty companions began to imploy her, which was the fourth day of the feaſt: for three dayes they exerciſed their own wits to find the riddle out, and when they ſaw they could not do it, they came unto her, craving her help, v.14.

And it came to paſſe on the ſeventh day that he told her, becauſe ſhe lay ſore upon him] i. e. He was ſo vexed and overburdened with her importunity and tears that he could no longer indure and bear it. And thus he who was able by his valour and ſtrength to rent a ferce Lion with eaſe, and to ſubdue and ſlay thouſands of his enemies, was vanquiſhed with the tears and importunity of a woman: Which ſheweth that the moſt martiall men may be and often are, venereous and uxorious.

and ſhe told the riddle] i. e. The meaning of the riddle, to ſome of Samſons thirty companions.

V. 18: And the men of the City] i. e. Samſons companions which were choſen out of the City to accompany him at the marriage-feaſt.

What is ſweeter than honey?] They do not ſay that by the eater and the ſtrong is underſtood a Lion, and by meat and ſweetneſſe honey, but only in few words expreſſe the meaning.

If ye had not plowed with my heyfer] i. e. If my wife had not unfaithfully diſcovered my ſecret, being perſwaded hereunto by your ſubtlety, or terrified with your threats, you had never by your own wit found out the meaning. He uſeth an allegorie taken from husbandmen, who in plowing, by the labour of their beaſts, find things hidden under the earth, when the plough turns it up: and hereby he taxeth both his wives perfidiouſneſſe, and, as ſome think, her lightneſſe and over-much familiarity with them; (in which reſpect he reſembleth her to a young, wanton and untamed heyfer) and withall, their fraud and want of wit, and he went down to Aſkelon] A City belonging to Judah and Simeon, ch.1.18. but now poſſeſſed by the Philiſtims, and one of their chief and metropolitan Cities, 1 Sam. 6.17. Amos 1.8. But it was in ſuch a great diſtance from Timnath that we can give no reaſon why Samſon went ſo far to do this exploit, but only this, that the Spirit of God which inſpired him to do it, did alſo by its ſecret motion carry him thither.

V. 19. And the Spirit of the Lord came upon him] See on v.6.

and ſlew thirty men of them] This was lawfull for him to do, not only becauſe they were of thoſe curſed nations which God long before had ſentenced to death and deſtruction, but alſo becauſe he was called now of God to be a Judge, to deliver his people, and to avenge them on their enemies, and the Spirit of God came upon him and excited him to act it.

and took their ſpoyl] i. e. Stript them of their apparell when they were dead. How could Samſon do this, ſeeing he was a Nazarite, unto whom it was unlawfull to touch a dead body? Numb. 6.6. R. He might lawfully do it, being inſpired and acted by the Spirit of God, who when he pleaſeth may diſpenſe with his own law. And further, that law that inhibiteth the touching of a dead body may ſeem to have been peculiar to ſuch as were Nazarites by vow only for a time, and not to have concerned ſuch as were called by God to continue ſo for term of life, of which kind Samſon was; becauſe the other might eaſily obſerve it for a time, but not theſe for their whole life; and if the other were defiled, there were means appointed for their cleanſing, Num.6. 9, 10. but not ſo for perpetuall Nazarites. Hence it is, that in Samſons conſecration we find mention of meats, wines and ſtrong drinks, and alſo that no razor ſhould come upon his head, but nothing ſpoken of touching the dead.

and his anger was kindled] i. e. Both againſt his thirty companions, and alſo againſt his wife, becauſe ſhe had ſhewed far greater love to them than to him, ſeeing ſhe had rather that he alone ſhould bear the whole loſſe, than that every one ſhould bear a little. And this anger he expreſſed by a temporary ſeparation from her, but he intended not, as appeareth by the ſequele, a full and finall divorce.

V. 20. But Samſons wife was given] That is, in marriage, to his companion, i. e. one of the thirty Philiſtims, whom in the marriage-feaſt he had choſen for his friend, namely, the firſt and chief brideman, who was neereſt unto him, according to the cuſtome of thoſe times and Countries, Unto which, as ſome think, Iohn Baptiſt alludeth, Joh.3.29.

CHAP. XV.

Verſ. 1. IN the time of wheat-harveſt] Which in that hot country was in April and may. Hereof mention is made, becauſe this time gave opportunity to Samſon of burning their corn, which being ripe and dry, was partly ſtanding, and partly cut down in the ſheaf and ſhock.

Samſon viſited his wife with a kid] i. e. Went to viſit her with a deſire and purpoſe to be reconciled unto her, having now digeſted his former wrong. And to this end he carried a kid with him, as a teſtimony of his love, that they might with their friends in her fathers family feaſt together.

and he ſaid, I will go in to my wife] i. e. He ſaid ſo within himſelf, or being come to the houſe, profeſſed ſo much to her father, that he would go into his wives chamber. For in thoſe dayes the women had their chambers peculiar to themſelves, Gen.24.67. and 31.33.

take her] Heb. let her be thine. So to pleaſe Samſon, he offereth him an inceſtuous match; which he accepteth not, Lev.18.18.

V. 3. Now ſhall I be more blameleſſe then the Philiſtins [Or, now ſhall I be blameleſſe from the Philiſtins] though I do them a diſpleaſure] To wit, becauſe by this wrong they have given me juſt cauſe to take revenge. So verſ.11. See Chap.14.4.

V. 4. And Samſon went and caught three hundred foxes] This will not ſeem a matter of ſo great difficulty as ſome may imagin, if we conſider that the land of Canaan abounded with foxes, Cant.2,15. Neh.4.3. Pſal.63.10. Lam.5.18. the which Samſon might take in nets & ſnares, both by his own induſtry and the help of others, eſpecially ſeeing the work he had in hand was inſpired into him by Gods Spirit, who by his providence could eaſily ſupply what was wanting in outward means, being the ſupream Lord and of all the creatures, and having them at his command, Gen.6.20. Pſal.50.11. Exod.8.5,16. and 10.12. Numb. 11. 31. could eaſily cauſe them to fall into his ſnares. Some referre theſe foxes to the diſciples, Luk.10.1. ſome, to the incendiaries intimated Luk. 12.49. ſome, to Hereticks, who though oppoſite to one another yet combine together to waſt the Church. Whatever myſterie may lie hid in this action, certainly this revenge of Samſons was very ſutable to the Philiſtines offence: They by wiles and violence had extorted his ſecret, and taken his wife from him, and hee by force combineth wily creatures together to do them a ſpite, and turned tail to tail, and put a fire-brand in the midſt] i.e. He faſtened them one to another by tails with cords, having a fire-brand in the middle, leſt being frighted with the fire they ſhould have run into their holes; which they would have done, had they not been thus hampered, rather then into the fields; whereas now ſhunning the fire at their tails, they tugged each other into the fields, and ſo ſet on fire both the ſtanding corn, and that alſo which being cut down was in the ſheaf and ſhock. In all which we are not ſo much to look upon theſe things with the eye of reaſon in a naturall way, and ſo to deſcribe the manner how it was acted, as to Gods providence, who at his pleaſure ordered and diſpoſed of all as was moſt fit for the effecting of his will: Otherwiſe it were hard to conceive, though they burnt up the dry corn, how they could alſo burn the vine-yards and olives.

V. 6. Then the Philiſtims ſaid, Who hath done this?] i. e. The Philiſtims of other Cities, whoſe corn was burnt up, and not of Timnath; as appeareth by the anſwer to their queſtion.

And the Philiſtims came up, and burnt her and her father with fire] As having by their unjuſt dealing been the cauſes and occaſions of all their loſſes, he by his giving Samſons wife to another, and ſhe by giving her conſent thereunto, and by her treachery to her husband: Where it is very obſervable, that ſhe brought upon her ſelf and her fathers houſe that miſery and miſchief which ſhe thought to prevent by her wicked diſcovery of her husbands ſecret, chap.14.15. according to Prov. 10.24. and 22.8. Hoſ.8.7.

V. 7. Though ye have done this, yet I will be avenged of you, &c.] i.e. Though you may ſeem to have done me a pleaſure in revenging my juſt quarrell, yet ſeeing ye have done it with a wicked mind and in an unjuſt and tumultuous manner, having reſpect herein onely to your own loſſes, this ſhall not ſerve your turn; but for all this I will not deſiſt till I be throughly avenged of you; and then I will for a time, till you haue given me ſome other juſt occaſion of further revenge. In which ſpeech we muſt not look upon Samſon as a private man revenging his own quarrel, but as Judge of Iſrael, called and appointed of God to deliver his people from their oppreſſions, and to avenge them on their enemies: Otherwiſe theſe his reſolutions could not have been lawfull, ſeeing the nations of the Philiſtims had not given unto him in particular any juſt cauſe.

V. 8. And he ſmote them hip and thigh with a great ſlaughter] A proverbiall expreſſion ſignifying the mortall wounding of their bodies in all places where his blows light, or the totall ruine of all their ſtrength and abilities. Such phraſes Souldiers now have, as pel mel, and cap a pe. See Deut. 28.35. The Lord ſhall ſmite thee in the knees and in the legs with a ſore botch that cannot be healed, from the ſole of thy foot to the top of thy head. So Iſa. 9. 14. The Lord ſhall cut off from Iſrael head and tail, branch and ruſh. Some conceive by hip and thigh to bee meant, that hee made this great ſlaughter without weapons, onely kicking them with his foot, like cowards, out of ſcorn and diſdain, or knocking and puſhing them with his knee: Others think this phraſe ſignifyeth the ſame that manibus pedibuſque doth in Latine, and implyeth the violence and vehemence of Samſons conflict. The Chaldee Paraphraſt interpreteth it, that hee ſlew both horſe and foot.

and he went down] To wit, from Timnath.

and dwelt in the top of the rock Etam] Etam was a City ſituate on the South of Judah upon a ſtrong and high rock neer the brook Etam, and belonged to Simeon, whoſe inheritance was mingled with Judahs, Joſh. 19. 1. Hither for ſafety Samſon retired himſelf, that he might not ſuddenly be ſurprized by the Philiſtims, who in all likelihood would ſeek to revenge themſelves upon him, after he had thus ſlaughtered many of their nation. See 1 Chron. 4. 32. and 2 Chron. 11. 6.

V. 9. Then the Philiſtims went up, and pitched in Judah] Becauſe Samſon, whom they went to ſurprize, was come to Etam, in Judahs lot, and becauſe of the land of Iſrael, which they came to invade, Judah was neereſt unto them, a great part of the Philiſtims country being in their lot, Joſh 15. 45.

and ſpread themſelves] This implyeth they were a great army that came in this expedition, as thinking all the Iſraelites were partakers with Samſon in that offence which he had given them, either ſetting him on and counſelling him to it, or abbetting and countenancing him in it, or at leaſt conniving at it, and not apprehending and puniſhing him for it: And ſo imagining they would riſe in his defence, they raiſed a great army againſt them, making his private act a cauſe of publick quarrel between both the nations.

in Lehi] Signifying a jaw-bone. It was a place in the Philiſtims Country bordering upon Judah, and is here called Lehi by anticipation; for Samſom afterwards gave it this name upon occaſion of that ſlaughter which he had made with the jaw-bone of an aſſe, verſ. 17.

V. 10. Why are ye come up againſt us?] q.d. Wee have given you no cauſe to make war againſt us, ſeeing we live in ſubjection to you, pay our tribute, and obſerve all covenants of peace made between us.

And they anſwered, to bind Samſon are we come up] i.e. We will have nothing to do with you, but onely with Samſon, who hath greatly wronged us, unleſſe by protecting him you make his offence yours, and ſo draw upon your ſelves our juſt revenge.

to do to him as he hath done to us] i.e. Proceeding in a common courſe of juſtice and equity, to put him to death, who hath ſlaughtered ſo many of us. Therefore deliver him into our hands, that hereby it may appear you are not guilty of his fault, and we will depart and no further trouble you.

V. 11. what is this that thou haſt done unto us?] i. e In what a labyrinth of troubles and dangers haſt thou involved us, by incencing the Philiſtims againſt us who are under their ſubjection?

V. 12. We are come down to bind thee] i.e. Though we have no quarrel againſt thee for any thing done by thee in reſpect of our ſelves, more then this, that thou haſt incenced the Philiſtims againſt us, who are able to do us miſchief, yet we muſt bind and deliver thee into their hands, to give them ſatisfaction, appeaſe their wrath, and turn away their army from us.

Swear unto me that ye will not fall upon me your ſelves] He doth not expoſtulate with them, as he juſtly might, nor upbraid them with their cowardiſe and faint-heartedneſſe, not daring to joyn with him whom God had called to be their Judge & deliverer, nor with their baſe treachery in betraying him into the hands of their common enemies, but onely deſireth to be ſecured that they themſelves would do him no miſchief, leſt if they refuſed to do this, he might thereby have juſt cauſe to turn his ſtrength againſt them in a way of juſt revenge, and ſtand it out in his own defence: Where he ſheweth his great love towards them, and care of their ſafety as well as his own, ſeeing he was ſollicitous to prevent any hurt which might befall them either from himſelf or Philiſtims, chooſing rather to be bound to give them ſatisfaction then they ſhould be expoſed to their revenge if they refuſed it. Now as Samſon abode to bee bound by his own Countrey-men, that his freeing of himſelf and his victory over his enemies might bee the more glorious, ſo Chriſt, though hee could have called-in twelve legions of Angels to his reſcue, yea with a word laid his enemies on the ground, yet was willing to bee bound, that his triumph might bee the greater.

V. 13. but ſurely we will not kill] This aſſeveration it is very likely they ratified with an oath, as he required, to give the better ſatisfaction, and make him the more willingly ſubmit to be bound by them.

And they bound them with two new cords] And ſo the ſtronger and more hardly broken. Herein Samſon was a type of Chriſt, who was bound by the Jews, and delivered up to death by the hands of the Gentiles, Matth. 27. 2.

and brought him up from the rock] i.e. To Lehi, where the Philiſtims were encamped; that ſo by laying all the blame upon Samſon, and expoſing him to extream danger free themſelves from them whom they feared.

V. 14. the Philiſtims ſhouted againſt him] To wit, for joy, becauſe their chief enemy was fallen unto their hands.

and the ſpirit of the Lord] i, e. The ſpirit of ſtrength, courage, and earneſt deſire to fight.

and the cords —— became as flax [or, as threds made of flax] that was burnt [or, ſcorched] with fire] i. e. Were as eaſily broken by his unreſiſtable ſtrength as threds of burnt or ſinged flax.

V. 15. And he found a new jaw-bone of an aſſe] i. e Which had not been long dead, and was therefore the ſtronger and tougher. Thus the rude unlearned tongues of the Apoſtles prevailed over many thouſand.

V. 16. With the jaw-bone of an aſſe heaps upon heaps] Heb. an heap, two heaps. i. e. By this weak means and contempble inſtrument, through Gods almighty power and aſſiſtance, I have ſlain a thouſand his and of his peoples enemies, and laid their dead bodies on heaps one upon another.

V. 17. called that place Ramah-Lehi] That is, The lifting up of the jaw-bone, or, The caſting away of the jaw-bone.

V. 18. And he was ſore athirſt] His great labour and pains in the fight by heating his body made him dry and thirſty: Beſides which naturall cauſe there might alſo be a ſpeciall hand of God in it, that hereby he might humble him, and keep him from being proud of ſo great a victory atchieved by himſelf alone. And thus God uſually dealeth with his ſervants whom he hath uſeth as inſtruments in great and glorious imployments, knowing how prone we are to fall into this odious ſin of pride, if his grace by ſuch means as theſe do not reſtrain and humble us. This thirſt of Samſons after his victory ſome make a type of that of our Savious about the end of his paſſion, Joh. 19. 28.

and called on the Lord] i. e. Being deſtitute of all other help in a place where there was no hope of finding any water, he fleeth unto God as al-ſufficient, craving relief from him in his great extremity.

Thou haſt given this great deliverance] He aſcribeth the whole victory unto God, and giveth him all the glory of it; and withall, maketh it a ground to ſtrengthen his faith in this aſſurance, that God would hear his prayer: For he that had done the greater, in giving him ſuch a glorious victory, would not deny him the leſſe, but either take away this thirſt, or give him ſome means to quench it.

into the hand of thy ſervant] i. e. Who in all this fight have been but thy inſtrument to perform that ſervice which thou wouldſt have done, the which I have faithfully performed, though to the extream perill of my life; and therefore contracting ſuch a calamity upon me in ſuch an imployment, and by my faithful walking in my calling, I cannot but hope that thou wilt relieve and refreſh me.

and now ſhall I dye for thirſt, and fall into the hand of the uncircumciſed] q. d. Certainly I ſhall not, or ſurely I can by no means believe it, ſeeing this would blaſt and black all the glory of the former action, and ſpoil God of the honour due unto him, ſeeing the enemies would be ready to ſay it was not his power that gave the victory, for then he would now have been as able to keep Samſon from periſhing by thirſt, or from falling through faintneſſe into the power of his enemies. See Heb. 11. 32. 2 Sam. 17. 26, 36. 2 Sam. 1. 20.

V. 19. But God clave a hollow place] Hebr. a mortar. i. e. an hollow place in figure like a mortar. See Prov. 27. 22.

that was in the jaw] Or, Lehi. Not in the jaw-bone it ſelf, but in the place called Lehi or Jaw-bone on this occaſion, did this ſpring ariſe.

and when he had drunk, his ſpirit] i. e. His vitall ſpirits, now well nigh waſted and ſpent with labour, heat and thirſt.

came again] Which was ready to depart, and ſo he to die, by reaſon of this thirſt.

and he revived] Being thus refreſhed, he became lively, ſtrong and vigorous.

wherefore he called the name thereof] i. e. Not of the jaw-bone, but of the ſpring in Lehi.

En-hakkore] That is, The Well of him that called, or, cried. This name hee gave it in memoriall of Gods great mercy, and to teſtifie his thankfulneſſe both for his giving him ſo great a victory over his enemies, and alſo for his miraculous raiſing up of his ſpring to refreſh his fainting ſpirits, when hee was ready to die for thirſt, and for a perpetuall monument of the efficacie of prayer.

which is in Lehi unto this day] i e. The time when this ſtory was written, which was many years after theſe things were acted. And therefore the ſpring of water was not in the jaw-bone, which every paſſenger that ſaw it might carry away, and would ſurely have done it, eſpecially in thoſe far countries, in which they had ſo much need of a fountain of water, but the place called Lehi upon this occaſion.

V. 20. And he judged Iſrael] i. e. He revenged their wrongs upon the Philiſtims, and ſo in ſome degree gave them deliverance, though he did not fully free them from their tyranny. See on ch. 13. 5.

CHAP. XVI.

Verſ. 1. T*Hen went Samſon to Gaza*] Gaza lay in that part of the Country towards the Mediterranean which was allotted to Simeon and Judah, but was one of the greateſt and moſt famous Cities of the Philiſtims, therefore Samſon could not go thither without great danger, having lately ſlaughtered ſuch a multitude of them. But it ſeemeth ſome weighty occaſion drawing him, which is not here expreſſed, he reſolved to go thither ſecretly, relying either on his ſecrecie, or on his courage and ſtrength, If he happened to be diſcovered, or elſe he did it out of contempt of his enemies, who he had found by experince were not able to ſtand in his hands. Of this City ſee on chap. 1. 18. Am. 1. 6, Zeph. 2, 4.

and ſaw there an harlot] He went not to Gaza purpoſely to ſee this harlot, as ſome have conceited; but being come thither, and accidentally ſetting his eye on her, he was inveigled with her beauty; and loving, or rather luſting after her, he committeth uncleanneſſe and follie with her, Gen. 16 2, & 38. 16, 18. A weakneſſe no leſſe to bee wondred at then his greath ſtrength, that hee who ſo glorioùſly overcame whole multitudes of men ſhould ſo baſely ſuffer women to overcome him, that hee who would not drink wine ſhould bee drowned in luſt.

V. 2. they compaſſed him in] i. e. As ſome think, they invironed the houſe where he lodged, in ſome diſtance, that they might not be diſcovered; or, as others, hearing that he was ſecretly come to the City, and not knowing where he harboured, they ſet a ſtrong watch at the City-gate through which he was to return, that they might ſuddenly kill him before he was aware at his going out, which lay quiet and ſilent all night, leſt he hearing any noyſe or tumult might grow ſuſpicious that he was diſcovered and betrayed.

V. 3. And Samſon lay till midnight, and aroſe] i. e. Having ſatisfied his luſt, he thinketh of providing for his ſafety, and ſuſpecting that the next dayes light might diſcover him, he riſeth at midnight, and prepareth to be gone.

and took the doores of the gate of the City] i. e. Finding the gate locked, barred and bolted to prevent his eſcape, he pulled up the two poſts upon which it hanged, and carried all away, poſts and gate and bar, upon his ſhoulders, the watch-men (as is moſt probable) being all run away affrighted with his ſudden approach in that dead ſeaſon of the night. Wherein Samſon was a type of Chriſt, who riſing again after he had vanquiſhed ſin and Satan, death and hell, maugre all appoſition and means uſed to prevent it, did ſtrike the Souldiers appointed for a watch with fear and aſtoniſhment, and did go away in triumph, carrying with him the trophies of his victory, Iſay 63. 1, 2, 3. Act 2. 24.

and carryed them up to the top of an hill that is before Hebron] i. e. Not to the hill adjoyning to Hebron; for that was above twenty miles from Gaza, and it is not probable he would carry ſuch a burden ſo far, no reaſon appearing that ſhould induce him to it; but to an hill that lay eaſtwards from Gaza, from whence one might ſee Hebron ſeated upon another hill right over againſt it.

V. 4. And it came to paſſe afterward that he loved a woman] i. e. Having douſed and drenched his ſoul in the deep pit of ſin and uncleannes, Prov. 22. 14. & 23. 27. contrary to the profeſſion of a true Iſraelite, much more of a pure and holy Nazarite, inſtead of riſing out of it by unfained repentance, he ſinketh deeper and deeper into this whirl-pool, and relapſeth again into the ſame ſin.

in the valley of Sorek] Which is called the grape-valley, from the abundance of the beſt grapes growing there. Some read by the brook Sorek, which runneth along by the valley of Eſhcol, where thoſe grapes grew, Deu. 1. 24. And ſome think that theſe are both one, Num. 13. 23, 24.

whoſe name was Delilah] This alſo, like that at Gaza, was a Philiſtine harlot, as plainly appeareth by her acquaintance and compliance with the Lord of the Philiſtims, and her hiding of the Philiſtims in her houſe that by thoſe Lords were appointed to apprehend Samſon.

V. 5. and ſaid unto her, Entice him] i. e. Uſe all the art and skill which they commonly have that are of thy profeſſion, and allure him to diſcover unto thee this great ſecret, in what part of his body or other qualification his ſtrength chiefly lyeth.

that we may bind him to afflict him] Or, humble him. They do not ſay, to kill him, leſt it may ſeeme harſh and cruel to a woman that had entertained him for her paramour, and profeſſed ſo much love unto him; but, to afflict and correct him for all the wrongs he had done unto their nation, and ſo to tame and humble the haughtineſſe of his ſpirit. And in truth their intention was not to have him killed, becauſe his bare & ſole death could not ſatisfie their rage and malice, unleſſe they did firſt triumph over him in his miſeries, and torment him worſe then death with their inſolencies and indignities.

and we will give thee every one of us eleven hundred pieces of ſilver] Which if every one of the five Lords of the Philiſtims agreed to give, it amounted to five thouſand and five hundred pieces, which came to ſix hundred eighty ſeven pounds and ten ſhillings, if wee take theſe pieces for ſhekels, and value each at two ſhillings ſix pence. Which great ſumme offered to a woman of that baſe condition ſhewed how much they thought the matter did concern them, and how earneſtly they deſired to have it atchieved.

V. 6. Tell me, I pray thee, wherein thy great ſtrength lyeth] It is not to be doubted but ſhe uſed all her art and skill to make and prepare a way for her ſuit, and that ſhe did not bluntly propound it, but allured him with all ſignes of her love, that ſhe might free him from all ſuſpicion of treachery, magnyfied his heroick acts, and wondred at his more than humane ſtrength whereby he atchieved them, and then deſired for her own ſatisfaction to know wherein his great ſtrength did lye, and added many promiſes, confirmed it may be with oaths, (which are moſt common with thoſe of her profeſſion) that ſhe would keep it to her ſelf as a great ſecret.

V. 7. If they bind me with ſeven green withs] Heb. moiſt: or, with new cords. This he ſaith, hoping this would ſatisfie her without making any trial of it, or at leaſt for the preſent to free himſelf from beeing vexed and preſſed with her importunity to diſcover that ſecret which he was purpoſed to conceal.

V. 8. which had not been dryed] Dryneſs would have made them brittle; but theſe were green, ſtrong and tough, and ſo hard to be broken.

V. 9. Now there were men lying in wait] i. e. Ready to apprehend him, if the experiment proved true: otherwiſe they durſt not appear for fear of Samſon.

The Philiſtims be upon thee] Are at hand ready to ſurprize thee, if thou doſt not prevent it by ſtanding in thine own defence. All this was done unto him in a way of ſport and wanton dalliance, or when ſhe had cauſed him to ſleep on her lap, as v. 19. the former is much more probable, ſeeing it is not likely ſhe could bind him faſt with hard withs, and not awake him.

So his ſtrength was not known] i. e. Neither to her, nor to the Philiſtims, either whence it came, or how it was retained and preſerved.

V. 10. And Delilah ſaid unto Samſon] To wit, at ſome other time afterwards, when ſhe found him in a good mood, being bewitched with her flatteries and allurements. For it would not ſtand with her policy to attempt it preſently after her former failing and defeat, leſt ſhe ſhould work in his head ſome ſuſpicion of treachery or intention of evill.

V. 11. And he ſaid unto her, If they bind me faſt with new ropes] Herein Samſon diſcovereth great weakneſſe, in this, having had experience that Delilah would put what he ſaid upon triall whether it were true or no, he would again feign a falſe cauſe, becauſe he had not the patience to indure the vexation of her importunity, though ſhe gave him juſt cauſe to ſuſpect her evill intention towards him.

that never were occupied] Heb. wherewith work had not been done. Namely, to wear and weaken them.

V. 13. If thou weaveſt the ſeven locks of my head with the web] That is, If thou doſt part the hayr of my head into ſeven locks; or, If thou doſt take them as they are already ſo divided, verſ. 19, and weaving them with the web, doſt wind them both about the beam of the loom. Here Samſon beginneth to faint indeed, now hee ſuffereth the falſe ſtrumpet to finger his conſecrated locks. See on verſ. 19.

V. 14. And ſhe faſtened it with the pin] i. e. Having done all according to Samſons appointment, ſhe for more ſurety faſtened the beam with a pin, that when Samſon roſe it might not turn or move.

went away with the pin, web, and beam] Upon which his hayr was woven and wound, and carryed all away with him.

V. 15. when thine heart is not with me] i. e. When as thou beareſt no true affection towards me, but onely makeſt an outward ſhew of love to ſerve thy own turn.

V. 16. ſo that his ſoul was vexed unto death] i. e. Grievouſly diſtracted, on the one ſide being extreamly loth to diſcover a ſecret which did ſo neerly concern him, on the other being no leſſe loth to deny her any thing upon whom he ſo impotently doted, eſpecially being ſo preſſed with her daily importunity, and his life ſo imbittered, that having no reſt nor comfort he choſe rather to dye then to live.

V. 17. that he told her all his heart] Behold here mans frailty and weakneſſe when left to himſelf and his own corrupt heart, eſpecially to the baſe luſts of uncleanneſſe & carnall concupiſcence. Samſon, one of Gods great Worthies, commended for his faith, and ennobled by his glorious victories, who with his hands rent a roaring and ravening Lion as if he had been a Kid, and ſlaughtered and routed a great army of his enemies, is now become ſo impotent, being vanquiſhed by his prevailing luſts, that he is vexed even to the death by the importunity of a filthy harlot, and not able to keep from her a ſecret, the concealing whereof concerned him no leſſe then his life. Yea, though hee had had thrice experience that ſhe intended to betray him unto death, yet his doting affection ſo blinded him that he could not beware, but diſcovered unto her all that was in his heart concerning this great ſecret, though it tended to his utter ruine. And thus did God juſtly give him up to fall into the following miſeries, that thereby he might ſeverely, yet deſervedly, correct him for his former uncleanneſſe, and his relapſing now again into the ſame ſin.

If I be ſhaven, then my ſtrength will go from me] Not becauſe his ſtrength lay in his hayr; for it was Gods free gift of grace, conferred upon him particularly, and not upon another Nazarite, that he ſhould be of ſuch invincible ſtrength that none of Gods enemies could ſtand before him; but becauſe being a Nazarite, he was by Gods expreſſe command injoyned not to cut his hayr, ch. 13. 5. Numb. 6. 5. which he tranſgreſſing, and breaking his vow, God withdrew from him his Spirit of ſtrength and courage, and left him to his own humane frailty. And this is noted to be the true, real and morall cauſe of his weakneſſe, that the Lord was departed from him, verſ. 20. of which the preſerving of his hayr was but a ſhadow and ceremony. Some conceive that from this ſtory of Samſon the fable of Niſus had its originall, whoſe power and life both are feigned to have depended on his purple hayr. Ovid. Metamorph. lib. 8.

V. 18. And when Delilah ſaw that he had told her all his heart] Namely, by his countenance, geſture, ſpeech, and ſerious carriage of himſelf in all his relation.

Come up this once] i. e. Though divers times before you have loſt your labour and come in vain, becauſe being my ſelf deluded by Samſon I have deluded you, yet if you pleaſe to come but this once again, you ſhall not fail of your deſire.

and brought money in their hand] i. e. Which they had promiſed to give her as the reward of her treachery, verſ 5. this they now brought, leſt ſhee ſuſpecting their payment ſhould be more cold and ſlack in executing their deſign.

V. 19. and ſhe cauſed him to ſhave off] She might have ſuddenly diſpatched him by cutting his throat: But this ſhe had not in her commiſſion; or if ſhe had, yet perhaps ſhe would have been loth to do it, in reſpect of that love and dalliance which had been between them, he having not given her any cauſe of diſtaſt. And beſides, the Philiſtine Lords deſired not his preſent death, but by putting out his eyes, to make him ſure enough for doing them any further hurt, and to keep him in priſon to do their drudgery, and, when they pleaſed, to make them ſport; they in the mean time deriding, inſulting and triumphing over him. But chiefly this preſerving of his life came of God, who inclined their hearts unto it, that he living till his hair were grown again, and in the mean time by repentance renewing his covenant, and ſo recovering his ſtrength, might at his death deſtroy more of them then he had done in his whole life.

the ſeven locks of his head] Into which all his hayr was divided and playted, that he might the more eaſily caſt it behind him upon his ſhoulders, and keep it from fluttering over his face, and ſo hindring his ſight. The gifts of the holy Ghoſt (amongſt which Samſons extraordinary ſtrength and courage was one, ch.13.25. and 14.6,19. and 15.14. Iſa. 11.2.) are often in Scripture repreſented by the number of Seven, to note their perfection: So Exod.23.37. Zech.3.9. and 4.2. Rev.1.4. and 5.6.

and ſhe began to afflict him] i.e. To vex and trouble him, by her ſudden rouzing him out of his ſleep, jogging, thruſting, and calling upon him, as before. Yea, and it is like, before ſhe did this, ſhe bound him, as ſhe had formerly done; Which bonds, when he awaked, he was not able to break; for otherwiſe ſhe could not have known that his ſtrength was gone from him, nor durſt have called in the Philiſtims that waited to apprehend him.

V. 20. and ſaid] i.e. Thought within himſelf.

I will go and ſhake my ſelf] i.e. Rouze up my ſelf and ſpirits, and put off drowſineſſe, that I may go about my imployments.

And he wiſt not that the Lord was departed from him] Becauſe upon his ſudden awaking he obſerved not either his binding or ſhaving, or that the Lord had deprived him of that ſupernaturall ſtrength whereof his hair was a ceremoniall ſign and figure, which he had continued unto him, ſo long as he continued in obedience and kept his vow. Some make Samſon even in this alſo a type of Chriſt, whoſe Divinity withdrew as it were for a while, that his humanity might ſuffer.

V. 21. But the Philiſtims took him] When God leaveth us, our enemies take us, and have power over us to uſe us at their pleaſure; we not being able to make any reſiſtance in our own ſtrength.

and put out his eyes, and brought him down to Gaza] Herein the Philiſtims had their ends, and God his, unto which he made theirs ſubſervient. The Philiſtims in a revengefull way put out Samſons eyes, to make him miſerable; and his life uncomfortable, and to ſecure themſelves from all fear of danger by him in future times; and they carryed him along through the Country, that the people all the way might flock about him, gaze upon him, and inſult over him; and they brought to Gaza rather then any other place, not onely becauſe being one of their chief Cities, there was in it the greateſt concourſe of people to mock and abuſe him, but alſo becauſe they might there triumph over him in his miſery where he had formerly diſhonoured them by carrying away the gates and poſts of their City. But Gods end in all this was, to bring blind *S*amſon to a ſight of his ſin, that he might unfainedly repent of it, leading him as it were by the hand to take notice of it, by the reſemblance that was between it and the puniſhment: For his eyes were firſt put out, which were the inſtruments and organs of inflaming his luſt, by glancing and gazing on a filthy harlot, and Gaza muſt be the place where he muſt ſuffer puniſhment, impriſonment, and even death it ſelf, where he firſt acted his ſin of uncleanneſſe.

and he did grind in the priſon-houſe] Being a great Worthy he is made a drudge, and not ſuffered to eat his bread before he earneth it by this ſlaviſh ſervice. See on Iſa.47.2.

V. 22. Howbeit the hayr of his head began to grow] And with it his ſtrength, whereof it was a ſign; Samſon in the mean time reconciling himſelf unto God by unfained repentance, renewing his vow which he had broken, and ſo recovering his former ſtate of a Nazarite; from which he had fallen, and above that, the love and favour of God, whom by his ſins he had diſpleaſed after he was ſhaven] Or, as when he was ſhaven. i.e. It began to grow towards that length it was of, when he was ſhaven. Which ſheweth that he continued ſome good time before they called him out to make them ſport at Dagons feaſt. And why they deferred ſo long, after they had ſurprized Samſon, to praiſe their Idol for delivering him into their hands, we cannot gueſſe, unleſſe perhaps this feaſt was anniverſary in remembrance of ſo great a benefit, and this the ſecond year wherein it was celebrated.

V. 23. Dagon their god] The Philiſtims lived on the Sea-Coaſt, & therefore had a Sea-Idol which they worſhipped. For Dagon is derived from the Hebrew word Dag, ſignifying a fiſh, becauſe it was portrayed like a fiſh from the middle downward, having the upper part like a man, 1 Sam.5.4. Such Idols other heathens worſhipped, as gods of the Sea, to wit, Neptune, Leucothea, Triton. &c. See on 1 Chron.10.10.

V. 24. ſlew many of us] Heb. multiplyed our ſlain.

V. 25. when their hearts were merry] Heb. when their heart was good. i.e. frolick and of good cheer. So chap.18.20. and 19.6. Ruth.3.7. 2 Sam.13.28.

that he may make us ſport] To wit, paſſively, that he may be the ſubject of our mirth. Herein alſo *S*amſon was a type of our Saviour, whom his enemies made the ſubject of their ſcorn and malice, Matth.26.67, 68 and 27.29.

made them ſport] Heb. made ſport before them. i.e. He became the ſubject of their ſport, and gave them occaſion of laughter, either by unwillingly committing ſome errours and miſtakes being blind, or willingly to blind them by theſe ſhews, that they might not diſcover his main intention.

they ſet them between the pillars] As in a place where he might be beſt ſeen by the Princes and people met together.

V. 26. whereupon the houſe ſtandeth] i.e. The Temple of Dagon, wherein theſe idolaters kept their feaſt, as the manner was. See chap. 9.27.

that I may lean upon them] Pretending wearineſſe, either by his grinding in the mill, or his long ſtanding there to make them ſport, or his ſudden and ſpeedy coming to that place.

V. 27. there were upon the roof about three thouſand men] As being flat after the manner of thoſe Countries.

V. 28. remember me, I pray thee, and ſtrengthen me] Whereby it is evident that he relyed not upon his hair now newly grown, nor on his own ſtrength, but onely on that ſtrength which he expected to receive from God for the acting and executing of his intended work.

that I may bee at once avenged] He doth not ſeek, as a private perſon, to take vengeance out of Gods hand, to whom alone it belongeth, Rom.12.19. but beeing a publick perſon and a Judge, he deſireth that he might, as Gods ſubſtitute and vice-gerent, be the inſtrument under God of executing vengeance upon Gods and the Churches enemies.

for my two eyes] Not ſo much for doing me a private wrong, in reſpect of my perſon, as becauſe they have thereby diſabled me to fight in Gods quarrel for the deliverance of his people. This his prayer was made by the extraordinary inſtinct of Gods *S*pirit, according to his will, as appeareth, in that God heard this prayer of faith, Hebr.11.32. and accordingly gave him ſupernaturall ſtrength to act this great and miraculous work according to his deſire; which otherwiſe he would not have done, if he had asked amiſſe, to ſatisfie his luſt in a way of private revenge, Jam.4.3.

V. 30. Let me dye with the Philiſtims] Here is no warrant or ground to encourage or countenance ſelf-murderers; ſeeing what Samſon did, was done by an extraordinary inſtinct of Gods *S*pirit. Neither was this the principall end at which he aymed, to kill himſelf, but the deſtruction of Gods and his Churches enemies, unto which he was called and conſecrated as a publick perſon and a Judge, though his own death did follow as a neceſſary conſequent; the which he contemned in regard hee ſhould pull ſo many thouſand Philiſtims into the pit with him, and out of the fervency of his zeal devoted himſelf to glorifie God and give deliverance to his people by doing of this ſervice. Nor was this a deſpairing ſpeech of one impatient in reſpect of his miſeries to live any longer, but of a faithfull man humbling himſelf even to the death, that he might do God ſervice, and that not in an ordinary way, but by an extraordinary motion of the holy Ghoſt inſpiring him and ſuggeſting unto him this prayer. Wherein *S*amſon was a type of our Lord Chriſt, who humbled himſelf to the death, that he might ſave his people out of the hands of all their ſpirituall enemies, Phil.2.8.

So the dead which he ſlew at his death were more] Herein alſo he was a figure of Chriſt, who by his death overcame Death, and him that had the power of death, the Devill, with all the power of hell, Heb.2.14.

V. 31. Then his brethren——came down and took him] The Philiſtims condeſcending thereunto, either being over-ruled by God, who hath the hearts of all men in his hand, Prov.16.1. or being affected for the preſent by this common calamity, or becauſe they were ſo weakened by the death and loſſe of their Princes, principall Commanders, the flower of their Chivalrie, and chiefeſt of their people, that they thought it not fit to provoke the Iſraelites by denying their requeſt, grounded on humanity and common honeſty and civility, and putting them off with an harſh anſwer. And here again we have ſome typicall reſemblance of Chriſts body begged of Pilate, and buried by Joſeph, Matth.27.57.

CHAP. XVII.

Verſ. 1. AND there was a man] It is not certainly known when the things in this and that following chapters were done. But moſt of the learned expoſitors upon evident grounds do agree, that they happened not in Joſhua's time, nor in the dayes of the Elders that ſurvived him: for all that time Iſrael ſerved the Lord, Joſh.24.31. and did not commit ſuch groſſe idolatry as is related in this chapter. Neither did theſe things happen after the death of Samſon, but it is probable ſome hundreds of years before, ſoon after the death of Joſhua and the Elders. For I. it appeareth ch.2.8——13. that they being all dead, the generation that ſucceeded fell from God and his true worſhip, corrupted his pure religion, and ſet up groſſe idolatry. II. Some hold that Jonathan the Levite, the Danites idol-prieſt, was the ſon of Gerſhom, who was born unto Moſes before he went into Ægypt out of Midian, Exod.2.22. three hundred and fifty years before Samſon dyed. See on chap.18.30.

III. The ſtorie of the Levites concubine, chap.19. and of the war with Benjamin, ch.20. (which happened after this of Micahs idolatry, as ſome gather from ch.20.1.) was acted when Phinehas the grand-ſon of Aaron was high Prieſt, & therefore not after the dayes of Samſon, unleſs wee will ſay that Phinehas lived (which is not likely) above three hundred years. See on ch.20.28. IV. If the deſolation of Benjamin chap.20.35,48. happened after Samſons time, the increaſe of that tribe 1 Chron. 12. 29. is very wonderfull. Theſe reaſons (whereunto others might be added. See on ch.18.1,12. and 19.10.) make it more then probable that the things ſpoken of in theſe five laſt chapters were acted rather before Othniel was Judge then after Samſons death. Yet that the hiſtory of the Judges, which is the main matter of this Book, might bee finiſhed in the firſt place without interruption, theſe ſtories of things happening in the time of anarchie, v.6.ch.18.1.& 19.1& 21.25.are here ſet by themſelves in the end of all: The ſcope whereof is to ſhew how corrupt the people were both in religion and manners when there was no King in Iſrael, and how juſt it was for God to deliver ſuch hainous ſinners into the hands of cruel oppreſſours.

V. 2. The eleven hundred ſhekels of ſilver] See 23.15.

that were taken from thee] i.e. Stollen.

about which thou curſedſt] Imprecating miſchief and misfortune, death and deſtruction againſt them who had ſtollen them away, if they repented not of what they had done, and ſo reſtored them again unto her.

and ſpakeſt of alſo in my ears] i.e. In my hearing; Wherewith being affrighted; as thinking it a dreadfull thing to lye under a mothers curſe, I now come to acknowledg my fault, that receiving from thee pardon and thy bleſſings, I may be freed from the curſe and the fear of it.

Bleſſed be thou of the Lord, my ſon] In her paſſion ſhe over-ſhooteth her ſelf in two extreams; curſing before at randome ſhe knew not whom, and now knowing it was her ſon, pronouncing a bleſſing, not ſo much as touching upon his ſin againſt God, nor in the leaſt manner reproving him for it: q. d. I do not onely free thee from the curſe, but turn it now into a bleſſing.

V. 3. I had wholly dedicated the ſilver unto the Lord] i. e. Unto Jehovah the onely true God. So they cloaked their groſſe idolatry under ſhew of Gods ſervice, though he had ſo often forbidden and condemned it in his law. Whereby it appeareth there were two kinds of idolatry; one among the Heathens, whereby thy worſhipped ſtrange and falſe gods; the other among the Iſraelites, whereby they worſhipped the true God in an idolatrous and falſe manner, contrary to the preſcript rule of his word, under the name of heatheniſh Idols and Images, or ſome other way according to their own invention and wils, as the golden calf, Exod.32.5. and Baal, Hoſ.2.16. and ſuch was the Idolatry of Jeroboam, and of Micahs mother in this place. And generally it is obſerved, that when an Image or Idol is mentioned, and not appropriated by name to ſome heathen god, there is to be underſtood that the true God was repreſented by it.

from my hand] i. e. To be beſtowed by me upon my ſon and his ſon for religious uſes, v.5.

to make a graven image and a molten image] Many expoſitors think ſhe did not intend to make two images, one molten, and another graven, but onely one, which was firſt caſt in a mold, and then graven with tools and beautified by the art of the workman; and that becauſe of the ſmall quantity of ſilver deſigned for this uſe, which was not enough to make two ſeverall Images: But it is apparent they were two; for it is ſaid ch.18.18. that the Danites fetched out of Micahs houſe the carved image, the Ephod, and the Teraphim, and the molten image.

now therefore I will reſtore it unto thee] Namely, the right and intereſt in it; for it was ſtill in his poſſeſſion: q. d. Seeing it was devoted for thy uſe, there is no need thou ſhouldſt bring it unto me, but keep it ſtill thy ſelf.

V. 4. Yet he reſtored the money unto his mother] Though ſhe preſſed him to keep it, yet he would needs reſtore it, to quiet his conſcience, as thinking thereby to be more free from the curſe.

and his mother took two hundred ſhekels of ſilver] It is not likely that having devoted eleven hundred ſhekels unto the Lord in her ſuperſtitious way, ſhe would alienate nine hundred ſhekels to common uſes, but rather that ſhe laid out the whole ſum, in building and fitting an houſe for Idol-gods, filling it with them when it was prepared, and making a rich Ephod and Teraphim and all other furniture neceſſary for this idolatrous ſervice.

V. 5. made an Ephod] Not a linnen Ephod, ſuch as the Levites uſed, but ſuch a rich Ephod as Gideon had made in reſemblance in that which the high Prieſt uſed in the Tabernacle, ch.8.27. and with it all other garments fitting the Prieſt in his religious ſervice.

and Teraphim] Images, made like unto men; as appeareth, in that Michol made uſe of one of them, by putting it in the bed in Davids room, that by reſembling him it might deceive thoſe whom *S*aul ſent to fetch him, 1 *S*am.19.13. And ſuch were thoſe Idols which Rachel ſtole from her father, Gen.31.19. and thoſe which Joſiah with other abominations put away, 2 Kings 23. 24. By theſe Idols they divined, and made uſe of them as Oracles to reſolve their doubts, Ezek.21.21. Hoſ. 3.4. Zech.10.2.

conſecrated one of his ſons] Heb. filled the hand] A form of ſpeech taken from the conſecration of Aaron and his ſons by Moſes, to the Prieſts office, with putting into their hands the fat and ſhoulder of the ram, a loaf of bread and an oyled cake, for an offering before the Lord, Exod.29.22,23,24. So Jeroboam, 1 Kings 13.33.

who became his Prieſt] Though neither of Aarons linage nor tribe. All this he did, as a groſſe idolater, expreſly contrary to the law of God.

V. 6. In thoſe dayes there was no King in Iſrael] *S*o ch.18.1. and 19. 1. and 21. 25. i. e. no ſupream Magiſtrate. And ſo King is taken, Gen.36.31. Deut.33.5. Neither can the word be here taken in its proper ſenſe, ſeeing ſo, the Iſraelites had no King untill the time of *S*aul. But the meaning onely is, that they had in theſe times of all confuſion no Judge to keep the people in aw and order, and to reſtrain them from doing what they liſted. Which Anarchy was a moſt deſperate ſtate and condition, when no man had any other guide to lead him but his own blind and corrupt nature, which is prone to all ſin and wickedneſſe. And this implyeth that Micahs courſe in all he did was naught and wicked; ſeeing if there had been a good Judge or Magiſtrate, he would have reſtrained him from this ſuperſtitious idolatry; in which he now went on without controll.

that which was right in his own eyes] Not that which was right in Gods eyes, but what himſelf fancied to be right.

V. 7. Bethlehem-Judah] So called, to diſtinguiſh it from another Bethlehem in the tribe of Zebulun. Joſh.19.15.

of the family of Judah] There could no Levite be properly ſaid to be of the family of Iudah, ſeeing theſe tribes were diſtinct one from another. But this is ſpoken, as ſome think, becauſe his mother was of Iudah, though his father were a Levite; and ſo he might be ſaid to be of that family in reſpect of her, eſpecially if ſhe were an inheritrix, like Zelophehads daughters, his father for her ſake ſojourning there. But becauſe the *S*cripture uſeth not to ſtile men after their mothers family, therefore others think he is ſaid to be of the family of Iudah, becauſe he was born, bred and ſojourned in Bethlehem-Iudah. For though it were none of the Levites Cities, yet hee had his habitation there where he might find beſt entertainment, the Levites in thoſe times being for want of means and maintenance put to ſhift for themſelves, as this Levite did in this place, and afterwards in Laiſh, chapter 18. v.27, 30. For this is hee who is there called Jonathan.

V. 8. And the man departed out of the City from Bethlehem-Judah] Being neceſſitated, it ſeems, by want of maintenance. For idolatry being ſet up in the Church, and Anarchy accompanied with all confuſion and diſorder in the Common-wealth, Religion was corrupted, the ſervice of God, ſacrifices and oblations neglected, the Prieſts and Levites deſpiſed, and all means and maintenance being withheld from them, they were enforced to leave the Tabernacle & their own Cities where formerly they had lived, and to wander into other parts of the land where they might find a livelyhood. And this was the caſe of the Prieſts and Levites in Nehemiahs time, Neh. 13. 10, 11. And no better condition are we likely to be in, in theſe dayes, if for want of goverment Gods pure worſhip be neglected, and Sects, errours and hereſies be tolerated, and his Miniſters deſpiſed, and their means and maintenance withheld which are allotted and allowed unto them by the law of God and the land, and they left without protection to the will and pleaſure of the common people, who for the moſt part aym onely at their private profit, without any reſpect to Gods ſervice or the eternall ſalvation of their owns ſouls.

to the houſe of Micah, as he journeyed] Heb. in making his way. Not with a purpoſe at firſt to reſide there, but to take up his lodging for a night.

V. 10. Dwell with me, and be unto me a father and a Prieſt] Or, a father, in being a Prieſt] For though he were younger then Micah, yet for honours ſake he ſaith he ſhould be a father unto him, in reſpect of his calling and office. See on Gen.45.8.

and I will give thee ten ſhekels of ſilver by the year, and a ſuit of apparel [or, a double ſuit. Heb. an order of garments] and thy victuals] He offers to entertain him at a poor rate and for baſe allowance, not out of the ſcantneſſe of his eſtate, but the penuriouſneſſe of his mind, and the vile eſteem he had of his calling and condition. For he that had eleven hundred ſhekels to beſtow upon his Idols and Idol-ſervice, could hardly afford ten ſhekels to the Levite for his maintenance. Onely he maketh up this defect by good cheap titles and complements, calling him father, and acknowledging him for his Prieſt; Herein juſt like many people in theſe dayes, who abounding in ſuperfluous expences, are onely ſtraithanded and hearted towards their faithfull Miniſters, eſteeming that onely loſt which is drawn from them towards their maintenance: Onely they feed and fatten them with titles, cap & complements, but allow them no means of comfortable ſubſiſtence for their encouragement in the duties of their calling; herein uſing them as they do their Parrots, which they keep hungry that they may make them talk.

So the Levite went in] i. e. Though the conditions upon which he offered to entertain him were baſe, yet being neceſſitated and pinched with want he accepteth of them, and goeth into Micahs houſe to dwell with him.

V.11. and the young man was unto him as one of his ſons] i. e. he tendred cheriſhed, and made much of him, as if he had been his own child; & ſo in ſome ſort ſupplyed what was wanting in wages by his kind uſage and loving entertainment: And ſo now he that was a father in reſpect of office, v.10. is uſed as a ſon in reſpect of his youth.

V. 12. And Micah conſecrated the Levite] As he had done his ſon, v.5. either cauſing his ſon to lay down his calling, and give his place of Prieſt unto this new comer, ſeeing it would more countenance his idolatrous ſervice, when it was officiated by a Levite, then by his ſon who was an Ephraimite; or elſe aſſociating and joyning them both together in the Prieſthood. And this latter act was not much leſſe unlawful then the other, ſeeing it was not permitted by Gods law to a Levite to execute the Prieſts office, which only belonged to the ſons of Aaron, Numb. 3. 3, 10. & 19. 40.

V. 13. Then ſaid Micah, Now know I that the Lord will do me good] Thus he bleſſeth himſelf in his blind devotion and ſuperſtition, which wholly tended to groſſe idolatry, though indeed it expoſed him to Gods wrath and vengeance, as afterwards appeareth.

CHAP. XVIII.

Verſ. 1. [N thoſe dayes] i.e. Soon after the dayes of Joſhua before God raiſed up Judges extraordinarily to deliver and govern his people.

there was no King in Iſrael] See ch. 17. 6, and 19. 1. & 21. 25. This is prefixed as a reaſon why the Danites were put to provide an inheritance for themſelves, whereas whileſt the whole people were under any government, the tribes aſſiſted one another in driving out the Canaanites, and getting poſſeſſion of that inheritance which by lot was fallen unto them, Numb. 32. 21. Joſh. 22. 23. Judg. 1. 3.

For unto that day all their inheritance had not fallen unto them] i. e. Though they had their full inheritance fallen unto them by lot, and ſo had a right unto it from Gods donation, yet becauſe of their apoſtaſie, idolatry, and diffidence in God, who had promiſed his aſſiſtance in driving out the nations before them, they had not yet obtained the poſſeſſion of a great part of it. This was the caſe of many tribes, but of the Danites, above the reſt; They had not yet gotten an inheritance large enough for their numerous tribe, Joſh. 19. 47. and the Amorites alſo had driven them out of part of that which they had gotten, ch. 1 34. By this it appeareth, that the things here related were not done after the death of Samſon, Seeing it is not probable that ſo potent a tribe as the Danites, were to ſeek for their inheritance allotted unto them, and for a place of habitation to dwell in, above three hundred years after they had been in the land of Canaan yet now they were not utterly deſtitute, having ſome place in the mountains, Zorah, and Eſhtaol, to dwell in, but yet far too ſcant and ſtraight for their great multitude; Which maketh them here uſe means to inlarge themſelves.

V. 2. ſent of their family] i. e. Of their tribe.

men of valour] Heb. ſons of valour.

Go ſearch the land] i. e Of their enemies that belonged to their lot, and was not yet ſubdued, to find out a place moſt convenient for their habitation, and which might with leaſt pains and danger be won and conquered.

they lodged there] i. e. In that place where Micah had an houſe, and not far from it.

V. 3. they knew the voice of the young man the Levite] i. e Either they knew it particularly and perſonally, by reaſon of former acquaintance which ſome of the Spies might have with him whileſt he ſojourned in Bethlehem-Judah, their tribes lying neer one another: or by his pronunciation they perceived he was an Ephraimite, but of Judah; as it is uſuall for men of the ſame country dwelling in ſeverall parts of it, remote one from another, to have different dialects and manner of ſpeaking, whereby they may be diſtinguiſhed one from another, as the Ephraimites were from the Gileadites, ch. 12. 6. and the Galileans from thoſe that dwelt at Jeruſalem, Mark. 14. 70.

who brought thee hither ?] To wit, from Bethlehem-Judah, thou being a Levite, and not an Ephraimite.

what makeſt thou in this place ?] Seeing thou haſt no Leviticall adminiſtrations or imployments here, being ſo far remote from the Tabernacle.

and what haſt thou here ?] i e. What means of ſubſiſtence or maintenance is here by Micah allowed unto thee ?

V. 4. Thus and thus dealeth Micah with me] i. e. Upon theſe and theſe conditions hath he entertained me, & thus and thus kindly he hath uſed me.

and I am his Prieſt] i. e. Having ſet up an houſe for the exerciſe of his religion, and filled it with Gods and images of divers kinds, he hath hired me to officiate in it as a Prieſt.

V. 5. And they ſaid unto him, Ask counſel, we pray thee, of God] Hearing that he was a Prieſt, and that he had in his chappel divers images repreſenting God, with an Ephod, and all prieſtly requiſites, & above all the reſt, a Teraphim, by which they divined, and which as an Oracle did foretell things to come, they deſired him to inquire concerning the ſucceſſe of their enterpriſe and expedition.

V. 6. And the Prieſt ſaid unto them] To wit, after he had inquired of his idol, by whom it is like the devil gave this anſwer; or at leaſt he made them believe that he inquired, and then himſelf feigned it to humour them in their courſe, and ſo to draw from them the better reward; or God might give anſwer to this idolatrous Prieſt, as he did to Balaam the Sooth-ſayer. A Prophet or a dreamer may work a wonder, or utter an oracle, and yet ſtill himſelf ſay, Let us go after other Gods, and ſerve them, Deut. 13. 1, 2.

Go in peace] i. e You ſhall diſpatch your buſineſſe with ſafety, and proſper in it, without running into much difficulty and danger.

before the Lord is your way wherein ye go] i. e. The eies of the Lord watch over you for good, and to favour, direct and proſper you in your journey. And thus he abuſeth Gods holy name to countenance his idolatrous courſes. Pſal. 33. 18. and 34. 15. Deut. 11. 12.

V. 7. Then the five men departed, and came to Laiſh] i. e. Being filled with confidence and courage by his prediction, they ſet forward on their journey, and came to Laiſh, which was alſo called Leſhem, Joſh. 19. 47. and afterwards Dan, ver. 29. and belonged to Dans lot, Joſh, 19. 48.

and ſaw the people that were therein, how they dwelt careleſſe] i. e. That they were quiet and ſecure, in their opinion, from all danger of ſurprize. v. 27.

after the manner of the Zidonians] i.e. Uſing their cuſtomes and laws, having it may be ſome dependance upon them, either by way of ſubjection, or elſe in reſpect of ſome league contracted between them: And ſo being confident of their aid and aſſiſtance, and fearing no danger, they imitated them in their ſecurity. For as the Zidoninas lived in all pleaſure, plenty and proſperity, not fearing any enemy that might diſturb their peace, in reſpect of the ſituation of their countrey and the ſtrength of their city both by ſea and land, ſo was it with theſe men of Laiſh.

and there was no Magiſtrate] Heb. poſſeſſour, or heir of reſtraint. i. e. Either none at all, or none hereditary and perpetuall, to reſtrain them from any wickedneſſe, or to puniſh them for committing it, but ſuch as were choſen by themſelves from year to year, who did let them live as they liſt, for fear of diſpleaſing them who had power in their hands by moſt voyces to turn them out of their places at their pleaſure. And ſo all things became lawful, and nothing that pleaſed them was accounted diſhoneſt.

put them to ſhame] By inflicting upon offenders deſerved puniſhments; yea, they were ſo far from puniſhing them according to their demerits, that they would not ſo much as diſgrace and countenance their vices and faults.

and they were far from the Zidonians] The Zidonians lay far Weſt from them, and therefore could not on a ſudden ſend them any aids to keep them from being ſurprized, if any enemy attempted it, though they were the onely people upon whom they depended.

and had no buſineſſe with any man] i. e. They were ſo rich, and had ſuch plenty of all manner of proviſions within themſelves, that they had no commerce with any other; and ſo ſecure in their own ſtrength and their Zidonian confederates, that they cared not to be in league with any of their neighbours, that they might have their aid upon any occaſion, but lived of themſelves pleaſantly and ſecurely.

V. 8. And they came to their brethren] i. e. Having as ſpies ſeen and obſerved the country and the manners of the people, they returned to give an account of all that they had done to the Danites that ſent them.

What ſay ye ?] i. e. Now you are returned, give us an account of your journy, that is, whether you have found any convenient place for us to inhabit in, aud what hope there is of obtaining it.

V. 9. And they ſaid, Ariſe, that we may go up againſt them] q. d. We have found out ſuch a place, and ſuch people which do inhabit it, that there need not much diſcourſe about it, but rather that we fall upon action: for the land is very good, pleaſant and fruitful, and to be conquered, and gotten with little danger.

and are ye ſtill ?] Do not ſpend time in multiplying words, and in replying to our relation, but take the preſent opportunity, and out of hand ſet upon the conqueſt.

Be not ſlothful to go, and to enter to poſſeſſe the land] i. e By your ſloth and negligence do not let ſlip this fair opportunity, for there is no more to do but to go and poſſeſſe the land, ſeeing you are likely to find but ſmal and weak oppoſition, and little danger or pains in ſubduing of it. But yet for your better incouragement, and to remove all cauſe of fear, know this that followeth.

V. 10. When ye go, ye ſhall come unto a people ſecure] Who therefore may eaſily be taken by a ſudden ſurprize, when apprehending no danger they are altogether unprovided of all means to make reſiſtance, and keep no watch.

to a large land] Therefore fit to be a place of habitation for your numerous tribe.

for God hath given it into your hands] As appeareth not onely by his oracle which we received of him in our journey from one of his Prieſts, but alſo as we ſee it in part already verified in the event, God directing us to a people that are ſecure and careleſſe, having no means to make reſiſtance a place where there is no want] i. e. Which aboundeth with all pleaſures and profits, and with ſuch plenty and proſperity that nothing is wanting that can be deſired.

V. 11. ſix hundred men] Choſen out of the whole tribe, as fitteſt and ableſt, in reſpect of their valour and fortitude, for ſuch an expedition.

V. 12, And they went up, and pitched in Kirjath-jearim] i. e. Not in the city it ſelf, which probably would not have admitted ſuch an army of ſtrangers, but without the walls, neer unto it. So Joſh. 10. 10. This city, otherwiſe called Kirjath-baal Joſh. 15. 60. was ſituate upon a hill on the borders of Judah and Dan, Northward, and called the citie of woods, and was one of thoſe four cities of the Hivites with which Joſhua and the Princes contracted for their lives, Joſh. 9. 17. and afterwards fell to the Lot of Judah, Joſh. 15. 9. See on Joſh. 18. 14.

wherefore they called that place Mahaneh-Dan, unto this day] i. e. The camp or leaguer of Dan. Here afterwards Manoah the father of Samſon dwelt, ch. 13. 2, 25. whereby it appeareth that the things related in this chapter were long before the birth of Samſon.

behold, it is behind Kirjath-jearim] As the Eaſt with the Hebrews is called the fore part, ſo the Weſt the hinder-part. So Joſh. 1. 4. & 13. 5. Therefore they pitched not in the City it ſelf, but on the Weſt-ſide of it. See on Job. 23. 8.

V. 13. came unto the houſe of Micah] i. e. To that village where Micah dwelt.

V. 14. Then anſwered the five men] i. e. They began to ſpeak and propound that which followeth to the reſt of their company. For ſo this phraſe is uſually taken: 1 Sam.14.28. Ezr.10.2. Matth.11.25. Act.5.8.

Do yee know] i. e. We would have you to know, that in theſe houſes, i. e. one of theſe houſes, there is an Ephod and Teraphim, of which in our journey we made ſpeciall uſe, by inquiring what ſucceſſe we ſhould have, and had an anſwer which we found true: Which maketh us think that it may be very uſeful for us for the time to come, if we take along with us all theſe things, and with them the Prieſt alſo.

Now therefore conſider what you have to do] i. e. Whether you will carrie them with you, or onely inquire of them, as wee did, verſ. 5. and then leave them behind you.

V. 15. And they turned thitherward] i. e. Having reſolved to make a purchaſe of theſe things, they declined out of the direct way of their journey towards the houſe of the Levite, which was ſome part of Micahs houſe neer unto the chappell, allotted unto the Levite for his more convenient lodging.

and ſaluted him] Heb. aſked him of peace. i. e Of his wel-fare and proſperity, and how it fared with him in that his place and imployment.

V. 16. ſtood by the entring of the gate] Waiting for the coming forth of the five men that were gone into the houſe, to know what ſucceſſe they had in their enterprize, and to ſecond them, if finding oppoſition they needed their aſſiſtance.

V. 17. and came in thither] i.e. Entred into the idol-chappel where the Ephod and images were, and took them all away.

and the Prieſt ſtood in the entring of the gate] i. e. Being, it is likely, drawn thither by the five ſpies, to ſalute their brethren that ſtood without, whileſt they in the mean while went in to do their exploit.

V. 18. And theſe went into Micahs houſe] i. e. The five ſpies went into that part of Micahs houſe which was ſet apart for idolatrous ſervice, whileſt the Levite was without the gate ſaluting and talking with the Danites.

and fetched the carved image] Wherein they greatly ſinned, in that being private men they ſtole and took away that which was another mans, and that with an evill intention, not doing it out of hatred of his idolatry, but rather out of love to it, purpoſing to ſet up theſe idols and idolatrous ſervice in their own tribe.

Then ſaid the Prieſt unto them, What do ye?] i. e. What do you mean to take away theſe things that are Micah's, and belong not unto you?

V. 10. lay thy hand upon thy mouth] i. e. Refrain from ſpeaking any thing againſt our proceedings. The like expreſſion we have Job.21.5. and 29.9. and 40.4. Mic.7.16.

and be to us a father and a Prieſt] i. e. We will highly honour thee, as if thou wert our natural father that begat us. In ſuch great eſteem were men of that function in former times, how baſely ſoever they are ſlighted in our dayes.

It is bettber for thee, &c.] q. d. We perſwade thee to nothing but what is moſt for thine own good and advancement, both in reſpect of honour and gain.

V. 20. And the Prieſts heart was glad] As reſpecting onely his own preferment, and in the mean while ungratefully forgetting all Micahs former kindneſſe.

and went in the middeſt of the people] Namely, for his greater ſafety, if either any enemies ſhould meet them and ſet upon them in their march, or if Micah purſuing them to recover his loſſes ſhould aſſault them in the rear.

V. 21. and put the little ones, and the cattell, and the carriage before them] Out of their confidence of an eaſie conqueſt, they do not march forward as men preparing for a dangerous war, but as removing to ſettle themſelves in ſome new plantation, taking their wives and children, their cattell and carriages along with them: And theſe they placed in the fore-rank, as more ſuſpecting Micahs purſuit than any incounter of enemies before them.

V. 22. in the houſe] i. e. In the village where Micah dwelt.

V. 23. What aileth thee, that thou comeſt with ſuch a company?] Heb. that thou art gathered together. Armed might inſulteth over feeble right, and theeves complain of true men for demanding their own goods. Theſe Danites having ſpoyled Micah, complain of him and his company, as troubleſome people, who with their clamours and out-cries diſquieted and hindred them in their march.

V. 24. and what have I more?] i. e. What have you left me worth the having in compariſon of my images and Prieſt, which you have unjuſtly taken away?

V. 25. Let not thy voyce be heard among us] Thy clamours and reproachful language.

leſt angry fellows run upon thee] Heb. bitter of ſoul. i. e Embittered and incenſed with furie by the clamours and provoking ſpeeches.

and thou loſe thy life, with the lives of thy houſhold] Which are more precious than thy idols & Prieſt, though thou valueſt them more then the reſt of thy goods.

V. 27. a people that were at quiet and ſecure] See verſ. 10.

and burnt the City with fire] They went to ſeek out a City and place fit for habitation, of which they ſtood in great need; and yet coming to ſuch an one, they burnt it with fire. This was done either out of the heat and fury of war, which, for the time it laſted, made them forget or neglect their own conveniency; or elſe becauſe they could do no otherwiſe take it, without (at leaſt) the great ſlaughter of their own men, ſeeing the people being put to the worſt in the ſtreets, would run into the houſes, and there fight it out in their own defence.

V. 28. And there was no deliverer, becauſe it was far from Zidon] Laiſh was ſeated hard by mount Lebanon, and ſo far off from Zidon as they could have no help from thence in this ſudden ſurprize, though there it ſeemeth was their chiefeſt hope. Se on verſ.7.

and it was in the valley that lyeth by Beth-rehob] A region or part of Syria-Trachonitis, called Syria-Beth-rehob, and Syria-Rehob, 2 Sam. 10.6,8. In which was a City of that name, bordering upon the utmoſt North-part of Canaan, neer unto Hamath, Numb.13.21. which fell to Aſhers lot, Joſh.19.28. and was deſigned to be one of the Levites Cities, Joſh.21.31. but never conquered by the Aſherites, chap.1.31. for the Syrians did poſſeſſe it in Davids time, 2 Sam.10.6,8.

V. 29. And they called the name of the City Dan] i. e. In an honourable remembrance of the Patriarch Dan, their great grand-father, or the father of their tribe, Gen.30.6. and alſo that it might be a memorial to poſterity, that though they lived in the utmoſt borders of the Country, and in a place ſo far remote from the reſt of the Iſraelites, yet they were a part of one to their tribes. This City was afterwards called Cæſarea Paneadis, from Paneas, the name of the Countrey there abouts, and of one of the fountains of Jordan, Plin. l.5. cap.15. and 18. It was called alſo Cæſarea Philippi, becauſe built, or much enlarged and beautified, by Philip the ſon of Herode the Great, in honour of Tiberius Cæſar, Joſeph. Antiq. l.18. c.3. See on Amos 8.14. and Matth.16.13. Agrippa the younger called it afterwards Neronias, in honour of Nero, Joſeph. Antiq. l.20. c.8.

V. 30. And the children of Dan ſet up the graven image] Having an high eſteem of it, with the reſt of the idols, and alſo of the Prieſt, becauſe of the prediction of their good and proſperous ſucceſſe in their expedition againſt Laiſh, which came to paſſe according to their own deſire.

and Jonathan the ſon of Gerſhom, the ſon of Manaſſeh] The Jewiſh expoſitours and ſome others are of opinion, that this Jonathan, who lately was Micahs but now the Danites Prieſt, was grand-child to no meaner a perſon then Moſes; and that by inſerting the letter nun Moſes is here transformed into Manaſſeh, to ſave the credit of that great Prophet. But this is but an uncertain conjecture: For how often doth the Scripture mention the wicked children of godly parents! See on ch.17.1. and 7. and on Numb.27.18.

untill the day of the captivity] What captivity is here meant is very doubtfull and much controverted, whether that, when the Iſraelites had that great defeat by the Philiſtims, when the Ark was carried away as it were captive out of the land, and with it no doubt a great many of the Iſraelites taken priſoners in that battle, or that great captivity, when the ten tribes were carried away by Shalamaneſer King of Aſſyria. For either of theſe opinions there are divers ſtrong reaſons, and no leſſe ſtrong objections againſt them. Therefore ſome Expoſitors will have neither of thoſe captivities to be here underſtood, but a third, namely the particular captivity of the tribe of Dan, that happened between the two other, though not mentioned in the Scripture, as many other things are not which yet were done. But I ſee no neceſſity that may drive us to this ſhift, ſeeing this captivity may very probably be meant of the taking away of the Ark, and many of the Iſraelites with it, 1 Sam. 4. For whereas it is objected againſt it, that there is no mention in the Scriptures of any more captivities than that of the ten tribes by Shalamaneſer, and the other of Judah by Nebucadnezzar, it may bee anſwered, that no more is this captivity of the tribe of Dan mentioned there, but onely imagined by them that make this objection. And again it may be ſaid, that though thoſe were the two great captivities, that hindereth not but there might be a third leſſer than they: And that this taking of the Ark was a captivity, appeareth, Pſal.78.60, &c. where it is ſo called: So he forſook the Tabernacle of Shiloh, the tent which he placed among them, and delivered his ſtrength into captivity, and his glory into the enemies hand. He gave his people alſo unto the ſword, &c. He ſmote his enemies in the hinder parts, to wit, with Emerods, after they had carryed away the Ark, and kept in their Country. In all which the Pſalmiſt alludeth to that great defeat which the Philiſtims gave the Iſraelites, 1 Sam. 4. 10,11. Again, verſ.31. the continuance of this image and idolatrous worſhip ſet up by the Danites is limited to that time onely in which the houſe of God was in Shiloh; and that was not till the captivity by Shalmaneſer, but onely till the captivity of the Ark by the Philiſtims. For ſoon after this it was brought to Kirjath-jearim, and never after returned to Shiloh. Furthermore, there is no probability that theſe idols and idolatrous ſervice and prieſthood ſhould continue after that time of reformation by Samuel, when as the people returned unto God, and put away all their idols, 1 Sam.7.3,4. Or though it ſhould be imagined that Samuels power extended not to this remote place, which was in the utmoſt borders of the land, yet what ſhadow of reaſon is there, that they ſhould not be taken away by David, a man according to Gods own heart, who was ſo zealous of Gods pure worſhip, and abhorred all manner of idolatry, eſpecially raigning ſo long a time, and neither wanting will nor power to effect ſuch a pious work? For whereas it is anſwered, that though a publick reformation were brought-in in the dayes of Samuel and David, yet this idol-ſervice might ſtill be retained and ſecretly acted by many of the Danites even to the dayes of Jeroboam, and ſo continued to the captivity by Shalmaneſer, this is little to the purpoſe: For the queſtion is not what might be done by ſome of that tribe ſecretly, (for cloſe idolatry might lurk amongſt them even to the ſecond captivity, as well as the firſt, if at leaſt any of the Danites remained ſo long in the land) but how long this chappell of idols and idolatrous prieſthood and ſervice was publickly upheld and maintained by that tribe. Now this was onely whileſt the houſe of God remained in Shiloh, verſ. 31. and that was no longer but till the ark was carried away captive by the Philiſtims. Moreover, it is moſt probable that this book of Judges was written by Samuel, or at leaſt by ſome other that lived in his or Davids dayes, and not by Ezra, as ſome have dreamed, having no other ground for their opinion but the dotage of the Apocryphal Eſdras: And therefore this captivity cannot be that of Shalmaneſer, which happened ſo long time after the dayes of him that wrote this ſtory; unleſſe we will ſay he wrote it by a propheticall ſpirit, which is never to be obſerved in any pen-man of hiſtorical ſcripture without ſome intimation or notice given of it. And beſides, if he had written this by way of prophecy, he would have done it in a prophetical not an hiſtorical manner, and would not have ſaid that Jonathan his ſons were, but that they ſhould be, the prieſts to the time of the captivity by Shalmaneſer.

V. 31. all the time that the houſe of God was in Shiloh] This is to be limited to the time after the image was ſet up, and not to be underſtood of the whole time of the being of the tabernacle in Shiloh, ſeeing it was placed there in Joſhua's time, long before this graven image was erected, Joſh. 18. 1.

CHAP. XIX.

Verſ. 1. A*ND* it came to paſſe in thoſe dayes] i. e. Soon after the death of Joſhua, and before Othniel was Judge, as appeareth v. 11. compared with ch. 1. 7.

when there was no King in Iſrael] i. e. No ſupream Magiſtrate to reſtrain the people from any vice, or to puniſh ſin. Which is here prefixed before the following hiſtory, as a reaſon why the Levites wife committed whoredome, and the men of Gibeah ſuch abominable wickedneſſe, becauſe there was no Judge to reſtrain or puniſh them. See ch. 17. 6. and 18. 1. and 21. 25.

who took to him a concubine] Heb. A woman a concubine; or, a wife a concubine. For there were two ſorts of concubines: One, who were not wives, nor contracted in marriage, whoſe ſons had by law no right to inherit with the brethren of the lawful wives, as we ſee ch. 11. 2. The other were contracted to their husbands, but not in ſo ſolemn manner as the firſt and chief wives, who were mothers and miſtreſſes of the family Such were Jacobs two maids, who were taken to his wives, and whoſe children ſhared in their fathers inheritance. Now theſe in Scripture are called ſometimes wives, ſometimes concubines. And ſo this woman here is called a wife a concubine, to diſtinguiſh her both from a harlot, and alſo from a lawful wife, who was mother of the family and the onely true wife, both by Gods firſt inſtitution, Gen. 2. 18, 24. Mal. 2. 15. Matth. 12. 4, 5. and alſo by his law, Lev. 18. 18. 1 Cor. 7. 2. See on Gen. 25. 1.

out of Bethlehem-Judah] See on ch. 17. 7. It was lawful for him to take a wife from thence, though he were a Levite, becauſe onely maids that were heires were reſtrained from marrying out of their own tribe, that their inheritance might not go from it, but all other were left to the liberty of their own choice, Numb. 36. 8.

V. 2. And his concubine played the whore againſt him] Which ſhe could not have done, if ſhe had been onely a harlot-concubine, and not his wife. But being ſo, ſhe ſinned againſt him, that is, againſt her faith and promiſe plighted and made unto him, ſhe committed whoredome with others. For though ſuch concubines as ſhe were no waies equall to the lawful wife, yet were they bound to keep their faith with their husbands, unto whom they were contracted. See Gen. 22. 24. 1. Kings 11. 1.

and went away from him] Either out of diſlike, or fear of receiving puniſhment when her husband ſhould diſcover her whoredome, or at leaſt becauſe there were continual jarrs and contentions between them about it.

unto her fathers houſe] Who as a fond father received her, and ſo countenanced her in her ſin.

and was there four whole moneths] Or, a year and four moneths. Heb. dayes four moneths.

V. 3. And her husband aroſe, and went after her] i. e. When ſhe neglected to uſe means whereby ſhe might be reconciled, his anger being appeaſed, and his affection inclining towards her, he goeth to reconcile himſelf unto her, though ſhe were the peccant party.

to ſpeak friendly unto her] Heb. to her heart. i. e. Words of love, peace and comfort, to allure and draw on her affection towards him. So Hoſ. 2. 14. Thus Shechem ſpake to Dinah, Gen. 34. 3. and Joſeph to his brethren, Gen 50. 21.

a couple of aſſes] One to carrie proviſions for the journey, and the other to eaſe himſelf and his wife, if ſhe would return with him.

he rejoyced to meet him] Hoping he was come to be reconciled to his wife.

V. 4. and he abode with him three dayes] i. e. Of his own voluntary accord, to rejoyce together in their reconcilement. And two dayes more hee abode unwillingly, being overborn with the importunity of his father-in-law.

So they did eat and drink] i. e. They feaſted together, to teſtifie that they were reconciled, and that all differences were accorded between them, Exod. 32. 6.

V. 5. when they aroſe early] i. e. They of the family.

Comfort thy heart with a morſel of bread] i. e. Refreſh and ſtrengthen thy ſelf for thy journey with a little food; or, as we ſay, break thy faſt before thou ſetteſt out. So Gen. 18. 5. 1 Kings 13. 7, 8. And with this kind entertainment the father detaineth him, that by their longer ſtay their renewed love might be the more increaſed and confirmed, like things glewed together, which are ſtrengthened by time and continuance.

V. 8. untill afternoon] Heb. till the day declined.

V. 9. the day draweth] Heb. is weak.

the day groweth to an end] Heb. it is the pitching time of the day. i. e. Toward evening, and therefore it is a time more fit to take up ones lodging than to begin a journey.

home] Heb. to thy tent.

V. 10. came over againſt Jebus, (which is Jeruſalem)] So called afterwards, but now Jebus, being a City of the Jebuſites, Joſh. 15. 63. and 18. 28. So that this ſtory is of things done before the taking of Jeruſalem, mentioned, ch. 1. 8. & the expelling of the Jebuſites: If at leaſt the people of Judah were not for their ſins beaten out by the Jebuſites after they firſt took it; which is not probable, there being not the leaſt touch of any ſuch thing in the Scriptures. Some conceive, though that part of Jeruſalem which belonged to Judah were taken and poſſeſſed by them, ch. 1. 8. yet the other part, which belonged to Benjamin, was ſtill poſſeſſed by the Jebuſites, ſeeing it is ſaid ch. 1. 21. the children of Benjamin did not drive out the Jebuſites, but they dwelled together. But neither is this likely, that it was ſo at this time, ſeeing the Levite might have then gone to that part of Jeruſalem which was in the poſſeſſion of Judah, or to that part which belonged to the Benjamites, if it were neerer to him, and have lodged with ſome of them, they dwelling there together with the Jebuſites, as well as have gone further, when it was ſo late, to lodge at Gibeah. Neither would he have called it Jebus, or the City of a ſtranger, if the better part of it were poſſeſſed by the children of Judah, and the reſt in a great part by the children of Benjamin.

V. 11. the Jebuſites] Who were of the poſterity of Canaan, Gen. 10. 16.

V. 12. the City of a ſtranger, that is not of the children of Iſrael] i. e. A curſed nation, and eſtranged from God and his people. This he would not have ſaid, if the greateſt part of it at this time had been in the poſſeſſion of Judah and Benjamin.

V. 13. in Gibeah, or in Ramah] Theſe two Cities were neer Jebus Northward, ſituate on hils in the way to mount Ephraim, whither the Levite travailed; Ramah was four miles from Jebus; Gibeah, ſomewhat nearer. Some think there were two Cities called Gibeah in the tribe of Benjamin, one ſituate on a mountain, the other in a plain, See ch. 20. 31. There was alſo another Gibea in Judah, Joſh. 15. 57.

V. 14. Gibeah, which belonged to Benjamin] This is added to diſtinguiſh it from that of Judah. It is alſo called Gibeah of Saul, becauſe Saul was born there, and was therefore often reſident in that City.

V. 15. And they turned aſide thither, to go in and lodge in Gibeah] The Levites counſel and intention is to be commended for pious and honeſt, as deſiring to lodge rather with Gods people then with ſtrangers and heathens; and his ſervant, to be condemned, or at leaſt ſuſpected faulty, as ſavouring of ſloth and deſire of eaſe; and yet in the event the Levites counſel and courſe proveth pernicious to himſelf, his wife, and many thouſands of his people; God ſo diſpoſing of it by an over-ruling providence. Which may teach us not to truſt in our own wiſedome, but in all our enterpriſes to crave Gods direction, Prov. 16. 9. and 19. 21. and 20. 24. Jer. 10. 23.

For there was no man that took them into his houſe] i. e. Either becauſe they would not, being wicked and inhumane; or becauſe they durſt not, ſeeing they knew the inhabitants were ſo abominably wicked that they would aſſault their houſes to find out ſtrangers whom they might abuſe in exerciſing upon them their filthy luſts.

V. 16. there came an old man from his work out of the field] Here are given two reaſons why this old man entertained them rather then any other of the City; One, becauſe he was an honeſt man, who lived by his painful labour, though he were old, whereas the reſt of the City were idle and luxurious: The other, becauſe he was alſo of mount Ephraim, and onely ſojourned in Gibeah; and therefore beeing a ſtranger too, & their Countrey-man, hee had more compaſſion of them in their diſtreſſed condition than the Benjamites, who were of another tribe.

V. 18. I am now going to the houſe of the Lord] Which at this time was at Shiloh, ch. 18. 31. Thither he intended to go firſt, that he might do ſervice unto God, as being a Levite, and then afterwards to paſſe on to his own houſe.

and there is no man that receiveth me] i. e. Who will be intreated to give me lodging upon any conditions.

V. 19. Yet there is both ſtraw and provender——there is no want of any thing] q. d. They have no reaſon to refuſe us, ſeeing we all have things with us of our own needful for our journey, and would put them to no other charge or trouble but onely to lodge us.

V. 20. Let all thy wants lie upon me] i. e. Take no further care either for thy lodging or proviſion, ſeeing I will take all the care upon my ſelf to provide all neceſſaries both for thee and all that belong unto thee.

onely lodge not in the ſtreet] q. d. This onely I deſire, that thou wilt not ſo much wrong thy ſelf and thy wife as to lye in the open ſtreet. And thus the good old man, out of his humanity and love to hoſpitality, maketh it his ſuit to the Levite that he might entertain him, who before ſued unto others to be entertained, and was rejected.

V. 21. they

V. 21. they waſhed their feet] Which was one of the rites of hoſpitality in thoſe hot countries. See Gen.18.4. and 19.2. 2 Sam.11.8.

V. 22. certain ſons of Belial] i. e. Moſt flagitious men, and notoriouſly and deſperately wicked, ſtigmatized villains, and even incarnate devils, men without yoke, as the word ſignifieth, who will not ſubmit to be governed by religion or reaſon, by the principles of nature, or by the laws of God or man; like unto the devil himſelf, who is alſo called by this name, 2 Cor.6.15. in which reſpect they may be filty called his children, yea, his eldeſt ſons. Deut.13.13. See 1 Sam.1.16.

beſet the houſe round about] Like thoſe, Gen. 19.4. who it may be were their precedents, even as theſe children of iniquity were examplary to after-ages, Hoſ.9.9. and 10.9.

Bring forth the man——that we may know him] A modeſt expreſſion of their filthy luſt, according to the ſcripture-phraſe, Gen.19.5. and 4.1.

V. 23. Nay, my brethren] He ſeeketh to take them off firſt by this meek and loving compellation, and then by telling them that their intended action was both wicked and fooliſh. So 2 Sam.13.12,13. Gen. 34.7. Prov.7.7. 1 Sam.30.23.

ſeeing that this man is come unto my houſe] To wit, that he may be ſafe under my protection according to the laws of hoſpitality. So Gen. 19.8.

V. 24. Behold, here is my daughter a maiden, and his concubine] This good old man is upon the ſudden ſo tranſported with his care to obſerve the laws of hoſpitality, that he ſinfully offereth to proſtitute his own innocent daughter and the Levites wife to their wicked luſt, to be abuſed by them. For though it be lawful in evils of puniſhment to chooſe the leſſe that we may avoid the greater, (for ſo reſpectively the leſſer evil is good) yet in the evils of ſin we muſt chooſe neither, no not the leaſt to avoid the greateſt, ſeeing the lighteſt and moſt venial ſin is greater, (if we be actors in it, and make it our own by choyce,) than the moſt abominable wickedneſſe in which we are but meer patients and the bare ſubjects of other mens villanies.

and humble ye them] i. e. Abuſe them at your pleaſure, but abuſe not my gueſt by making him the ſubject of ſo baſe a villany and unnatural filthineſſe. It was very commendable in him, that he thus highly prized the laws of hoſpitality; but the means hee uſed are to be condemned as ſinful, ſeeing we may not do evil that good may come thereof, Rom.3.8. nor act the leaſt evil our ſelves that we may prevent the greateſt in others. Neither had this man power over his daughter and the concubine, to proſtitute them to be abuſed by theſe wicked, graceleſſe and ſhameleſſe villains.

V. 25. So the man] That is, the Levite, not daring himſelf to come out unto them for fear of being abuſed by them, required the old man to do it, ſo reverencing the laws of hoſpitality, that he thought it unreaſonable his hoſts daughter ſhould be abuſed for his ſake.

and they knew her] The old man offered his daughter to be abuſed, as well as this concubine; but this object of their filthy and brutiſh luſt being preſented unto them, they ſuddenly catch at it, and ſo forget the other. This came to paſſe by a juſt and over-ruling providence of God, cauſing them to forget the innocent virgin, that ſhe might be preſerved and ſuffering the concubine to be abuſed, for a deſerved puniſhment of her former filthineſſe and unfaithfulneſſe.

V. 26. and fell down] i. e. Either dead, or ready to dye.

till it was light] i. e. She came and fell down at the door in the dawning of the day, and there lay dead till it was clear light or fair day.

V. 27. And her lord roſe up] i. e. Her husband: So Sarah called Abraham for honours ſake, 1 Pet.3.6. But perhaps this woman had been his ſervant, bought with his money; if ſo, hee was her lord in a double reſpect: See Exod.21.8.

and opened the doors of the houſe] To ſee, it is likely, what was become of his wife, that they might go on their journey, and haſten away from that wicked City.

and behold, the woman his concubine was fallen down] Namely, ſtark dead at the door, the Lord having called her to account for her former wickedneſſe, and by a juſt law of requital puniſhed her in the ſelf-ſame kind as ſhe had ſinned, though the matter were taken up between her & her husband, and they reconciled one to the other. Heb.13.4.

and her hands were upon the threſhold] In her fall catching hold at it, in the pangs of death.

V. 28. And he ſaid unto her, Up, and let us be going] i. e. Suppoſing ſhe was come too late in the night to be let in, and there fallen aſleep, he ſeeketh to awaken her.

Then the man took her up] i. e. The Levite diſcerning by her ſpeechleſneſſe that ſhe was ſtark dead, as alſo by making other experiments upon her, being aſſured that it was ſo, he took her up to carry her away with him upon another deſign that came into his mind.

V. 29. and divided her, together with her bones, into twelve pieces, and ſent her into all the coaſts of Iſrael] Becauſe there was no other way to bring theſe wicked varlets to deſerved puniſhment for their abominable wickedneſſe, he appealeth and addreſſeth himſelf to the whole nation, and ſendeth his wife about piece-meal, fleſh and bones, unto every of the twelve tribes a part; the Levites, his own tribe, being diſperſed among the reſt, that by ſuch an horrid ſpectacle he might incenſe their wrath, and raiſe up their ſpirits to take the ſharper revenge upon the actors of ſo foul a fact, the heart beeing uſually more affected by viſible ſpectacles preſented to the eye, than by bare reports related unto the ear. This action of the Levite thus mangling the dead body of his wife was in it ſelf barbarous bloody and inhumane, ſeeing the bodies of the dead ought to have their due honour and reſpect, Deut.21.22. yet it is excuſable in him, ſeeing he acted it for an higher deſign; which did not ſo much diſhonour the dead as benefit the living, by bringing thoſe children of Belial to condigne puniſhment, and not ſuffering thoſe peſts to poyſon the ayre with their breath, and by their indemnity to pull down Gods fearfull judgments upon the whole land. And thus it is lawfull for Phyſicians and Chirurgians to anatomize a dead body, that by ſearching into the ſecrets of nature they may get more skill to prevent or cure the diſeaſes of the living.

V. 33. And it was ſo, that all that ſaw it] i. e. The Elders and Magiſtrates of every tribe, and with them other of the people, ſeeing theſe pieces of the dead body, and hearing the whole matter related by the meſſengers that brought them, and all the ſeverall paſſages of this lamentable tragedie, generally concluded there was never ſuch an horrid villanie done or ſeen, either in their own times, or in the dayes of their anceſtors, ſince their coming out of Egypt.

conſider of it, take advice, and ſpeak your minds] i. e. What courſe is to be taken, and what means are fitteſt to be uſed to bring theſe deſperate offenders to deſerved puniſhment, leſt we be guilty of their ſin by not executing juſtice, and make the whole land lyable to Gods wrath.

CHAP. XX.

Verſ. 1. THen all the children of Iſrael] i. e. A great part of the whole body of the people, out of every tribe which had heard of this abominable fact by the relation of the Levites meſſengers, the tribe of Benjamin excepted, went out of their houſes and places of habitation, being ſummoned by their Elders and Officers. So Gen.41.57. Mar. 1.5. Nor can this be underſtood of the whole nation, which far exceeded in number four hundred thouſand men, as appeareth by their firſt numbring in the wilderneſſe, Numb.1.46,47. and that in Davids time, 2 Sam. 24.9. Neither it is probable that going out they left their Country and Cities naked and deſtitute of inhabitants to defend them againſt bordering enemies, and to manage all their domeſticall affairs, ſeeing theſe that went out were not to return till this war was ended, v.8. And much leſſe probable it is, that this ſhould be underſtood onely of the Elders & officers, ſeeing they could not poſſibly amount to ſo great a number as four hundred thouſand men. Therefore it is meant of all their chief men of war, together with their Elders, Officers, Captains and Commanders, fit to be called out for ſuch a ſervice.

gathered together as one man] i. e. With unanimous conſent they went out upon this expedition, with ſuch ſpeed & readineſs as if one man alone had undertaken the buſineſs. So v.8,11. 1 Sam.11.7. 2 Sam.19. 14. Ezra 3.1.

from Dan even to Beerſheba with the land of Gilead] i. e. From all the utmoſt borders of the land. For it was bounded with Dan on the North, 1 Kings 4.25. Beerſheba in the tribe of Judah towards the Philiſtims, Gen.21.33,34. on the South, Gilead beyond Iordan on the Eaſt, and the Mediterranean ſea on the Weſt.

unto the Lord in Mizpeh] Not becauſe the tabernacle was there, but becauſe they came thither to act this weighty buſineſs as in Gods preſence, and withall to worſhip, pray and ask of the Lord at Shiloh, which was neer Mizpeh on the Eaſt. This Mizpeh was a place in the borders of Benjamin, Ioſh. 18.26. and therefore fit for this preſent occaſion. And it was often uſed for general aſſemblies, as lying in the heart of the land, and ſo commodious for ſuch meetings, 1 Sam. 7.5. and 10.17. 2 King.25.23. Some think here was ſome Synagogue or place of publick worſhip, 1 Macc. 3.46. though ſacrifices and the ceremonial worſhip were limited to the tabernacle, which was now at Shiloh, ch.18.31. See on ch.10.17. and 21.19.

V. 2. And the chief of all the people] Or, the corners of all the people. i. e. The chief princes gathered out of all the corners of the land, or the corners themſelves, as the Hebrew hath it, which called the chief princes corners, as ſome think, becauſe, as corner-ſtones or pillars, they are the chief ſtrength that beareth up the fabrick of the common-wealth. So 1 Sam.14.38. Iſai.19.13. Zeph.3.6.

four hundred thouſand foot-men] For in the armies of the Iſraelites none fought on horſe-back, or in chariots, but on foot only.

that drew ſword] See ch.8.10.

V. 3. Then ſaid the children of Iſrael] To wit, unto the Levite.

How was this wickedneſſe?] i. e. Tell us the manner how this horrible wickedneſſe was acted, and all the circumſtances of it.

V. 4. And the Levite] Heb. the man the Levite.

the husband of the woman] This ſheweth the woman was not his harlot, but contracted unto him as his wife. See on ch.19.1,2.

V. 5. thought to have ſlain me] i. e. Either by abuſing me, as they did my wife, (which for modeſties ſake he doth not expreſſe in plain terms) or they indeed reſolved to kill me, if I would not yeed to proſtitute my body to their abominable luſts, which to do I ſhould have thought much worſe than death it ſelf. And this his accuſation and complaint it is likely he confirmed by producing his old hoſt and ſervant as his witneſſes, Deut.17.6.

V. 6. they have committed lewdneſſe and folly] i. e. Such an horrible and worſe than brutiſh wickedneſſe as ought not to go unpuniſhed. See ch.19.23. and on Ioſh.7.15.

V. 7. Behold, ye are all children of Iſrael] i. e. Whom this horrible fact concerneth, as well as me, ſeeing you are the people of God, who are ſtraitly bound by his command to puniſh ſuch outragious wickedneſſe, and ſo to put away evil from Iſrael; which if you do not, the guilt thereof will lie upon the land, v.13.

V. 8. We will not any of us go to his tent] So reſolute they were in the fervency of their zeal to ſee this matchleſſe villany ſeverely puniſhed, that they reſolve not to make any delay in ſeeing it done, if at leaſt the Benjamites themſelves would not ſee juſtice executed upon the offenders; and if they refuſed ſo to do, they would alſo make war againſt them as abettors of the villany. And here it is probable that they vowed, and ratified their vow with an oath, that if any of the Benjamites ſhould eſcape the ſword and remain alive, they would not (after they had deſtroyed all their women and maids, together with their children) give any of their daughters in marriage unto them, and withal, that they would put to the ſword the men of any town or city which had not aſſiſted them in this war: Both which are mentioned ch. 21. 1, 5.

V. 9. We will go up by lot againſt it] i. e. To prevent all controverſies, differences and emulations, which might otherwiſe happen, the lot ſhall decide the matter, who ſhall make proviſion for the camp, and who ſhall go out to fight.

V. 10. And we will take ten men of an hundred] That is, in the whole, fourty thouſand out of four hundred thouſand.

to fetch victual for the people] i. e. To victual the camp.

V. 11. knit together as one man] Heb. fellows. i. e. Joyning both heart and hand to aſſiſt one another in this war.

V. 12. And the tribes of Iſrael ſent men through all the tribe of Benjamin] i. e. So careful they were not to raiſe a civil war, and to ſhed bloud, that they uſed all lawful means to prevent it. Therefore before they would further ingage themſelves, they ſend theſe meſſengers, as imbaſſadours of peace, if they would puniſh the offenders; or as Herаulds to proclaim war, if they refuſed. For that war is not juſt that is begun before it be proclaimed, and propoſitions of peace tendred to prevent it, if they be accepted, So Deut. 20. 10, 11.

What wickedneſſe is this that is done among you?] They do not inquire what the ſin was, for that they knew already, but expoſtulate with them concerning the heynouſneſſe of it, the which they aggravate by this interrogation q. d. How horrible and abominable is this wickedneſſe which hath been committed among you?

V. 13. Now therefore deliver us the men] i. e. Keep them not under your protection, but give them up to juſtice; that as they have been examples unto others to incourage them in ſuch a matchleſſe villany, ſo others may be deterred from committing the like ſin by their exemplary puniſhment.

and put away evil from Iſrael] i. e. Both the evil of ſin, cutting off the offenders by the ſword of juſtice, and preſerving others from being infected by their wicked example; and alſo the evil of puniſhment, ſeeing the guilt of their ſin will lie upon the land, and draw down upon it Gods heavy judgements, if juſtice be not executed.

But the children of Benjamin would not hearken to the voice of their brethren] i. e. Though as brethren they perſwaded them out of love to do that which tended as well to their own good as the publick welfare of the whole State, yet they would give no ear to their advice, either out of pride, becauſe they ſcorned that the other tribes ſhould meddle in their government, or out of ſelf-confidence preſuming on their own ſtrength and skilfull proweſſe in martiall affaires; or God gave them up to the hardneſſe of their own hearts, becauſe he was purpoſed to deſtroy them, 1 Sam. 2. 25. See on Gen. 49. 27.

V. 14. But the children of Benjamin gathered themſelves together] i. e. Being reſolved to ſtand it out, they make a generall muſter of their whole tribe at Gibeah, that they might be ready to protect them, if any attempt ſhould be made againſt them by the other tribes; ſhewing herein their heat and eagerneſſe to fight in their defence, though they knew them to be notoriouſly wicked: And ſo they made themſelves acceſſaries, abetters, and guilty of their horrible ſin.

V. 15. that drew ſword] i. e. Fit and able men to do ſervice in the war. See ch. 8. 10.

V. 16. left-handed] See ch. 3. 15. Some wittily obſerve here, That as theſe many left-handed perſons deſcended from Benjamin, whoſe name ſignifieth Son of the right-hand, ſo it is too often ſeen that vertuous and religious parents have an ungracious off-ſpring.

every one could ſling ſtones at an hairs breadth, and not miſſe] An hyperbolicall expreſſion, whereby is ſignified that they were ſo exceedingly skilfull in ſlinging ſtones that they would commonly hit a ſmall mark.

V. 18. went up to the houſe of God, and asked counſell of God] Before they would undertake ſuch a weighty buſineſſe they conſult with God, and do not raſhly ruſh upon it, but firſt deſire to be directed by him. See chap. 1. 1.

Which of us ſhall go up firſt to the battle] They do not inquire whether they ſhould fight or no; but being full of confidence in reſpect of the juſtneſſe of their cauſe, and alſo their great number and ſtrength, they ſtrive for precedencie and the honour of the day, preſuming already of victory before the fight, and ſo ſeek to God only for the determining of this difference between them, that there might be no contentions and emulations about it.

V. 21. And deſtroyed down to the ground of the Iſraelites that day twenty and two thouſand men] Though they fought in a juſt cauſe and quarrel againſt wicked and graceleſſe men, who ſtood up in defence of thoſe who had deſerved utter ruine and deſtruction for their abominable wickedneſſe, yet God executed this heavie judgement upon them, I. to puniſh and correct the pride and ſelf-confidence of his people, which appeared, in that they ſought unto God only to know who ſhould have the precedency in the war, v. 18. but did not by humble and hearty prayer crave his aſſiſtance and bleſſing upon their indeavours. II. Becauſe they were generally guilty of many great and hainous ſins, eſpecially of idolatry and backſliding from God, of which they had not repented, nor made their peace with God by ſerious humiliation and turning from their wicked ways. III. Becauſe if they had at firſt prevailed and obtained victory, they would have gloried & triumphed in their own policy and ſtrength, and not aſcribed the glory to God. IV. To teach them and all others not to judge of the juſtice of the cauſe by the event, ſeeing outward things happen to all alike, Eccl. 9. 1, 2. the wicked oftentimes thriving and proſpering in their ſin, and the godly and righteous being oppreſſed by them, though their cauſe be much the better, as we ſee in the example of Gods people and the Aſſyrian and Babyloniſh kings, and at this day of the Turks and Chriſtians. In all which God is juſt: For though his children ſuffer as innocents in reſpect of their enemies, yet not in reſpect of himſelf, who alwayes inflicteth upon them deſerved puniſhments for their ſins, or at leaſt fatherly chaſtiſements to bring them to repentance, or to prevent ſin when they are ready to fall into it: And on the other ſide he ſuffers the wicked to proſper and flouriſh in their ſin for a time, that he may bring them to the greater deſtruction in the end, as the Benjamites in this place.

V. 22. the men of Iſrael encouraged themſelves] i. e. Attributing their defeat to ſome outward accidents, which now by experience they had learned to prevent, they take new heart unto them, hoping for good ſucceſſe in reſpect of their great ſtrength and number that ſtill remained.

in the place where they put themſelves in array the firſt day] This is noted (as it ſeemeth) to imply, that it was a place of diſadvantage, in reſpect of the multitude of the Iſraelitiſh army, and the ſmall number of the Benjamites.

V. 23. and the children of Iſrael went up and wept before the Lord] Here is to be obſerved, that their great defeat wrought in them ſome reformation of their former errors and omiſſions, but not ſuch an one as was ſufficient to fit them for a victory. For they wept before the Lord, but not ſo much (as it ſeemeth) for their ſin as for their ſmart and loſſe, nor humbled themſelves by faſting and prayer. And again, they asked counſel of the Lord whether they ſhould the ſecond time go to battle againſt the children of Benjamin their brother, but inquired not what ſhould be the ſucceſſe of their enterprize, nor acknowledged that they did rely upon him alone for victory, having no conceit of their own ſtrength, nor craved by hearty prayer his aſſiſtance, without which there was no hope of prevailing againſt their enemies.

againſt Benjamin my brother] Doubting it is likely of their ſucceſſe, becauſe they raiſed war againſt their brother, that is, a tribe of their own people, and not looking to their ſin, the chief cauſe of their defeat.

And the Lord ſaid, Go up againſt him] i. e. He anſwered them according to their inquirie, but gave them no encouragement by promiſing victory.

V. 25. All theſe drew the ſword] i. e. Were valiant men and skilful, and able to manage their weapons. So v. 15.

V. 26. and came unto the houſe of God, and wept] Not as they did before, but in a ſolemn and ſerious manner, not ſo much bewailing their loſſe, as their ſins, which were the cauſe of it.

and ſat there before the Lord] i. e. According to the poſture of mourners, Lam. 1. 1. Pſal. 137. 1. Or, as others take it, they abode there humbling themſelves before God with true contrition and compunction of heart, from morning to night, in the true ſight and ſenſe of their ſins, 2 Sam. 7. 18.

and faſted] i. e. Did not perform the duty of humiliation and repentance ſlightly, overly and formally, as before, but in a through and ſerious manner and offered burnt-offerings] To wit, for the expiation of their ſins. In theſe the whole ſacrifice was conſumed and offered unto God.

and peace-offerings before the Lord] In peace-offerings part was offered to the Lord, part belonged to the prieſts, and part to him that offered the ſacrifice. And this they did to make their peace and atonement, and to teſtifie their faith and aſſurance of victorie, having ſought God in a right manner.

V. 27. enquired of the Lord] To wit, by the high prieſt, after the judgement of Urim and Thummim, Numb. 27. 21.

for the ark of the covenant of God was there in thoſe dayes] i. e. It was in the tabernacle at Shiloh, which was neer unto Gibeah.

V. 28. And Phinehas the ſon of Eleazar---ſtood before it in thoſe dayes] i. e. Miniſtred before the Lord in the Prieſts office of the high prieſt. So Deut. 10. 8. & 18. 5. Hence it is evident that theſe things here related were not done after the death of Samſon, but ſoon after Joſhua's time. For if Phinehas had continued till after Samſons death, ſuppoſing that he were thirty years old when he killed Zimri and Cozbi, he ſhould have been now about three hundred and fifty years of age. See on ch. 17. 1.

Go up, for to morrow I will deliver them into thy hand] Before God bad them go up, but gave them no promiſe of good ſucceſſe, but now they have his word for it, and are thereby aſſured of victory.

V. 29. And Iſrael ſet lyers in wait round about Gibeah] So Joſh. 8. 4. They ſet a ſecret ambuſh neer the city, to take it when the people were drawn out to battell and having ſurpriſed it, and ſet ſome part of it on fire, then to iſſue out and fall upon the rear of the Benjamites army, ſo that it appeareth by this relation (though it by intricate and much perplexed) that the Iſraelites divided their army into three parts: One was this here layed in ambuſh: The ſecond was a party drawn out of the army to preſent themſelves unto the Benjamites, and for a while to entertain a fight with them, and by and by to counterfeit a flight, till they ſaw the city taken by the aſcending of the flame and ſmoak, and then to face about and make a ſtand: The third was to be at Baal-tamar, as a ſtrong reſerve, conſiſting of the main battle or body of the army who were appointed to ſecond them who were to fain a flight, when they made a ſtand, and had drawn the enemy far enough out of the city, and brought them within the reach of this reſerve. In the two former battels, when they relyed upon their own ſtrength and number, and had from God no promiſe of victory, they were ſo bold and confident that they neglected ſtratagems of war, as thinking there was no need of them. But now that they had a promiſe of victory which could not fail, they think no providence or policy too much. Which plainly ſheweth what a wide difference there is between vain preſumption grounded on our own ſtrength & natural abilities, and true faith relying upon Gods word and promiſes. Preſumption is bold and confident upon weak and falſe grounds, and thinketh ſurely to attain its ends, though all meanes be neglected that may advance and further them; but true faith, when it hath Gods word to build upon, is no leſſe careful to uſe all lawful meanes than if there were no promiſe, becauſe it knoweth that ordinarily God appointeth that the means and end ſhould go together, and therefore it is a tempting of God, when we have a promiſe, to neglect the means ſubſervient to his providence. See acts 27. 31. and on Iſa. 38. 21.

V. 30. And the children of Iſrael went up] To wit, that part of the army which were appointed to fight with the Benjamites, and to counterfeit a flight.

V. 31. went out againſt the people] i. e. againſt that partie which was drawn out to fight againſt them.

V. 32. unto the high-waies] i. e Where their great reſerve, conſiſting of the main body of the Army, incamped.

V. 33. And all the men of Iſrael] i. e. The main body of their army, which lay incamped neer the high-waies, roſe up and put themſelves in array, to ſecond thoſe who had feigned a flight, and now made a ſtand.

V. 34. And there came againſt Gibeah ten thouſand choſen men] i. e. The lyers in wait that lay in ambuſh to ſurprize the city. Which when they had done, they put themſelves between the citie and the Benjamites army, to hinder their retreat.

and the battle was ſore] Namely, to the Benjamites, who were hemmed in on all ſides, before and behind, though for the preſent they apprehended not their danger till they ſaw the flame aſcend out of the City.

V. 35. deſtroyed of the Benjamites that day twenty and five thouſand and an hundred men] The particulars are afterwards ſet down thus; Eighteen thouſand ſlain in the battell, v. 44. five thouſand gleaned in the high-wayes after the army was ſlaughtered, routed, and put to flight, and two thouſand purſued to Gidom, and ſlain there, v. 45. And over and above theſe there were ſome odde numbers ſlain in the field and in the purſuit which make up the odde hundred in this verſe. But beſides theſe five and twenty thouſand and one hundred mentioned here, and the ſix hundred that fled to the rock Rimmon, v. 47. there lacketh one thouſand to compleat the whole number of the Benjamites army, v. 15. Now what became of theſe is not expreſſed, but it is probably conceived they fell in the two former battels.

V. 36. for the men of Iſrael] Having in general related the Benjamites defeat and the Iſraelites victory, he doth now deſcribe the manner and circumſtances of it.

V. 37. drew themſelves along] Or, made a long ſound with the trumpets. To wit, out of the places where they had lyen in ambuſh.

V. 38. there was an appointed ſign] Namely, between the lyers in wait and that part of the army which were in the fight, that they ſhould make a ſtand and turn upon the enemy when they ſaw the flame aſcending out of the City.

V. 40. the Benjamites looked behind them] Being amazed to ſee the fleeing Iſraelites upon a ſudden make a ſtand & renew their fight, they ſtood at a gaze, and ſo looking back they perceived that their city was taken and ſet on fire, and ſo that evil was come upon them, being on all ſides invironed by their enemies, and no place left for a ſafe retreat, and therefore that they were all utterly loſt without any hope of eſcaping.

and them which came out of the Cities] This place is diverſly interpreted. Some will have the meaning to be, That the party which had fired Gibeah came now out and charged the rear of the Benjamites; Others, That beſide the army of the Iſraelites, the people of the cities all about came forth and ſlaughtered the Benjamites, as they fled; Others, That beſides the ſlaughter of the Benjamites army, the Iſraelites deſtroyed even thoſe alſo which had not taken up arms, but abode quiet in their Cities.

V. 44. And there fell] To wit, in the battel.

V. 45. unto the rock Rimmon] i. e. A city lying upon a rock between Bethel and Gibeah, on the South-weſt of Benjamin.

and they gleaned] i. e. They ſlew here and there, as they could meet with them, cutting them clean off, as ears of corn are gleaned after the harveſt, or grapes after the vintage.

and purſued hard after them] As it were cloſe at the heels, not giving them any ſcope, reſt or reſpite.

V. 46. So that all that fell that day of Benjamin were twenty and five thouſand men] He expreſſeth only the grand and round number, leaving out the odde hundred mentioned, v. 35. See on ch. 11. 26. 2 Sam. 5. 5.

V. 48. and the men of Iſrael turned again] i. e. Not ſatiſfied with the ſlaughter of the men of Gibeah and the other Benjamites that came to fight in their defence, they fell upon all other cities of that tribe, becauſe they likewiſe had ſent aids to this war, and ſlew man, woman and child, and the very beaſts. The which they did, as ſome think, becauſe for their protecting thoſe that had committed that abominable crime, they had anathematiz'd and devoted them to utter deſtruction; which was the caſe of Jericho, and Hazor, and of ſuch as ſhould ſet up Idolatry in the land, Deut. 13. 15, 16. But this cannot probably be thought to be the cauſe, ſeeing if all had been devoted to a totall ruine, they neither would nor could upon ſecond thoughts have ſpared the ſix hundred at Rimmon, nor afterwards have repented of the deſolation they had made. And therefore it is rather to be thought, that what they did was out of the heat and fury of war, unto which they were incenſed and inraged not only by the Benjamites horrible wickedneſſe in patronizing and protecting ſuch ſhameleſſe villany, but becauſe they had ſuffered in ſo juſt a cauſe a great ſlaughter of fourty thouſand of their men.

CHAP. XXI.

Verſ. 1. NOw the men of Iſrael had ſworn in Mizpeh] When they entred into a ſolemn covenant there, that they would make war againſt the Benjamites, if they would not let juſtice proceed againſt the men of Gibeah, ch. 20. 1, 8.

There ſhall not any of us give his daughter unto Benjamin to wife] Which oath firſt implyeth a ſuppoſal, that ſome of the Benjamites might out-live the war, eſcaping by flight or otherwiſe; and withall, that it might ſo come to paſſe, that there would not ſo many of the female ſex eſcape the ſword as might be a number ſufficient to be wives unto the men that ſhould remain: For if they had women enough of their own tribe ſurviving, they ſhould not need to have wives from other tribes. Secondly, it expreſſeth a full determination, that if thoſe Benjamites that ſurvived were brought to extremity, as to want wives, and no women left of their own tribe to marry withall, that none of the other tribes ſhould give their daughters unto them, nor hold communion with them, but account them as Gentiles and heathens. It is very likely that when out of ſudden paſſion and diſpleaſure they made this oath, they thought not of the miſchiefs and inconveniences that would neceſſarily enſue upon their obſerving of it; as, That if the Benjamites had neither wives of their own, nor might fetch any from the other tribes, then either they muſt live ſingle, and not marry at all, and ſo, contrary to Gods revealed will and Jacobs propheticall bleſſing, one of the twelve Tribes be quite extinct at their death, or elſe, contrary to Gods expreſſe command, they muſt of neceſſity match themſelves with heathens and ſtrangers, and ſo pollute the holy ſeed and beget a mongrell generation. But as the oath it ſelf was raſh and inconſiderate, ſo the performance and execution thereof was moſt barbarous and bloody, ſeeing in their heat and fury they ſought to deſtroy the whole tribe, not only the men that came out in battel againſt them, but thoſe alſo that afterwards they found in their Cities, among which it may well be preſumed there were many that were not acceſſary to the foul fact of the men of Gibeah; and not them alone, but even the women, virgins, and little children, who were altogether innocent. Neither did any eſcape their bloudy rage, except the ſix hundred men which fled unto the rock Rimmon, and by Gods ſpecial providence were there preſerved againſt their wills. All this outrage was diſguiſed under the colour of a religious oath, which they had taken out of blind zeal and ſuperſtitious ignorance.

V. 2. and the people came to the houſe of God] Being now in cold blood and having learned in what ſtraits they were, and into what a labyrinth they had brought themſelves, being neceſſitated either to violate their ſolemn oath or diſmember their body politick by cutting off one of their tribes, they aſſemble themſelves at Shiloh, where the tabernacle now was, and in it the ark the viſible ſign of Gods preſence, there to adviſe one with another, but principally to ask counſel of God, how they might wind themſelves out of thoſe dificulties in which they were involved by their own raſhneſſe and rage, whereof they now ſeriouſly repented, and how they might find out ſome way whereby to preſerve, the Benjamites from utter exſtirpation, and themſelves from perjurie. Now all this difficulty aroſe from their groſſe ignorance in thoſe times. For they had no other cauſe to perplex themſelves about their oath, but to ſtop the out-cry of a ſuperſtitious conſcience, ſeeing their oath being wicked, they were not bound at all to keep it, but having unlawfully made it, they might, when they knew it, lawfully break it, or elſe they ſhould make themſelves guilty of a double ſin, and the later greater than the former; the one, raſhly to take ſuch an oath; the other, adviſedly to keep it, when it appeared to be ſinful. But when men ſwerve from the rule of Gods word, they run out of one ſin into another, and uſing ſhifts and ſhuffles to extricate themſelves, they ſink into the whirlpool of wickedneſſe deeper and deeper. Yet in theſe dark and ſuperſtitious times they had ſo much light remaining, as to ſee that it was unlawful for children to marry without the conſent of their parents; ſeeing otherwiſe this ſcruple of theirs might eaſily have been removed: For though the fathers could not give their conſent by reaſon of their oath, yet their daughters, if they ſo pleaſed, might have married without it; and it is probable that many of them would have done it, becauſe hereby they might have made themſelves miſtreſſes of very large eſtates, the whole inheritance of Benj. being to be divided amongſt that ſmall remnant of ſix hundred perſons.

V. 3. why is this come to paſſe in Iſrael] This is not propounded as a queſtion to be reſolved, but as an expoſtulation or complaint of their preſent condition, which was to be pityed, like that Iſa.63.17. O Lord, why haſt thou made us to erre from thy waies, and hardned our heart from thy fear? q. d. How cometh it to paſſe, O Lord, that thou haſt thus given us up to be ſo tranſported by rage and paſſion, as to do things which tend ſo much to thy diſhonour and our own diſcomfort, namely the cutting off of one of our tribes, and the cauſeleſſe ſhedding of ſo much innocent blood?

V. 4. and built there an altar] Some conceive this altar was erected for a memorial to teſtifie their thankfulneſſe for their victory, becauſe it was unlawfull to have any more altars than one onely for ſacrifices. But to erect an altar for a monument of their victory was not ſuitable to the preſent occaſion, they now coming as mourners to lament the evil fruits that came of it, namely the deſtruction of one of their tribes. And beſides, this conceit is plainly confuted in the very next words, which expreſſe the uſe for which this altar was erected, namely, to offer upon it burnt-offerings and peace-offerings. And therefore the better to clear this point, we are to know, that God appointed but one altar to be ordinarily uſed for ſacrifices, as there was alſo to be but one tabernacle, and one temple, as types of our onely Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, Heb.13.10,11. Therefore the ten tribes were highly offended at the two tribes and half, when they thought they had built another altar for ordinary uſe, Joſh. 22.11. But upon extraordinary and neceſſary occaſions God allowed his people to build more than one altar in number, though they were all one in kind, both in reſpect of matter and form, eſpecially when it was done by holy men, and of propheticall ſpirits, and without danger of idolatry; yet with this difference, that the one was to be fixed and permanent, the other to ſtand onely ſo long as the neceſſarie occaſion continued. And thus we read of divers altars erected; as by Ioſhua, upon mount Ebal, Ioſh 8.30. according to Gods ſpeciall command, Deut.27. 8. by Gideon, ch. 6,24,26. by Samuel, 1 Sam.7.9,17. & 11. 15. & 16.2,5. by David, 2 Sam.24.25. and that by Gods appointment, v.18. by Solomon, 1 King.8.64. by Elijah, 1 King.18.32. Now the occaſion of ſetting up this altar, when they were ſo neer the other in the Tabernacle, was the ſame with that of Solomons, 1 Kings 8. 64. namely, becauſe there were ſo many Sacrifices to be offered by that great aſſembly that one altar was not ſufficient for them. See on ch.13.16.

V. 5. For they had made a great oath] Both in reſpect of the great multitude by whom it was taken, and the great ſolemnity obſerved in the taking of it, & it may be alſo becauſe there was ſome ſuch great and bitter execration added to ratifie and confirm it, as was added to the other oath of not giving their daughters to the Benjamites, v.18.

concerning him that came not up] This cannot be underſtood of every particular perſon; for if all had come the whole land ſhould have been left empty & open to all incurſions of bordering enemies; but of every City and Town which did not ſend ſome to aſſiſt in this expedition.

to the Lord to Mizpeh] See ch.20.1.

He ſhall ſurely be put to death] This oath was in it ſelf lawful, & the puniſhment juſt which was threatned. For it was a lawfull war proclaimed for inflicting deſerved puniſhment upon grievous offenders. And ſeeing at this time there was no ſupream Magiſtrate to puniſh ſin, the government was in the body of the people; and they might juſtly, having the power in their hands, make ordinances, and puniſh tranſgreſſors; And particularly all thoſe who in this common cauſe concerning the publick good had not given their aſſiſtance when it was required, and ſo, as much as in them lay, did betray the common wealth, and by their neutrality ſhewed that they favoured the cauſe of the offenders, ſeeing they would not help to bring them to condigne puniſhment. Beſides, they by their example taught others to contemn publick edicts, & ſo did weaken the authority of the common-wealth, and introduce a pernicious anarchie.

V. 6. For Benjamin their brother] All the Iſraelites were brethren, being all in covenant with God their heavenly Father, all deſcended from Iſrael their naturall father, and all called after his name.

There is one tribe cut off] i. e. In danger to be cut off, if ſome preſent courſe be not taken to preſerve it. Others read, Should we this day cut off a tribe of Iſrael?

V. 7. wives for them that remain] That is, the ſix hundred, ch. 20. 47. that ſo by them the tribe may be preſerved from periſhing.

V. 8. from Jabeſh gilead] A City beyond Iordan, in the tribe of Manaſſeh, neer unto the lake Geneſareth. It was afterwards beſieged by the Ammonites, and reſcued by Saul, 1 Sam.11.1,2.

V. 10. with the women and children] They had a juſt cauſe, but ſpoiled it in the handling, doing execution in a moſt cruel and unjuſt manner upon the women and innocent children. For they were not ſummoned to this ſervice, nor was it ſo much as expected from them that they ſhould come to the aſſembly, having no abilities to aſſiſt in the cauſe; and yet theſe innocents muſt fare no better then the offenders. Neither was this outrage committed in the heat of war, but when they found no reſiſtance, and after they had lately offended in the ſame kind againſt the Benjamites, yea, and that in the very time when they ſaw their ſin, and mourned for it. Neither will this excuſe their bloody fact, that the Midianitiſh women were ſlain by Moſes command as well as the men, ſeeing they were no leſſe guilty than theſe of that ſin, which was the cauſe of the war, Num. 31. 16. Neither were they, as execrable, devoted to the deſtruction, like Iericho and the inhabitants of it; for then they could not lawfully have reſerved the four hundred virgins to be wives for the Benjamites.

V. 11. Ye ſhall utterly deſtroy every male] Leſt, as ſome conceive when they came to age, they ſhould revenge the death of their parents: For which me thinks there was but little cauſe of fear, ſeeing it was not likely that the children of one City ſhould take revenge of the whole nation, whoſe common cauſe this was. Therefore, for ought I know, this may go in among the other acts of their unjuſtice and cruelty: Ezek. 18.20. Neither will it excuſe their fact, that Moſes commanded the like execution to be done upon the male children of the Midianites, ſeeing they were profeſſed enemies to Gods people, and therefore he thought it juſt and fit to abate and weaken their ſtrength by cutting off their poſterity, Numb 31.17.

and every woman that hath lien by man] Heb. knoweth the lying by man. Reſerving onely virgins for the Benjamites.

V. 12. four hundred young virgins] Heb. young women virgins. Which were marriageable.

brought them unto the camp] i. e. Having killed all the other women that had lien by man, and (it is likely) with them many other virgins which were in that City beſides theſe four hundred:

to Shiloh, which is in the land of Canaan] For Iabeſh-Gilead, lying beyond Iordan, properly was not in the land of Canaan, which did lye within it.

V. 14. and they gave them wives——of the women of Jabeſh-gilead] Suppoſing that herein they violated not their oath, becauſe they gave them not their own daughters.

and yet ſo they ſufficed them not] Heb. found they nothing for them. i. e. They were not enough to fit the number of the Benjamites, and ſo to ſatisfie their deſire. The like phraſe is uſed Numb.11.23. Joſh.17.16.

V. 15. And the people repented them for Benjamin] Both becauſe they had in the heat of war ſlain their brethren with ſo great a ſlaughter; & alſo more eſpecially, becauſe they had killed the women, and knew not how to furniſh the Benjamites that remained with wives, in regard of the oath wherewith they had bound themſelves, v.1,18.

becauſe that the Lord hath made a breach] i.e. Becauſe he had ſo ordered it by his providence, that for the juſt puniſhment of their ſin ſuch a fearful deſtruction ſhould be brought upon them by the hands of the other tribes, as the executioners of his righteous judgments, ſo that the body of their ſtate had received a dangerous maim by having one of its members very neer cut off from it.

V. 16. for wives for them that remain] i. e. The two hundred Benjamites which yet have not wives provided for them

V. 17. There muſt be an inheritance for them that be eſcaped of Benjamin] i e. Benjamin muſt be preſerved to have the twelfth portion in the inheritance of Jacob, in the time of Joſhua allotted unto them, ſeeing it is unlawful to alienate any part thereof to another tribe. And therefore it being ſo large, and they ſo few in number, there is the more need that all of them have wives to multiply their tribe, that they may people their inheritance the ſooner.

V. 18. Howbeit we may not give them wives of our daughters: for the children of Iſrael have ſworn] It was a raſh and unlawfull oath, and could not bind to that which was evill; onely it was a bond to a blind and ſuperſtitious conſcience. For they muſt either give them wives, or they muſt marry ſtrangers, which was expreſly contrary to Gods law, unleſſe they became Proſelytes, or elſe the tribe muſt neceſſarily be extirpated for want of poſterity.

ſaying, Curſed be he] i. e. They backed their oath with a bitter imprecation or execration, wiſhing ſome great miſchief to befall him that did break it.

that giveth a wife to Benjamin] i. e. At this time, or to theſe men. For they intended not their oath ſhould be perpetuall & oblige poſterity, but themſelves onely.

V. 19. Behold, there is a feaſt of the Lord in Shiloh] What this feaſt was expoſitors diverſly conjecture. Some think it was a civil or town-feaſt kept yearly at Shiloh, and the rather, becauſe they uſed, as a part of the ſolemnity of it, dancing, piping, or whiſtling, as the word may indifferently ſignifie, 1 King.1.40. Pſal.87.7. Others very probably think that it was a religious feaſt, becauſe it is called a feaſt of the Lord, and was alſo kept at Shiloh, where the Tabernacle now was placed; and that it was moſt likely to be the feaſt of Tabernacles. And they conceive, it could not be the feaſt of Paſſeover, becauſe that was in the beginning of the Spring, before their vines bore leaves, or yeelded any conveniency for theſe lyers in wait to hide themſelves behind them in the vine-yards. But why might not vines bee leaved at that time, as well as corn bee ripe? See on Ioſh. 5. 11. Lev.23. 10,15. Deut.16.9. Ruth.1.22. 1 Sam.6.13. Whatſoever feaſt of the Lord it was, they ſuppoſe that it was much abuſed and profaned, ſeeing they ſpent the time of ſolemnizing it in dancing and revelling, which ſhould rather have been imployed in hearing the word, prayer, offering of ſacrifices, and ſuch like religious exerciſes. But ſeeing charity binds us to take things which are doubtfull in the beſt ſenſe, and ſeeing dancing and muſick were in the times under the law uſed as a part of their feſtivall ſolemnities, to expreſſe their joy in praiſing of God for his ſpecial favours, as we ſee in the examples of Miriam, Deborah, Barak, and David, I ſee no reaſon why we ſhould not judge this dancing and muſick here mentioned to have been of this nature, a religious act, and religiouſly performed in due time and place, and ſo not hindring Gods publick ſervice in the Sanctuarie. And to this I rather incline, becauſe it is noted that this dancing was ſober and modeſt, acted onely by the Virgins among themſelves, and not, like the mixt dancing of our dayes, between men and women, which in all ages of the Church hath been cenſured and condemned as wanton and laſcivious. See ch.11.34. Exod.15.20. 1 Sam.18.26. and 2 Sam.6.14.

V. 21. and catch you every man his wife] They were not allowed to take any more than every man his wife. Which ſheweth that though polygamy was practiſed by ſome, yet it was not publickely approved in thoſe times: And yet there was then more than ordinary cauſe for the allowing of it to theſe Benjamites, to increaſe and multiply their tribe now reduced to ſuch a ſmall number, to build up their cities now ruined, and to repleniſh their inheritances now almoſt lying waſte and deſtitute of inhabitants. Now whereas the Elders in a common counſell do not allow this rape at the Benjamites ſuit, but plot and contrive it for them, this ſheweth (if at leaſt they had not ſome ſpecial diſpenſation from God, in reſpect of the preſent neceſſity, to give this counſel and direction) the great ignorance and ſuperſtition of thoſe times, in that they diſpenſed rather with the violent rape of wives without conſent either of parents or parties, than they would give them their daughters, and thereby violate a raſh and unlawfull oath: Though indeed they did not hereby make themſelves leſſe guilty and faulty, but added to their perjury the ſin of rape, fraud and deceit, ſeeing they might much better have given their daughters, acknowledging their ſin in making a raſh oath, and repenting of it, then under the priviledge of their power and authority have appointed them to take them themſelves. But all this they did to ſilence the cry of a ſuperſtitious conſcience, which uſually is ſooner ſatisfied by idle conceits of mens own brains then by the evidence of truth and right reaſon.

V. 22. Be favourable unto them] Or, gratifie us in them.

for our ſakes] i. e. Out of the love that you bear unto us your brethren, that you may free us from that faultineſſe and guilt which otherwiſe will lye upon us, ſeeing we have brought this neceſſity upon them, by deſtroying their women, wives, and virgins, and not reſerving a ſufficient number for them in the war againſt Jabeſh-gilead.

For ye did not give unto them at this time] i. e. You did not voluntarily give your daughters unto them, but they by force have taken them away without your knowledge or conſent, yea againſt your wils; and therefore you are free from the breach of your oath: And ſo indeed they were. But they were not innocent who uſed this plea, ſeeing they had contrived and appointed this rape. But this they conceal, which would but have made them odious to the parents of the virgins, and ſo leſſe able to ſatisfie and appeaſe them.

V. 24. And the children of Iſrael departed thence at that time, every man to his tribe, &c.] i.e. They went in troops to the tribe of which they were; and being come thither they parted company and went ſeverally to their families from which they were deſcended, and then particularly every man to his own houſe.

V. 25. In thoſe dayes there was no King in Iſrael] Theſe words have already been often inſerted in theſe hiſtories, ch.17.6. & 18.1. & 19.1. and are here placed for the cloſe of all, to ſhew how great a bleſſing Kings and Governours are unto a nation, ſeeing under an Anarchie nothing ſpringeth and thriveth but Idolatrie and Superſtition and all outragious luſts and villanies.

ANNOTATIONS
On the Book of RUTH.

The ARGUMENT.

*THis Scripture is onely an appendix and addition to the Book of Judges, conteining a ſtorie of things that happened in their dayes, ch.*1.1. And it is intituled The Book of RUTH, becauſe ſhe is the chief ſubject thereof. The main ſcope at which it aimeth is to continue the Genealogie of our Saviour from Pharez to David, and to ſhew that Chriſt, who deſcended from Boaz a Jew and Ruth a Moabiteſs, ſhould bring Salvation to all Nations, and that there ſhould be no difference or reſpect of perſons, but in every Nation he that feareth God and worketh righteouſneſſe ſhould be accepted of him, *Act.*10.34,35. In this Hiſtorie are ſet down many remarkable paſſages of Gods providence which ſerved to bring about the match betwixt Boaz and Ruth. Firſt, a Famine in the land of Iſrael enforceth Elimilech with his familie to flee for ſuſtenance into the land of Moab; There, after his deceaſe, his two ſons, Mahlon and Chilion, take unto them wives of the daughters of Moab. There they both die childleſs; and Naomi their mother hearing that God had viſited his people with plenty, reſolveth to return back into her own Countrey; and Ruth, the widow of Mahlon, who could not be perſwaded to leave her, as dearly loving both her Perſon and Religion, accompanieth her unto Beth-lehem. There the mother and daughter live in a poor condition: For to relieve their wants, Ruth is fain to glean after the reapers. She not knowing what field to make choice of occaſion, occaſion is by Gods providence directed to follow Boaz his ſervants: Upon which Boaz taking notice of her perſon, her ſingular vertue, and pious love towards her mother-in-law, groweth by degrees into further acquaintance; till at laſt, concluding the match, they were married together, and bleſſed with a ſon called Obed, who was one of the Progenitors of JESUS CHRIST, Matth. 1.5. Thus through Gods wiſe providence Ruths poverty was a ſtep and paſſage not onely to her marriage with rich Boaz, but alſo to her becoming a great Grandmother to the Saviour of the world; even as formerly Joſeph by his ſlavery and impriſonment became Governour of Ægypt and a preſerver of his Father and all his family.

CHAP. I.

Verſ. 1. IN the dayes when the Judges ruled] Heb. in the dayes of judging judgment] Of theſe Judges ſee the Preface before the book of Judges, and on Judg.2.16. and 9. 1. In which of the Judges dayes this ſtorie was acted, it is uncertain. Some of the learned comparing the end of this book with Matth. 1.5. do probably conjecture that the things here related were done in the dayes of Deborah and Barak. Others refer them to the time of Eli; others, more probably, to the dayes of Gideon, when there was a great famine in the land by reaſon of the oppreſſion of the Midianites, who by their in-roads ſpoiled all the Country. The Jews & ſome others conceive this Boaz and Ibzan, Judg 12. 8. were both one. But ſeeing there is ſo great variety of opinions, and no ſure ground for any of them; it is beſt to be ſilent when the Holy Ghoſt ſpeaketh not, and to ſtrike ſails and caſt anchor when the ſpirit bloweth not, leſt by the contrary blaſts of mens conceits we bee driven upon the rocks of errour.

a famine in the land] i. e. In Canaan. See Judg.6.4,6.

Bethlehem Judah] See on Judg.17.7. The name ſignifieth the houſe of bread, and was given to this City in reſpect of the great plenty of food that was in it by reaſon of the fertility of the country round about. And yet when it pleaſed God to puniſh the ſins of the people, hee eaſily brought a famine into this houſe of bread. See Deut. 28. 23, 24. Pſal 107.34.

to ſojourn in the Country of Moab] i. e. To live there for a time as ſtrangers, there being plenty of bread to relieve himſelf and his family. Moab lieth eaſtward from Canaan beyond Jordan, and is much champion and full of plains.

V. 2. And the name of the man [Or, of this man] was Elimelech] Signifying, God my King.

Naomi] That is, Sweet, or pleaſant; or, My ſweet, or pleaſant.

Ephrathites of Bethlehem-Judah] i. e. Born at Bethlehem-Judah, which formerly was called Ephrath, as was alſo the country adjoyning to it, Gen.34.16,19. Or, in the region of Ephrath, in which Bethlehem was ſituate. So Mic.5.2. Matth.2.6. Bethlehem is added to diſtinguiſh thoſe of the tribe of Ephraim, who were likewiſe called Ephrathites, 1 Kings 11.26. See on Pſal.132.6. Bethlehem is called Ephratah, ch.4.11.

V. 3. Naomies husband dyed, and ſhe was left] To wit, a Widow, in a ſtrange and heatheniſh country. This grievous affliction it pleaſed God to lay upon her to exerciſe her faith and patience.

V. 4. Orphah] Chilions wife.

Ruth] The wife of Mahlon, chap.4.10. Some think theſe Iſraelites ſinned in marrying wives of an idolatrous nation, Ezr.9.1. Neh.13.23. But it was lawfull to marry ſuch, if converted to the true religion, as it may be theſe were, at leaſt Ruth, v.16. and ch.2.12. Or if they were not proſelytes before their marriage, yet haply there might bee good hopes they would become ſo afterwards. However, theſe unequall matches are in ſome ſort excuſable, ſeeing Mahlon and Chilion might bee neceſſitated to marry daughters of Moab, there being perhaps none of their own nation in that countrey, in which they had now lived for a long time, and knew not how much longer they ſhould continue. But this came to paſſe by Gods ſpeciall providence, who would have Ruth the Moabiteſs, and Rahab the Canaanitiſh harlot, and inceſtuous Tamar, and adulterous Bath-ſheba to typifie that Chriſt, who ſhould deſcend of them, ſhould bee the Saviour of Gentile as well as of the Jew, and that his blood ſhould waſh away al ſins, even thoſe of the deepeſt die, Iſa.1.18.

V. 5. and the woman was left of her two ſons and her husband] i. e. In a moſt deſolate and diſconſolate condition, bereft of her chiefeſt and choiceſt friends, and ſo left (as we ſay) to the wide world. In all which afflictions God ſupported her, and ſet her as a pattern of faith and patience to ſucceeding ages.

V. 6. how that the Lord had viſited his people] i. e. In mercy and bounty had looked upon them in their penury and want, and had ſent again plenty into the land. This phraſe is uſed to ſignifie Gods fulfilling his Word, either in his promiſes of good, or threatnings of evill. See Gen.21.1. Luk.1.68. Job.35.15. Jer.14.10.

in giving them bread] i e. Neceſſary food; and had ceaſed the famine.

V. 7. and they went to the way on return] i. e. Naomi accompanied with her two daughters-in-law. For ſhe onely could be ſaid to return who had formerly dwelt in Judah, and not they who had never been there before. So v.6. and 10. and ch.2.6.

V. 8. Go, return each to her mothers houſe] This ſhe might ſpeak either ſeriouſly, becauſe ſhe out of her love towards them was loth to bring them into an afflicted condition, by living with her who was now brought to extream poverty, or becauſe ſhe would try the truth and conſtancy of their affection towards her. And ſhe bids them return to their mothers houſes, either becauſe their fathers were dead, or becauſe the mothers had a more ſpecial intereſt in reſpect of habitation or tender affection, than the fathers: Or ſhe ſpeaketh comparatively, the more ſtrongly to perſwade them; q d. Yee have better reaſon to return to your own mothers than to go on with me to a place were you are but ſtrangers, who am onely a mother-in-law, linked unto you by the bond not of bloud but of alliance, which is now broken off and diſſolved by the death of your husbands.

as yee have dealt with the dead] i. e. With your two husbands, my ſons, whilſt they and you lived together.

V. 9. that you may find reſt, &c.] i. e. A ſetled abode, with all comfort and content, in the houſe of thoſe who are to be your husbands. So ch.3.1.

Then ſhe kiſſed them] An uſuall ceremony at the parting of friends, both in thoſe dayes, and in ours. See Gen.29.11. and on 1 Sam.10.1.

V. 10. Surely we will return with thee] i. e. In thy returning to thy people we will accompany thee, and fare with them as thou fareſt. See on v.7.

V. 11. Are there any more ſons in my womb, that they may be your husbands?] According to the law, Deut.25.5,6. With which it ſeemeth Ruth and Orpah were made acquainted, either by Naomi, or by their husbands. See Gen.38 11,14. Mat.22.26.

V. 12. Turn again, my daughters] i. e. You who were my ſons wives, and ſo my daughters-in-law, but as neer and dear unto me, in reſpect of my tender affection and your own worth and deſerts, as if you were my own naturall daughters.

if I ſhould have an husband] Or, if I were with an husband.

V. 13. would ye tarry for them] Heb. hope. Where the interrogation hath the force of a ſtrong denial, q.d. Certainly you would not hope, or ſtay for them to be your husbands, when they were grown to mature age.

for it grieveth me much for your ſakes] i. e. Your departure from me is more grievous to me then to your ſelves. Heb. is much more bitter to me than unto you, being out of hope of having the comfort of an husband or children, as you may. Or, I am more grieved for theſe afflictions that have befallen us for your ſakes then for mine own, becauſe I am better acquainted with them by reaſon of my age and experience, and ſo more able to bear them than you. Or, I have much bitterneſſe, becauſe I have this heavy yet neceſſary cauſe of parting with you, whom I ſo love, and who ſo love me.

that the hand of the Lord is gone out againſt me] i. e. That God hath inflicted on me this ſharp correction; to whoſe pleaſure neverthleſſe I do willingly ſubmit, as you alſo ought to do.

V. 14. and Orpah kiſſed her mother] Taking a finall farewell of her. See on Gen.31.55.

but Ruth clave unto her] i. e. Would by no means be perſwaded to leave her, and return with her ſiſter.

V. 15. her gods] i. e. Chemoſh, and the Moabitiſh Idols whom ſhe ſerved. See Judg.11.24.

return thou after thy ſiſter in law] Though no doubt Naomi was much affected and troubled to think of the miſeries unto which Ruth would be expoſed by living with her, a poor deſolate widow, yet it cannot reaſonably be imagined, that being a vertuous and religious matrone, ſhe ſhould ſo far forget her ſelf, as cordially to perſwade her dear daughter in law, piouſly devoted to the ſervice of the onely true God, to return into her idolatrous Countrey, and there to ſerve Idols, or at leaſt expoſe her ſelf to the danger of being tainted with idolatry, and contrary to Moſes choice, to neglect the great recompenſe of that reward in heaven, that ſhe might ſhun afflictions with the people of God, and imbrace this preſent world and the pleaſures of ſin, which laſt but for a ſeaſon, Heb.11.25. And therefore no queſtion ſhe ſpeaketh this, not with an intention to perſwade her to follow Orpahs example, (yea rather ſhe makes it odious unto her, by telling her that ſhe was gone back to her idolatrous people, and to worſhip their gods) but ſhe doth it to try her faith, and her love to the true religion, and alſo to her ſelf. So Ioſh. 24. 19. 2 Kings 2. 2. Luke 24.28.

V. 16. Intreat me not to leave thee] Or, Be not againſt me. Heb. Do not croſs, and in an hoſtile manner oppoſe me. i. e. Ceaſe any further to diſſwade me from going with thee. So this phraſe is uſed 1 Sam.22. 17. 2 Sam.1.15. Exod.5.3.

Thy people ſhall be my people, and thy God my God] Here ſhe ſheweth her true converſion from idolatry to the worſhip of the true God, and from ſociety with idolaters to the communion of Gods people. And herein ſhe was a type of the calling of the Gentiles.

V. 17. the Lord do alſo to me, and more ſo] This was a form of an oath commonly uſed in thoſe dayes, and long after, both among Gods people, and heathens alſo, 1 Sam.3.17. & 25.22. 2 Sam. 3. 9, 35. 1 King.2.23. and 19.2. by which they imprecated ſome great evill to befall them, if they did otherwiſe then they ſaid: The which evill is ſuppreſſed & kept to themſelves, either becauſe out of fear they were loth ſo much as to name it, or elſe to Gods juſt judgment, to be inflicted as he pleaſed. q. d. The Lords thus and thus puniſh me, yea, multiply his plagues and judgments upon me, according to my demerits, as himſelf pleaſeth, if I intend otherwiſe then I ſay and profeſſe.

if ought but death part thee & me] Or, certainly death only ſhal part us.

V. 18. ſhe was ſtedfaſtly minded] Heb ſtrengthened her ſelf.

V. 19. that all the City was moved about them] When they heard & ſaw her great affliction, how that whereas ſhe went out from them in good eſtate, accompanied with her husband and two ſons, ſhe was now returned in a poor condition, without husband or childe, having onely a young diſtreſſed widow hanging upon her.

and they ſaid, Is this Naomi] i. e. When all flocked about her to gaze upon her, as taking pity and compaſſion on her miſery, they who had formerly known her in a more proſperous condition, with great wonderment cried out, the women eſpecially (for the word here uſed is of the fœminine gender) Is this Naomi? q. d. Could one think, that had known her in her proſperity, that this poor creature, whom we now behold, were the ſame woman?

V. 20. Call me not Naomi] See on v.2.

call me Marah] That is, bitter.

for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me] To wit, in depriving me of my husband and my two ſons, & bringing me into this poor and afflicted condition. This ſhe doth ſpeak (as we may probably think, in reſpect of her piety and patience) not in a way of murmuring againſt

God (though Gods deareſt children in their extream afflictions too often break out into impatiency and paſſion, as we ſee in Jobs example) but rather as one ſenſible of Gods heavy hand lying upon her, and bemoaning her ſelf in this ſad condition.

V. 21. I went out full, and the Lord hath brought me home again empty] i.e. When I left my own Countrey, where I could not with conveniencie continue by reaſon of the great famine, I was in a full and deſirable condition, having an husband, two ſons, and ſufficient means to maintain me in a ſtrange Country, where there was plenty to be had for my money: but now at my returning home I am deprived of all theſe comforts, and expoſed to want and miſery.

Why then call ye me Naomi] The interrogation hath in it the force of a ſtrong diſſwaſion, q. d. Call me not (I beſeech you) by a name ſo unſuitable to my condition, which doth but put me in mind of my former happineſſe and preſent miſery, and ſo tendeth to aggravate my grief.

ſeeing the Lord hath teſtified againſt me] i.e. Declared his juſt diſpleaſure, and convinced me of my ſins, by laying on me theſe ſharp afflictions. And indeed afflictions are the ordinary evidences of Gods diſpleaſure for the ſins of his people, Job.10.17. and 13.16. and 16.8. Mal. 3.5. Jam.5 3. This phraſe is metaphoricall, borrowed from adverſaries in ſuits of Law, who impleading the defendant or guilty perſon, do bring witneſſes to teſtifie againſt him, that he may be condemned and brought to puniſhment. See Deut.19.16.

V. 22. So Naomi returned, and Ruth] See v.7,10.

V. 2. glean ears of corn] Which by the law was permitted to the poor and ſtrangers: and Ruth had both theſe qualifications. See on v.8.

in whoſe ſight I ſhall find grace] i.e. Who will ſo much favour me as to give me leave. Whereby ſhe expreſſeth her modeſty and humility, in that ſhe would not make uſe of that benefit allowed by the law without the leave and liking of the owners. So v.7. If at leaſt the ſame law which gave liberty to the poor to enjoy this benefit, did not allow the owners to make choice of what poor they pleaſed, and ſo conſequently did require of the poor, that they ſhould not gather or glean unleſſe firſt they obtained the good will of the owner.

V. 3. And her hap was to light on a part of the field belonging unto Boaz] Heb. her hap happened. i.e. Shee not purpoſely intending it, as beeing utterly ignorant that it belonged to Boaz; yet it happened that ſhe light upon that field rather than any other, and making ſuit to the overſeer of the reapers that ſhe might glean after them, obtained her deſire, v. 7. But though this were hap in reſpect of Ruth, yet it was thus ordered by the ſecret working of Gods providence to make way for her marriage to Boaz. So Luk.10.31.

V. 4. And behold] An adverb of attention, ſtirring men up to obſerve carefully ſome natable paſſage of Gods providence.

The Lord be with you] i.e. Bleſſe and proſper you and your labour. This form of ſalutation was uſuall among the Jews: Pſal.129.8. Luk. 1.28. 2 John 10. 2 Kings 4.29.

The Lord bleſſe thee] i.e. Multiply his bleſſings upon thee.

V. 5. Whoſe damſel is this?] Obſerving by her habit that ſhe was not a virgin and an ordinary inhabitant of the City, but a ſtranger who either was or had been married, he demandeth what ſhe was, and to whom ſhe belonged.

V. 6. It is the Moabitiſh damſel that came back with Naomi] i.e. Who accompanied Naomi in her return. So ch.1.7.

V. 7. And ſhe ſaid] Namely to me. i.e. Shee did not boldly preſſe upon us, but firſt did modeſtly ask my leave.

continued even from the morning untill now] i.e. She hath ever ſince ſhe came diligently followed her buſineſſe, till the extream heat of the day enforced her, together with the reſt of the labourers, to retire her ſelf.

that ſhe tarried a little in the houſe] i.e. In a tent appointed either for ſhade and ſhelter from the heat, or for a little reſt and repoſe, the better to fit the labourers to take pains the remainder of the day.

V. 8. Heareſt thou not my daughter?] This is a kind interrogation ſweetned with loving humanity; q. d. I know thou heareſt me, but I deſire thou ſhouldſt heedfully obſerve my words, and make uſe of that kind offer which I ſhall tender unto thee, Gen.13.9.

Go not to glean in another field] i.e. Take no further care, nor trouble thy ſelf to find out another field to glean in, but continue here ſtill to the end of harveſt.

but abide here faſt by my maidens] Both for company ſake & protection, as being of thy own ſex, and under the guard of the men that labour with them in the field. Now theſe maidens were not gleaners, as Ruth was, but either reapers, or ſuch as gathered up the corn and bound it into ſheaves, ſeeing the gleanings belonged not to the owners, but to the poor and ſtrangers, Lev.19.9. and 23.22. Deut.24.19.

V. 9 have I not charged the young men] i.e. I have certainly and earneſtly charged them. See Judg.4.6.

that they ſhall not touch thee] i.e. Not do thee any wrong in word or deed: Pſal.105.15.

when thou art athirſt, go unto the veſſels] That were filled with water for the uſe of the reapers. This was a great kindneſſe in that dry country, where the weather was hot, eſpecially in time of harveſt, water very ſcant, and they thirſty with heat and labour. See Gen.26.18,19.

V. 10. Then ſhe fell on her face, and bowed her ſelf to the ground] Or, towards the ground, as the Hebrew word properly ſignifieth. Theſe kind of civill adorations are often mentioned in the Scriptures: Gen.18. 2. and 33.3. and 42.6. 1 Sam.25.23.

Why have I found grace in thy eyes!] This is not ſo much an interrogation as an admiration; q. d. What a wonder is this, that I being a ſtranger ſhould find ſo much favour from thee! Or, what cauſe hath moved thee, thus to reſpect me who have deſerved no reſpect at thy hand!

that thou ſhouldſt take knowledg of me] i.e. Reſpect and favour me, as if I were one of thy familiar acquaintance, friends or kindred.

V. 11. all that thou haſt done unto thy mother in law] How faithfull and loving thou haſt been to her, and how piouſly thou haſt demeaned thy ſelf towards her in her old age.

V. 12. The Lord recompenſe thy work] i.e. Thy labour of love, and all the care and pains thou haſt taken in miniſtring unto her.

and a full reward be given thee] i.e. Let God bountifully, like himſelf, reward out of his free grace thy love and faith, which moved thee to leave thy country and all thy friends, and to truſt in him; of whoſe bounty all my kindneſſe is but a ſmall taſte. See Gen.15.2.

under whoſe wings thou art come to truſt] Or, becauſe thou haſt come hither to ſhade thy ſelf under his wings. That is, becauſe leaving thy own idolatrous country, and adjoyning thy ſelf to Gods Church and people, thou haſt truſted onely in his providence, and committed my ſelf to live under his protection, as the poor, ſilly and ſhiftleſſe chicken under the wings of its dam, by which it is ſheltred and cheriſhed. So Pſal.17.8. & 36.7. & 57.1. & 61.4. & 91.4. Matth.23.37. Or this phraſe may allude to the Cherubins, which covered the Ark with their wings.

V. 13. Let me find favour in thy ſight] i.e. Though I be unworthy of the leaſt reſpect which thou haſt already ſhewed me, yet ſeeing thou art pleaſed to extend it out of thy meer grace and goodneſſe, continue, I humbly intreat thee, this thy favour ſtill unto me: For thou haſt comforted me in my poor and afflicted condition, and haſt ſpoken friendly unto, or, to the heart of, thine hand-maid, i.e. courteouſly and kindly. So Gen.34.3. Judg.19.3.

though I be not like unto one of thy hand-maidens] i.e. More mean and leſſe worthy to be reſpected than they. See the like modeſty 1 Sam. 25.41.

V. 14. And Boaz ſaid unto her, At meal-time come thou hither, &c.] Or, And at meal-time Boaz ſaid unto her, come thou hither, &c. His obſervance of her vertues increaſeth his love; and his love, her allowance. Before v.9. he giveth her leave to drink out of his veſſels; and now, alſo to eat of his food and proviſions.

and dip thy morſell in the vineger] This was a kind of ſauce made with vineger, wherewith in thoſe countries they that were afflicted with heat, were much refreſhed, Plin. lib.23. cap.1.

and ſhe ſate beſides the reapers] Out of modeſty & humility ſhe did not take to the full the benefit which Boaz offered, namely, to eat with the reapers at their table what ſhe pleaſed, and to dip her bread in their ſauce, but ſate beſides them, to receive what they could ſpare, or were pleaſed to give her, and ſo made her ſelf leſſe than their fellow, whom God afterwards advanced to be their miſtreſſe. So Abigail, 1 Sam.25.41. Luk.1.52.

and he reached her parched corn] i.e. Obſerving her modeſty, he took care to provide for her himſelf with his own hands, and reached unto her parched corn, an uſuall food in thoſe times and Countries, 1 Sam.17.17. and 25.18. 2 Sam.17.28 and ſhe did eat and was ſufficed, and left] Which ſhe reſerved and carried home, v. 18. This is added to imply Boaz his bounty in providing ſo liberally for his ſervants and labourers, and Ruths care and love, which in her own fulneſſe made her think of ſupplying her poor mothers wants.

V. 15. Let her glean even among the ſheaves, and reproach her not] Heb. ſhame her not. i.e. do not forbid or rebuke her (and ſo make her aſhamed, being a modeſt woman) though ſhe gather among the ſheaves.

V. 16. and leave that ſhe may glean them] i.e. That ſo ſhe may live by her honeſt labour, and be encouraged to take pains when ſhe finds the benefit of it.

V. 17. about an Ephah of barley] i.e. Almoſt one of our buſhels. See Exod.16.36.

V. 18. and ſhe brought forth] Out of her ſcrip or bag, as the Chaldee hath it.

V. 19. that did take knowledg of thee] See v.14.

V. 20. to the living] i.e. To me and thee.

and to the dead] i.e. To my husband and thine; to both which he hath ſhewed kindneſſe, by honouring their memory, and doing good to us for their ſakes, in reſpect of that kindred that was between him and them.

The man is neer of kin unto us, one of our next kinſmen] Heb. one that hath right to redeem. According to the law, the right to redeem lands alienated, ſold or morgaged, and alſo perſons who had ſold themſelves, belonged to the neereſt kinſman, Lev.25.25,47,48. who alſo ought to marry the widow of his kinſman that had died without iſſue, and raiſe up ſeed unto him that might enjoy his inheritance and continue his name in Iſrael, Deut.25.5,6,7. Lev.25.25,26. Mar.12.19.

V. 21. He ſaid unto me alſo] q.d. He did not only for the preſent thus courteouſly entertain and uſe me, but alſo charged me that I ſhould continue with him to the end of harveſt, and go to no other.

V. 22. that they meet thee not in any other field] Or, fall upon thee. i.e. That others meeting thee in their fields do not uſe thee diſcourteouſly and abuſe thee, as being a ſtranger. Or, leſt ſome of Boaz his ſervants meeting thee in another field, and telling it to their maſter, he ſhould take it diſcourteouſly, that he having given thee a charge to glean in his field to the end of harveſt, thou ſhouldſt leave him, and go to others, and ſo reject his courteſie and kindneſſe.

CHAP. III.

Verſ. 1. S*Hall I not ſeek reſt for thee*] i. e. Shall I not do my beſt endeavour to provide thee a good husband, with whom thou maiſt live in peace and plenty, and no longer be expoſed to poverty, labour, grief, widowhood, and want of children, which diſquiet thy mind; ſeeing there is now ſuch a fair opportunity offered, if I do not let it ſlip? Surely I will not delay to do it, ſeeing Gods law, and my love to thee, and thine to me, bind me unto it.

V. 2. is not Boaz of our kindred?] i. e. Know aſſuredly that he is our neer kinſman. See on chap. 2. 20.

with whoſe maidens thou waſt] i. e. When thou didſt glean, ch. 2. 22, 23.

Behold, he winnoweth barley] i. e. Obſerve how God by his providence offereth unto thee a fair opportunity of accompliſhing thy deſire, by coming better acquainted with Boaz upon this occaſion, having a convenient time and fit place for it.

V. 3. Waſh thy ſelf therefore, and anoint thee] i. e. Make thy ſelf as amiable as thou canſt, that thou maiſt find favour in his ſight; and not only cleanſe thy skin from all ſpots with water, but anoint thy face with oyl, to make thy countenance more cheerfull, as was the manner of thoſe countries, Pſal. 104. 15. 2 Sam. 14. 2. Mat. 6. 17.

and put thy raiment upon thee] i. e. Thy beſt cloaths.

and get thee down to the floor] Their floors, as I conceive, were not in the open field, where themſelves and their corn ſhould be expoſed to all weathers; but in their barns. Here they had, as we alſo have, their floors for threſhing and winnowing; in theſe alſo they feaſted in time of harveſt, and afterwards laid them down to take their reſt, as they could beſt ſeverally fit themſelves with convenient places.

unto the man, untill, &c.] i. e. Till after his eating and drinking Boaz be gone to his lodging.

V. 4. and thou ſhalt go in, and uncover his feet] Or, lift up the cloaths that are on his feet.

and lay thee down] Naomi being a vertuous and good woman, her intention no doubt was good in this her counſel; and the thing ſhe laboured to effect was likewiſe lawfull and juſt, namely to have her daughter in law married to her husbands next kinſman, that he might raiſe up ſeed to her ſonne which might continue his name in Iſrael, and enjoy his inheritance; (See on ch. 2. 20.) But the means, at leaſt ſeemingly and under ſevere cenſure, were ſomewhat immodeſt, and not altogether free from ſcandall and the danger of ill report. Yet Naomi may thus far be excuſed, that knowing by much experience the piety & gravity of Boaz accompanied with old age, together with the ſobriety and chaſtity of her daughter in law, ſhe could find no reall cauſe to diſcourage her in this courſe, which ſhe thought would be moſt effectuall to draw on the match; ſeeing withall ſhe avoided as much as might be giving ſcandal to others, or raiſing an ill report upon themſelves, by uſing that privacie and ſecrecie which the place and the time of night afforded.

and he will tell thee what thou ſhalt do] q. d. I ſhall not need to give thee any further direction, for Boaz himſelf is ſo wiſe, honeſt and religious that he will inſtruct thee what courſe is to be taken for conſummating this marriage between you according to the law of God.

V. 5. And ſhe ſaid unto her] Ruth anſwered her mother, that ſhe would in all theſe things follow her counſell.

V. 7. And when Boaz had eaten and drunk] i. e. Liberally, according to their manner in the time of harveſt and vintage. Pſal. 4. 7. Iſai. 9. 3. and 16. 9, 10.

and his heart was merry] Heb. was made good. i. e. Frolick and cheerfull.

V. 8. turned himſelf] Or, took hold on; or, toſſed his body to and fro like one in fear.

V. 9. ſpread therefore thy skirt over thine handmaid] A proverbiall ſpeech, ſignifying the taking of one into protection, as the hen her chickens under her wings. q. d. Receive me into thy protection, by taking me to be thy wife, that according to Gods law thou maiſt do the duty of a kinſman, and raiſe ſeed to my deceaſed husband. See ch. 2. 12, Gen. 20. 16. Ezek. 16. 8. Deut. 22. 30. By which places it ſeemeth it was a cuſtome in thoſe dayes to uſe this ceremony of caſting the skirt of their garment over thoſe whom they received into protection, for thou art a neer kinſman] See ch. 2. 20.

V. 10. thou haſt ſhewed more kindeneſſe in the latter end] Heb. thou haſt made good thy latter kindeneſſe above the former. i. e. Thou ſhewedſt much love to thy deceaſed husband whileſt he lived with thee, but more ſince his death, in leaving thy native countrey and friends to accompany thy poor afflicted mother for his ſake, and induring much hardneſſe in living with her; yet thy preſent act of chaſt love exceedeth all the reſt, in preferring me an old man before young men, who are more ſuitable to thy age, as being more vigorous and perſonable; and that out of love to him that is gone, to preſerve unto him his name and inheritance in his poſterity.

in as much as thou followedſt not young men whether poor or rich] Neither here, nor in thy own Countrey; but haſt left Moab and come into Canaan, and being come, haſt not choſen a man of thine own age, but ſuch an one as may be fitteſt to preſerve thy husbands name in his own family. That Boaz was very antient at this time, See on chap. 4. 20.

V. 11. fear not] i. e. That thou ſhouldeſt fail of thy deſire and hope.

I will do to thee all that thou requireſt] i. e. As much as in me lyeth I will ſatisfie thy requeſt according to Gods law, in procuring for thee ſuch an husband and redeemer as it requireth. See chap. 2. 20.

all the City of my people] i. e. All the people in this City.

V. 12. howbeit there is a kinſman nearer then I] Who therefore ought by the law to be preferred before me, to marry thee and redeem the land.

V. 13. if he will perform unto thee the part of a kinſman] To wit, in taking thee to wife, and raiſing ſeed to him that is deceaſed, to preſerve his name and race. See ch. 2. 20.

V. 14. before one could know one another] i. e. Before break of day, whileſt it was ſo dark that one could not ſee anothers face.

Let it not be known that a woman came into the floor] To avoid ſcandall and an ill report, which he probably thought might be raiſed, if it were divulged. He was carefull to keep not only a good conſcience before God, but alſo a good name before men, Acts 24. 16. Rom. 12. 17. 2 Cor. 8. 21.

V. 15. Bring the vail] Or, ſheet, or, apron, or, ſafeguard.

Six meaſures of barley] Theſe he giveth her according to the honeſt and plain bounty of thoſe times; and withall, that Naomi might ſee ſhe had been at the floor as ſhe appointed her, and for a token of his love, and for a ſupply of their poverty.

V. 16. who art thou, my daughter] Though ſhe might diſcern by her ſtature, habit, voice, and burden, that ſhe was a young woman, and ſo called her daughter, yet being dark, ſhe could not cleerly and certainly ſee and know that ſhe was Ruth her daughter, and therefore demandeth of her, who ſhe was. Some think that though ſhe knew well enough who ſhe was, yet ſhe ſpeaketh theſe words as one aſtonied, when ſhe perceived by her coming back that Boaz had not taken her to wife.

V. 18. Sit ſtill, my daughter] Reſt in that which is already done, and as yet trouble thy ſelf no more in this matter, but quietly expect what iſſue God will give unto it. In the mean time abide with me in the houſe, that thou maiſt not be out of the way, but ready to attend upon all occaſions which ſhall be offered.

CHAP. IV.

Verſ. 1. T*Hen went Boaz up to the gate, and ſat him down*] The gate being uſed among the ancients for their aſſemblies, judicature and contracts, there Boaz ſat down, waiting for the neereſt kinſman, as the likelieſt place to ſee him, either when he was going out about his buſineſſe, or at his return home, & alſo that he might there have the aſſiſtance of the Elders of the City, to hear, examine and judge of the cauſe which he had now in hand. See on Joſh. 20. 4.

and behold, the kinſman of whom Boaz ſpake (namely to Ruth) came by] This is obſerved as a remarkable paſſage of Gods providence, that the man whom he waited for, came by in this very time when it was moſt ſeaſonable for the ſpeedy determining of the buſineſſe in hand.

Ho, ſuch an one] The Hebrews uſe here two words, Peloni, Almoni, which have no proper ſignification, but ſeem to note a perſon whoſe name they knew not, or had forgotten, as the Greeks ὦ δεῖνα, & as we uſe to ſay, Ho ſuch an one; or, Hear you, Sir. So 1 Sam. 21. 2. & 2 King. 6. 8. Not that Boaz did not know his kinsmans name, or did not call him by it, but the pen-man of this Scripture was pleaſed not to mention it, as being little to this purpoſe, or perhaps becauſe he thought the man not worthy to be named or remembred that would not continue the name of his deceaſed kinſman, by marrying his widow, and raiſing up ſeed unto him, as God had commanded, Deut. 25. 5, 6.

V. 2. And he took ten men of the Elders] That hearing the cauſe, they might be judges between them, and alſo witneſſes of their proceedings.

V. 3 Naomi—ſelleth a parcell of land which was our brother Elimelechs] This, it ſeemeth, was made over to Naomi as a dowrie or joynture for term of life, and then to deſcend unto Mahlon as his inheritance; and, he being dead, to come unto Ruth on the ſame conditions as unto Naomi, ſhe being Mahlons widow. This land was now upon ſale for the maintenance of them both, being in poverty: And the redeeming thereof belonged to the next kinſman, who had right unto it after the death of the widows; but ſo, as he was alſo to marry Ruth. But this Boaz concealeth, and ſoundeth his mind by this ambiguous ſpeech before he would ſpeak of the marriage, becauſe this would neceſſarily follow upon the other, ſeeing he was bound to accept or reject both, if he accepted or rejected either.

V. 4. I thought to advertiſe thee] Heb. I ſaid, I will reveal in thy ear] i. e. I reſolved with my ſelf to acquaint thee with it, and to render unto thee the firſt offer of redeeming the land, as being the neereſt kinſman, Lev. 25. 25, 26.

By it before the inhabitants] i. e. In a legal manner, that they may be witneſſes of it.

tell me, that I may know] To wit, what I have to do, and how to proceed, ſeeing after thee I am the next kinſman.

V. 5. What day thou buyeſt the field of the hand of Naomi, thou muſt buy it alſo of Ruth] To wit, becauſe they both have a right unto it, as being the widows of Elimelech and Mahlon, to whom the inheritance appertained whileſt they lived; and the ſame law which giveth right to the next kinſman to redeem the land, requireth alſo of him that he ſhould marry the widow of the deceaſed, and raiſe up ſeed to him, if he dyed childleſſe. *S*ee on ch. 2. 20. Of Day, ſee on Gen. 2. 4.

V. 6. And the kinſman ſaid, I cannot redeem it for my ſelf] i. e. I cannot do it without incurring thereby great inconvenience. For otherwiſe it was in his power to have done it, if he had pleaſed.

leaſt I marr mine own inheritance] For if he were a ſingle man, then if he ſhould marry Ruth, and have iſſue only one childe, then this bearing Mahlons name, and inheriting his land, he ſhould want an heir begotten by himſelf to bear his own name; which was Onans envious fear, Gen. 38. 9. or if he were a widower, (which is more probable) and had already divers children, and ſhould have likewiſe divers more by Ruth, who was a young woman, then he ſhould impair his inheritance for his former children, by having it divided among ſo many, eſpecially conſidering that Ruth was but a poor widow, and not able to bring any addition to his eſtate; whereas by marrying one that was rich, he might improve it to the great advantage of himſelf and all his poſterity. And thus with his carnal reaſonings, and for worldly ends, he diſpenſeth with his diſobedience to the expreſſe law of God, Deut. 25. 5, &c.

Redeem thou my right to thy ſelf] i. e. My right which I have as next kinſman I renounce and reſign unto thee.

V. 7. Now this was the manner in former times in Iſrael concerning redeeming] i. e. Theſe were the ceremonies uſed in redeeming, buying and ſelling, purchaſing and alienation of lands, to ratifie their bargains in a legal manner, which had ſome reſemblance to that law of redeeming mentioned Deut. 25. 8, 9. but with divers differences. For there, the widow refuſed by the next kinſman complained to the Elders of the wrong offered her; but here, Ruth maketh no ſuch complaint. There, ſhe ſpit in his face to his diſgrace; but here is no ſuch matter. There, the woman pulled off the mans ſhoe; but here, the man pulled off his own ſhoe himſelf, and gave it to his neighbour the redeemer; Whereby was ſignified, that whereas formerly he had right to go in and out upon that land, now he wholly diſclaimed that right, and would no longer tread upon it, but only by way of ſufferance from the owner, unto whom it was made over, Pſal. 60. 8. So that here the Ceremonies uſed did chiefly reſpect the alienation of the land, and thoſe that reſpected the perſon of Ruth were omitted or elſe tranſacted with much alteration from the firſt inſtitution. *S*ee on v. 8.

A man plucked off his ſhoe] i. e. Who did alienate any thing from himſelf.

and gave it to his neighbour] To wit, the redeemer, to whom it was alienated and yielded over.

and this was a teſtimony in Iſrael] i. e. Was entred upon record, that the redeemer ſhould ever hold his right to the thing redemed, & he that had yielded it over ſhould never again challenge it, at leaſt till the year of Jubilee.

V. 8. So he drew off his ſhoe] Here is no mention of the ceremony of was reproach which to be done to the kinſman for his refuſal of Ruth, to wit, ſpitting in his face, Deut. 25. 9. but, it ſeemeth, it was here either omitted or remitted, as being out of uſe, or becauſe Ruth was not preſent, having referred to Boaz the whole managing of the buſineſs.

V. 10. from the gate of his place] i. e. From the Citizens of his City Bethlehem, who meet in the gate to tranſact their civill affairs of Judicature and Contracts.

V. 11. The Lord make the woman that is come into thy houſe like Rachel and Leah] Who leaving their country, as now Ruth hath done, lived comfortably and lovingly together, & by bearing many children multiplyed Jacobs poſterity and the Church of God. Here Rachel is named before Leah, becauſe ſhe was Jacobs lawful wife for whom he had ſerved whereas the other was by Laban fraudulently thruſt upon him. See on Gen. 48. 20.

and do thou worthyly in Ephratah] Or, get thee riches, or, power. Or, make thee grow mighty and full of riches: Which in this marriage with Ruth thou haſt wholly neglected, that thou mighteſt yield obedience to the law of God. *S*o Pſalm 60. 12.

Here, and v. 17——22, is diſcoveerd what was the chief cauſe why the Holy Ghoſt would have this ſtory of Ruth written & preſerved in the Canon of holy *S*criptures, To wit, That the truth of Gods promiſe might appear concerning the Meſſiah, that he ſhould come forth out of the tribe of Judah, as was propheſied Gen. 49. 10. and that his deſcent according to the fleſh might be recorded from Judah unto David, as it was afterwards from David to Chriſt by the two Evangeliſts, Matth. 1. & Luk. 3.

Others underſtand it (and, I think, more probably) of Obed, which was the ſeed raiſed up to Mahlon, to continue his name and fame in Iſrael, and to redeem it from being buried in forgetfulneſs.

V. 17. And the women her neighbours gave it a name] i. e. Perſwaded the childs parents, Boaz and Ruth, to give it his name Obed, which ſignifieth ſerving, becauſe he was to do a double ſervice unto Naomi; unto whom therefore he is ſaid to be born: The one, to raiſe up the name of her ſon Mahlon deceaſed, and to cauſe it to live in him; ſeeing, though he was begotten by Boaz, yet he was to bear the name of Mahlons ſon; for which purpoſe he was raiſed up to him: The other, that he ſhould ſerve, i. e. help, comfort and cheriſh her in her old age, in hope whereof they deſired this name ſhould be given him. *S*ee v. 15. V. 19. Now theſe are the generations of Pharez] i. e. The poſterity that deſcended of him, according to their genealogie.

Pharez begat Hezron] 1 Chron. 2. 5, 10, &c. Matth. 13. &c.

V. 20. Salmon] Or, Salmah. Hee married Rahab the harlot, and of her begat Boaz, Matth. 1. 5. Now if we ſuppoſe ſhe were twenty years old at the taking of Jericho, and ſixty at the birth of Boaz, and referr this ſtory of Ruth (as many do) to the times of Deborah, Boaz muſt needs be above an hundred years old when he begat Obed. And from Obeds birth to the birth of David were above two hundred years more. See on 1 Chron. 2. 12.

V. 21. Boaz begat Obed] Though Obed was in ſome reſpect the ſon of Mahlon, being the ſeed raiſed unto him to continue his name in Iſrael and to enjoy his inheritance, yet in the Genealogies here elſewhere he is called the ſon of Boaz, becauſe in them is obſerved the natural deſcent that we might truly know the anceſtors of Chriſt, without any regard of this legal ſon-ſhip. which was ordained for the preſerving inheritances in the ſeveral tribes and families, and ſo for the good of the body politick.

ANNOTATIONS
On the firſt BOOK of SAMUEL,
Otherwiſe called
The firſt Book of the KINGS.

The ARGUMENT.

THis Book, and that which followeth, bear the name of SAMUEL, becauſe, as the Hebrews ſuppoſe, they were written by one of his diſciples, a ſon of the Prophets, who in honour of his Maſter called them by his name; or rather, becauſe Samuel was the ſubject, and (it is moſt likely) the pen-man too, of a good part, and that all the reſt (though not written by him, yet) treateth of the reign and acts of thoſe two Kings onely whom he by Gods appointment had anointed to rule the people of Iſrael. Theſe two Books alſo both by Greek and Latine Interpreters being joyned to the next are all commonly called The books of the Kings, becauſe in them is ſet down the ſtorie of the Kings of Iſrael from the firſt eſtabliſhment of that government amongſt them unto its laſt period. In this Book we have the Hiſtory of the two laſt Judges, Eli and Samuel, and of Saul the firſt King of Iſrael, with the ſtate of the Church and Common-wealth under their government. Concerning Eli we find, that, though himſelf were a godly man, yet (grace not going by inheritance) his two ſons were wicked, even in their office, and about the holy things, in which God chiefly will be honoured; Wherefore being highly diſpleaſed, he puniſhed them with untimely death, and their father with them, as acceſſary to their ſin, becauſe, being both a father and a Judg, he reſted in a mild reproof, and did not ſeverely puniſh them according to their demerits. After his death Samuel judged Iſrael, who before he was born, was devoted by his mother to Gods ſpeciall ſervice, being the ſon of her deſires, prayers and praiſes. He being an holy Prophet, purgeth the Church from Idolatry, reſtoreth Religion to its purity, proſpereth in all his undertakings, and in ſome Victories doth in part deliver Gods people out of the hands of their enemies. But his ſons, not walking in his waies, cauſe diſcontent, and occaſion the people to reject his Government, and to deſire a King: Wherewith the Lord being diſpleaſed, becauſe in Samuel his Deputy they rejected himſelf, their ſupream Lord and King, and would not ſtay the time when according to his promiſe he would ſet a King over them, he gave them (as the prophet ſpeaketh) a King in his wrath, even Saul, who at firſt, and at the beſt, was a notable Hypocrite, yet, for the firſt times of his Reign, uſed by God for the good of his Church, as an inſtrument of deliverance unto it, by obtaining ſome famous victories over his enemies. But when for his diſobedience he was by God rejected, and David deſigned to his place, then he ſhewed himſelf a wicked Rebel and bloody Tyrant, obſtinately reſiſting Gods revealed Will, holding ſtill the ſcepter by violence and ſtrong hand, raging againſt David with all ſubtilty and fury, and oftentimes attempting his death, notwithſtanding that he was in his own conſcience convinced of his innocency. And ſeing his malice could not reach to God himſelf, he extended it as far as he could, laying bloody hands upon his Prieſts. For becauſe the high Prieſt in his ſimplicity had relieved David, he cauſed him and all the reſt of the Prieſts, even eighty and five perſons, to be cruelly murdered, and not onely them, but alſo their wives, children, ſucklings, and even their oxen, aſſes and ſheep, with more then barbarous and beaſtly cruelty. Moreover, in this Book are related Davids grievous perſecutions, by Saul and his Courtly ſycophants and flatterers, by ſlanderers, falſe friends, and profeſſed enemies; God firſt humbling him hereby, before he would advance him to the Royall dignity, and laying as it were a deep foundation where he intended to raiſe a ſtatelie Building. In all which ſufferings David, aſſiſted with Gods Spirit, ſhewed ſuch Faith, Patience, Piety, Affiance in God, Humility, Conſtancy, Loyalty to his Prince and many other Graces, that he is made exemplary herein to all ſucceeding ages and perſons. Laſtly, in this ſtory is recorded how God executed his righteous judgement upon Saul and his wicked Courtiers and Servants, with many other of that ſinful Nation, by the ſword of the Philiſtines, and thereby made way for the accompliſhing of his promiſe to David concerning his reigning over Iſrael.

CHAP. I.

Verſ. 1. N*Ow there was a certain man of Ramathaim*] i. e. Of that Ramah which was divided into two cities, or two parts, as the Hebrew name of the dual number implieth, the which two patts were ſcituate upon two high hills, which being oppoſite, the inhabitants might behold the one from the other, and on which having watch-towers they might from them have a view and proſpect over all the Country adjoyning as the name Zophim ſeemeth to imply. See on Luke. 23. 50.

Zophim] i. e. Of the Zophites inhabiting the land of Zuph, ch. 9. 5. Which Country perhaps had its name from Zuph, which was Elkanahs progenitor, and is alſo called Zophai, 1 Chr. 6. 26. *S*ome conceive this City was called Zophim, becauſe here was a ſchool of the Prophets, which are often called Seers, Watchmen, &c. Jer. 6. 17. Ezek. 3. 17. Hoſ. 9. 8.

of Mount Ephraim] This is added to diſtinguiſh it from two other cities of this name, one in Benjamin, Ioſh. 18. 25. and another in Naphtali, Joſh. 19. 36. See on Hoſ. 5. 8.

an Ephrathite] Not in reſpect of his linage and kindred: for he was a Levite, deſcended from Kohath, unto whoſe family certain Cities in the tribe of Ephraim were allotted, Ioſh. 21. 20. and of the poſterity of Korah that arch-rebel, 1 Chr. 6. 22. to ſhew the free working of Gods grace, which cauſed Elkanah a godly parent, and the father of a moſt pious Prophet, to deſcend from Korah a wicked progenitor. But he is here called an Ephrathite, becauſe he had his birth, education and habitation in mount Ephraim; the Levites being by Gods good providence ſcattered throughout all the other tribes, that they might inſtruct Gods people in the true knowledge of him and his law. Of Ephrathite. See on Ruth 1. 2. 1 *S*am, 17. 12.

V. 2. And he had two wives] Not that Polygamie was allowed by Gods law; for God made but one woman for one man, that he might ſeek a godly ſeed, Mal.2.15. and therefore our Saviour ſaith that from the beginning it was not ſo, Matth.19.8. But God was pleaſed in the time of the law, when the Church was confined to that one nation of Iſrael, if not to tolerate this plurality of wives, yet at leaſt, for cauſes beſt known to himſelf, but now revealed to us, to wink at it as an humane frailty; of which Gods Saints and deareſt ſervants took no notice of as a ſin, being blinded and overborn by the long-continued cuſtome of thoſe times and countries. But at the coming of Chriſt, when the Church was to be inlarged, and the partition-wall to be broken down between Jews and Gentiles, this miſt and dark fog of ignorance was diſpelled by the clear Sun-ſhine of the Goſpel, and marriage reſtored to its firſt inſtitution.

Hannah] She was the firſt and chief wife, and mother of the family; and Peninnah, but a ſecondary wife or Concubine, whom it ſeemeth Elkanah took to Hannah, becauſe being barren ſhe had born him no children, which in thoſe dayes was eſteemed a great affliction. See on Judg. 19.1,2.

V. 3. And this man (to wit, Elkanah) went up out of his City] i.e. Ramah.

yeerly to worſhip] Heb. from yeer to yeer. This according to the law all the males were bound to do thrice in the year, at the three great feaſts of Paſſover, Pentecoſt and Tabernacles, Exod.23.17. & 34.23. Deut. 16.16. But Elkanah, being a Levite, went up oftner to do the ſervice of the Sanctuary. The yearly feaſt here meant was that of the paſſover, when not onely the men, but the women alſo, accompanying their husbands, went up; though not as abſolutely bound ſo to do, (for then Hannah ſhould have ſinned in ſtaying at home to wean her ſon v. 22.) but out of their piety and devotion to joyn with their husbands in that ſolemn ſervice.

in Shiloh] i.e. At the Tabernacle, which was ſeated in the City Shiloh the ſeventh year of Joſhua, Joſh.18.1. and had there remained ever ſince.

and the two ſons of Eli] He was at this time the Judge of Iſrael, and next ſucceeded Samſon, and judged Iſrael fourty years, ch.4.18. Hee was high Prieſt alſo. For though the Prieſthood ſhould have continued in Eleazars poſterity, he being Aarons eldeſt ſon, now the ſucceſſion was interrupted, and it was ſetled upon Eli, of the line of Ithamar Aarons ſecond ſon, and, as it ſeemeth, by Gods own appointment, ch.2.30. Now whether this were becauſe Eli was Judge, or for ſome great ſin commited by ſome of Eleazars poſterity, or for ſome other cauſe, we know not, nor need curiouſly enquire, ſeeing God hath concealed it. But this appeareth, that both Eleazar and Ithamar were joyned in the Prieſts office, to miniſter before the Lord, in the time of Aaron, Numb. 3.4. 1 Chr.24.2. and likewiſe their ſons after them in the time of David, 1 Chron.24.3. till Abiathar, or Ahimelech, (for he is called by both names; See on 2 Sam.8.17.) of the ſons of Ithamar was, according to the prediction ch. 2.35. for the ſin of Eli and his ſons, and his own ſiding with Adonijah, caſt out of the high Prieſts office, and Zadok put in his place by Solomon, 1 Kings 2.27.35. 1 Chron.6.8. And then the Prieſthood was reſtored unto and ſetled in the familie of Eleazar, according to the promiſe, Numb.25.13.

Hophni and Phinehas, the Prieſts of the Lord, were there] Namely, as ſecondary Prieſts, to do the ſervice of the Sanctuary under Eli their father, who was then high Prieſt. And this is here added, to ſhew, that though theſe were graceleſs men, even in the very execution of their prieſtly office, yet this did not hinder Elkanah from coming to Gods Sanctuary to offer ſacrifice, becauſe he looked not to the wickedneſſe of the men, but to their office, and to the ordinance of God adminiſtred by them, though many of the weaker ſort did ſtumble at it, and were wrought thereby to abhor the offerings of the Lord, ch.2.17.

V. 4. And when the time was that Elkanah offered] To wit, thank-offerings and peace-offerings. For in the two other ſorts of ſacrifices nothing was reſerved for thoſe that offered them to feaſt upon, ſeeing the whole-burnt-offering was wholly conſumed, and the ſin-offering was alſo to be burnt without the camp, Lev.1.9. and 4.12. But in the peace-offerings the fat onely of the inwards, and the rump, was to be burnt with fire, and ſo offered unto the Lord, Lev 3.3. and the ſhoulder, breaſt and two cheeks were to be given to the Prieſts, Lev.7.31,32. and all the reſt of the beaſt belonged to him that offered the ſacrifice, to feaſt himſelf, with his family and friends, the widow, fatherleſs and poor, and whom elſe he pleaſed; to rejoyce before the Lord with cheerfulneſs, and to render unto him thanks and praiſe for all his benefits. For ſeeing this ſacrifice was to be all eaten the ſame day it was offered, Lev.7.15. and could not be ſo eaten by a ſmall family; eſpecially if it were a great beaſt as a goat or a bullock, therefore it was lawful for him that brought the oblation to invite whom he pleaſed to be his gueſts, 1 Sam.9.22.

he gave to Peninnah his wife, and to all her ſons and her daughters portions] To wit, of the offerings. Which is not ſpoken to ſignifie that Peninnah and her children were by Elkanah preferred before Hannah, becauſe it is ſaid that he firſt gave them their portions; but rather, to expreſſe his greater love to Hannah, in that having provided for them, being many, every one their ſhare, in an ordinary manner & proportion, he reſerved for her a worthy, or double, portion; as Abraham dealt with his beloved Iſaac and his other children, Gen.25.4. and Joſeph with Benjamin and the reſt of his brethren, Gen.43.34.

V. 5. But unto Hannah he gave a worthy portion] Not a portion given with a ſorrowfull countenance, as ſome read it, grieving becauſe ſhe was barren, and he had no children of hers to beſtow portions upon, as well as the reſt; but a worthy, or honourable, portion, or, as the Hebrew hath it, a gift of the face, ſeeing men uſe to look upon great and worthy gifts with a cheerfull countenance: Whereby is meant ſuch a choice and principall portion as is fit to be ſet before noble and honourable perſonages: (See ch.9.23,24.) that he might by this expreſſion of his love comfort her in her grief for her barreneſs and Peninnahs provocations. See Exod.21.10.

for he loved Hannah] i.e. in a ſingular manner, and above Peninnah. So Gen.29.30.

but the Lord had ſhut up her womb] i.e. Made her barren, and reſtrained her from conceiving and bearing children: (See Gen.16.2. and 20. 18.) even as contrariwiſe it is he alone that maketh fruitful, Pſal.113. 9. and 127.3.

V. 6. And her adverſary] To wit, Peninnah, who maligned her as her corrival. So Gen.29.30. and 30.8. Lev.18.18.

alſo provoked her ſore] Heb. Angred her. That is, added to her affliction by vexing her with bitter, ſpiteful and clamorous words, upbraiding her with barrenneſs, as if it were a curſe and an evidence of Gods anger for her ſins. See Job 24.21.

for to make her fret] That is, to vex and grieve her. This ſheweth Gods diſlike of Polygamie, ſeeing he puniſhed it, as many other waies, ſo eſpecially with this great inconvenience and miſchief, that there were ſtill many jarrs and brawlings between the women, out of their emulation one againſt another, which the husband was often forced to compoſe with much trouble and vexation; as we ſee in the example of Sarah and Hagar, Rachel and Leah, and Hannah and Peninnah in this place.

V. 7. And as he did ſo] i.e. As Elkanah did thus expreſs his love to Hannah when he went yearly to the houſe of God with his family, ſo Peninnah perſiſted from time to time to vex her by her provocations; which made Elkanah the more ready and willing to cheer and comfort her by giving her a worthy portion, both becauſe he loved her, and alſo much pitied her in reſpect of thoſe vexations which ſhe ſuffered by Peninnahs ſpitefull upbraidings.

V. 8. Hannah, why weepeſt thou?] Elkanah knew the cauſe of her weeping, but ſpeaketh this to comfort her, becauſe it much troubled him to ſee her mourn in a time when ſhe ought to have rejoyced, namely, at this feaſt, unto which they came to rejoyce before the Lord, and to praiſe him with cheerfulneſs for all his benefits, as God in his law had required: And therefore he doth not enquire after the cauſe, but rather what reaſon ſhe had ſo to do, and by this enquiry maketh way unto that comfort which he intended to give her.

why eateſt thou not?] i.e. What reaſon haſt thou not to eat, ſeeing it is a time appointed by God for holy feaſting?

am not I better to thee then ten ſons?] i.e. Haſt thou not more and better cauſe of comfort and contentment in me alone, who love thee ſo dearly, then thou couldſt have in the injoyment of many children?

V. 9. So Hannah roſe up after they had eaten in Shiloh] i.e. After Elkanah and the reſt of the family had feaſted together: For, as it may ſeem, Hannah her ſelf had not eaten with them, partly becauſe her grief was ſo great that it took away all her appetite to meat, and partly becauſe her conſcience witneſſed unto her, that it was unlawful to participate of this holy feaſt in a condition of grief and mourning, ſeeing the Law required that all that did eat of it ſhould do it with cheerfulneſs and rejoycing, Deut.12.7. Lev.10.19. And this cauſed her alſo to forbear drinking (as afterwards ſhe told Eli) either wine or ſtrong drink. Yet others think, that by the earneſt perſwaſion of her husband ſhe had eaten a little to ſupply the neceſſity of nature, although ſhe had not communicated in the plenty of the feaſt.

Now Eli the Prieſt ſate upon a ſeat by a poſt] Hence ſome gather, not improbably, that the Tabernacle at this time was encompaſſed by ſome frame of building to preſerve it from being hurt by the weather: For otherwiſe the Tabernacle made by Moſes had neither gates nor poſts, but onely an hanging or curtain in the entry of it, Exod. 26.36. And ſo ch.3.15. it is ſaid that Samuel opened the doors of the houſe of the Lord; whereas the Tabernacle it ſelf had no doors, but onely vails and curtains; Which maketh their opinion yet more probable, who think the Tabernacle now had a frame of wood about it, to preſerve it from any hurt or annoyance.

of the Temple of the Lord] i.e. Of the Tabernacle, which is ſometimes called the Temple, ch.3.3. 2 Sam.22.7. as the Temple is ſometime called the Tabernacle, Jer.10.20. Lam.2.4,6. becauſe they were both alike conſecrated to Gods publick ſervice. And in this Temple, or Tabernacle, where the Ark was, or rather in the court of the Tabernacle, Eli ſat to order things belonging to Gods publick worſhip, to obſerve them who preſented themſelves to perform holy duties, and that the people might have free acceſs unto him upon all occaſions, to be inſtructed and ſatisfied in their queſtions & doubts, about matters ceremoniall, judiciall, and morall, by him who was the high Prieſt, and was to ask counſel of God for them, if their caſe required it.

V. 10. And ſhe was in bitterneſs of ſoul] Heb. bitter in ſoul. i.e. In great ſorrow and grief, which is called the ſouls bitterneſs or anguiſh. So Job.7.11. and 10.1. Iſa.38.15. Lam.3.15.

and prayed unto the Lord] In her affliction ſhe addreſſeth her ſelf by prayer unto the Lord, the God of all conſolation, and doth not ſeek to eaſe her grief with ſports and merriments, much leſs by contending with Peninnah, rendring reproach for reproach.

V. 11. And ſhe vowed a vow] Either upon condition of her husbands approbation, or elſe having already obtained it, v.23. For otherwiſe it was in his power to diſannull and make it void, Numb.30.8.

If thou wilt indeed look on the affliction of thine handmaid] Namely, in reſpect of my barrenneſs, and reproach ariſing from it. Now God ſeeth all things with one perfect view; but he is ſaid to look upon us in our afflictions, in a peculiar manner, when he graciouſly heareth our prayers, and ſendeth us deliverance, Pſal. 50. 15.

and remember me, and not forget thine handmaid] God cannot be ſaid properly to remember or forget, becauſe all things at all times are preſent before him, in his ſight, Prov. 15. 3. But ſpeaking after the manner of men, God is ſaid to forget us when he doth not relieve us in our afflictions, and to remember us when he ſendeth help and deliverance. And here the repetition of the ſame things, remember, and not forget, is not vain and ſuperfluous, but argued the earneſtneſſe and vehemency of her prayer; like that, Joh. 1. 20. And he confeſſed and denied not.

but wilt give unto thine handmaid a man-child] i. e. Who in reſpect of ſex may be in a capacity of being conſecrated unto thee for thy publick ſervice.

then I will give him unto the Lord all the dayes of his life] Seeing vows properly are not of ſuch things as we are bound to obſerve even without a vow, therefore Hannah doth not here devote her ſon unto the Lord for the ordinarie ſervice of the Sanctuarie, for he could not but be born a Levite, and therefore without a vow devoted to be one of Gods ſervants in ordinary: But hereby ſhe intended to conſecrate him unto God in an extraordinary manner, and with more ſtrictneſs than the law required; as, I. That he ſhould begin his ſervice of the Tabernacle in his childhood, to the end he might be the better inſtructed in the knowledg of Gods law, and acquainted with all the parts, paſſages, and means of Divine worſhip, from his tender youth, that ſo in his age he might keep the cloſer to it, Prov. 22. 6. whereas the ordinary Levites were not to begin their publick ſervice before the age of thirty, or five and twenty, Numb. 4. 3. and 8. 24. he ſhould continue his ſervice all his dayes, whereas they were taken off and releaſed when they came to the age of fifty, Num. 4. 3. and 8. 25. Yet this vow was not to bind Samuel to continual reſidence in the tabernacle, in caſe it ſhould pleaſe God to take him off from it by ſome ſpecial diſpenſation; as it ſeemeth he did, when he called him to be Judg over Iſrael, which office obliged him to go his Circuits from one City to another, to adminiſter juſtice unto the people ch. 7. 16. III. She vowed he ſhould be a Nazarite, and ſo abſtain from wine and ſtrong drink, with all other things that came of the grape (See Judg. 13. 4, 5.) which ſtrict profeſſion the ordinary Levites did not take upon them. In all which, her vow was to be underſtood, not abſolutely, but with conditions, cautions and qualifications; as, If the child, being born, ſhould prove fit to be vowed, as having no legall defects, but being of perfect ſhape in all his limbs and lineaments; If being come to age he would give his conſent to his mothers vow, and bind himſelf to this extraordinary ſtrictneſſe; If her husband pleaſed to ratifie her vow: And that he did, and ſo made it become his own, v. 28. So all that Hannh vowed, was, that ſhe would do her beſt to perform lawfully all that ſhe promiſed.

V. 12. as ſhe continued praying] Heb. multiplyed to pray. i. e. Being inſtant and importunate in her ſuit, did expreſs her ſelf in many words: This was not that vain repetition of words which Chriſt condemneth, Matth. 6, 7. in which there is no efficacie, but only a multiplying of words out of a vain opinion to be the rather heard; but that effectuall prayer, which proceedeth from faith and fervencie, never giveth over till the ſuit be granted, Jam. 5. 16.

Eli marked her mouth] i. e. Obſerved that ſhe ſtood mumbling with her lips, making, it may be, ſtrange faces, and uſing ſome geſtures not well ſuiting with gravity and ſobriety, as is uſual with thoſe that are of a troubled and afflicted ſpirit

V. 13. ſhe ſpake in her heart] See Exod. 14. 15. Rom. 8. 26.

Eli thought ſhe had been drunken] i. e. Seeing ſuch incompoſedneſſe in her countenance and carriage, he uncharitably paſſed his cenſure, that ſhe was drunk, and he rather, becauſe ſhe was newly riſen from a feaſt. See Matth. 11. 19. Acts. 2. 13, 15.

V. 14. How long wilt thou be drunken? put away thy wine from thee] i. e. How long wilt thou demean thy ſelf as a drunken woman, muttering and mumbling to thy ſelf, and ſpeaking nothing, for fear of diſcovering by thy non-ſence that thou art drunken? Do not any longer thus carry thy ſelf as a drunken woman; or at leaſt, if thou haſt no power in this caſe thou art in to behave thy ſelf better, then get thee for the preſent out of this holy place, till having ſlept thou come out of thy drunkenneſſe, and recovering the uſe of thy wits becomeſt ſober.

V. 15. No, my Lord: I am a woman of a ſorrowfull ſpirit] Thus ſhe doth with much meekneſſe and humbleneſs put off his ſharp and unjuſt reproof, telling him there was no likelihood ſhe ſhould be guilty of that foul fault whereof he ſuſpected her: for ſhe was one that was afflicted in mind, and therefore not likely to be given to intemperance in drinking; yea, ſhe was ſo far from exceſs, that ſhe had not drunk either wine or ſtrong drink all that day.

but have poured out my ſoul before the Lord] i. e. The earneſt deſires of my ſorrowful heart. Now this is expreſſed by this phraſe of pouring out the ſoul, becauſe ſhe had emptied the deep ſecrets of her heart unto the Lord, as moſt faithful and able to hear and help her; and that not ſlightly; but in a full and earneſt manner, as it were unbowelling her ſelf, and not leaving the leaſt crany of her heart undiſcovered. So Pſal. 62. 8. and 142. 2.

V. 16. Count not thine handmaid for a daughter of Belial] i. e. One deſperately wicked, who hath ſhaken off the yoke of the law, and given over her ſelf to all lewdneſs and licentiouſneſs; or one that is unprofitable and good for nothing, deſtitute of Gods fear, and a very ſlave of Satan. Such an one this gracious woman eſteemed a drunken perſon: And indeed they are no better. See on Judg. 19. 22. & Deut. 13. 13.

V. 17. Go in peace] i. e. Compoſe thy ſoul with patience, to wait quietly and contentedly upon God, who will undoubtedly grant thy ſuit. So 2 Kings. 5. 19.

and the God of Iſrael grant thee thy petition] Or, will grant thee; either as a Prophet, promiſing that her ſuit ſhould be granted, or as the high Prieſt, praying that ſhe might enjoy her deſire.

V. 18. Let thine handmaid finde grace in thy ſight] i. e. As thou haſt already comforted and cheered my heart with thy prediction or prayer, ſo continue thy favour towards me by continuing thy prayers for me.

was no more ſad] i. e. By a lively faith being aſſured that God had heard both her own prayers and alſo the high Prieſts in her behalf, ſhe caſt all her care upon the Lord, and wholly relying upon his promiſes and providence, departed with inward joy, and gave no further way to ſorrow and ſadneſſe, Eccleſ. 9. 7.

V. 19. And they roſe up in the morning early and worſhiped before the Lord] Before they ſet forth on their journey homewards, they preſented themſelves before God in the tabernacle, to do him religious ſervice, and to pray for proſperous ſucceſs in their journey, and in all other their affairs, herein leaving to poſterity a good precedent for imitation.

to Ramah] Called Ramathaim Zophim, v. 1.

the Lord remembered her] i. e. Her prayer, by granting it, and making her fruitful that before was barren. See Gen. 21. 1.

V. 20. when the time was come about, after Hannah had conceived] In which words there is a tranſpoſition of the order, for they are thus to be underſtood, After Hannah had conceived, when the time was come about, in which women uſually go with child from the conception to the birth, ſhe bare a ſon. The like forms of ſpeaking we have in other places, Exod. 14. 21. He made the ſea dry land, and the waters were divided, i. e. He divided the waters & ſo made the Sea dry land; Iſa. 64. 5. Others underſtand the words according to that order in which they are in the text; After ſome time was paſſed from that day that ſhe had the comfort of Gods hearing her prayer, and had companied with her husband, ſhe conceived; and not preſently after ſhe had lyen with him: Which God did for the tryal and exerciſe of her faith, when as for a time he deferred the performance of his promiſe and the granting of her ſuit.

and called his name Samuel] That is, asked of God; Of which name her ſelf giveth the reaſon, Becauſe I have asked him of the Lord, Now this name ſerved, I. for her own ſingular and continuall comfort: For thereby ſhe was dayly put in mind not onely of Gods great bleſſing in giving her a ſon after ſhe had been ſo long barren, but alſo by what means ſhe came by him, namely, that he was as well the fruit of her prayers as of her womb. And II. it ſerved to remember both the parents and the child of their duty; them, of bringing him up in the fear and nurture of the Lord, that according to their vow he might be dedicated to Gods ſervice in his ſanctuary; and him, of demeaning himſelf according to that pious and ſtrict courſe of a Nazarite unto which his parents had devoted him, having begged him of God to that very end.

V. 21. the yearly ſacrifice, and his vow] That is, beſides the yearly and ordinary ſacrifice, ſome other oblation which he had vowed namely a ſacrifice of thankſgiving for the birth of his ſon.

V. 22. But Hannah went not up] She ſinned not in that ſhe ſtayed at home to perform a moral duty in nurſing her child, and neglected a ceremonial duty which the law did not require of her, for whereas there might be two cauſes of womens going to the Tabernacle neither of them obliged Hannah: One was, that after the dayes of their purification they might preſent their firſt-born ſons before the Lord, and pay the five ſhekels appointed by God as the price of redemption, Numb. 18. 15, 16. This was required of all the other tribes of Iſrael, and was therefore obſerved by the Virgin Mary, Luke 2. 22, 23. who was of the tribe of Judah: But this did not concern Hannah, who with her husband were of the tribe of Levi, which was conſecrated to God in lieu of all the firſt-born, and not like the other tribes to be redeemed. An other cauſe was the command Exod. 23. 17. that all ſhould appear before God at the three ſolemn feaſts. But in this neither was Hannah concerned, ſeeing that law obliged only the men of Iſrael. Howſoever their wives, when they had no neceſſary cauſe to keep them at home, out of their pious devotion accompanied their husbands. See on v. 3.

and there abide for ever] See on v. 11.

V. 23. Tarry untill thou have weaned him] Or, educated him; ſo long till he be fit to miniſter before the Lord in the ſanctuary, as ſome think; or at leaſt, till he be fit to live there without a nurſe; ſeeing before that time he would have been but burdenſome, unleſs there were a nurſery belonging to the tabernacle, which we no where read of.

onely the Lord eſtabliſheth his word] To wit, that which he hath promiſed concerning our ſon, and hath in part performed. Which muſt be underſtood either of Eli's words to Hannah, whether prayer or propheſie, v. 17. or of that real anſwer which God had given as the return of her prayers, in giving her a ſon. Hannah had craved a ſon, whom ſhe might conſecrate unto God in the ſtrict way of a Nazarite, and Elkanah here deſireth that he might by Gods grace & Holy Spirit be fitted and enabled for ſuch a ſervice. Or elſe we muſt underſtand it of ſome ſpecial promiſe made by God before or after the conception or birth of the child, either to him or his wife, which we do not find revealed in Scripture.

and gave her ſon ſuck until ſhe weaned him] Which was (as is probable in reſpect of the cuſtom of thoſe times) after he was three years old, 2 Macc.7.27. if at leaſt it were not longer. For it was the ſcope of her vow, not ſimply, or ſo much, to devote a ſon unto God, as with reſpect to this end, that he might do him ſervice in the Tabernacle, which he could not do in his tender infancy: And ſomething Samuel did ſoon after his coming; for he is ſaid to have miniſtred before the Lord, ch. 2. 11. Again, he being her onely ſon, the ſon of her vows and of her deſires, it is very likely ſhe would not wean him, and ſo put him from her, till he was of ſome age to ſhift for himſelf among ſtrangers, being alſo before that time unable to do ſervice in the ſanctuary. A like example we have in *S*arah, who weaned not her beloved Iſaac till he was of ſome more than ordinary years for a weanling; ſeeing it is ſaid, that at the time when they made a feaſt for his weaning, Iſmael was obſerved to mock at him, Gen.21.8,9. which the Apoſtle calls a perſecution, Gal. 4.29. and this was not likely to be done before the child was of ſome pretty age.

V. 24. ſhe took him up with her] Namely to *S*hiloh, there to preſent him unto the Lord according to her vow.

with three bullocks] There is mention v.5. but of one that was ſlain and offered. It may be the other two were given to Eli, or to be at his diſpoſing, as a teſtimony of their love and thankfulneſs for his favour by them already received, and for that which they further deſired in the behalf of their young ſon. Or it may be that onely one was ſacrificed when the child was firſt preſented and admitted, and the other two afterwards at other times by way of peace-offerings, to feaſt the Prieſts, Levites and other friends.

and one ephah of flower] About ten pottles, or, as ſome think, fifteen pottles, neer the meaſure of our buſhel. See on Exod.16.36. This was brought, that according to the law it might be offered with the bullocks, Numb.15.9. and a bottle of wine which they likewiſe uſed, for meat and drink and peace-offerings, Lev.23.13. Numb.15.5,7,10. & 18.12. & 28.7.

V. 26. Oh my Lord, as thy ſoul liveth] i. e. As ſure as thou art alive, I am the woman, &c. Or, So certainly as I deſire that thou maiſt long live. See Gen 42.15.

V. 28. Therefore I have lent him to the Lord] Or, returned him whom I have obtained by petition, to the Lord; i.e. I have dedicated him to his ſervice.

he ſhall be lent] Or, he whom I have obtained by petition ſhall be returned; i. e. As he was freely given, ſo he ſhall be freely devoted to Gods ſervice all his dayes.

And he worſhiped the Lord there] i. e. Either (as ſome think) Eli praiſed God who had graciouſly heard his prayers in the behalf of Hannah, in granting unto her a ſon, or working her heart, in lieu of thankfulneſs, to devote him unto Gods ſervice. Or elſe (which is more probable) Elkanah hearing Hannahs ſpeech unto Eli, and aſſenting unto it, did worſhip the Lord, and praiſe him, for giving them not onely a ſon, but hearts alſo willingly to devote him to Gods ſervice, from whom they had received him; and alſo prayed unto him for his gracious acceptance of their gift, & for a bleſſing upon him both for the preſent and the time to come, that he would ſanctifie him by his Spirit, and enable him in an holy manner to perform that religious ſervice unto which they had devoted him, that ſo God might have the glory, and both they and their ſon the comfort of this their action.

CHAP. II.

Verſ. 1. AND Hannah prayed, and ſaid] i. e Rendred unto God praiſes and thankſgiving, as for all his bleſſings, ſo eſpecially for his gracious deliverance of her out of that affliction of barrenneſs, and making her a joyful mother of a ſon. Theſe praiſes are here called prayers, becauſe thankſgiving is a part of prayer, and whileſt we praiſe God for benefits received, we move God to continue his favour, and to multiply his bleſſings ſtill upon us. Although we may probably think, that ſhe that praiſed God for giving her a ſon, did alſo pray unto him for the continuance of his life and well-being, and the fitting him for that ſervice unto which he was deſigned and devoted, though it be not here expreſſed. Or though theſe petitions were not at this time added to her praiſes, ſeeing ſhe now onely intended to compoſe an hymn of thankſgiving, yet no doubt ſhe was frequent and fervent in them at other times. Now in this her ſong of praiſes ſhe raiſeth up her ſpirit ab hypotheſi ad theſin, & from ſhewing what God had been to her particularly in his mercy, power and goodneſs, proceedeth to declare what he was in himſelf, and towards all his creatures, eſpecially his Church and peculiar people, and what alſo he was to his proud enemies; and yet ſo, as that in all theſe generals ſhe ſtill for the moſt part reflecteth upon her own particular, ſecretly intending to apply all ſhe ſaith to her ſelf and her own condition.

My heart rejoyceth in the Lord] Or, exulteth, leapeth and skippeth for joy; that is, doth not onely inwardly and ſecretly rejoyce, but ſheweth its joy by external expreſſions, in words and actions, as boaſting and glorying, leaping and dancing, Pſal.34.2. & 44.8. q. d. My heart, which was depreſſed and dejected in the time of my barrenneſs, doth now triumph and is exalted above meaſure in the apprehenſion of Gods favour and goodneſs in giving me a ſon. There is in many paſſages an harmony betwixt this ſong and that of the bleſſed Virgin, Luk.1.46. And no wonder, ſince the occaſion and argument of both are ſo like: There a Virgin conceived, and here a barren woman is made fruitfull.

mine horn is exalted in the Lord] That is, my glory, beauty and ſtrength. A metaphor taken from horn'd beaſts, whoſe comelineſs, ſtrength and frolick jollity appeareth chiefly in their horns: q. d. I that formerly drooped and hung down me head in my affliction, when my enemies triumphed over me, am now vigorous in my ſpirit, and have gotten ſtrength to defend my ſelf againſt all their inſolencies and indignities; yet not from any power that is in me, but from the Lord, who is my ſtrength and the horn of my ſalvation, Pſal.89.17. & 18.2. & 112.9. & 92.10.

my mouth is enlarged over mine enemies] Whereas in the time of my barrenneſs I durſt not ſpeak, or open my mouth, when I heard the reproaches of my inſulting adverſary Peninnah, but was ſaid to be ſilent, and bear all with patience, having nothing to anſwer, now by Gods giving me a ſon, as my heart is dilated with joy: ſo my mouth is opened to expreſs my inward rejoycing, having not onely matter ſufficient of praiſing God for his goodneſs towards me, but alſo to ſtop the mouth of my adverſary, ſeeing ſhe hath now no more cauſe to inſult over me: Or if out of her inſolence & impudence ſhe open her mouth wide againſt me, (like thoſe, Pſal.35.21.) I ſhall in as ample manner enlarge my ſelf in Gods praiſes, and have matter enough to ſtop her mouth, whileſt I declare how good and gracious the Lord hath been unto me, & how much I rejoyce in his ſalvation, i. e. in this benefit whereby the Lord hath ſaved me from the reproach of my adverſary, that is, Peninnah, or any other like unto her.

V. 2. There is none holy as the Lord] For he is eſſentially holy in his Nature and Being, whereas the creatures have holineſs in them onely as a quality. He is originally and independently holy, and the onely fountain from which ſprings all holineſs in the creatures; but their holineſs is by participation, and onely ſo much as they derive from him.

for there is none beſide thee] That is, no God, holy as thou art; nor holyeſt men, like thee: for thy holineſs is infinite in all perfection, but their holineſs, imperfect, and full of blots and blemiſhes.

neither is there any rock like our God] i. e. He is our onely ſtrength, to ſupport us in all our troubles, and to deliver us out of them; our ſure reſting-place, upon which if by faith and confidence we repoſe, we ſhall be ſecured from all ſtorms of trouble, and from all billows of tentations; and our onely fortreſs and ſtrong hold, to protect and defend us from the malice and rage of all our enemies. And thus the Lord was Hannahs rock, that is, her ſtrength that upheld her when ſhe was ready to ſink in the time of her trouble, the rock on which ſhe reſted and relyed, when her inſulting adverſaries threatned to ſink and drown her, and her onely place of refuge, unto which ſhe did flee to be ſecured from all their malice and inſolency: See Deut.32.4,31. Pſal.18.2,31. & 86.8. & 89.6,8.

V. 3. Talk no more ſo exceeding proudly] i. e. Let not Peninnah or any other adverſary inſult over me with their proud ſpeeches, upbraiding me with my barrenneſs, ſeeing now God hath been pleaſed to make me fruitful.

let not arrogancy come out of your mouth] Heb. hard words. i.e. proud and arrogant ſpeeches, attributing much to your ſelves, in your own praiſe, and detracting from others to their diminution and diſgrace. See Mal.3.13. Jude 15.

For the Lord is a God of knowledg] Heb. of knowledges. That is, infinite in knowledge, knowing all things, and from whom nothing is hid. And therefore he hath taken notice of my adverſaries pride and petulancy, and of my ſimplicity and innocency; and ſeeing the vanity of their proud brags and inſolent carriages, and my humble demeanour, and patient bearing of all their inſolencies, he hath confounded them, and ſtopped their mouthes, and exalted me in his favour, when they never ſo much as dreamed of it.

by him actions are weighed] Or, are not weighed without him. i. e. He duely pondereth all the actions of men, of which they think he taketh no notice; and accordingly, as a righteous Judg, he retributeth to all according to their works, whether good or evil. Or, by him interpriſes are eſtabliſhed. i. e. By his all-ruling providence he ordereth and diſpoſeth of all mens actions and proceedings according to his own will, ſo that though they intend out of their malice never ſo much miſchief againſt his children, (as my adverſaries have done againſt me) yet they ſhall never be able to bring it to paſs.

V. 4. the bows of the mighty men are broken] i. e. God defeateth all the machinations and warlike preparations of wicked men, wherein they put all their truſt. In which metaphor ſhe alludeth unto Peninnahs vain confidence in her numerous poſterity, in which ſhe truſting did wound her with her reproaches.

and they that ſtumbled are girt with ſtrength] i. e. They that through feebleneſs and weakneſs were not able to walk, but were ready to ſtumble at any thing that lay in their way, are ſo ſtrengthned with Gods might that they are able to leap over and overcome all difficulties, even above the power of nature, as it fareth with me.

V. 5. They that were full have hired out themſelves for bread] i. e. They that were rich, and fared ſumptuouſly and delicately, are now brought to that poverty, penury and want of neceſſaries, that to relieve their extream want of food and clothing they are conſtrained to work like hired ſervants for a poor living: Luk. 1. 53. Lam. 5, 6. And this was that judgement which God threatned againſt Eli's poſterity, for his ſin, and the ſinnes of his ſons, v. 36.

and they that were hungry ceaſed] To wit, to be ſtill hungry, being ſatisfied, and abounding with Gods bleſſings. This by analogie and ſimilitude Hannah ſeemeth to apply to Peninnah and her ſelf, namely, that ſhe, who abounded with a numerous poſterity, had loſt all, or the moſt of them; and her ſelf, that was barren, had now the bleſſing of children. And hence ſome have collected, that God had taken away Peninnahs children, for her pride, arrogancy and unthankfulneſs, and contrariwiſe had beſtowed that bleſſing upon Hannah, who was humble and grateful.

So that the barren hath born ſeven] i. e. Many children. For ſo the ſeptenary number is often taken, as being a number of fulneſſe and perfection: ſo Iſai. 4. 1. Deut. 28. 7.

and ſhe that hath many children is waxed feeble] i. e. Either through weakneſſe hath left off bearing, or loſt thoſe children ſhe had, and ſo is become feeble, being deprived of her children, which ſhe eſteemed her chief ſtrength. And this alſo Hannah applyeth to her ſelf, who having the ſpirit of propheſie, by ſome revelation (it is probable) from God, was aſſured that ſhe ſhould be the mother of many more children, as appeared in the event; God giving her, beſides Samuel, three ſons, and two daughters, v. 21.

V. 6. The Lord killeth, and maketh alive] i. e. God diſpoſeth of men by his all-ruling providence according to his own good pleaſure, and bringeth them into ſeveral and contrary eſtates and conditions, as in his wiſdome he thinketh beſt; And that, whether we underſtand it of divers men, of which he exalteth ſome, and caſteth down others into miſeries and afflictions; or elſe of the ſame man, whoſe condition he often changeth, ſometimes advancing him to great proſperity, and ſometimes depreſſing him into the depth of miſery. And this is the ſum and ſubſtance of this and the two following verſes, which is diverſified by divers inſtances. Firſt; the Lord killeth and maketh alive: So Deut. 32. 39. Wiſd. 16. 13. i. e. He hath in his hand the iſſues of life and death, killing and preſerving alive whom he pleaſeth, and reſtoring them to life who were dead. Of which laſt we have examples in the Shunamites ſon, 2 King. 4. 35. Jairus's daughter, Mark 5. 42. the poor widows ſon, Luk. 7. 12. Lazarus, Ioh. 11. 44. and Dorcas, Act. 9. 40. Or elſe we may better underſtand it of deſperate, and extream miſeries and afflictions, whereby men are brought to the very brink of death, in the mean time their life being unto them a living death, without all joy and comfort, Pſal. 44. 22. out of which when God delivereth any, they are ſaid to be revived and raiſed from death to life. So Iſa. 26. 19. Hoſ. 6. 2. And in this ſtate and condition Hannah thought her ſelf to be, while ſhe was barren, like a dead woman, giving no life to poſterity, and ſo, in her conceit in the depth of miſery; but now, revived, when God had made her fruitful, and the mother of a ſon.

he bringeth down to the grave and bringeth up] Which words have the ſame ſenſe with the former. For the grave ſignifieth properly the ſtate of the dead corrupting and rotting in the grave. But metaphorically it is put for a ſtate of deep and deſperate miſery and affliction, out of which there is no more hope of recovery then of raiſing a dead man out of his grave. In which condition Hannah thought her ſelf to be, when ſhe was daily ſubject to the reproaches of her adverſary for her barrenneſs. So David Pſal. 16. 10. & 18. 5. and 116. 3. and 130. 1. Or elſe it is taken for the ſtate of thoſe that are in ſpiritual deſertions, and in their own apprehenſion forſaken of God: So David, Pſal. 22. 1. and our bleſſed Saviour himſelf for a time, when he bore our ſins upon the croſs, Matth. 27. 46. Or finally the ſtate of the damned in hell-torments, Pſal. 9. 17.

V. 8. He raiſeth up the poor out of the duſt] That is out of the greateſt miſery and affliction, Pſal. 113. 7. Iob 36. 7. Luk. 1. 52.

and lifteth up the begger from the dunghill] i. e. He raiſeth men from the moſt abject and baſe condition to a ſtate of glory and eminency, from beggery to Sovereignty, and from the dunghill to the throne. See Pſal. 105. 20. Ier. 52. 31.

for the pillars of the earth are the Lords] i. e. God is the Lord of the whole earth from one pole to the other; and though it hang in the air, yet by his ſole command he hath firmly founded it upon the Center, as if it were upon pillars, ſo as it cannot be moved; and hath made it the Center of the whole world, the whole frame of heaven being carried round about it: Iob 38. 4, 5. Pſal. 102. 25. & 104. 2, 5.

V. 9. He will keep the feet of his Saints] Or, thoſe who are benigne] i. e. gracious and merciful, like their heavenly Father, Matth. 5. 44, 55. God will keep their feet, i. e. their affections, counſels, endeavours, and actions, Pſal. 119. 105. Eccleſ. 5. 1. and will both direct and protect them in all their wayes, Prov. 16. 9. Ier. 10. 23. Pſal. 91. 11.

the wicked ſhall be ſilent in darkneſſe] i. e. Affrighted and aſtoniſhed in their miſeries and calamities, Eccleſ. 5. 17. Zeph. 1. 15. and ſo confounded with ſhame that they ſhould not mutter or have a word to ſay, though now in their pride and arrogancy they are full of bragging and boaſting. So Iob. 5. 16. Ier. 8. 14. Matth. 22. 12. Others underſtand it of the ſilence of the wicked in the grave, when as they ſhould be cut off from the land of the living, Pſal. 94. 17.

For by ſtrength ſhall no man prevail] i. e. By his own ſtrength, but only by the power of God. Therefore when man prevaileth in any of his enterpriſes, he is not to arrogate the praiſe to himſelf, but to aſcribe it wholly unto the Lord.

V. 10. The adverſaries of the Lord ſhall be broken in pieces] i. e. Thoſe that oppoſe his holy and faithful ones. For thoſe that are their enemies, are Gods alſo, by ſpecial covenant. Zech. 2. 8. Gen. 12. 3. Acts 9. 4. Now whereas it is ſaid they ſhall be broken in pieces, i. e. utterly defeated and overthrown, like an earthen veſſel, which being broken can never be pieced together, this may be prophetically underſtood of thoſe overthrows which they had from Gods people in future times; and paricularly, of that which was given them ſoon after, in Samuels time, ch. 7. 10. unto which the words following ſeem to relate.

out of heaven he ſhall thunder upon them] i. e. Gods ſuddain and unexpected vengeance ſhall deſtroy and take them away; as the Egyptians, which were drowned in the red ſea; and the hundred fourſcore and five thouſand of Sennacheribs hoſt, ſlain by the Angel in one night.

The Lord ſhall judg the ends of the earth] i. e. He ſhall bring the whole world unto judgement, ſo as none ſhall eſcape. Which may be meant as of all the world in its ſeveral parts: ſo eſpecially of that univerſal judgement at Chriſts ſecond coming, of whom Hannah here propheſieth, as by the words following more plainly appeareth.

and he ſhall give ſtrength unto his King] i. e. Typically to David, Solomon, and the reſt of the good Kings, whom he made victorious over their enemies; but principally to his Son Chriſt, who had all power in heaven and earth committed unto him, Matth. 28. 18. and obtained victory over all his enemies, Luk. 1. 69. Pſal. 148. 14.

and exalt the horn of his anointed] i. e. The Meſſiah, Jeſus Chriſt, of whom ſhe here propheſieth; and of whom David and Solomon were types, and in that ſenſe may alſo be here underſtood. Pſal. 89. 25.

V. 11. And the child did miniſter unto the Lord before Eli the Prieſt] i. e. According to Eli's direction he performed ſuch ſervices in the tabernacle as in reſpect of his tender years he was able to execute. For though as a Levite he might not enter upon theſe ſervices before he was twenty five years of age, yet as a Nazarite he had ſome ſpecial diſpenſation, being devoted and conſecrated unto God from his mothers womb.

V. 12. Now the ſons of Eli were ſons of Belial] See on ch. 1. 16. Deut. 13. 13. Iudg. 19. 22. 1 Kings 21. 10.

they knew not the Lord] i. e. Though by their education under a godly father they had a ſpeculative knowledg of God and his law, yet they had no practical, ſpiritual, efficacious and ſaving knowledg of faith cauſing them to believe what they knew; nor in reſpect of their calling & office were able either powerfully and profitably to teach others ſo as to work their hearts to the love and fear of God, or to bring forth the fruits of obedience in their own lives and converſations. And in this reſpect they are ſaid not to have known him at all. See Rom. 1. 28. Tit. 1. 16. 1 Ioh. 2. 4. Ier. 9. 3. 1 Cor. 15. 34.

V. 13. And the Prieſts cuſtome with the people was] i. e. A wicked innovation introduced, contrary to Gods law, by theſe curſed prieſts, and ſons of Belial, which comprized in it many heinous and enormous ſins, as ſhall appear in the particulars.

that when any man offered ſacrifice] i. e. Brought a ſacrifice to be offered by the Prieſts.

while the fleſh was in ſeething] They were ſo given to their appetite, that they would not ſtay till the fleſh was ſodden, according to the law, and then take that part which belonged unto them, but before God was ſerved they ſerved their own belly. This was their firſt ſin.

with a fleſh-hook] See Exod. 27. 3.

V. 14. all that the fleſh-hook brought up the Prieſt took for himſelf] Here was there ſecond miſcarriage, namely the ſin of Injuſtice, in taking away the peoples right, and converting it to their own uſe. For God had allowed them, as their portion, the right ſhoulder, the breſt, and cheeks, with the tongue: Which parts ſome think were allowed to put them in mind of their duty; the Cheeks and Tongue, to intimate that thoſe parts were to be employed by them in praiſing God and teaching his people; the Breaſt, becauſe that is the ſeat of the heart, which is that which God above all other parts requireth in his worſhip; the right Shoulder, which is as it were the arm and hand of the ſacrifice, to ſignifie that they muſt ſerve God with the hand as well as with the tongue, and joyn with their doctrine an holy life and converſation, to gain the more authority unto it, and adorn their profeſſion by performing all duties and actions of a godly life. But they were not contented with that portion which God had allowed, but out of covetouſneſs, greedineſs, and intemperance inchroached upon that which was due to others, and catched all that came to hand. See on ch. 1. 4.

So they did in Shiloh unto all the Iſraelites that came thither] Here is a double aggravation of their ſins; Firſt, they committed this rapine in Shiloh, where the Tabernacle was ſeated, and ſo in Gods preſence, in a ſpeciall manner. Secondly, they did not thus offend againſt ſome few, but even againſt the whole people of God which came to worſhip there.

V. 15. Alſo before they burnt the fat] Their third ſin was ſacriledge. For whereas they ought not to have taken their portion, before the Lord had his, that is, before the fat of the inwards, the liver, caul, and kidnies were burned, they exacted their fee firſt, not caring to give God his due, Neither did they wave the breſt and ſhoulder before the Lord, as acknowledging they had their portion from him as his free gift, but profanely ſeized upon it as their own due, Lev.7.3 4, 31,34. & 9.21.

Give fleſh to roſt for the Prieſt] Here is their fourth ſin, Daintineſs and Wantonneſs, taxed. They onely cared to pleaſe their palate and appetite, and neglected Gods commandment. For they would not be contented to eat ſod fleſh according to the law, but they muſt have it raw, that they might cook it ſo, as to pleaſe their licorous taſte.

V. 16. to burn the fat preſently] i. e. In the firſt place to offer it unto the Lord, as being his due, according to the law, Lev.3.3,4.

and then take as much as thy ſoul deſireth] Not regarding their own profit, but onely deſiring that God might be ſerved a right, according to his law.

and if not, I will take it by force] This was their fifth ſin about Gods ſacrifice, that they had no regard to law or juſtice, but acted what they pleaſed with Rapine and Violence, not ſtaying to receive their due from him that offered, but taking what, and when, and how they liſt.

V. 17. Wherefore the ſin of the young men was very great before the Lord] Though they ſlighted all they did, as tricks of youth, and acted all as demonſtrations of their power and privilege, yet they were heinous ſins in Gods ſight: I. Becauſe they were preſumptuous, and committed with an high hand againſt him; II. Becauſe they tended much to his diſhonour, in the profaning of his worſhip and abuſe of his ordinances; III. Becauſe theſe Prieſts were evill examples to Gods people, and by their practice either led them into all profaneneſs and atheiſm, whom they ought to have inſtructed in the knowledg of Gods law and the waies of godlineſs, in reſpect of their place and calling, or elſe cauſed them to abhorre Gods ſacrifices, and utterly to neglect his worſhip and ſervice, when as they ſaw it profaned by ſuch abominable impieties.

the offering of the Lord] Or, the gift of the Lord. i. e. the gift which was to be offered unto the Lord according to the law, together with the peace or thanks-offering, or the fleſh of the ſacrificed beaſt.

V.18. girded with a linnen Ephod] The Ephod was an habit appropriated to Gods ſervice: And it was of two kinds in reſpect of the materials: the one, of rich and coſtly ſtuff, proper onely to the high Prieſt; of which ſee Exod.28.4,6. the other, of linnen, for inferiour Prieſts and Levites, ch.22.18. which others alſo might uſe in Gods ſervice, 2 Sam. 6.14. See on Judg.8.27.

V. 19. Moreover his mother made him a little coat] As a token of her love and care over him, though he were abſent from her, and conſecrated to Gods ſervice; having alſo therein, it may be, another end, namely to give ſome thing towards his maintenance, he being unable in reſpect of his tender age to merit it by his ſervice in the tabernacle.

V. 20. And Eli bleſſed Elkanah and his wife] To wit, in the name and place of the Lord, as being his high Prieſt; and therefore they applying this bleſſing by faith did receive the fruit and benefit of it, as appeareth v.21.

for the loan which is lent] Or, petition which he asked. That is, in ſtead of the ſon dedicated to God, who was obtained by prayer.

V. 21. And the Lord viſited Hannah] i. e. According to Elies bleſſing, made her a fruitfull mother of many children. This is added to ſhew how efficacious the prayers of Gods faithfull Miniſters are: For no ſooner had Eli prayed, and bleſſed them, but preſently is mentioned the return of his prayers, in their fruitfulneſs whom he had prayed for.

And the child Samuel grew before the Lord] To wit, in ſtature, wiſdom, and all grace and goodneſs. So Luke 1.80. & 2.52. See on v.26.

V. 22. Now Eli was very old] This is added, either to aggravate his fault in not reproving and correcting the ſin of his ſons more ſharply and ſeverely, as became his old age; or rather to extenuate it, ſeeing he was ſo very old that he could not by converſing with his ſons himſelf take notice of their ſins in their ill adminiſtration, but as it was brought unto him by the reports and complaints of others; or, if he did, yet in reſpect of his very old age they did not much regard his reproofs, being themſelves men grown, married, and fathers of children.

and how they lay with the women that aſſembled at the door of the tabernacle] Heb aſſembled by troops. This is here brought in as another part of their abominable wickedneſs: Whereby they highly diſhonoured God, in that being his Prieſts they gave themſelves over to ſuch outragious folly and filthineſs; defiled and diſgraced themſelves, in doing ſuch abominations as were ſo unſuitable to their high and holy calling; and grievouſly offended the people of God, either encouraging them by their lewd example to commit the like villanies, (ſeeing like prieſts, like people) or cauſing them to abhor their profeſſion and the very worſhip of God it ſelf for their ſakes, becauſe they being ſo notoriouſly wicked were in reſpect of their place chief actors in it. Now what women theſe were whom they they thus abuſed, it is hard to ſay. Some think they were ſuch as out of their devotion reſorted to the ſanctuary for the performance of religious duties, as faſting, prayer, and the like: Such an one was Annah, Luk.2.37. And if ſo, then their impiety was the more abominable, in abuſing and enticing them to filthineſs who had conſecrated themſelves to Gods ſervice. Others ſuppoſe they were women which frequented the door of the tabernacle to perform ſome neceſſary ſervices belonging unto it, as waſhing, ſcouring, ſpinning, and the like, and there to receive inſtruction and directions from the Prieſts and Levites for the doing of that which ſhould be required of them, Exod.38.8. Others imagin they were women who after their child-bearing came to be purified, and to offer their gifts, according to the law, Lev.12.6. But we need not be very curious in enquiring which of theſe they were, or whether not all theſe, one with another, ſeeing it is not likely Eli's ſons were very curious in making their choice, but ready to take any opportunity to ſatisfie their luſt, when it was, at any time, or by any perſons, preſented unto them. The which their ſin was much aggravated, in that they had wives of their own, to preſerve them from theſe ſtrange luſts, ch.4.19.

V. 23. And he ſaid unto them, Why do you ſuch things?] Eli, being not onely a father, but alſo a chief Magiſtrate and Judge, ſhould have done no leſſe then have ſharply reproved them, yea, puniſhed them with all ſeverity, by caſting them out of the prieſts office, which they had ſo ſhameleſly profaned, yea, putting them to death for their adultery, according to the law, Lev.20.10. Deut.22.22, &c. but, like a fond and cockring parent, he contenteth himſelf with this mild admonition and gentle reproof for their abominable wickedneſs, Why do yee ſuch things?

For I hear of your evill dealings] He doth not ſo much as name unto them their horrid ſins in their kinds, the very naming whereof might have affected them with terror and ſhame; but onely carrieth it on in general terms, of evil dealings, as loth any further to diſpleaſe them, by ripping up their feſtred ſores to the bottom, that they might be cured.

by all this people] i. e. Who dwell at Shiloh, or that come hither to offer ſacrifice; all which take notice of your miſcarriages, and have reported them to me.

V. 24. Nay, my ſons: for it is no good report that I hear] He ſhould have ſaid, Wicked wretches that you are, and utterly unworthy to be called the ſons of a religious parent, rather a graceleſs and degenerous off-ſpring, and ſons of Belial, I hear of your horrid villanies and abominable wickedneſſe, for which you deſerve the hatred of God and men. But he minceth the matter, and doth not ſo much as give it the title of an evil fame, but onely that it was not a good report that he heard of them.

ye make the Lords people to tranſgreſs] Namely, by encouraging them to do the like wickedneſs by your example, who ſhould be their leaders in the waies of holineſs; or by cauſing them to neglect, yea, to abhor, God ſacrifices, when they ſee them ſo horribly profaned by your ill adminiſtration.

V. 25. If one man ſin againſt another, the Judge ſhall judge him] Heb. the gods ſhall judge him. i. e. the Magiſtrates, who are called Gods, Exod. 21.6. & 22.28. Pſal.82.1,6. The meaning is, If one man hath treſpaſſed againſt another, the Magiſtrate may take up the controverſie between them, by executing juſtice, and cauſing the delinquent to make ſatisfaction unto the partie whom he hath offended.

But if a man ſin againſt the Lord, &c.] i. e. Immediately, preſumptuoſly, and with an high hand, againſt knowledg, conſcience, Numb.15. 30. Who can mediate for ſuch, to work a reconciliation between ſinful man and this ſupream Majeſty? ſeeing the ſin is committed againſt the Judg himſelf, unto whom no ſatisfaction can be made by meer mortal man, to compoſe the difference, and procure peace between them, unleſs the ſinner turn from his ſin by unfained repentance, and laying hold upon Chriſt by a lively faith, hath him, by his mediation, to work his peace. But eſpecially what means of reconciliation could theſe men hope for, whileſt they did impenitently continue in their ſins, who being the Lords Prieſts, and ſo types of Chriſt, mediate, by offering ſacrifices, for the ſins of the people, were themſelves the chief offenders, deſpiſed and profaned thoſe ſacrifices which were the onely means of reconciliation, and cauſed them alſo to be abhorred by others? See ch.3. 14. & on Pſal.51.4.

Notwithſtanding they hearkened not unto the voice of their father, becauſe the Lord would ſlay them] i. e. Becauſe their ſin was ſo abominable and heinous in it ſelf, and ſo fearfully aggravated by divers circumſtances, as being committed by perſons of ſo high and holy a calling, againſt ſo many and great means and mercies as they enjoyed, & againſt their knowledg and the teſtimony of their own conſciences, willingly and willfully, rebelliouſly and preſumptuouſly, the Lord was reſolved not to paſs by and pardon it, nor that it ſhould be purged by ſacrifice nor offering for ever, ch.3.14. therefore as a righteous Judge he willingly ſuffered them to go on in their ſin, and gave them over to the hardneſs of their hearts, to add iniquity unto iniquity, Pſal.69.27. juſtly puniſhing one ſin with another, and with-drawing his grace, whereby they might have been reſtrained or brought to repentance, becauſe he was purpoſed to deſtroy them for their abominable wickedneſs. And hence it came to paſs, that being thus left to themſelves they became deaf to their fathers admonitions and reproofs. See 1 Kings 12.15. 2 Chron.25.16. Jer.11.14. & 14.11. Hebr.10.26. 1 John 5.16.

V. 26. And the child Samuel grew on, and was in favour, &c.] i. e. As he daily grew in years, ſo in grace and godlineſs, whereby he became acceptable both to God and men, Prov.3.4. Luk.1.80. & 2.52. Acts 2. 47. Rom.14.18. This is here inſerted, to magnifie Gods free grace & goodneſs, in that he was not corrupted by the wicked baſe example of his elders and ſuperiors, with whom he lived and converſed; and to aggravate the ſin of Eli's ſons, who being under the tuition and government of the ſame man, and enjoying the ſame means of good education, were yet never the better for it. This ſhould move all parents and governours to uſe their beſt endeavours to bring up thoſe under them in the nurture and fear of God, yet not to reſt herein as ſufficient, but continually to implore Gods bleſſing and the aſſiſtance of his holy Spirit, without which all their labours will be ſpent in vain, Pſal.127.1.

V. 27. And there came a man of God unto Eli] i. e Prophet raiſed by God extraordinarily for this ſervice, who in a ſpecial manner is entituled a man of God, becauſe he was his ambaſſadour, ſent immediately from him to do this meſſage. For whereas there were two ſorts of men thus imployed, one ordinary, in the common work of the Miniſtry, the other extraordinary, indeed with a prophetical ſpirit, this man of God was of this later kind, 2 Pet.1.21. 1 Tim.6.11. 2 Tim.3.17. Joſephus ſaith it was *S*amuel; and divers learned expoſitours are of his mind, becauſe ch. 3. 1. it is ſaid that in thoſe dayes there was no open viſion. And they ſay this minatorie meſſage is here ſet down by anticipation; and the ſtory of *S*amuels call, by an Hyſterosis, ch. 3. But ſeeing who this man of God was, is not expreſſed in the Scripture, wee need not curiouſly enquire after it.

Did I plainly appear] For, Did I not. See Job.20.4.

unto the houſe of thy father] i.e. To Aaron, the firſt founder of thy houſe and prieſt-hood: from whoſe ſon Ithamar Eli deſcended.

V. 28. And did I chooſe him out of all the tribes] God dealeth with Eli by way of expoſtulation, the more powerfully to convince him of his ſin and unthankfulneſs; q. d. Are all my ſpecial favours to thy fathers family above others come to this, that thou and thy ſons ſhould thus ungratefully abuſe them?

all the offerings made by fire] i. e. All that remained of thoſe offerings, when the fat of the inwards was burnt with fire, Lev.6.17. Deut. 18,1. Numb.18.8.

V. 29. Wherefore kick ye at my ſacrifice] Why do ye, like bruit beaſts, contemn and as it were trample my ſacrifices under your feet by your profane adminiſtration, and thereby alſo make them contemptible to the people? Here the ſin of Eli's ſons is charged upon him, becauſe having power in his hand he did not reſtrain and puniſh them, Deut, 32.15 and honoureſt thy ſons above me] i, e. By chooſing to pleaſe them rather then me; not puniſhing them for their ſins, nor turning them out of the prieſts office, which they have ſo ſhamefully profaned and abuſed, thou having ſufficient power in thy hand to do it.

to make your ſelves fat with the chiefeſt of all the offerings] i. e. Not contenting your ſelves with your own portion, you have ſacrilegiouſly incroached upon the fat of the offerings that belonged to me, and upon other parts alſo that were due unto the people; and all this to pleaſe and pamper your own bellies.

V. 30. I ſaid indeed, that thy houſe and the houſe of thy father ſhould walk before me for ever] i. e. Should be perpetually eſtabliſhed in the prieſthood. But this promiſe was onely conditional, not abſolute, i. e. ſo long as you carried your ſelves well, according to your high place and calling. And therefore ſeeing you have broken covenant with me by your profane and wicked courſes, I am no longer tyed to make good my promiſe. Now we do not read of any ſuch promiſe which God made either to Eli, or Ithamar his father, and therefore it is moſt likely that here is meant that general promiſe made to Aaron and his family, Exod. 28.43. & 29.9. that his whole ſeed ſhould enjoy the privilege of the Prieſthood; Which promiſe is now in part reverſed, as much as concerned Eli's poſterity, who, for the horrible impieties committed by his ſons, were in part cut off, ch. 22.18. and the reſt reduced to a low and mean condition, as is threatned v.36.

but now the Lord ſaith; Be it far from me] To wit, that according to that promiſe you ſhould walk before me for ever in the execution of the Prieſts office, ſeeing you have ſhamefully broken the condition of obedience: and baſely abuſed both your office and your ſelves.

them that honor me, I will honor, &c.] i. e. They that give glory to my holy Name, by worſhiping me aright, & advancing the means of my pure ſervice before my people, I will make them alſo to be held in honourable eſteem in their ſight; but they that diſhonour me, by cauſing my ſervice and ſacrifices to be deſpiſed, as you have done, I will bring them, by ſuch puniſhments as I will inflict upon them, into contempt and reproach. See Mal.2.9.

V. 31. I will cut off thine arm] i. e. Thy chief ſtrength; namely by taking away thy two ſons. For children are the ſtrength of their parents, eſpecially in their old age. See Job, 21.9. Pſal.37.17.

and the arm of thy fathers houſe] i. e. By cutting off part of thy poſterity, and by putting out the reſt from executing the prieſtly function, in which not onely their honour and dignity, but alſo all their power and authority among the people conſiſted. The firſt was done by Saul, ch. 22. 18, 19. and the later by Solomon many years after 1 Kings 2. 27. 35. And it is not ſaid that it ſhould be preſently executed, but expreſſed in the future, Behold, the dayes come, &c.

there ſhall not be an old man in thine houſe] i. e. Thy poſterity ſhall not live to reverend old age, but be cut off in their youth. This was fulfilled in his two ſons, who were ſlain in the field, ch.4.11, & ch.22. 18, 19. in a whole City of Prieſts, who by *S*auls bloudy command were all put to the ſword, except Abiathar, who lived to ſuffer much affliction with David, and to ſee himſelf degraded from the Prieſthood and confined by Solomon, 1 Kings 2.26, 27. *S*ome underſtand it, that there ſhould not be an elder in his poſterity, that is, one indued with wiſdome and counſel fit to ſit in their *S*anedrim, or to execute any publick office of his Magiſtracie.

V. 32. And thou ſhalt ſee an enemy in my habitation] Or, the affliction of the Tabernacle, for all the wealth which God would have given Iſrael. By enemy ſome underſtand the Philiſtims, who giving a great defeat to the Iſraelites, took the Ark captive, and deprived the tabernacle of it for the ſpace of ſeven moneths. This hapned ſoon after, in Eli's dayes. But others more probably (as appeareth by the coherence of this with that which followeth) underſtand it of future times; namely, that Eli ſhould not ſee it with his own eyes, but that his poſterity to their great grief ſhould behold theſe fearfull predictions verified, and ſhould ſee an enemy in Gods habitation, i. e. another high Prieſt and Prieſthood ſubſtituted in the Temple, in their room, whom they ſhould envie and hate as enemies, becauſe as rivals they ſhould enjoy their honour and power. This was accompliſhed by Solomon, who thruſt out Abiathar from the high prieſts office, and put Zadok in his room, 1 King.2.26, 27. Now becauſe poſterity are in the loyns of their parents, it is uſual in Scripture to ſpeak that of the Father which is not fulfilled in him, but in his iſſue; as we ſee in Jacobs bleſſing, Gen. 27. 27, 29. and the promiſe made to David, which was accompliſhed in Chriſt, 2 Sam.7.16.

in all the wealth which God ſhall give Iſrael] To wit, in the dayes of Solomon, when the Kingdome was in its greateſt glory, proſperity and riches; and ſo anſwerably the Prieſthood, in the chiefeſt plenty & dignity.

V. 33. And the man of thine] i. e. Of thy poſterity.

whom I ſhall not cut off from mine altar] i. e. Who ſhall outlive the ſlaughter of the Philiſtims, and maſſacre by Saul, and ſhall not be quite ejected from the prieſthood by Solomon.

ſhall be to conſume thine eyes, and grieve thine heart] Or, ſhould be Namely, if thou ſhouldſt live to ſee the miſery of thy poſterity, it would be unto thee ſuch a woful object of grief and ſorrow, that it would make thee weep out thine eyes to behold it, and oppreſs and even break thine heart to conſider it. But though thou thy ſelf ſhalt not live unto it, yet in thy poſterity thou ſhalt both ſee and feel it, even to the conſuming of their ſouls with grief and vexation.

V. 34. And this ſhall be a ſign unto thee] i. e. An evidence that I am a true Prophet ſent of God, and that all theſe threatnings ſhall in their due time be accompliſhed, that ſhall come upon thy two ſons] Thou thy ſelf ſhalt ſee theſe calamities begun in the death of thy two ſons, whereby thou maiſt be aſſured that all the reſt likewiſe according to my prediction ſhall come to paſs.

V. 35. And I will raiſe me up a faithfull Prieſt] To wit, Zadok, deſcended from Eleazar, 1 Chr.29.22. who was faithfull to God, and alſo to his Kings, David, and Solomon, unto whom he cleaved, according to Gods will revealed, and anointed Solomon King, when as Abiathar was in Adonijahs conſpiracy, for which he was depoſed from the Prieſthood, and Zadok put in his place, 1 Kings 2.35.

that ſhall do according to that which is in my heart] i. e. Both in anointing him King whom I have choſen, and in his faithful execution of his prieſtly office.

and I will build him a ſure houſe] i. e. By multiplying his iſſue, and continuing both him and his poſterity in the office of the high prieſt, and by cauſing them to live in an happy and proſperous condition in all reſpects, according to the promiſe made to Phinehas Zadoks progenitor, Numb.25.13. See 1 Kings 2.24. So this phraſe is uſed, Exod.1.21. 1 Sam.25.28. 2 Sam.7.11. 1 Kings 11.38. Iſa.22.23.

and he ſhall walk before mine anointed for ever] i. e. Shall perform ſuch ſervices as belong to the high prieſt, that is asking Counſel of God, offering ſacrifices, praying for him, and inſtructing him out of Gods Law, as occaſion ſhall be offered. Theſe duties Zadok and his ſons did perform to Solomon and his Succeſſours unto the Babyloniſh captivity, Ezek. 44. 15. and from thence (it is very probable) neer unto the coming of Chriſt; Of whoſe everlaſting Prieſthood this being but a type, was to give place, and to be aboliſhed as a ſhadow, when the antitype and ſubſtance was exhibited, who ſhould continue in the true Prieſthood for ever. In the mean time Zadok might be ſaid to walk before, not only Solomon, but alſo Chriſt, the onely true high Prieſt, in the faithful execution of his office, for ever, i. e. as long as he lived. The word anointed here intimateth that the preſent form of Government ſhould bee altered, and Monarchie eſtabliſhed in its room.

V. 36. every one that is left in thine houſe, ſhall come and crouch to him for a piece of ſilver] i. e. To Zadok and his poſterity, as it was fulfilled, 1 Kings 2. 26. Ezek.44.10.16. Neither could Abiathars ſmall means maintain himſelf and his family, after he was depoſed, without having ſome help and relief from the proviſions of the Tabernacle and Temple.

CHAP. III.

Verſ. 1. AND the child Samuel miniſtred unto the Lord before Eli] See on ch.2.11.

and the word of the Lord was precious] i. e. There were very few Prophets to whom it was revealed in this extraordinary manner; by reaſon whereof the word of the Lord was very precious, becauſe it was very rare, Pſal.74.9. Iſa.13.12.

there was no open viſion] i. e. Howſoever there were (though very few) ſome viſions to particular men in ſecret, which were not commonly known, as concerning their peculiar inſtruction and direction, as to Manoah and his wife, Judg. 13. yet the publick Miniſterie of prophets was very rare & ſcarce, and hardly any one known openly to the people; or if there were any ſuch viſions, they were not cleer and open, but ſo obſcure and dark that they were of little uſe, becauſe not underſtood. And this heavy judgment was inflicted upon them in theſe times for their neglect and contempt of Gods pure worſhip and ſervice, Amos 8, 12. and is here inſerted in honour of Samuel, ſeeing in him God was pleaſed to renew this gift of prophecy, which was intermitted and decayed. Whereof it is that *S*amuel is ſpoken of as the firſt of the Prophets, 2 Ch.36.18. Act.3.24. Heb.11.32, not becauſe God had given unto him this gift of prophecy before any other; for Adam, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, and Moſes were prophets as well as he;

but becauſe there having been an intermiſſion of it between him and them, it was in him renewed and reſtored.

V. 2. And it came to paſs at that time] To wit, when the word of the Lord was ſo rare and precious.

when Eli was laid down in his place] i. e. To take his reſt, in that lodging which belonged unto him as high Prieſt, neer unto the court of the Tabernacle.

and his eyes began to wax dim, that he could not ſee] i. e. Not ſo cleerly as in former times, ch. 4. 15. Which was alſo the caſe of Iſaac, Gen. 27. 1. and of Jacob, Gen. 48. 8, 10.

V. 3. And ere the lamp of God went out in the Temple] i. e. The light of the ſeven lamps in the golden candleſtick, Exod. 25. 31. which was appointed for the uſe of the Tabernacle, & was placed in the holy place, without the veil of the teſtimony, and was to burn from evening to morning, and therefore was watched all night, that it might be ſuppiyed with oyl, Exod. 27. 20, 21. & 30. 7, 8. Lev. 24. 3. 2 Chr. 13. 11. Hereby is implyed that this viſion was in the night, and not much before morning, when the light of the lamps went out.

and Samuel was laid down to ſleep] To wit, in the cells of the Levites, and in that amongſt them which was neereſt to the high prieſts lodging, becauſe his office being in a ſpecial manner to miniſter unto him, he was to be within hearing of his call, that he might come to do him ſervice early and late: Which Samuel accordingly performed with all diligence, as appeareth by the text.

V. 7. Now Samuel did yet not know the Lord, &c.] Or, Thus did Samuel before he knew the Lord, and before the word of the Lord was revealed unto him] i. e. Though Samuel knew the Lord in an ordinary manner, as other pious men did, yet he knew him not in that extraordinary manner peculiar to the prophets, whereby his Will concerning things to come was revealed by viſion, or voice; as the words following plainly ſhew, neither was the word of the Lord yet revealed unto him.

V. 8. And Eli perceived that the Lord had called the child] By his often coming to him upon miſtakes he plainly perceived that it was the Lord who had called him, and conſequently, that the heavy meſſage which he afterwards related was undoubtedly ſent unto him from God; Of which otherwiſe he might have been doubtful and ſuſpicious, it being hardly to be believed againſt himſelf, that the Lord would reveal his ſecret conſels to the high prieſt by a child, and uſe the pupill to inſtruct and admoniſh his tutor.

V. 10. And the Lord came and ſtood, and called as at other times] Before he onely called, and Samuel heard the voice, but ſaw nothing; for if any thing had viſibly appeared, he would ſurely have addreſſed himſelf to him that ſpake, and not have run unto Eli; But now it is ſaid, that he not onely called, as before, but alſo came and ſtood: Which makes it very probable, that God, or an angel at leaſt ſent from him, appeared unto Samuel in ſome viſible ſhape; as the Angel of the Lord is ſaid to have ſtood in the way of Balaams aſs, and ſhe to have ſeen him, Numb. 22. 22 —27.

Speak, for thy ſervant heareth] i. e. Attendeth, and is ready to obey. He doth not ſay, Speak, Lord, as Eli had taught him, but onely, Speak. And the cauſe of this omiſſion is probably thought to be, his being ſo deeply affected and amazed with Gods glorious voice and preſence, that he forgot in part what was taught him; As it is not unuſual with men to do, when they intend to deliver a ſet ſpeech unto their Sovereign, being unaccuſtomed to ſuch a preſence, and overawed with his Majeſty and authority.

V. 11. I will do a thing in Iſrael, at which both the ears of every one that heareth ſhall tingle] Hereby are meant the defeat of the Iſraelites, the taking of the ark, the death of Eli's ſons, the maſſacre at Nob, and the abdication and depoſing of Eli's poſterity from executing the Prieſts office; judgements ſo hideous and horrible, that the ears that heard of them ſhould tingle. This is a phraſe uſed in Scripture to ſignifie ſuch a great horror and aſtoniſhment upon the hearing of ſome terrible accident as doth weaken the very ſenſe and the organs of hearing, like a ſudden clap of thunder, or the report of a Cannon going off neer the ear. So 2 Kings 21. 12. Jer. 19. 3. This came to paſs ſoon after to Eli himſelf, and the wife of Pinehas; and, no doubt, in after-times alſo, when the judgments denounced were inflicted on Eli's poſterity.

V. 12. which I have ſpoken] By the man of God, ch. 2. 27.

when I begin, I will alſo make an end] i. e. I will not dally or delay, nor deſiſt from perfecting the work of my juſt vengeance threatned, when I have once begun it; and therefore by ſeeing the beginning they may aſſuredly conclude and expect the ending.

V. 13. I will judge his houſe for ever] i. e. Puniſh it untill it be utterly ruined. So Gen. 15. 14. that nation whom they ſhall ſerve, will I judge. Pſal. 119. 120. Prov. 19. 29.

for the iniquity which he knoweth] Not onely by the reports and complaints of all the people, ch. 2. 23. but alſo by the Prophet which I ſent unto him, ch. 2. 29. And hereby his ſin is much aggravated, in that, having had all their wickedneſs made known unto him, he had not taken any courſe to reſtrain them from it by inflicting upon them deſerved puniſhments.

becauſe his ſons have made themſelves vile] Or, accurſed. i. e. Baſe and contemptible, by their wicked practiſes; And not onely themſelves, but alſo Gods ſervice and ſacrifices, which the people abhorred becauſe of their wickedneſs, ch. 2. 17.

and he reſtrained them not] Heb. frowned not upon them. i. e. He was ſo far from reſtraining them, by exerciſing that authority which he had over them, as a father, as high prieſt, and as Judge, and uſing that ſeverity which the heinouſneſs of their wickedneſs deſerved, that he did not ſo much as diſcourage them in it by frowning upon them. See 1 King 1. 6.

V. 14. I have ſworn unto the houſe of Eli, that the iniquity of Eli's houſe ſhall not be purged] Or, if it ſhall be purged. A form of an oath, in which ſomething is concealed: q. d. Let me not live, or, Let me never be counted true, if it ſhall ever be purged. So Pſal. 95. 11. & 89. 3, 35. See on Ruth. 1. 17.

with ſacrifice nor offering for ever] i. e. Neither with bloody ſacrifices, nor any other oblations. Whereby is meant, that for the horrid wickedneſs of Eli's ſons God would withdraw his grace from them, and leave them to themſelvs to go on in their ſins without repentance, to their utter and endleſs perdition; and alſo, that the temporal puniſhment denounced againſt their poſterity ſhould not be prevented or averted by any ſacrifices or oblations, though upon unfeigned repentance they might be freed from death eternal. See ch. 2. 25.

V. 15. And Samuel —— opened the doors of the houſe] In the wilderneſs the Tabernacle had no doors, but only curtains, that it might be more eaſily be removed from place to place; but now it was fixed in Shiloh, it ſeemeth it was incloſed and fenced about with a ſolid and firm building, which had doors belonging to it, and within which were the lodgings of the Prieſts & Levites adjoyning to the Tabernacle. See on ch. 1. 9. Theſe doors were opened and ſhut by the Levites in their courſe, and now by Samuel. And this ſheweth Samuels great modeſty and humility, in that his ſpirit was not raiſed by the former viſion, wherein God had appeared and ſpoken to him, conferring upon him that ſingular gift of prophecie, but he was ſtill diligent in executing of his office, though but mean, of opening and ſhutting the doors of the Sanctuary; if at leaſt any thing may be counted mean which appertained to Gods ſervice. See 1 Chr. 23. 5. Pſal. 84. 10.

And Samuel feared to ſhew Eli the viſion] Or, the things revealed by this viſion] i. e. Though he knew he ought not to conceal it, ſeeing it was a matter of great importance, and which God had purpoſely revealed unto him that he might make it known unto him who was chiefly concerned in it, yet he was fearfull and loth to do it, either becauſe he was unwilling to be the meſſenger of ſuch ſad tydings, which would exceſſively grieve the heart of his Governour, whom he ſo dearly loved; or leſt he ſhould be taxed of pride and ſaucineſs, for making ſo bold with him who was ſo much above him, as to denounce from God ſuch heavy judgments againſt him and all his poſterity; or finally, becauſe he thought that Eli would be offended with him for relating ſuch an unpleaſing truth unto him, who was ſo many wayes his Superior, his aged Tutor, the high Prieſt, & ſupream Judge of all the people, And yet for all this, his ſo long concealing of it, till it was preſſed out of him by Eli's earneſt adjuration, muſt be acknowledged as Samuels frailty and weakneſs, ſeeing he was bound to deliver Gods Word and Meſſage without any diſputes or carnall reaſonings.

V. 16. Then Eli called Samuel] Knowing that by viſion God had appeared unto him, he could not reſt till he had told him the ſum and ſubſtance of it.

V. 17. What is the thing that he hath ſaid unto thee? I pray thee hide it not from me] Being ſo lately and throughly convinced of his own and his ſons heinous ſins, and terrified with Gods heavy judgements denounced againſt them by the man of God ſent unto him, and now knowing that God had appeared unto Samuel, out of guilt of conſcience he ſuſpecteth and feareth the things revealed in that viſion did chiefly concern him and his ſons, and his heart miſgave him, that it would prove ſome ſad prediction of their ruine and deſtruction; And this made him ſo eager and earneſt in preſſing Samuel to diſcover preſently the whole truth of the matter, conjuring him not to conceal any thing from him under the penalty of a fearful curſe.

God do ſo to thee, and more alſo] See on Ruth 1. 17. and 1 Kings 22. 16. Matth. 26. 63.

V. 18. And he ſaid, It is the Lord] i. e. It is Jehovah, the Creator and Governour of all things, who juſtly threatneth theſe heavy judgements againſt me and my family for our ſins, who is only wiſe and knoweth what is beſt and fitteſt to be done for his own glory and our good and though he hath abſolute power over the creatures to do with them what he pleaſeth, yet he is ſo infinitely good in himſelf, and gracious to all that depend upon him and ſubmit to his holy Will, that nothing ſhall befall them but what he will turn to their preſent and everlaſting good: And therefore, howſoever theſe judgements be very heavy which he hath denounced againſt me and my houſe, yet I have no juſt cauſe to murmur againſt him, but muſt patiently bear what he ſhall be pleaſed to inflict.

let him do what ſeemeth him good] i. e. Not what I think beſt, who know not what is good for me, but what he pleaſeth, who being infinitely wiſe knoweth better then I, how to diſpoſe of me for his own glory and my everlaſting good. So David, 2 Sam. 15. 26. Pſal. 39. 9. and Hezekiah, Iſai. 39. 8. and our bleſſed Saviour himſelf, Math. 26. 39. Hereby it appeareth, that though Eli had his great failings, and deſervedly ſuffered for his grievous ſins, yet he was dear unto God, as being his faithful child and ſervant, who repented of his ſins, judged himſelf, with all meekneſſe and humility denyed his own will, and patiently ſubmitted himſelf and all his to the good pleaſure of Almighty God.

V. 19. And Samuel grew] Not onely in ſtature and ſtrength, from childhood and youth unto ripe age, but alſo in grace and goodneſs, being in favour both with God and man, ch. 2. 21, 26.

and the Lord was with him] In a ſpeciall and extraordinary manner, favoring and multiplying his graces in him, and bleſſing and proſpering him in all that he took in hand. See Gen. 39. 2, 21.

and did let none of his words fall to the ground] A metaphor borrowed from things which by falling periſh, as glaſſe, or water ſpilt on the ground. For words cannot properly be ſaid to fall. Hereby is meant, that what he ſpoke or propheſied came to paſſe and proved true in the event, and nothing vain and of no effect.

V. 20. And all Iſrael from Dan even to Beer ſheba] i.e All the people inhabiting the whole land from one end to the other, Northward from Dan, and Southward to Beer-ſheba. See on Judg. 20. 1.

knew that Samuel was eſtabliſhed to be a Prophet of the Lord] Or, faithfull, i.e Knew that the Lord had effectually called and ſent him to execute this prophetical office, and had firmly ſetled him in it, by making good his own word in his mouth, and bringing all things to paſſe according to his prediction, Deut 18. 22.

V. 21. And the Lord appeared again in Shiloh] i.e. After the long intermiſſion and ceſſation of prophetical viſions, whereby the word of the Lord was become rare and precious, v. 1. the Lord renewed this gift of propehcie by appearing in Shiloh unto Samuel. Some read, And the Lord continued to appear in Shiloh, after the Lord had begun to reveal himſelf to Samuel.

by the word of the Lord] To wit, which was revealed to Samuel by dreams and viſions, that he might reveal it unto the people. So ch. 4. 1. Others underſtand, and very probably, the eternall and eſſentiall Word and Wiſdom of the Father, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Ioſh. 1. 1. by whom the Lord revealed his Word and Will unto Samuel in propetical viſions, and not by viſible and bodily apparitions, as he had done to Ioſhua,, Gideon and Manoah.

CHAP. IV.

Verſ. 1. ANd the word of Samuel came to all Iſrael] Or, came to paſſe So Gen. 24. 15. and 41. 13.. i.e The word which God had revealed unto him, concerning the heavy judgments to be inflicted upon Eli & his family, and all the reſt of the people for their heinous ſins, came, i.e. was not only preached unto them by Samuel, to bring them to repentance, but alſo, when they repented not, was verified in the event related in this chapter.

Now Iſrael went out againſt the Philiſtims to battel] The cauſe of the war between theſe two nations was this; The Philiſtims country was a part of the land of Canaan, which God had given to the Iſraelites, and fell unto the lot of Iudah. But they foreſlowing the time of caſting them out, appointed by God at their firſt entrance into the land, were not able by reaſon of their ſins of apoſtaſie and idolatry, to do it afterward, though they attempted it. Hereupon there was a continuall war between them, in which ſometime the one and ſometime the other party prevailed. And now it ſeemeth the Philiſtims had the upper hand, as formerly in the dayes of Samſon, and holding the Iſraelites in ſubjection put them to pay tribute, which they (being grown to ſome more ſtrength by reaſon of the great ſlaughters which Samſon had made of their people in his life, but eſpecially of their Princes and Commanders at his death, and alſo increaſing in it by reaſon of the peace which ever ſince that time they enjoyed) now refuſing to pay, and the Philiſtims invading their countrey, they raiſe an army in their own defence, and come out againſt them to battel; God by his wiſe providence inclining their hearts thereunto, that thereby he might execute his judgements upon the people, eſpecially upon Eli and his ſons, according to the prediction by the man of God and Samuel.

and pitched beſide Eben-ezer] That is, The ſtone of help. It was ſet up by Samuel between Mizpeh and Shen, upon occaſion of that victory the Iſraelites got over the Philiſtims, ch. 7. 12. And is ſo called here by anticipation, becauſe it was the name of it, not when the Iſraelites incamped there, but afterwards, when this ſtory was written: For otherwiſe at this time it might rather be called The ſtone of ſlaughter then The ſtone of help and the Philiſtims pitched in Aphek] Or, beſides Aphek i.e. Not in the city it ſelf, but in the territory adjoyning, v. 2. This city belonged to Iudah. Ioſh. 15. 53. being called there Aphekah, and bordered upon the Philiſtims. There was another city of this name, in the tribe of Aſher, Ioſh 19. 30.

V. 2. when they joyned battel] Heb. when the battel was ſpread.

V. 3. Wherefore hath the Lord ſmitten us to day before the Philiſtims] They thought there was ſome great and extraordinary cauſe why the Lord, who ordereth the ſucceſs of all battels at his pleaſure, ſhould give over his own people to be ſlaughtered by the uncircumciſed Philiſtims, but they could not gueſs what it might be, not thinking on or laying to heart, the great wickedneſſe, and heinous ſins that reigned amongſt both Prieſts and people; as the profanation of Gods ſacrifice and ſervice by abominable innovations, rapine and ſacrilege, and hereupon the contempt and neglect of Gods worſhip and holy ordinances; the whoredom of their chief Prieſts, imitated doubtleſs by the people corrupted, by their lewd example; together with the ſhameful idolatry of thoſe times, which afterwards Samuel in a good part reformed, ch. 7. 3. and at which alſo the Pſalmiſt pointeth, ſpeaking of theſe times, Pſal. 78. 58—64. In theſe ſins they continued without repentance, notwithſtanding that God had ſent his Prophet, and Samuel after him, to forewarn them of judgements neerly approaching. Yet for all this, they knew no cauſe why God ſhould deliver them into the hands of their enemies, as thinking they ſhould be born out in all their wickedneſs, only becauſe they were the ſeed of Abraham and Iſrael, and had the Tabernacle and Ark, the legal ceremonies and ſacrifices, the outſide and external parts of worſhip, and made a bare profeſſion of religion, though in their lives they denied the power thereof.

let us fetch the ark of the Covenant of the Lord] After long debate, at laſt they conclude, not conſulting with God, nor adviſing with Samuel, to ſend for the ark of the covenant, (ſo called, becauſe the two tables of the law, containing the covenant between God and his people, were reſerved in it) as thinking that the abſence of it in the time of battel was the cauſe of their defeat. And hereby they ſhewed that they put more confidence in the ark, which was but a viſible ſign of Gods preſence, then in his promiſes apprehended by faith.

that when it cometh among us it may ſave us out of the hand of our enemies] They had a ſtrong opinion, that the being of the ark in the camp would be very efficacious for their good ſucceſs, and obtaining victory over their enemies, becauſe it was a ſign of Gods preſence, who is ſaid to dwell between the Cherubins; and he having power enough in his hands, it was not likely he would ſuffer his uncircumciſed enemies to prevail againſt them, and ſo deliver the ark, which was ſo precious unto him, to be taken and carried captive, and to be profaned and abuſed by their unhallowed hands, whenas he would not ſuffer his own people, no not an holy Levite, ſo much as to touch it, without ſevere puniſhing his preſumption, Numb. 4. 15. 2 Sam. 6. 6, 7. Again, they had found by experience of former times that they had moſt prevailed over their enemies when they had the ark of God amongſt them, as at the ſiege of Jericho, Joſh. 6. 11. and the expedition againſt the Midianites, Numb. 31. 6. and that they did not proſper in their wars when it was abſent, as Numb. 14. 44, 45. And this was the cauſe why in after-times they uſed to carry the ark with them into the field, when they went out to fight againſt their enemies, ch. 14. 18. & 2 Sam. 11. 11. And this made them now to truſt in the viſible preſence of the Ark more then in the gracious preſence and aſſiſtance of God, of which they could not juſtly conceive any hope ſo long as they continued in their ſins without repentance, and had not reconciled themſelves unto him. See the quite different behaviour of holy and humble David, 2 Sam. 15. 24. &c.

of the Lord of hoſts] i.e. Supreme General and Commander of all Armies, both of Angels in heaven and men upon earth, and who hath an almighty power in his hand to order and diſpoſe of all martial affairs, and to give victory to whom he pleaſeth: Job. 25. 3.

V. 4. which dwelleth between the Cherubins] Theſe were images repreſenting Angels, having faces of men, and wings, and were by Gods own appointment made and placed over the Ark, and covered with their wings the mercy-ſeat, that men might not prie unto Gods ſecrets. From hence God gave his anſwers and oracles to Moſes and Aaron, and afterwards, when he was by the way of Urim and Thummim conſulted by the high Prieſt in weighty and difficult caſes, Exod. 25. 22. Num. 7. 89. See 2 Kings 19. 15. 2 Sam. 6. 2. Pſal. 18. 1. & 99. 1.

and the two ſons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, were there] i.e. Firſt at the Tabernacle, to fetch the Ark out of the Holy of holies, and then in the Camp, whither they brought it, and did there accompany it, Numb. 4. 15. This was ſo ordered by Gods ſpecial providence, that when the day was loſt, and people routed and put to flight, or killed on the place, they alſo attending the ark, and it may be defending it againſt the Philiſtims, might be ſlain, according to that prediction of the man of God, Chap. 2. 44, 34.

V. 5. ſo that the earth rang again] With rebound or Echo of their ſhout.

V. 6. And they underſtood] By their ſcouts and ſpies.

V. 7. And the Philiſtims were afraid: for they ſaid, God is come into the camp] i.e. The God of Iſrael, who is ſo ſtrong in battels, is come to aſſiſt them, and fight againſt us, ſo as now we have not men to reſiſt, but even God himſelf, Exod. 14. 25.

Wo unto us: for there hath not been ſuch a thing heretofore] Heb. yeſterday or third day. i.e. They have never uſed hitherto to bring the Ark into the field. But this being their chief ſtrength, they repoſe in it all their confidence, as appeareth by their great ſhout, as though already they had got the victorie.

V. 8. out of the hand of theſe mighty Gods] They ſpeak impiouſly of the onely true God, after their own idolatrous manner, who worſhiped many Gods or idols.

Theſe are the gods that ſmote the Ægyptians with all the plagues in the wilderneſs. Or, neer the wilderneſs. Or, and in the wilderneſs. The ten plagues were inflicted on them in the land of Ægypt, and not in the Wilderneſs; but yet becauſe the greateſt plague was the drowning of all their hoſt in the red Sea, which bordered on the Wilderneſs of Etham, & upon which their dead carkaſes were caſt up, therefore they name this, as being the cloſe of all, Exod 13. 20. & 14. 27. & 15. 22.

V 9. that ye be not ſervants unto the Hebrews, as they have been to you] Judg. 13. 1. This they add, to animate and encourage one another to fight it out couragiouſly to the laſt man; ſervitude being a baſe condition, and to liberal and ingenuous natures worſe then death it ſelf. But that is the worſt ſervitude, when men are conſtrained as ſlaves not onely to ſerve their enemies, but ſuch enemies as having been ſlaves to them have ſuffered many indignities and much hard uſage from them, ſeeing they will be ſure to revenge themſelves on them, when they are once fallen into their hands.

V. 10. fled

V. 10. fled every man to his tent] i. e. To his own dwelling. So ch. 13.2. 2 Kings 12.16.

there fell of Iſrael thirty thouſand footmen] For the armies of the Iſraelites conſiſted of only footmen, they not uſing in their battles horſes or chariots, becauſe the Lord would not have them to aſcribe the glory of their victories to their own ſtrength, but to himſelf alone, from whom they obtained them. See Joſh. 11.6,9. Pſal. 20.7. Some ſay the word footmen is not oppoſed to horſemen, but ſignifieth men of perfect age and able bodies, ſuch as by reaſon of ſtrength were well able to walk and march on foot, and needed not as young children, and aged or feeble perſons, horſes or waggons to carry them. See Exod. 12.37. Numb. 1.45,46.

V. 11. And the Ark was taken] So Pſal. 78.61.

Hophni and Phinehas were ſlain] Heb. dyed. So Pſal. 78.64. according to the prediction, ch. 2.34.

V. 12. with his clothes rent] A ceremony uſed in thoſe daies in time of mourning, to expreſs their ſorrow for ſin, whereby they acknowledged that grief did even rent their hearts, and that they thought themſelves unworthy to have any clothes to cover their nakedneſs, or keep them from the injuries of the weather. See on Joſh. 7.6.

and with earth upon his head] Hereby they acknowled they were worthy of death, and deſerved by their ſin to be as far under the earth as they were above it. So Jacob, Gen. 37.34. See on 2 Sam. 1.2.

V. 13. Eli ſat upon a ſeat by the way-ſide, watching] i. e. Expecting news from the Camp, and the iſſue of the fight. See on v. 18.

For his heart trembled for the Ark of God] i. e. Partly out of guilt & fear, in reſpect of thoſe ſad meſſages ſent unto him by the man of God & Samuel, and partly out of zeal for Gods glory and the good of the people. He feared leſt the ark, the holy ſign of Gods preſence, ſhould fall into the hands of the uncircumciſed Philiſtims, to be profaned and abuſed by them, and in the mean time Gods own people be deprived of the comfort of it.

all the City cried out] i. e. Lamented for that great defeat, and the taking of the Ark.

V. 14. And the man came in haſtily, and told Eli] In a raſh and paſſionate manner he reported all his ſad news at once, and not by degrees, one thing after another, that by the ſlowneſs of the relation, the former grief and loſs being ſomewhat digeſted, Eli might be the better prepared to hear of another; Which was the cauſe that it made ſuch a violent impreſſion into his heart that the quite ſunk under the weight of it.

V. 15. and his eyes were dim] Heb. ſtood. Were ſo ſet in his head, that, wanting natural moyſture and vivacity of ſpirits, he could not eaſily move and turn them about. See ch. 3.2. And this was the cauſe why ſitting on a ſeat by the way-ſide he ſaw not the man as he paſſed by, and ſo was unacquainted with his ſad tydings, till in ſome generall manner he took notice of it by he cries and clamours of the people in the City.

V. 17. Hophni and Phinehas are dead] i. e. Slain, v. 11.

V. 18. when he made mention of the Ark of God] He endured with ſome patience to hear of the ſlaughter of ſo many thouſands of the army, and the death of both his ſons, being things which themeſſages he had received from God made him expect: but when he reported that the ark of God was taken, he fell into ſuch an extaſie of grief as quite broke his heart, and cauſed him to ſink down into a deadly ſwoon, becauſe that loſs was more then he looked for, and evils that are not foreſeen are moſt grievous, the mind not being prepared to bear them. Yet ſome conceive this ſad accident was alſo foretold. See on ch. 2.32.

he fell from off the ſeat backward by the ſide of the gate] i. e. Either the gate of the City, where he cauſed a ſeat to be ſet up, on purpoſe for him to ſit on, whileſt he waited to hear the news: or the gate of the Tabernacle, where he was accuſtomed to ſit, ch. 1.9. if at leaſt it were ſo neer the way-ſide from the camp that it was fit for this uſe. But the former ſeemeth for me the more likely. See on Gen. 7.22.

and his neck brake, and he dyed] This was an heavy judgment, but moſt juſt from God, and in a way of retaliation and requital, that Eli, who being admoniſhed of his ſin, would not amend it, by bowing the ſtiff neck of his rebellious ſons with ſevere puniſhments ſhould thus have his own neck broken; both becauſe, being an indulgent father, he had not by ſevere diſcipline reſtrained them from their looſe and lewd courſes in due time, whileſt, they being young, there was hope, Prov. 19.18. and alſo becauſe, being ſupreme Magiſtrate, he had not cut them off when they were become deſperately wicked: But his ſtate in reſpect of eternity, notwithſtanding this temporal judgment, of a ſudden and unnatural death, may be happy and bleſſed, ſeeing excepting theſe failings in reſpect of his ſons, there are many evidences, in the ſtory, of his piety and integrity.

for he was an old man and heavy] Here the inferior and the inſtrumental cauſes of his fall and death are related, namely, that being blind, corpulent and unwieldy, he was not able to ſhift for himſelf: yet though he had been young and active, it would not have prevented it, his heart being broken by the former ſad and ſudden relation, and he fallen into a deadly ſwoon.

V. 19. neer to be delivered] Or, to cry out.

ſhe bowed her ſelf and travelled] As it is uſual with women when their pains and throws of child-bearing come upon them, as they did now upon her, by hearing upon a ſudden this woful news.

V. 20. Fear not, for thou haſt born a ſon] This was a ſingular comfort in it ſelf for a woman in her caſe, to make her forget her former ſorrows, Joh. 16.21. But as it gave no comfort to Rachel at the birth of Benjamin, Gen. 35.17,18. ſo much leſs to this woman, who was in a ſadder condition, in reſpect of the great overthrow of Gods people, the death of her husband and father, but eſpecially the taking of the Ark. Theſe made ſuch a deep impreſſion of grief in her heart, that ſhe ſlighted this ordinary comfort, as not worth the regarding.

V. 21. And ſhe named the child Ichabod] i. e. Where is the glory? or, There is no glory, ſeeing the ark, which was the glory of Iſrael, as being a ſign of Gods preſence and protection, was carried away captive by the uncircumciſed Philiſtims. It is called the glory of the Lord, Pſal. 26.8. & 78.61. Herein this pious woman ſhewed her love to God, and her zeal to his pure religion, ſeeing in compariſon of them ſhe regarded not either father or husband, or the fruit of her womb, her onely ſon.

V. 22. And ſhe ſaid, The glory is departed from Iſrael] By repeating the ſame words ſhe more fully expreſſed the greatneſs of her grief. But as herein ſhe ſhewed her zeal for Gods glory, ſo not without ſome failing and ſtaggering in her faith, ſeeing Gods preſence was not ſo inſeparably tyed to the ark, the viſible ſign thereof, that it muſt needs fail when it was taken away. Yea, it followed not, that the Church and Kingdome of Iſrael muſt thereby needs come to ruine, ſeeing they were not grounded upon the preſence of the Ark, but upon Gods promiſes, that they ſhould continue to the coming of the Meſſiah, when as, the partition-wall being broken down, both Jews and Gentiles ſhould become one Kingdom and myſtical body under Chriſt their King and Head: Upon which promiſes, as upon a firm foundation, ſhe ought to have built her faith, and not upon the preſence of the Ark.

V. 2. into the houſe of Dagon] That is, into the Temple of their idol Dagon. Of which ſee on Judg. 16.23.

and ſet it by Dagon] Either as a trophee of their victory, to be ſeen of all the people that came to worſhip that idol, that they might aſcribe the glory thereunto, by whoſe power and aſſiſtance they had ſubdued their enemies, and taken the Ark captive, which was their chief ſtrength wherein they truſted. Or, as others think, (but not ſo probably) having an high eſteem of it, and the efficacie and vertue of its preſence, as as appeareth ch. 4.7,8. they ſet it upon the moſt honourable place, even neer unto their idol.

V. 3. And when they of Aſhdod] i. e. The prieſts of Dagons temple, roſe early] To ſee how it fared with the ark and their idol.

Dagon was faln upon his face to the earth] When the Iſraelites gloried in the Ark as their chief ſtrength, yet ſtill continued in their ſins, the Lord cauſed it to be carried away captive: And now when there was no hope, their enemies triumphing over them and the Ark alſo, the Lord magnifyeth his power and glory, by vanquiſhing their idol even in his own temple, and cauſing him to fall down flat on his face before his Ark. For as nature admits not two Suns in the firmament, nor monarchical policy two Kings in the common-wealth at the ſame time; ſo the onely true God, who is jealous of his glorie, admitteth no corrivalls, nor will ſuffer idols to ſtand in competition with him, 2 Cor. 6.14,15. If he be preſent in his Ark, Dagon muſt fall. Thus when the true Religion is ſet up, after it hath been long ſuppreſſed and as it were captivated by its enemies, Superſtition and Idolatry will fall down flat before it. So when Jeſus Chriſt, the eternal Word and Wiſdom of his Father, of whom the Ark was a type, was incarnate, and as the onely true light ſhined in the world, all heatheniſh Oracles and diabolical deluſions, at Delphos and elſewhere, ceaſed; and the devils were fain to acknowledge him to be the ſon of God, Matth. 8.29.

V. 4. behold, Dagon was faln upon his face to the ground] After his firſt fall they ſet him up again, and in all likelihood, concealing it from the people, uſed their beſt endeavours to faſten him ſure in his place, to prevent the like danger. And if their endeavours had taken effect, they would not have aſcribed his fall to the Ark ſtanding by. But now falling the ſecond time, they were convinced of the true cauſe, and could not attribute it to any accident, as otherwiſe they would, & therefore they plainly acknowledg it, v. 7. One would think this ſhould have made them to have ſeen the omnipotency of the onely true God of Iſrael, and the vanity and impotency of their idol, who could neither keep himſelf from falling, nor riſe again till they ſet him up, and ſo to have cleaved to the one, and forſaken the other: But there is not any vertue in miracles to perſwade of themſelves, when as the Spirit of God worketh not with them.

and the head of Dagon and both the palms of his hands were cut off] The head being the ſeat of wiſdom, and the hands the inſtruments of working, the Lord, by cauſing theſe parts of Dagon to be cut off, would ſignifie to thoſe that did worſhip him, that there was in him, neither wiſdom to rule and direct, nor power to act and execute; no ability either to foretel things to come, or to do either good or evil, Iſai. 41.22,23.

upon the threſhold] God by his providence cauſed the head and hands of Dagon to be cut off upon the threſhold, by which, all, even the very meaneſt of the people, did enter into the idol-temple, treading & trampling upon it with their feet, to ſhew unto all that came in, the baſeneſs of that they came to worſhip, and to deter them from proſtituting and proſtrating ſtrating themſelves before ſuch an impotent idol, as could not keep himſelf from being ruined upon ſo contemptible a place.

onely the ſtump of Dagon was left to him] Heb. onely Dagon was left. That is, the ſiſhy part was chiefly left, from the middle downward. For though ſome other parts remained, as the arms, ſhoulders, and breſt, yet they were diſmembred from the head and hands, and battered and broken with the fall.

V. 5. Therefore neither the prieſts of Dagon, nor any that come into Dagons houſe, tread on the threſhold] This they forbore to do either out of ſuperſtitious devotion, as thinking the threſhold holy, becauſe Dagons head and hands had touched it; and ſo inſtead of giving glory to God, by whoſe almighty power their idol was deſtroyed, they did the more diſhonour him, by adding to their idolatry a further degree of blind ſuperſtition. Or elſe they did it out of abhorrency, the threſhold having been the cauſe or means whereby their beloved idol was ruined and defaced; even as a man will abhor to touch that ſword wherewith his deareſt friend hath been killed and ſlaughtered. But whatſoever they intended, God in his providence uſed their ſuperſtition as a means to perpetuate the memory of this famous miracle, in cauſing Dagon to fall before the Ark, to his own glory, and the ſhame of idols and idolatry, which otherwiſe in all likelihood would have been quickly forgotten. *S*ee on Zeph. 1. 9.

of Dagon] That is, of Dagons temple.

unto this day] By which is meant either the time when this ſtory was written, or ſome long and indefinite time not preciſely expreſſed; or, that they continued this ſuperſtition by a perpetual and immutable ordinance. *S*ee Joſh. 4. 9.

V. 6. But the hand of the Lord was heavy upon them of Aſhdod] i. e. He viſited them with a grievous puniſhment; and becauſe they would not lay to heart the judgment executed upon their idol, but continued ſtill in their idolatry and blind ſuperſtition, and would not return the Ark to its own place, and ſo robbed him of his glorie, he took vengeance upon them in their own perſons, and inflicted that ſore plague of Emerods in their hinder and ſecret parts, a diſeaſe not onely painful, but alſo ignominious in the cure, and ſo put them to a perpetual reproach, Pſal. 78. 66.

and he deſtroyed them] This I conceive is to be underſtood in the general, That he conſumed them with divers mortal puniſhments, which are afterwards particularly expreſſed; As the Emerods, which were deadly unto them, accompanied with ſome other grievous diſeaſe no leſs dangerous and deſperate, which ſeemeth to be implyed by that deadly deſtruction mentioned v. 11. which if any eſcaped, and died not, they were ſmitten with the Emerods, v. 12. And beſides, theſe perſonal puniſhments, their countrey alſo was deſtroyed with mice, whereby they were in danger to be deſtroyed by famine, ch. 6. 5. Now of this diſeaſe of the Emerods there are two ſorts; one, cauſing outward knobs and ſwellings, which may more eaſily be come at and cured; the other, ſecret and inward in the gut, called with us blind piles, becauſe they cannot be ſeen, which as they are moſt painful, ſo alſo more hardly cured, it being not eaſie to apply any medicine unto them. And of this ſort were thoſe here ſpoken of, as is moſt properly implyed by the phraſe of ſmiting them in the ſecret parts, v. 9. Which was no doubt very grievous, when as God purpoſely ſet it on.

V. 7. The Ark of the God of Iſrael ſhall not abide with us] They ſuſpected it was the cauſe of all their miſery, becauſe theſe evils had not befallen other cities, whither the Ark came not; nor their city, before it was placed among them.

for his hand is ſore upon us, and upon Dagon our god] Upon us, by inflicting on us theſe painful and mortal diſeaſes; on the idol, by breaking it in pieces. By which puniſhments, wherein God dealt with them by way of retaliation, they might have come, had they not been ſtark blind, to a ſight of their ſins. For as they had diſhonoured God by carrying away captive his Ark, and ſlaughtering his people in an unlawful war, ſo the Lord gained glory to himſelf by inflicting heavy puniſhments upon their idol and themſelves, bringing upon them both ſhame and confuſion. Where obſerve by the way, how ſhort and momentany are both the joyes of the wicked, and the calamities of Gods people. The Philiſtims lately triumphed and inſulted with much pride both over Iſrael and God himſelf; but now they are called to account, and the revenging hand of God lyeth heavy both upon them and their idol: whereby way is made to return the Ark back to Gods people, and with it the comfortable aſſurance of his preſence and protection.

V. 8. What ſhall we do with the ark of the God of Iſrael] They were very loth to part with the Ark, not out of any love they bore unto it, but becauſe they thought the Iſraelites repoſed in it their confidence, and would be more valiant and couragious when they enjoyed it, and more timorous and heartleſs in the abſence of it.

Let the ark of the God of Iſrael be carried about unto Gath] This was another of their five principal Cities, near unto the ſea. See on Amos 6. 2. It was alſo called Metheg-Ammah, becauſe ſituate on a little hill called Ammah. Compare 2 Sam. 8. 1. with 1 Chron. 18. 1. Unto this City by common conſent the Ark is carried, either out of hope that change of place would alter the effect, or at leaſt to make trial whether thoſe heavy puniſhments befell the Aſhdodites by having the Ark preſent with them, or by ſome other accident. For had they certainly known that the Ark had been the cauſe, the Lords of Gath would never have yielded that it ſhould have been brought to their city, *S*o ready are men to vaniſh in their idol-conceits, when in their calamities they leave God, our onely ſtay and truſt, and have not his Spirit to guide and direct them.

V. 9 the hand of the Lord was againſt the city with a very great deſtruction] This the Ark in its own nature cauſed not, (for it brought afterwards a bleſſing with it to the houſe of Obed-edom, and all he had 2 Sam. 6. 11) but becauſe they did not return it to its own place, but carried it about from city to city, as it were in a pageant and pompous ſhew, and gave it not that honour that was due unto it.

and they had Emrods in their ſecret parts] i. e. Inwardly in their guts, which were ſo extreme that they could have no eaſe nor cure.

V. 10. Therefore they ſent the Ark of God to Ekron] This alſo was one of the five principal cities of the Philiſtims, and in the diviſion of the land fell to Judahs lot, Joſh. 15. 45. See Judg. 1. 18. and 3. 3.

the Ekronites cried out] As fearing leaſt by the coming of the Ark they ſhould have the like plagues inflicted on them to thoſe wherewith their neighbour-cities were deſtroyed.

to us, to ſlay us and our people] Hebr. to me, to ſlay me and my people. And ſo v. 11. This was ſpoken in a paſſionate manner by their Prince or Magiſtrate, not becauſe he thought that they had purpoſely brought the Ark unto them with ſuch an intention, but that it would prove ſo in the event.

V. 11. Send away the Ark of the God of Iſrael] This was the counſel of the Ekronites to all the lords of the Philiſtims, to put off from themſelves the preſent danger: But it ſeemeth they were ſo loth to part with the Ark that they did not imbrace and follow it, but would needs put the matter to be cleared by making further experiments; and therefore they ſent it from Ekron to Gaza, and Aſhkelon, two other of their chief cities, as plainly appeareth ch. 6. 4, 17. and Joſephus alſo affirmeth the ſame, Antiq. lib. 6. Wherein as they had their ends and aims, ſo God had his; namely, by this means to bring an univerſal judgement upon the whole country, and to make them all alike drink deeply of the cup of his wrath.

that it ſlay us not, and our people] i. e. Both the lords, who it ſeemeth thus complained, and the people alſo who were under their government. See on v. 10.

V. 12. And the men that died not were ſmitten with the Emrods] It ſeemeth they were puniſhed with ſome other mortal diſeaſe beſides the Emrods, of which many died; and they who eſcaped the one were plagued with the other: and both joining together cauſed that deadly deſtruction, v. 11.

and the cry of the city went up to heaven] An hyperbolical expreſſion of that great and grievous lamentation which was made by the inhabitants of the city.

CHAP. VI.

Verſ. 1. AND the Ark of the Lord was in the countrey of the Philiſtims ſeven moneths] They hoped in time their plagues would have ceaſed; and then they were reſolved to have kept the Ark in captivity ſtill. See on v. 13.

V. 2. And the Philiſtims called for the Prieſts and the diviners] Though they were idolaters, yet they had even by the light of nature ſuch an high eſteem of their prieſts and diviners that they would do nothing of any importance without their counſel and direction.

What ſhall we do to the Ark of the Lord?] Though in their former conſultations they had much debate, Whether they ſhould ſend back the Ark, or no; and ſome were againſt it, as not thinking their detaining of the Ark among them was the cauſe of their plagues, becauſe if the God of Iſrael had ſo highly eſteemed it, he would never have ſuffered it to be carried away captive; yet after by much experience being convinced that the continuance of it among them was the true cauſe of all their calamities, they generally conclude and reſolve to ſend it back; and therefore they do not here deliberate what to do with it, but what was to be done to it when they did return it, as moſt conducing to their ends that is, the appeaſing of the God of Iſraels wrath, that he might heal their land, and remove their plagues.

V. 3. ſend it not empty] i. e. Without ſome gift or preſent, to appeaſe his wrath incenſed againſt us. Exod. 23. 15. and 34. 20. Deut. 16. 16.

but in any wiſe return him a treſpaſs-offering] Becauſe ye have treſpaſſed againſt him, both by your carrying away his Ark captive, and your ill uſage of it, whileſt it hath been in your cuſtody, not giving it that honour and reſpect that is due unto it, therefore you muſt labour to appeaſe him, in way of ſatisfaction, by a treſpaſs-offering, for your ſins. And thus, though God ſeemed to be much diſhonoured by their captiving of his ark, yet he ſo diſpoſeth of it by his wiſe providence, that he gaineth thereby much glory to his Name, in that he cauſeth theſe idolatrous Prieſts, who were enemies unto him and his true ſervice, to give ſuch counſel as tended to his honour, and the ſhame of their Idols and falſe woſhip.

then ye ſhall be healed, and it ſhall be known (Or thus, or it ſhall be known) to you, why his hand is not removed from you] i. e. Upon the ſending of this offering it ſhall be known, if ye be healed, (as it is very likely you will) that it was his hand upon you for your ſin; or, if you be not, then, that it came not from the God of Iſrael, but by chance, or ſome hidden natural cauſe. *S*o. v. 9.

V. 4. They anſwered, Five golden emrods, and five golden mice] By which offering they acknowledged the plagues of emrods and mice were juſtly inflicted upon them by the God of Iſrael for their captiving and diſhonouring his holy Ark. Now though (as ſome conceive) this treſpaſs-offering of Emrods and Mice, being ſo abſurd and ridiculous a preſent, came into the mind of the Prieſts by the ſuggeſtion of the devil, that God thereby might rather be diſhonoured then glorified, yet God in his wiſdom ſo diſpoſed of it that it much tended to his glory: For by this means the ſin and ſhame of the Philiſtims, who were Gods enemies, were had in perpetual memory amongſt his people, to whoſe hands theſe came to the glory of God, who had puniſhed them with Mice and Emrods for ſlaughtering his people, and leading captive and profaning his Ark.

for one plague was on you all] Heb. them. i. e. Both Lords and common people.

V. 5. Wherefore ye ſhall make images of your emrods] i. e. The figure of figs, like the knops and ſwellings of that diſeaſe, that could hardly be repreſented without the pourtraying of thoſe ſecret and unſeemly parts to which they were affixed, and ſo not without the diſcovery of their ſhame, and that to their mortal enemies, who would take occaſion thereby to ſcorn and deride them.

and images of your Mice that marr the land.] i. e. The fruits of your land, by eating up and ſpoyling your corn.

and ye ſhall give glory unto the God of Iſrael] Namely, by reſtoring his ark, as you have diſhonoured him by captiving and profaning it; and whileſt alſo by this offering ye ſhall confeſs the truth, and acknowledge that he hath juſtly puniſhed you for your preſumptuous ſins in medling with his holy ark. So Joſh. 7. 19. Joh. 9. 24.

and from off your gods] The word is of the plural number, either becauſe the diſgrace executed upon Dagon did alſo befal their other idols in the adjoining cities. And ſo God executed judgement upon all the gods of Egypt, Exod. 12. 12. Numb. 33. 4. Or elſe becauſe Dagons diſhonour tended to the diſgrace of all their other idols, ſeeing they were no more able then he to preſerve either themſelves or thoſe, who ſerved them, from the juſt hand of the almighty God.

V. 9. Wherefore then do ye harden your hearts, as the Egyptians and Pharaoh] i. e. Why do you wilfully retain the ark, after you have ſuffered ſuch great and grievous puniſhments, herein reſembling Pharaoh and the Egyptians, who held the people in cruel bondage, notwithſtanding that Gods hand was ſo heavy upon them, till at laſt going on in their ſin their whole army was drowned in the red ſea? If you would avoid the like heavy judgement, do not imitate them in their ſin. See Exod. 7. 13. and 8. 15. and 14. 17.

V. 7. Now therefore make a new cart] Which hath never yet been put to any common uſe; that hereby you may ſhew how much you now reverence the Ark, though formerly you have abuſed and prophaned it. So 2 Sam. 6. 3. See Mark. 11. 2.

and take two milch kine, on which there hath come no yoke] This they were to do not onely upon the ſame ground with the former, but alſo to make the experiment more clear, & to convince them that what was done proceeded from God, as being above the ordinary courſe. For if they had made uſe of old kine accuſtomed to bear the yoke and to travel in the common rode, it had not been ſo ſtrange, if without a guide they had gone forward in their uſual way; but that young heifers, untamed and untrayned, ſhould quietly bear the yoke, and never offer to go out of that way which they before had not uſed to travel, it muſt needs be thought a great wonder; eſpecially if that were true that Joſephus reporteth Antiq. lib. 9. that being ſet in a place where three wayes met, they choſe that which led to Beth-ſhemeſh, and left the other.

and bring their calves home from them] This was alſo done to make the experiment more evident; and falling out accordingly did encreaſe the wonder. For if they had ſuffered their calves to accompany them, it had been leſs ſtrange that they quietly and cheerfully went forward in the way; but when their calves were left at home behind them, after which they naturally longed, that yet they ſhould take another way, and not offer to return back unto them, could not be thought much leſs then a miracle, ſeeing their natural inſtinct of love toward their young ones was overcome by a ſupernatural power.

V. 8. put the jewels of gold] i. e. The golden Emrods and Mice, which they ſent for a treſpaſs-offering, v. 4.

in a coffer by the ſide thereof] They durſt not preſume to open the ark, and put them into it.

V. 9. And ſee, if it goeth up by the way of his own coaſt to Beth-ſhemeſh, then he hath done us this great evil] q. d. By this experiment we ſhall plainly diſcern whether the God of Iſrael hath inflicted theſe plagues upon us, or no, Beth-ſhemeſh was a city belonging to the Prieſts, Joſh. 21. 16. ſituate upon the confines of Judah, in whoſe lot it was, Ioſh. 15. 10. and bordering upon the countrey of the Philiſtims towards Ekron, in the way to Shiloh: therefore if the kine did carry the Ark thither-wards, towards its proper place where it had ſtood ſo long, it was a plain evidence that they were guided by a ſupernatural providence. See on Ioſh. 15. 10.

V. 12. And the kine took the ſtraight way to the way of Beth-ſhemeſh] They went ſtraight to this city of the Prieſts, as though they had purpoſely been ſent thither by God to deliver the ark into their hands unto whoſe care it belonged.

lowing as they went] By a natural inſtinct they lowed after their calves which they had left behind them, yet went ſtill forward in their way to Beth-ſhemeſh, being moved to go on with the cart in which the ark was, by the Divine providence.

and turned not aſide to the right hand or to the left] i. e. Into any croſs or by-wayes that lay by their paſſage.

And the lords of the Philiſtims went after them] Namely, to obſerve the iſſue of this experiment. Afterwards they returned home, but never the better; For though doubtleſſe they wondred, v. 16. at this ſtrange ſight, yet they repented not of their ſins, but ſtill continued in their idolatry, and hatred of Gods people.

V. 13. were reaping their wheat-harveſt] Which in that countrey began in the latter end of April, and continued to the feaſt of Pentecoſt. For their wheat-harveſt there was after their barley-harveſt, which began in the end of our March, after the feaſt of the Paſſeover, which began the fourteenth day of their moneth Abib, and continued ſeven dayes. Before this feaſt they could not begin their harveſt: For the day after, they were to bring a ſheaf or handful of the firſt-fruits unto the Prieſt, that he might wave it before the Lord, who accepting thereof did ſanctifie unto them the reſt of the harveſt, Levit. 23. 8—11. Deut. 16. 9. Now this barley-harveſt continued till toward the end of April, and then the wheat-harveſt began, and laſted to the feaſt of Pentecoſt, fifty dayes after the Paſſeover, Lev. 23. 15, 16. For the barley and wheat in that country being ſowen in the ſame ſeaſon, the barley continued in the earth, before it was ripe, but ſix moneths, and the wheat ſeven: So that the whole harveſt, from the beginning to the end, laſted the ſpace of two moneths, or ſomewhat more. By this computation it appeareth that the Ark was taken in the beginning of November, or the latter end of October, ſeeing it was ſeven moneths in the land of the Philiſtims, v. 1.

and ſaw the ark] To wit, either as it was ſent uncovered by the Philiſtims, or uncovered by themſelves; which was contrary to the law, Num. 4. 5, 20.

V. 14. And they clave the wood of the cart] To wit, the Levitical Prieſts, who dwelling at Beth-ſhemeſh were ready at hand to execute their office. See on v. 9. But how could it be lawful for the Prieſts to offer ſacrifices here, ſeeing they were onely to be offered at the Tabernacle upon that one altar there? R. They were reſtrained to that place, for ordinary ſacrifices, But not in extraordinary caſes. For the high places were not altogether prohibited whileſt the tabernacle was in a flitting condition, and the Lord had not yet choſen a certain and ſetled place for his ſervice. Beſides, at this time they had the Ark with them, the viſible ſign of Gods preſence, and therefore might lawfully offer ſacrifice before it. See on Judg. 21. 4.

and offered the kine a burnt-offering to the Lord] This offered oblation was contrary to the law, which commanded that onely males ſhould be offered for burnt-offerings, Lev. 1. 3, 10. and 22. 19. Mal. 1. 14. But this is to be imputed either to the ignorance of thoſe times, in which the law of God was not well underſtood, nor exactly obſerved, or to the ſudden paſſion of joy which ſo tranſported them that they did not for the preſent think or conſider of it. Or rather it may be that in this extraordinary caſe they left the ordinary way, God diſpenſing with it, and directing them to this courſe by a ſecret inſtinct of his Spirit. And there was good reaſon that theſe kine, which had been imployed in this ſervice of carrying the ark, and by a ſecret inſtinct had performed it in a wonderful manner, ſhould never after be put to common and profane uſes, but conſecrated wholly unto God.

V. 15. And the Levites took down the ark] i. e. The Prieſts, which were of the tribe of Levi: For none but the Prieſts might touch the Ark, Num. 4. 15. 2 Sam. 6. 6, 7.

and the men of Beth-ſhemeſh offered burnt-offerings] That is, brought their oblations to the Prieſts, to be ſacrificed by them.

V. 18. both of fenced cities and of country-villages] The whole Country of the Philiſtims was divided into five parts or Dukedoms, which were reſpectively under the government of five Lords, who every one in their ſeveral diviſions had, beſides a principal City, divers inferior Towns and Villages, with their territories, belonging unto them. And becauſe theſe plagues of Emrods and Mice were inflicted generally upon every of theſe five cities, with their villages and countries, therefore there was a ſeveral treſpaſs-offering appointed for every of them, the charge whereof was born (it is likely) both by the cities and the country-villages.

even to the great ſtone of Abel] Mentioned, v. 14, 15. It is, here named Abel, that is, mourning, not becauſe ſo called in former times, but now, upon occaſion of the great mourning of the people for that lamentable ſlaughter which God made among them, ver. 19. Gen. 50. 11.

V. 19. And he ſmote the men of Beth-ſhemeſh, becauſe they had looked into the Ark of the Lord] It was unlawful for the people, yea, for the very Levites themſelves, ſo much as to look upon the Ark of the Lord, till the Prieſts had covered it, Numb. 4. 5, 20. Nor was it lawful for the Prieſts to open the Ark and look into it. Here then was the great ſin of the Beth-ſhemites, generally committed by them all, that they either uncovered the Ark themſelves to look upon it, or, if it were ſent uncovered by the Philiſtims, ſtood ſtaring and gazing upon it without due fear and reverence. Beſides which ſin committed in common by the whole multitude, there were many ſo preſumptuous (neither can we with any probability imagine that ſo many thouſands as dyed could do it in one day) that they opened the Ark, and out of their curioſity pryed into it, to ſee whether the Philiſtims had put any thing into it, or taken any thing out of it.

even he ſmote of the people fifty thouſand and threeſcore and ten men] Theſe could not all be inhabitants of Beth-ſhemeſh, that was no great City; but probably the greateſt part came out of the Countrey neer unto it, which lyeth upon the frontiers of the Philiſtims and Judea, had ſtrong gariſons to defend them from the invaſions of their enemies: And not only they, but many others, it is likely, hearing of the return of the Ark, did flock to ſee it. Therefore it is ſaid in the text, not only that God ſmote the men of Beth-ſhemeſh, but that he ſmote even of the people, fifty thouſand and threeſcore and ten men. Thus God is wont to puniſh his own people, when they ſin, as well as others: Prov. 11. 31. 1 Pet. 4. 17.

V. 20. Who is able to ſtand before this holy Lord God?] In ſtead of humbling themſelves before God by unfeigned repentance for their ſins they make bitter complaints of Gods ſeverity and rigour, and bewail their loſs, adviſing amongſt themſelves how they may be rid of the Ark, as thinking it to be the cauſe of all their miſery. So David, 2 Sam. 6. 8, 9. and the Gadarens, Mat. 8. 34.

V. 21 Come ye down, and fetch it up to you] Pretending it may be that it was no ſafe place for the Ark, ſeeing it did lye too neer the Philiſtims; but chiefly in all likelyhood intending their own ſafety, that they might not by the preſence of the Ark, run again into the like danger.

CHAP. VII.

Verſ. 1. A*Nd the men of Kirjath-jearim came*] This was a city in the tribe of Judah, formerly called Kirjath-Baal, Joſh. 15. 9, 60. and 18. 14. The inhabitants thereof being ſent unto by the Beth-ſhemites to fetch the Ark, ch. 6. 21. now come for it with all readineſs and cheerfulneſſe. For though they had heard of the great ſlaughter of the Beth-ſhemites, this did not diſcourage them, becauſe they did not impute it to the Arks coming thither, but to their irreverent uſage of it; which ſin they were reſolved carefully to avoid. But when the Ark was returned out of the Philiſtims countrey, why was it not carried back to Shiloh whence it came, eſpecially ſeeing the Tabernacle ſtill remained there? R. Becauſe the Lord in his juſt diſpleaſure abhorred Shiloh, for the abominable profanation of his ſervice and the horrible wickedneſſe that was acted there, So that he forſook the tabernacle of Shiloh, the tent which he placed amongſt men, Pſal. 78. 60, See Ier. 7. 12, 14. and would not ſuffer his holy Ark to return unto ſuch an unholy place, but did ſeparate it from his tabernacle there. And ſo they continued divided, the one from the other for ever after; and David prepared a new tent for it, 1 Chro. 15. 1. and 16. 1.

and fetch up the Ark of the Lord] i. e. Not they themſelves; for they were not a city of Prieſts, neither did Prieſts live among them; and none but thoſe of their tribe and order might touch the Ark, but the Prieſts of Beth-ſhemeſh being appointed for this ſervice, the men of Kirjath-jearim, to ſhew their willingneſs, did come to accompany them.

and brought it into the houſe of Abinadab] Who was a Levite, and, as Ioſephus reporteth, a man eminent for integrity.

in the hill] i. e. A very high place in the city, and therefore the more fit for ſuch a ſacred uſe. Whereof it is, that when David went to fetch the Ark from thence to his own houſe, he is ſaid to have gone up unto it, 1 Chro. 13. 6.

and ſanctified Eleazar his ſon] i. e. Conſecrated him to this holy ſervice by ſuch legal ceremonies as were required.

to keep the Ark of the Lord] i. e. Not to cover or uncover it: for he being not Prieſt, but onely a Levite, might not touch it himſelf. Therefore his office and charge was onely to attend it, to keep clean the place where it ſtood, and to preſerve it from being profaned and abuſed by any other.

V. 2. the time was long: for it was twenty years] The full time of the Arks continuance at Kirjath-jearim was above forty years. For there it was placed ſeven or eight moneths after the death of Eli, and remained there till David in the ſeventh year of his reign fetched it thence; and after the death of Eli Samuel and Saul ruled over Iſrael forty years, Acts. 13. 21. Therefore by theſe twenty years here ſpoken of muſt needs be meant a part onely of thoſe fourty & odd years in which it remained at Kirjath-jearim, namely thoſe firſt twenty years, in which Samuel, after the death of Eli, judged the people, and by his preaching, propheſying and government had made ſome reformation, and turned many from their idolatry to Gods true worſhip. But ſtill there were many who repented not of their ſins, but joyned with God, in their ſuperſtitious ſervice, Baal and Aſhtaroth, yet now theſe twenty years being expired having throughly ſmarted for their idolatry by the grievous oppreſſions of the Philiſtims, and Samuel alſo laying both their ſin and puniſhment to their hearts, the whole people generally reſolve upon a through reformation, and with unanimous conſent renounce their idols, and embrace the pure worſhip of God.

and all the houſe of Iſrael lamented after the Lord] i. e. Sorrowing and grieving under the oppreſſions of the Philiſtims, (who from the time of their victory had layed heavy burdens and taxations upon them, yea, had turned them out of their cities, and dwelled in them, as is implyed, v. 14.) and now repenting of their ſins, and unfainedly bewailing them, as the fountain of all their calamities, they return unto the Lord, and cry and call unto him for help and deliverance.

V. 3. And Samuel ſpake unto all the houſe of Iſrael] i. e. Unto all their Elders and chief Rulers that reſorted unto him. Or, to all the people, went he about in his circuit to execute the office of a Judge and Prophet.

If yee do return unto the Lord with all your hearts] Not dividing them between him and idols, 1 King. 18. 21. 2 King. 17. 33.

put away the ſtrange gods] Heb. the gods of the ſtrangers. That is, the idols of the heathen Nations round about you. Theſe idols are ſtrangers unto you, and you have nothing to do with them, being entred into Covenant with Jehovah the onely true God, that he ſhall be your God, and you his people, Ioſh. 24. 14, 23.

and Aſhtaroth] See Iudg. 2. 13, prepare your hearts unto the Lord] i. e. Devote your ſelves wholly to his ſervice, and utterly abandon all idolatrous worſhip.

and he will deliver you out of the hand of the Philiſtims] Though upon Samuels exhortation they generally reſolved to forſake all their idols, yet they did it not with a perfect heart, but many reliques of Idolatry and ſuperſtition remained ſtill among them; and therefore anſwerably the Lord did but in part perform this promiſe, and onely gave them ſome beginnings of deliverances by Samuel and Saul: But when in Davids reign there was a full reformation, idolatry being wholly aboliſhed and the pure worſhip of the onely true God ſet up and eſtabliſhed, then the Lord compleated this promiſe, and gave the Iſraelites full deliverance, not onely by freeing them from oppreſſions and ſervitude, but by giving them many glorious victories, and making them Lords over their enemies

V. 4. Then the children of Iſrael did put away Baalim and Aſhtaroth] See Iudg. 2. 11. The one of theſe words being of the maſculine, and the other of the Feminine gender, and both of the plural number, hereby is meant, that they put away all their heathen idols, of both ſexes, and of all conditions.

and ſerved the Lord onely] As his law required, Deut 6. 13. and 10. 20. Mat. 4. 10. Luk. 4. 8.

V. 5. And Samuel ſaid, Gather all Iſrael to Mizpeh] Concerning Mizpeh ſee on Iudg. 20. Hither Samuel ſummoneth the whole body of the people, that meeting together they might univerſallly renew their covenant with God, which they had ſo ſhamefully broken; and joyning together in a ſound and ſolemn humiliation, by faſting and prayer, might implore mercy and forgiveneſs for all their ſins paſt, with the return of Gods former favour, and help and deliverance for the preſent, and time to come; and to the end alſo that after by theſe religious exerciſes they had reconciled themſelves unto God, they might conſult one with another about the beſt courſe and means which were to be uſed to deliver themſelves from the Philiſtims ſervice.

V. 6. and drew water] This ſome interpret to have been a ceremony belonging to Legal purification, and ſignifying the waſhing away of their ſins. Others, to have been an expreſſion of their deep humiliation in the ſenſe of their miſery, intimating that they thought themſelves in a loſt and deſperate condition, like water ſpilt upon the ground, which cannot be taken up again 2 Sam. 14, 14. unleſs the Lord in mercy by his almighty power did raiſe & recover them out of their doleful & ſad eſtate. But ſeeing we read not of any ſuch ceremony in the Law, nor that it was uſed in former or following times, I rather take it to be an hyperbolical expreſſion, ſignifiing the great plenty of tears which in this day of their humiliation they ſhed for their ſins, ſtreaming out abundantly from the fountain of a broken heart and contrite ſpirit; whereby they teſtified both their unfeigned repentance, and their full reſolution that they would never again return to their former ſuperſtitions and idolatry, but thenceforward devote themſelves wholly to Gods ſervice, And ſuch like expreſſions we meet with, Pſal. 6. 6. and 42. 3. and 119. 136. Iob. 16. 20. Ier. 9. 1. Lam. 2. 11, 18.

and poured it out before the Lord] Hereby is not meant that they did it before the Ark, the ſign of Gods preſence, ſeeing that was now at Kirjath-jearim, but that they humbled themſelves by mourning, faſting and prayer in the ſight of God, who is alwaies preſent with his people when they are thus aſſembled and met together, Matth. 18. 20.

And Samuel judged the children of Iſrael in Mizpeh] i. e. He did not onely exerciſe the duty of a Levite, or Prophet to teach and direct them, but from this time forward he took upon him the office of a Judg; to which God now called him: And by his wiſe government, good example, and holy admonitions and exhortations he convinced them of their ſins, and brought them to repentance. See Ezek. 20. 4. and 22. 2. and 23. 36.

V. 7. And when the Philiſtims heard that the children of Iſrael were gathered together] Tyrants are alwayes jealous and ſuſpicious of the peoples meetings, leſt they ſhould plot and contrive ſome means to free themſelves from their yoke. Thus the Philiſtims here, lording it over the Iſraelites at this time, quickly take notice of this their aſſembly, and taking it to be a ſign of ſome commotion and rebellion, raiſe their forces, and come to ſuppreſſe them.

And when the children of Iſrael heard it, they were afraid] Namely in reſpect of the Philiſtims warlike preparations, and their own unpreparedneſs, ſeeing they were by Samuel aſſembled to pray, not to fight.

V. 8. Ceaſe not to cry unto the Lord our God for us] Heb. be not ſilent from us from crying. i. e. Seeing we are weak, and unable to make reſiſtance againſt ſo many and mighty enemies, and have no confidence but in God alone the Lord of hoſts, and giver of victory, and ſeeing his help is no otherwiſe to be obtained but by fervent prayer, therefore be inſtant with the Lord in our behalf, and with our fighting joyn thy effectual prayers

V. 9. And Samuel took a ſucking lamb, and offered it for a burnt-offering] offering] i.e. He either cauſed it to be offered by a Prieſt, himſelf not being of that order, or did it as a Prophet immediately inſpired by God, and warranted to do it by ſpecial diſpenſation; as Elijah alſo did, 1 Kings 18.30,31. And upon the ſame warrant he offered a burnt-offering in that place on an altar of his own erecting, and not on the altar in the Tabernacle. But others think it might be lawfully done in other places upon extraordinary occaſions, before the Temple was built, and the altar there erected and ſetled. See on ch.6.14.& Judg.21.4.

and the Lord heard him] Heb. anſwered. i.e. Gave him a gracious return of his prayers, by granting his ſuit. The like example we have Exod.17.11. See Pſal.99.6.

V. 10. But the Lord thundred with a great thunder, &c.] According to Hannahs prophecy, ch.2.10. See Joſh.10.10. Judg.4.15. &5.20.

and they were ſmitten before Iſrael] Who did not idly ſlack and neglect their own endeavours, though they ſaw that the Lord from heaven fought for them. See on Joſh.10.10.

V. 11. untill they came under Beth car] This is the name of a rock, where perhaps the Philiſtims had a garriſon; unto which they making their retreat, the Iſraelites were hindred from proſecuting their victory any further. It is called Shen, v.12. See ch.14.4.

V. 12. Samuel took a ſtone, and ſet it] As a monument of their victory, and thankfulneſs unto God for his aſſiſtance, by which alone they had obtained it.

between Mizpeh and Shen] This was a great rock or promontory over againſt Mizpeh. God in his providence ſo diſpoſed of it, that in the very ſame place where before the Iſraelites were ſlaughtered, and the Ark taken captive, ch.4.1. they ſhould now erect a trophee of victorie.

and called the name of it Eben-Ezer] That is, the ſtone of help.

V. 13. and they came no more into the coaſt of Iſrael] They came divers times after this in an hoſtile manner with great armies, in the times of Samuel, Saul, and David, ch.13.1,5. & 17.1. 2 Sam.5.17,22. and therefore here muſt be meant, either that they came no more whilſt Samuel judged Iſrael alone; or rather, that though after this defeat there remained ſtill a great number of ſcattered troops, which if they had gathered and rallied into ranks in due order, and recruited their army by calling in ſome freſh forces from parts of their country neer at hand, they might ſo have returned upon the Iſraelites to renew the fight, yet they were ſo much diſheartned by their late overthrow (which was principally cauſed by the immediate hand of God fighting againſt them) that they durſt no more at this time adventure to do it.

V. 14. And the Cities which the Philiſtims had taken from Iſrael were reſtored] i.e. Were taken by force, or yielded by compoſition. Howbeit it plainly appeareth ch.10.5. & 13.3. that in the beginning of Sauls reign the Philiſtims had divers forts and ſtrong garriſons in their keeping; which either they held ſtill in their hands after the Cities were ſurrendred, to keep the Iſraelites from invading their Country; or ſurprized them again after this defeat.

And there was peace between Iſrael and the Amorites] i.e. A ceſſation from open war between the Iſraelites and the Philiſtims and the reſt of the Canaanites; both which are here comprehended under the name of Amorites. This peace is here mentioned as a fruit of the late victory.

V. 15. And Samuel judged Iſrael all the dayes of his life] Though Saul, after he was made King, had the ſupreme power in his hand, yet Samuel, as long he lived, exerciſed the juriſdiction of a Judge, which God had called him unto; as appeareth by the killing of Agag, whom Saul had ſpared, ch.15.32,33. And alſo, as a Prophet, he directed him in his government, admoniſhed him of his duty, reproved him when he trangreſſed and did amiſs, ch.15.1,2. & 13.13. yea, threatned him, when he rebelled againſt Gods expreſs Commandment, with the loſs of his Kingdome, ch.15.28. and anointed David King in his ſtead, ch. 16.13. And finally, ſometimes they joyned together (as it were in the ſame commiſſion) in the government, as in making war againſt Nahaſh the Ammonite, and relieving Jabeſh-Gilead when it was beſieged, ch.11. 7. And in this regard the years of both their governments are joyned in the ſame account of fourty years, Act.13.20,21.

V. 16. And he went from year to year in circuit] Namely, as a Judge, to hear and determine the cauſes of the people, and as a Prophet, to teach and direct them. Neither was Samuel bound by his mothers vow, ch. 1.11,22. whereby he was devoted to the ſervice of the Sanctuary, to continue his reſidence there; both becauſe, for the ſinnes of the Prieſts and people the Lord had forſaken the Tabernacle, and withdrawn from it the Ark, which was the viſible ſigne of his preſence, (See on verſ.1.) and alſo becauſe the Lord himſelf had taken him off from that Levitical ſervice, and called him to another imployment, namely, to be an holy Prophet, and a Judge over his people; which places he could not ſo well have diſcharged if he had been confined to a certain and ſetled place.

to Bethel] i.e. Either the City properly called Bethel, which was in the tribe of Benjamin, Joſh.18.13. or it is taken appellatively here, for the houſe of God which was now in Kiriath-jearim. And this is the more probable, that Samuel went yearly in his circuit thither, in reſpect of the great number of people which flocked thither, by reaſon that the Ark was ſetled there. And thus Bethel is frequently taken, as ch.3.15. & 10.3. Judg.20.18. See on ch.30.27.

and Gilgal] At the firſt entring of the Iſraelites into Canaan this was not a City, but a place where they encamped, and were circumciſed, from whence it was called Gilgal, Joſh.5.9. but after, it ſeemeth, Jericho (which was near unto it) being ruined and devoted to deſtruction, a City was there built, or at leaſt a place of habitation fit for Samuels purpoſe, as being convenient for the people to reſort unto. See on Hoſ.4.15:

and Mizpeh] See on Judg.20.1.

V. 17. And his return was to Ramah] Or, Ramathaim: where his dwelling houſe was, ch.1.1.

and there he judged Iſrael] i.e. There was his moſt ordinary place of Judicature, whither he uſed to return after he had gone his Circuits.

and there he built an altar unto the Lord] See on v.9.& Judg.21.4.

CHAP. VIII.

Verſ. 1. AND it came to paſs when Samuel was old] i.e. When by reaſon of age and weakneſs he was not able to go his circuit unto the uttermoſt parts, to adminiſter juſtice unto all the people, as he was wont, ch.7.16.

he made his ſons Judges over Iſrael] Wherein (as ſome think) though he were a good and holy man, he in divers reſpects offended. I. Becauſe he did not conſult with God before he did it, at leaſt, for any thing that appeareth in the text. II. Becauſe he did it in an ordinary way by himſelf, whereas the calling of a Judge was extraordinary, and immediately from God, when the neceſſity of the ſtate required it. III. Becauſe he had not a preſident from any of the former Judges to ſubſtitute his ſons in his place of government; yea, the clean contrary in Gideon, who utterly refuſed it when the people did offer it, Judg. 8. 23. IV. Becauſe he made them chief Judges, from whom there was no appeal, if they paſſed an unjuſt ſentence, though they were ſuch as he could have little aſſurance of their integrity. For otherwiſe the Elders and people would not thus have complained, if being wronged by them, they might have been righted and relieved elſewhere. V. Becauſe hearing from the elders of their ill and corrupt courſes and carriages, he did not take from them their office of Judicature, when he had power in his hand to do it. The which his failings were much aggravated in that he had the example of Eli freſh in memory, who was grievouſly puniſhed for his indulgence to his ſons, and not uſing juſt ſeverity in puniſhing their faults.

V. 2. Joel] Called alſo Vaſhni, 1 Chr.6.28,33. And it is uſual in Scripture to give two names to the ſame man, or the ſame place. This Joel, though a corrupt father, was the parent of a gracious ſon, namely of Heman a chief maſter of the ſingers. See on 1 Chron.6.33. & 25.1,5.

They were Judges in Beerſheba] Some think here is an Ellipſis of the contrary extream, which was Dan, in the North of Canaan, oppoſite to Beerſheba in the South, Judg.20.1. and ſo the meaning ſhould be, that Samuels ſons went in circuit all over the land to judge the people. But ſeeing Samuel had not quite put off from himſelf the calling of a Judge, but uſed his ſons onely as his Subſtitutes and Deputies to aſſiſt him in his old age, it is moſt likely that he himſelf did ſtill perform his office of Judicature at Ramah, where he dwelt, and in all that part of the Countrey which lay Northward from it, and appointed his ſons to exerciſe the authority by him delegated unto them in the Southern parts, becauſe they were ſo far remote from him, that by reaſon of age he could not travel unto them. This City was the fitter for the reſidence of the Judges, becauſe, bordering upon the Philiſtims territories, they might there be ready upon all occaſions to defend the Countrey from their attempts and incurſions.

V. 3. And his ſons walked not in his wayes] To wit, in executing the office of an upright Judge, of which they had him as their pattern and precedent, to go before and guide them.

but turned aſide after lucre, &c.] They are charged with three ſins, whereof the former was the cauſe of the later; covetouſneſs, of their taking bribes; and bribing, of their perverting judgment: Exod.18. 21. Deut.16.19.

V. 5. Behold, thou art old, and thy ſons walk not in thy wayes] Theſe were the reaſons whereby they preſſed him to hearken to their ſuit of making them a King; his own debility to execute his office by reaſon of his age, and his ſons iniquity in ſwerving from his ſteps: But there were other reaſons that chiefly moved them, which they conceal, as being aſhamed to diſcover them; as I. Their deſire of change, which made them weary of Gods government, and willing to ſhake off his yoke, though it were above all others moſt eaſie and profitable. II. Their fooliſh affectation of the government of other nations round about them, though their condition were far the happier: For the heathens had no other whom they acknowledged as Supreme but whom themſelves did chooſe, but the Iſraelites being in covenant with God had him for their Lord and King, and they were his people and ſubjects, protected and preſerved by him, and governed by his laws, v.20. III. Their fear of Nahaſh the King of the Ammonites making warlike preparations againſt them cauſed them to deſire a King and Captain to go before them, as truſting more in his conduct then in the Lord of hoſts, who had given unto them ſo many miraculous victories, v. 20. & ch. 12.12.

now make us a King] Though they were ſtiffly reſolved to have a King, yet the better to colour the matter, they would not preſume to chooſe him themſelves, but were content that he ſhould be their King whom the Lord their God ſhould chooſe, Deut.17.14,15. And therefore they have recourſe to Samuel, as being Gods Prophet, that he might conſult with God about the matter. See Hoſ.13.10. Acts 13.21.

to judge us] i.e. To rule over us with regal authority, and as our General to go out with our army.

V. 6. But the thing diſpleaſed Samuel] Heb. was evil in the eyes of Samuel. Not onely becauſe hereby they ſhewed their groſs ingratitude towards him, in diveſting and depoſing him from his place of government, by which they had reaped ſo many ſingular benefits both in their Eccleſiaſtical and Civil eſtate; but much more, becauſe they grievouſly ſinned againſt God himſelf, in refuſing to be under his government any longer, who was their King, and whoſe Lieutenant he was. For though Kings be ſo alſo in their kind, having all their power from God, yet they exerciſe this power in their own names, according to their own will and pleaſure, and by their own laws; whereas the Judges governed as Gods Deputies immediately called by him, according to his laws, being furniſhed and fitted with gifts in an extraordinary manner, and inſpired with his Spirit, and in all difficult caſes reſorted unto him for direction, he keeping ſtill the Regal rights in his own hand. See on Judg.2.16. & 9.1.

And Samuel prayed unto the Lord] To wit, for direction what to do, and how to demean himſelf in this difficult and dangerous buſineſs; & withal, mediating on the peoples behalf for pardon of their ſin.

V. 7. Hearken unto the voice of the people in all that they ſay unto thee] Namely, in this matter of having a King. q. d. They will needs have a King; let them have one at their own perill. For the Lord condeſcended unto their ſuit, not in mercy, but in his juſt anger, Hoſ.13.11.

for they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me] i. e. Not ſo much thee, as mee, who being their ſupreme Lord and King do rule by thee as my Miniſter and Deputy. This manner of ſpeaking is uſual in Scripture; as ch 15.22. Matth. 9.13. & 10. 20. & 12. 7. Act.5.4. Here the deſire of having a King is not condemned, as ſimply unlawful; Neither is this ſpoken as though the Lord did not reign where there is ſet up a Monarchical government: for it is Gods ordinance, and Kings have their power and authority from him, Rom.13.1. Prov.8.15,16. and they are his Deputies and Lieutenants, by whom he ruleth. In which regard the people might have lawfully deſired a King, if they had done it with upright hearts, on lawful grounds, to good and warrantable ends, in a right manner, and in due time. For the Lord had promiſed that, when they were ſetled in the land of Canaan he would, when he thought good, ſet a King over them, out of whoſe loins the Meſſiah ſhould come; and alſo ſheweth how he would have him qualified, and what he required of him Deut.17.17,18. And he had promiſed unto Abraham that Kings ſhould come out of him, Gen.17.6. And Jacob ſaith the Scepter ſhould not depart from Judah, nor a law-giver from between his feet, untill Shiloh did come, i. e. the Meſſiah, Gen.49.10. And David, ſpeaking of himſelf, as a type of Chriſt, ſaith, Pſal.2.6. Yet have I ſet my King upon my holy hill of Zion. Therefore this deſire of a King is not condemned in the people, as a ſin in it ſelf; but becauſe they did it 1. with an ill mind, affecting innovation, and being weary of that government which God had eſtabliſhed; 2. in a prepoſterous and tumultuous manner, before he had given any intimation of his pleaſure; 3. to a wrong and evil end, that they might be like to the heathen nations; 4. out of confidence in a King, as able to protect them, and diffidence in God, as inſufficient to defend them in his own way, unleſs he would be directed in a courſe of their preſcribing; and 5. finally, becauſe they would not wait upon him for the accompliſhment of his word in his own time, but with all importunity preſs him to do it at their pleaſure. And yet for all this the Lord (who is able to bring good out of evil, and to make mens wicked purpoſes and practices ſerve to bring to paſs his own juſt and holy ends) was pleaſed to make uſe of this their prepoſterous deſire of having a King, as a means to accompliſh his word and promiſes; though at firſt he gave them ſuch a King in his wrath as brought upon them the juſt puniſhment of their ſin. See on ch.12.1. and the Argument of the book of Judges.

that I ſhould not reign over them] i. e. Keeping ſtill in mine own hand the Regal rights, and appointing what governours and government I pleaſe. See ch.10.19. And this the Lord uſed as a reaſon to comfort Samuel, and to make him bear their contumacious ingratitude with patience, ſeeing if he himſelf was content to endure it, who was ſupreme Lord and King both of him and them, though it were offered him in a far higher degree, then ſhould he much more meekly ſuffer it without regret or grief, who was but his deputy and ſervant, and ſo much inferiour unto him in all reſpects. Our Saviour uſeth the like argument to the ſame purpoſe, Joh.13.16. Matth.10.24,25.

V. 8. According to all the works which they have done, &c.] is another argument to comfort Samuel: Seeing it was no ſtrange thing which had befallen him, but that which had before-time hapned, it was to be born with patience. The people had been given to inconſtancie, diſcontent, murmuring and rebellion againſt their Magiſtrates, apoſtaſie & idolatrie, even ever ſince they came out of Ægypt, and therefore it was not to be wondred at, if they ſtill continued their old wont.

V. 9. yet proteſt ſolemnly unto them, &c] Or, notwithſtanding when thou haſt ſolemnly proteſted againſt them, then thou ſhalt ſhew, &c. i. e. Acquaint them with the miſchiefs, they will inevitably bring upon themſelves by having a King, that they may be deterred from proſecuting their ſuit, at leaſt be left without excuſe, when by their obſtinate perſiſting in their purpoſes they have wilfully brought themſelves into remedileſs miſeries.

and ſhew them the manner of the King] i.e. Not what Kings ought to do in right, but what they uſe to do in fact, and how they commonly demean themſelves in their government, quite contrary to Gods law, and alſo the poſitive and fundamental laws of their own Kindomes: Deut.17.15, 16,17. See ch.10.26. Neither doth he here ſet down the office and duty of a true Monarch, who is the father of his Country, and ſeeketh the good of the Common-wealth more then his own private profit, but what their manners are when they degenerate into tyranny; and ſo, not what they may lawfully do, but what they will do to ſatisfie their luſts, ambition, and covetouſneſs; and more particularly, what the King would do whom the Lord was purpoſed to ſet over Iſrael in his wrath, Hoſ.13.11. For were it lawful for Kings by virtue of their place to do all things ſet down in the verſes following, then had it been no ſin in Ahab to take away Naboths vineyard, eſpecially offering to give for it a conſiderable price, 1 Kings 21. But we ſee the contrary plainly expreſſed, Ezek.46.18. The prince ſhall not take of the peoples inheritance by oppreſſion, to thruſt them out of their poſſeſſion, &c. So Ezek.45.7.

V. 11. He will take your ſons, and appoint them for himſelf] i.e. According to his own pleaſure, whether you like it, or no. For otherwiſe Kings have a ſoveraign power and legal right over mens children, goods and lands, if they exerciſe it in a lawful manner, i. e. for promoting the publick good, and their own neceſſary ſervice, as Kings, both in time of peace and war, ſo it be with conſent of the parties concerned, or when they cannot lawfully deny it. But they muſt enjoy their Regal priviledges by virtue of law, and not by unlimited prerogative, or according to their own will and luſt. Neither muſt they oppreſs their ſubjects by unneceſſary burdens, knowing that themſelves have a ſupreme Lord above them, the King of kings, who reſpecteth not the perſon of Princes, and unto whom one day they muſt give their account. So that this Scripture doth not warrant Kings to rule how they liſt, or to make their will to ſtand for law; but rather taxeth Tyrants for exerciſing their power in an unjuſt manner, namely, when as without any order of law they take away mens children, goods, lands, by force and violence; or when they abuſe the things thus taken to their pleaſure, to ſerve their luſt, or to beſtow them on their friends and favourites, not imploying them for the benefit of the Common-wealth; or finally, when as they uſe the perſons of their ſubjects without their liking & conſent, as ſlaves, and put them to ſervile offices and baſe drudgery not beſeeming free-born ſubjects: ch.14.52.

V. 12. And he will appoint him Captains over thouſands] Which places, though honourable & profitable to Kings favourites, who enjoy them, yet are not ſo to them who ſerve under them, and execute their difficult and dangerous deſigns; neither are they pleaſing to the people where they are quartered and billeted.

and will ſet them to ear his ground, and to reap his harveſt] i. e. He will preſs them to do his works of all kinds, either allowing them nothing for their pains, or not conſiderable and valuable wages.

and to make his inſtruments of war, &c.] i. e. He will make them his Smiths, Carpenters, and Chariot-makers, and that by compulſion, not giving them for their labour ſufficient recompenſe.

V. 13. he will take your daughters] i. e. Forcibly, to do his work, whether you will, or no; or, not allowing them any wages for their work. And ſo it is to be underſtood in all the reſt that followeth.

V. 15. the tenth of your ſeed] i. e. Either that which of right belongeth to the Levites, or another tenth after theirs is paid.

V. 17. and ye ſhall be his ſervants] i. e. Loſe the liberty and priviledge of free-born Iſraelites, and living in a ſervile and ſlaviſh condition be compelled to do all his baſe drudgery, not reaping thereby any recompenſe or reward.

V. 18. And ye ſhall cry out in that day——and the Lord will not hear you] i. e. When groaning under the grievous oppreſſions which your King ſhall bring upon you, ye ſhall cry unto the Lord for help and deliverance, he will not regard your prayers, becauſe by our obſtinate wilfulneſs ye would needs run the hazard, after ye had had ſuch fair warning.

V. 19. And they ſaid, Nay, but we will have a King over us] i. e. Notwithſtanding all thy diſſwaſions we ſtand firm in our reſolution to have a King.

V. 20. That we alſo may be like all the nations] Here they diſcover the chief grounds of their deſiring a King, and why they were ſo firm in their reſolution. The firſt was their proud ambitious affectation to be like the heathen nations, in ſetting up a pompous and glorious Monarchy inſtead of that mean government of the Judges, which made ſo little a ſhew of greatneſs and glory in the eyes of the world.

and that our King may judge us] i. e. Rule and govern us according to his own laws in time of peace.

and go out before us and fight our battels] i. e. Be our General in our wars: Of which we have now ſpecial need, ſeeing Nahaſh King of the Ammonites is coming againſt us, ch.12.12.

V. 21. and he rehearſed them in ears of the Lord] i. e. In theſe tumultuous diſtempers and diſtractions he addreſſeth himſelf unto God by prayer, deſiring directions from him what he ſhould do further about this weighty buſineſs, which did ſo much concern his glory and the good of the Common-wealth.

V. 22. Hearken unto their voice, and make them a King] i. e, Seeing no reaſons nor warnings will prevail with them, let them have their deſire, though it will be to their coſt.

And Samuel ſaid——Go ye every man to his City] i. e. Having commiſſion from God to make them a King, he condeſcendeth to their ſuit, and ſo diſmiſſeth the aſſembly, to depart for the preſent to their own homes: In the mean while he reſerveth to himſelf ſome time before the election of their King, wherein he might better conſider of the manner and means how and whereby this weighty action might beſt be effected, and ask counſel of God, and pray unto him for his direction therein.

CHAP. IX.

Verſ. 1 N*Ow there was a man of Benjamin*] i. e. A Benjamite; or, of the tribe of Benjamin.

the ſon of Abiel] He is called Ner, 1 Chron. 8. 33.& 9.36,39. and by ſome is thought to have had two ſons, one called Kiſh, the other Ner, after his own name, who was the father of Abner, and Sauls uncle. Others think there was but one Ner, Sauls uncle, ch. 14.50.

a Benjamite] Or, the ſon of a man of Jemini. Whoſe name is not here expreſſed, but onely his tribe; q d. Aphiah was the ſon of a certain man who was of the tribe of Benjamin.

a mighty man of power] i. e. Either in reſpect of his perſon, prowe*ſs* and fortitude, or of his ſubſtance and riches, or it may be of both the one and the other.

V. 2. A choice young man, and a goodly] i. e. A man ſingularly adorned with excellent gifts & good parts, both in reſpect of the ſtature and feature of his body, which was tall and proper, comely and beautiful, and alſo in reſpect of his mind, which was indued with moral vertues, and eſpecially with fortitude and courage befitting a King; and therefore fit to be advanced to ſuch an high dignity, and more likely to be honoured of his ſubjects, when he was ſet over them. And to this purpoſe theſe praiſes are here given.

V.3. And the aſſes of Kiſh, Sauls father, were loſt] Aſſes in Aſſyria & Canaan were in great eſteem, becauſe having few horſes, but what they had from other Countries, they uſed to ride upon them, Judg.10.4. and 12.14. And Kiſh (as Joſephus reporteth) taking great delight in them, and being very rich, had many excellent ones: and ſome it may be of the choiceſt being now ſtrayed and loſt, he ſendeth his ſon and ſervant to ſeek them. All which hapned by Gods ſpecial providence, (who, to ſhew his power, often uſeth ſmall and weak means to effect great matters) that hereby Saul might be brought to Samuel, and by him anointed King over Iſrael.

V. 4. And he paſſed through mount Ephraim] Ephraim bordered upon Benjamin; and therefore in their ſearch, as it is here deſcribed, they paſſed out of the one into the other, to and fro, according as they hapned to hear tydings of the aſſes.

the land of Shaliſha] A champion-countrey in the tribe of Benjamin called Baal-Shaliſha, 2 Kings 4.42. wherein was a City called Salim, by Jordan, not far from Gilgal, and neer Ænon, where John baptized, Joh.3.23. But it may be that Salim was diverſe from this here mentioned. See on ch. 13.17.

V. 5. Zuph] This was in the land of Ephraim: and here Ramah-Zophim was, where Samuel dwelt. See ch.1.1.

leſt my father leave caring for the aſſes, and take thought for us] Here he ſheweth his pious love to his father by his care to prevent his grief.

V. 6. a man of God] This title they gave in thoſe times to the prophets, to ſhew in what high and honourable eſteem they then had them, ch.2.27. Deut 33.1. Joſh.14. Judg.13.6. 1 Kings 13.1.

and he is an honourable man] i. e. Much honoured and eſteemed of the people for his ſingular skill in revealing ſecrets, and fore-ſeeing and fore-telling things to come.

all that he ſaith cometh ſurely to paſs] i. e. All that he fore-telleth by a prophetical Spirit.

peradventure he can ſhew us our way that we ſhould go] i. e. The beſt courſe to find our aſſes, for which end we have taken all this travail: Or if they be deſperately loſt, without hope of recovery, he will tell us that alſo, that then we may return, and not loſe any more labour. Now though it were far below the calling of a man of God to exerciſe his gift of prophecie about ſuch a baſe and contemptible ſubject, which was to be imployed about ſpiritual and heavenly things, or ſuch civil things at leaſt as were weighty, and imported the good of the Common-wealth; yet God and his Prophets, to keep his people from leaving him, and reſorting to wizards and ſoothſayers, ſtooped and condeſcended to trivial and common things, as the enquiring after things loſt, as in this place, and the recovery of thoſe that were ſick or wounded, as Jeroboams child, 2 Kings 14. 2. and Ahaziah, 2 Kings 1.3. Again, the Lord was pleaſed to give an anſwer by his Prophets for their ſatisfaction that reſorted to them about ſuch ordinarie matters, becauſe his people ſhould not think he had leſs care of them, in their private neceſſary occaſions, then the idols of the heathen, who being conſulted with, did by the miniſtry of Satan, ſpeaking in their oracles, return them anſwers, though oftentimes very frivolous and ambiguous; and that by having experience of the truth of their prophecies in ſuch things as were ſubject to their ſenſes they might be brought to believe them in things ſupernatural and above the reach of reaſon, Joh.3.12.

V. 7. if we go, what ſhall we bring the man?] Not that he thought that, like a Sooth-ſayer, he would do nothing without hire; which was the ſin of Balaam, 2 Pet.2.15. and the falſe prophets, Mic.3.11. but he ſpeaketh according to the common cuſtome of thoſe times, which was, to bring the Prophet ſome preſent, not as the wages of his divination, but as a civil and honourarie gratuity, to teſtifie their due reſpect and thankfulneſs unto him. So 1 Kings 14.2,3. 2 Kings 4.42. and 8. 8. Judg. 13.17. and 6.18.

for the bread is ſpent in our veſſels] i. e. In our ſcrips, wallets, or baskets. By bread he meaneth their viaticum, or proviſions which they carried with them in their journey; Of which if any ſtore had been left worth the preſenting, they would have given ſome part to the Prophet. Such a preſent Jeroboams wife carried to Ahijah, 1 Kings 14.3. and the good Shunamite with ſuch proviſion entertained Eliſha, 2 Kings 4. 8. and the man that came from Baal-Shaliſha brought him likewiſe bread, 2 Kings 4.42. Others think he uſeth it as a reaſon why they ſhould not go to the man of God, but rather return homeward, becauſe all their proviſion was ſpent, and they had neither meat nor money left to relieve them in their journey, if they ſhould make this ſtay.

V. 8. I have here at hand] Heb. there is found in my hand. i. e. in my cuſtody; or, in my purſe:

the fourth part of a ſhekel of ſilver] A piece of the value of ſeven pence half-peny. See on Gen. 23.15. Ezek. 45.12. A poor preſent to give a Prophet, whom he ſtileth a man of God, and an honourable perſon; but yet worthy the acceptance, when it was preſented as a free gift, onely to teſtifie their thankfulneſs; eſpecially, when (like the poor widows two mites) it was all their ſubſtance that now remained.

V. 9. Before-time in Iſrael, when a man went to enquire of God] i. e. Such was the piety of men in former times, that when they would ask counſel of God, they addreſſed themſelves to his Prophets, who by ſpecial revelation were acquainted with his Will, and from him did reveal it unto his people. So Rebekah, Gen.25.22.

Come, and let us go to the Seer] So called, becauſe they foreſaw things to come, and becauſe the Lord was ſeen of them in viſions and dreams, Numb.12.6. & 24.4. 1 Sam.24.11.

for he that is now called a Prophet, was before-time called a Seer] Not that they ceaſed to be ſo called in Samuels time, as well as of old; But theſe are the words of him who wrote this book, added by way of parentheſis, to cleer the thing to thoſe who lived in his dayes, when the word Seer was out of uſe, and Prophet come into its place. Hence ſome conjecture that this ſtorie was not written by Samuel himſelf, but by one of his diſciples, who in honour of his maſter called it by his name. See the Argument. But Prophets were ſtill called Seers many hundred years after Samuels time; Iſa.29.10. & 30.10. Amos 7.12. 2 Kings 17.13.

V. 10. Then ſaid Saul to his ſervant, Well ſaid] Heb. Thy word is good. His ſervant being directed by the ſecret motion of Gods Spirit to give this counſel, that what he had determined might come to paſs, Saul hearkeneth thereunto. Which may teach us, not ſo much to reſpect the perſon from whom the advice cometh, as upon what reaſon and ground it is given. So Job.31.13.

So they went unto the City where the man of God was] i.e. To Ramah, where Samuel dwelt.

V. 11. And as they went up the hill to the City] Heb. in the aſcent of the City. This aſcent was not in the City it ſelf, but in the way and entrance into it; where they met the maids that came out to draw water.

Is the Seer here?] i.e. Is the Prophet now at his houſe in this City? For though they knew he dwelt there, v. 6. yet in reſpect of his many buſineſſes abroad, as being Judge, they doubted whether he were now at home, or no.

V. 12. He is: Behold, he is before you] Not meaning, that he was ſo before them as that he was in ſight at that time; for they were now without the City, and he within; but, that he was in the City neer hand, ſo that they might, if they made haſte, ſoon and eaſily ſee him. See verſ. 13.

for he came to day to the City] Hence ſome gather, that this City was not Ramah, the place of Samuels habitation, but ſome other City, whither he now came on this occaſion. But this followeth not: For though this City were Ramah, and he dwelt here, yet having been out of Town upon his occaſions, they might fitly ſay he came to day to the City, i. e. home, to his dwelling-houſe. See v. 5,6.

for there is a ſacrifice of the people to day] Or, a feaſt. i. e. A peace-offering, or ſacrifice of thankſgiving, after which followed a feaſt made of the remainders of the ſacrifice. And it was lawful for holy Prophets, immediately inſpired, to offer ſacrifices (eſpecially peace offerings and ſacrifices of thankſgiving, on extraordinary occaſions) upon altars erected in other places beſides the Tabernacle, ch.7.9. & 16.5. eſpecially at this time, when as the Ark, which was the viſible ſign of Gods preſence, and as it were the ſoul of the Tabernacle, was not reſident in it. See on Judg. 21.4. But it ſeemeth that this here ſpoken of was rather a feaſt after the offering than a ſacrifice, at which the people met to rejoyce before the Lord, & to praiſe him for his bleſſings, Gen.31.54. 1 Kings 19.2. feaſt made purpoſely by Samuel, and gueſts invited unto it, becauſe God having revealed to him, that he would ſend thither the next day him, whom he would have to be their King, he deſired to give him, when he came, honourable entertainment, by making him a ſolemn feaſt.

in the high place] The City it ſelf was ſituate on an hill, v. 11. and this place where they ſacrificed and feaſted was the higheſt part of the City. For in thoſe times, and long after, the people out of their devotion thought high places fitteſt for ſuch religious uſes, as being neereſt heaven, and furtheſt and freeſt from wordly diſtractions & diſturbances. And ſuch places were in uſe till the building of the Temple; but after that, ſtrictly forbidden: 1 Kings 3.2. See on Mic.1 5.

V. 13. before he go up to the high place to eat] i. e. To feaſt, and not to offer ſacrifice; Or, firſt to ſacrifice, and then to feaſt.

for the people will not eat untill he come, becauſe he doth bleſs the ſacrifice] It was a commendable cuſtome among the Iſraelites, to bleſs God, i. e to acknowledg his bounty and crave his bleſſing, before their meat, and to give thanks after. And he that bleſſed the table did alſo divide and diſtribute the meat. This was practiſed by Chriſt at his laſt Supper, Matth. 26. 26. and at Emmaus, Luk.24.30. See Deut.8.10. 1 Tim. 4.4.

Now therefore get you up] i. e. If you deſire to ſee him before he ſit down, make haſte; for otherwiſe you will hardly do it.

the ſacrifice] i. e. The meat reſerved after the offering to furniſh the feaſt. *S*ee ch.1.4. Or, as others think, the meat provided for the feaſt, without a ſacrifice.

V. 14. Samuel came out againſt them] Out of his own houſe, into the ſtreets of the City, being directed by God ſo to do, v.15.

V. 15. Now the Lord] Here he rendreth the reaſon of Samuels coming forth, and alſo of his providing this feaſt, namely, to entertain Saul whom he was to anoint King.

had told Samuel in his ear] Heb.revealed in the ear of Samuel. To wit, by removing the covering wherewith it was vailed. By which phraſe is ſignified, that by the ſecret inſpiration of his Spirit he had revealed to Samuel (as a friend doth a ſecret by whiſpering in the eare of another) that he would the next day ſend him a man of the tribe of Benjamin, whom he would have him anoynt King over Iſrael. And this the Lord told before-hand, that when he came, according to his prediction, *S*amuel might be aſſured that he was the man whom the Lord had choſen. So ch.20.12,13. 2 Sam.7.27. Job 33.16. Iſai.22.14.& 48.8.

V. 16. I will ſend thee a man out of the land of Benjamin] i. e. I will by the ſecret inſtinct and motion of my Spirit cauſe him to come unto thee, though himſelf know not of it; and that thou maiſt not miſtake another for him, know that the man whom I ſhall ſend is of the tribe of Benjamin.

that he may ſave my people] For though they had not in all Sauls time a full deliverance from the Philiſtims, but the war continued to the very day of his death, when alſo both he and his people received a great overthrow; yet becauſe he gave them divers defeats, and ſo blunted their rage, abated their ſtrength, that they could not, as formerly, keep them under as ſervants and ſlaves, but carried it out with them in an equal ballance of war, ſometimes the one party prevailing, and ſometimes the other, therefore he might be ſaid in ſome degree to have ſaved them, though their deliverance was not compleat, but onely begun, and the perfecting of it reſerved till Davids reign.

out of the hands of the Philiſtims] Though the Philiſtims had received ſuch a great defeat by the Iſraelites,that they durſt not again invade their countrey ſo long as *S*amuel alone judged the people, ch.7.13. yet did they watch and catch every opportunity to do them miſchief, and were now again ready, having made a confederacy with the Ammonites, to raiſe a new war againſt them, that joyning together they might invade their countrey at the ſame time; ch.12.12.

for I have looked upon my people]God had formerly looked upon them, for he ſeeth all things at once, with one perfect act of ſeeing. But he ſpeaketh after the manner of men; and ſo he is ſaid to look upon his, when beholding them with the eye of pity and compaſſion in their miſeries and afflictions, he cometh to give them help and deliverance.

becauſe their cry is come unto me] i. e. Either, as ſome think, their clamour in calling for a King to be their Captain; or rather their cry and complaints under their oppreſſions, which moved the Lord to pity them. For ſo the next words before carry the ſenſe, ſutable to that, Exod.3.9.

V. 17. Behold the man whom I ſpake to thee of] That Samuel might be the better aſſured that he was not miſtaken, the Lord contenteth not himſelf with his former predictions and deſcriptions, but pointeth out the man, when he cometh into his ſight. Now this the Lord ſpake unto *S*amuel by ſecret inſpiration, or Spirit of prophecie. So ch.16.8,12.

this ſame ſhall reign over my people] Heb. reſtrain. i.e. By his authority and government he ſhall reſtrain them from looſe liberty and licentious wickedneſs.

V. 18. Then Saul drew neer to Samuel in the gate] Or, within the gate. i. e. Being entred by the gate into the City, as v.14. Or, as others read it there, into the midſt of the City, and not far from Samuels houſe, out of which he came to meet them. Others underſtand it of the gate of Samuels houſe; out of which he came, and unto which Saul was come to enquire after him.

V. 19. go up before me unto the high place] i. e. Do thou and thy ſervant go to the place where we have appointed to keep a feaſt; for I am reſolved to entertain you for my gueſts.

and will tell thee all that is in thine heart] i. e. Not onely concerning thy fathers aſſes, for which thou haſt taken this journey, but alſo all other things which thou deſireſt to know, and which do more highly and neerly concern thee.

V. 20. ſet not thy mind on them; for they are found] i. e. Take no further thought for them, nor let them, by troubling thy mind with anxious care, make thee the more unwilling to ſtay with me, onely for this one night longer, ſeeing they are already found, according to thine own deſire.

And on whom is all the deſire of Iſrael? is it not on thee?] Not that the deſire of all Iſrael was on *S*aul particularly and perſonally; for all Iſrael knew him not: But the meaning is this; Unto whom ſhall the general deſire of all Iſrael, of having a King to rule over them in royal dignity be appropriated by Gods ſpecial deſignation, but unto thee and thy fathers houſe? Others read it, Whoſe ſhall be all the things deſirable, i. e. the choiceſt and the beſt things, in Iſrael, but thine? as ch.8.11.

V. 21. Am not I a Benjamite, of the ſmalleſt of the tribes of Iſrael?] This he ſpeaketh, not in reſpect of the honour and nobilitie of this tribe in birth and parentage, for ſo it was ſuperiour to all the reſt, ſaving the tribe of Joſeph, being deſcended from Jacobs beloved Rachel, his onely true wife) but in reſpect of its ſmalneſs in Number. For *S*aul thinking (it may be) that the Kingdom ſhould be conferred on one by the votes and election of the people, conceived no probability that he ſhould carry it, ſeeing every tribe would be for ſome one of their own; and therefore his tribe being leaſt of all muſt needs have feweſt voyces and friends in the election. Now this he ſaid truly, becauſe this tribe not long before were almoſt all ſlain in the quarrel about the Levites wife, Judg. 20. and could not yet be multiplied to any great number. Neither were they much encreaſed in a long time after, ſeeing in reſpect of their paucity joining themſelves to Judah, they were uſually compriſed under their name, as if they both had been but one tribe, 1 Kings 11.13,32. & 12.20. *S*ee Pſal.68.27.

and my familie the leaſt of all the families] The Iſraelites divided their tribes into families: Of which there being ten in the tribe of Benjamin, (at leaſt there had been before that great ſlaughter) it ſeemeth Sauls family was feweſt in number, being compared with others. Howſoever he could not ſpeak ſo of his fathers houſe, ſeeing he was a mighty man of of power, v.1. So Gideon, Judg.6.15.

V. 22. And Samuel took Saul, and his ſervant——and made them ſit in the chiefeſt place] So humble was Samuel, and free from envy,emulation, and ſelf-ſeeking, that when he knew it was Gods pleaſure to advance Saul to be King & ſupreme Governour,(which much tended to his own diſparagement) he bent all his thoughts to honour him whom God intended to honour; and therefore gave place and precedency, not onely to Saul himſelf, but alſo to his fathers ſervant, in honourable reſpect to him whom he attended.

V. 23. Bring the portion which I gave thee] Hereby it appeareth, that God having told *S*amuel the day before of Sauls coming, he had prepared this feaſt to give him entertainment. And it being the cuſtom of thoſe times to ſet before every one of their gueſts his own peculiar diſh or meſs, as it was his purpoſe to make Saul his chief gueſt: ſo he provided for him the chiefeſt piece of meat; and having appointed the Cook to ſet it up for this uſe, he now called unto him for it. So ch.1.4,5. Gen. 43.34.

V. 24. And the Cook took up the ſhoulder] This being in thoſe times counted a chief joynt, was allowed to the Prieſt, Lev.7.32.33. and here ſet apart by Samuel for Sauls entertainment. If it were part of the peace-offering, then was it the left ſhoulder, ſeeing the right belonged to the Prieſt, and none but Levites might eat of it, as being holy food, Lev. 22.10. But it may be, it was not part of the peace-offering, but a ſpecial diſh prepared before by the cook at Samuels appointment. For if it had been that which remained of the ſacrifice, it could not be ſet apart before it were finiſhed. See ch.2.15,16. *S*ome ſay this part, which was the Prieſts fee, was ſet before Saul, to intimate that if Kings would have their Crowns flouriſh, they muſt not ſever themſelves from the Miniſters of God, but each love the other, and both ſwords joyn together. Others ſay it was to admoniſh Kings to conſider that their calling doth not licence them to follow idleneſs and pleaſure, but oblige them to pains, and to be as it were the ſhoulders of the body politick, bearing-up the burden of the Common-wealth. See Photius, *Epiſt.*241.

and that which was upon it] i. e. Either ſome other piece adhering unto it, as the neck, or the breſt, (which alſo belonged to the Prieſt, Lev. 7.31.) or rather ſome other meat that was laid upon it; or ſome ſauce, to make it more acceptable to ſuch an honourable perſon. Here compare by the way the ſobriety and temperance of thoſe times with the profuſe gluttony and gormandizing that is uſed in our dayes, Then one joint of meat was thought good entertainment, when they intended to ſhew their honourable reſpect to one that was deſigned to be their King; but now endleſs varieties of diſhes and delicacies are at our tables, excuſed as not coſtly or dainty enough, to entertain our equals.

Behold, that which is left: ſet it before thee, and eat] Not that which is left after others have done eating; (for it is more then probable that as he was preferred to the chief place: ſo he was firſt ſerved) but either that which is left as a remainder of the ſacrifice; or rather, that which was ſet apart or reſerved for thee by mine appointment.

for unto this time hath it been kept for thee] Hereby it appeareth that it was not any part of the peace-offering, but provided the day before, or at leaſt early that morning, when he invited his gueſts. And hereby he intimates unto Saul that God had revealed unto him his coming the day before he came: for elſe he could not have reſerved for him this diſh.

ſince I ſaid] i. e. Since I cauſed this feaſt to be prepared, I appointed this ſpecial diſh ſhould be reſerved for thee.

V. 25. Samuel communed with Saul upon the top of the houſe] i.e. His own houſe, where, after he was come from the feaſt, he entertained and lodged him. Others think, that when all the gueſts were come down into the City from the houſe where they feaſted, Samuel took *S*aul to the top of that houſe (now in thoſe countries their houſes had flat roofs, fit to walk upon, like our leads and terraſes, Deut.22.8.) that there they might commune together about the affairs of the Kingdom, it being a place of ſecrecy and out of hearing,and therefore the fitter to debate in,of theſe wighty matters; which they deſired as yet to be kept ſecret, as appeareth by their choice of this place, by their early riſing in the morning to conſult before their parting, and by their ſending away the ſervant before, that he might not be privy to their diſcourſe or actions. Now this ſecrecy was uſed, that it might not be thought, when *S*aul was choſen King, that there had been before any colluſion or plotting between Samuel and him, but that it might plainly appear he was immediately choſen by God.

V. 26. Samuel called Saul to the top of the houſe] i.e. Of his own houſe, where *S*aul was lodged, unto which he had called him the day before, & not the houſe where they feaſted. Hither he called him again,that he might privately talk with him about his calling to be King,and might haſten him on his journey, as he before had promiſed him, v.19.

V. 27. Bid the ſervant paſs on before] i. e. That he may not hear us conferring on theſe affairs, nor ſee me anointing thee. See Judg.3.19.

But ſtand thou ſtill awhile, that I may ſhew thee the word of God] That thou maiſt with more reverence hear the Divine Oracles concerning thy calling to the kingly office, the ſignes to confirm thy faith, and the duties that belong unto thee.

CHAP. X.

Verſ. 1. THen Samuel took] To wit, by Gods appointment, who ſent him to anoint Saul to be King over his people, as he telleth him, ch.15.1.

a vial of oyl] This ceremonie was uſed to ſignifie the collation of thoſe gifts and graces of the Spirit which were requiſite to fit and qualifie the perſon anointed for that place and function unto which God called him: Which accordingly befel Saul, verſ.6,9. And to ſignifie alſo that God had ſet him apart, and advanced him above others in authority and eminency: To which, oyl hath great reſemblance, which mixeth not with watriſh liquors, but ſeparateth it ſelf from them, and floteth above them. Now it is queſtioned among Expoſitors, what kind of oyl this was wherewith Kings were anointed, whether common oyl, or the holy oyl of the ſanctuary, appointed by God for the conſecration of the Prieſts. And it is thought that Saul was anointed with ordinary oyl, (as was alſo Jehu 2 Kings 9.1, 6.) which Samuel brought with him in a vial from his own houſe; and that David and Solomon, with other Kings ſucceeding them, were anointed with the holy oyl of the ſanctuary. But this latter is not probable, ſeeing that oyl was appropriated to Aaron and his ſons, and ſtrictly forbidden unto all others, under that great penalty of being cut off from Gods people, Exod.30.23,32,33. And beſides, Samuel anointed David in great ſecrecie, as being in danger of loſing his life, if it ſhould have come to Sauls knowledg, as it eaſily might, if he had fetched oyl from the ſanctuary, and acquainted the Prieſts with it. And when he was anointed King over Judah, 2 Sam.2.4. the tabernacle was under the power of Iſhboſheth, and therefore oyl could not be had from thence to anoint David King, who was his corrival and competitour. Neither have we any intimation in the Scripture that it was other then ordinary oyl. For whereas it is ſaid Pſal.89.20. that God with his holy oyl had anointed him, this is to be underſtood in reſpect not of the ſubſtance and compoſition of the oyl, but onely of that ſacred uſe unto which it was imployed. And whereas it is alledged that Zadok anointed Solomon with oyl taken out of the tabernacle, 1 Kings 1.39. hence it follows not, that it was that holy oyl appropriated to the Prieſts, ſeeing there was in the tabernacle much other oyl, deſtinated to their uſes. David and Solomon are ſaid to have been anointed with oyl contained in an horn,but Saul & Jehu with oyl out of a vial, to ſignifie (as ſome think) the ſtability and durableneſs of the Reign of thoſe Kings, and the ſhort duration of the other, a viall being brittle, as made of glaſs or earth, but an horn, ſtrong and tough, and able to endure many fall or knock.

and poured it upon his head] There were three ſorts of men conſecrated and ſet a part to their ſeveral functions by anointing with oyl; I. Prophets, as Eliſha, 1 Kings 19.16. II. Prieſts, as Aaron and his ſons, Exod.30.30. III. Kings, as in this place, and elſewhere. And theſe all were types of our Lord Chriſt, conſecrated and ſet apart by God his Father to be our Prophet, Prieſt and King: And therefore when he, who was the antitype, was exhibited, theſe ceremonial anointings ought to ceaſe, as being of no more uſe, yea, in this reſpect unlawful, becauſe they that uſe them do hereby ſeem to deny that Chriſt, ſhadowed by them, it yet come in the fleſh.

and kiſſed him] This ceremony in thoſe dayes, and long after, was diverſly uſed; I. To teſtifie mutual love, and the union and communion of minds and hearts, Gen.48.10.& 27.26. Exod.18.7. Ruth.1.9. II. To congratulate them who were newly advanced to ſome great honour and dignity, as here, and Gen.41.40. III. By way of commendation and approbation, joyned with a kind of raviſhing delight, Prov. 24.26. IV. Of ſalutation and kind entertainment, Luk.7.45. V. To teſtifie homage and ſubjection yielded out of reverence and love, Gen. 41.40. VI. By way of adoration and religious worſhip; and ſo idolaters kiſſed their idols, 1 Kings 19.18. Hoſ.13.2. and Chriſtians their bleſſed Saviour, Pſal.2.12. Now Samuel kiſſed Saul in divers of theſe reſpects, namely, to teſtifie his love, to congratulate his high advancement, and to ſignifie his willing homage and ſubjection.

Is it not becauſe the Lord hath anointed thee,&c.] q.d. Have I not uſed all theſe ceremonies to give thee aſſurance that God hath choſen thee to be King over his people? i. e. I have ſurely done it to this end. Here he mindeth him of two things; 1. That God was the chief Author of his high advancement, and that himſelf was onely his Miniſter to do what he appointed; hereby to move him to give unto God the whole glory and praiſe. 2. That it was Gods people or inheritance over whom he ſhould reign; to make him the more careful to govern them with wiſdome and in righteouſneſs: 1 Kings 3.9. Exod.19.5. Deut.9.26. and 32.9.

V. 2. When thou art departed from me] Here and in the verſes following Samuel by a propheticall Spirit giveth unto Saul certains ſigns which ſhould occurr in his return, that when he ſaw them accordingly happen,he ſhould thereby have his faith confirmed in this aſſurance,that other things foretold concerning his Kingdome ſhould likewiſe certainly come to paſſe; to this end, that he might with more confidence adventure upon it, notwithſtanding all difficulties that he ſhould meet with in his way, ſeeing he was aſſured that God, who was all-ſufficient to protect and bear him out, had called him unto it.

By Rachels ſepulchre, in the border of Benjamin] Rachels ſepulchre was in the way of Ephrath, that is, Bethlehem, and as ſome ſay within a mile of it, Gen.35.20. Now Bethlehem is in the tribe of Judah, Mic. 5. 2. yet Rachels ſepulchre might be in the border of Benjamin, becauſe theſe two tribes bordered upon and were intermingled one with another.

at Zelzah] An unknown place now, ſeeing it is not elſewhere mentioned. It ſignifieth a fair or pleaſant ſhade.

V. 3. to the plain of Tabor] Or, to the oak of Tabor. For the word ſignifieth both a Plain and an Oak. Of Tabor ſee on Joſh.19 12. Jer. 46.18. Hoſ.5.1.

going up to God to Bethel] i. e. Either the place properly ſo called, Gen.18.19. where Jacob ſaw his viſion: In which was an altar for ſacrifice, and a place of prayer and Divine worſhip, unto which the people reſorted: Or appellatively, the houſe of God, and that either at Shiloh, where the Tabernacle was, or at Kiriath-jearim, where the ark was now placed. Hither theſe three men went to offer ſacrifice. See on ch.7.16.

carrying a bottle of wine] Which they uſed in their ſacrifices of thankſgiving, and in drink offerings, Lev.23.13.

V. 4. and give thee two loaves of bread, which thou ſhalt receive] But how could they give, or Saul lawfully receive, that which they had devoted unto God, to be offered unto him? Some think they had in their ſtore other bread for their uſe, out of which they gave theſe two loaves. But ſpeaking of three loaves which they carried with them, and then adding, they ſhould give Saul two, it ſeemeth that he meant two of thoſe three. Others think, though theſe loaves were devoted to God, yet they might lawfully give them to Saul, being hungry, and without proviſion, ch.9.7. becauſe it was a work of mercy to relieve his neceſſity; which God preferreth before ſacrifice, Hoſ.6.6. But it is not probable that Samuel would ſend him away ſo ſlenderly provided for his journey as that he ſhould already want bread, when as he had traveled but a few miles from him. Therefore I rather think that God did ſecretly move theſe men to offer Saul this Preſent, by way of homage due to their King, though themſelves at preſent had no ſuch knowledge of him. The which ſo much the more tended to the ſtrengthening of Sauls faith, the main end at which God and Samuel aimed, when as they upon no acquaintance, or other cauſe, offered him this Preſent, but onely as they were moved in a ſtrange manner by Gods Spirit: And it was in them not onely lawful, but alſo pious duty, to hearken and yield unto it.

V. 5. After that, thou ſhalt come to the hill of God] By which ſome underſtand the high hill in Kirjath-jearim where the Ark was placed in the houſe of Abinadab, ch.7.1. But it is not likely that a ſtrong garriſon of the Philiſtims ſhould be kept in that place where the Ark was ſeated, and whither the people were daily to reſort for religious ſervices. Therefore by the hill of God here we are to underſtand the high place of Gibeah, which is called Gibeah of Benjamin; neer unto which was the Philiſtims garriſon, ch.13.2. Where alſo Sauls Father, and his Uncle (who afterwards met him) with other of his kindred and friends, had their habitation. Joſephus calleth it the town of Gabbatha. And it was called the hill of God, either becauſe the Lord there had done in former times ſome memorable act; or becauſe there was there ſome place conſecrated to religious uſes,where was a Colledg of Prophets devoted to Gods ſervice. And theſe might dwell in ſafety neer a garriſon of the Philiſtims, ſeeing in thoſe dayes religious men were priviledged to dwell neer their enemies without hurt and danger.

thou ſhalt meet a company of prophets coming down from the high place] Namely, of Gibeah, the place of Sauls habitation, where there was a School of Prophets. For there were in the land of Iſrael divers Schools or Colledges of the Prophets: In which were ſome Elders or chief,who were Governours and as it were Fathers over the reſt, becauſe by inſtruction and example they did as it were ſpiritually beget them, and educate and train them up in holy and religious exerciſes, as praying, reading, meditating, ſtudying and interpreting the Scriptures and Law of God, ſinging of Pſalms and ſpiritual ſongs (uſing therewith inſtruments of Muſick) and holy conferences one with another; that they being thus trained up in doctrine and holineſs of life, might be fitted thereby afterwards to inſtruct the people. The moſt of theſe (as it may probably be thought) were of the Levites and Prieſts progeny, thus educated for the ſervice of the ſanctuary, and to teach the people; although we cannot ſay but there were divers among them who were not of this order. And it pleaſed God to chooſe and call ſome of theſe to be extraordinary Prophets, endued with that ſpeciall gift of prophecie, whereby they did foreſee and foretell things to come. But this gift was not common to them all, nor appropriated to them alone, ſeeing it came not by inſtruction and education, but by Gods free diſpenſation, the wind blowing where it liſteth, Joh.3.8. as we ſee in the example of the Prophet Amos, Amos 7.14. The ſecond ſort of thoſe who lived in theſe Colledges were the younger ſtudents, called the ſons or children of the prophets, 1 Kings 20.35. 2 Kings 9.1. Theſe (as I ſaid) were under the government and tuition of the Elder, inſtructed by them in the knowledg of the Scriptures, and trained up in religious exerciſes. And upon theſe alſo it pleaſed God, when he thought good, to confer the extraordinary gift of prophecy, as appeareth 2 Kings 2.3,5. Now of theſe Colledges there were divers in Iſrael; one here, another at Bethel, a third at Jericho, 2 Kings 2.3,5. a fourth at Naihoth in Ramah, over which Samuel was Preſident and Father, ch.19.19,20.

with a pſalterie, and tabret, and a pipe, and a harp] Theſe they uſed to play upon, when by ſinging of Pſalms and ſpiritual ſongs they praiſed God,to raiſe up their ſpirits, and make them more cheerful in religious duties; and it may be alſo, when they prophecied, as we ſee in the example of Eliſha, who, when his mind was ſad and heavy, in that great diſtreſs of Gods people, and diſtempered and exaſperated with the preſence of Jehoram an idolatrous King, called for Muſick to raiſe up his dul and drooping ſpirit, and to bring his mind into ſuch an holy temper and frame as might make him more fit to exerciſe his gift to prophecying, 2 King.3.15. And for theſe uſes were Heman, Aſaph, Jeduthun, and their ſons ſet apart by David for the ſervice of the ſanctuary, who were endued with prophetical ſpirits, and joyned muſick with their prophecying and giving of thanks, 1 Chron.25.1,2,3,6.

V. 6. And the Spirit of the Lord will come upon thee] i. e. Not onely the ſpirit of wiſdom, magnanimity, courage, and other qualifications befitting thy kingly calling, but alſo the ſpirit of prophecy, enabling thee to joyn with the Prophets in ſinging Gods praiſes, though thou haſt not been taught and trained up in theſe ſpiritual exerciſes; and alſo the extraordinary gift of prophecie for the time, whereby thou ſhalt foretell things to come: Numb.11.25.

and ſhalt be turned into another man] Not in reſpect of perſon, form and ſubſtance, but of properties, gifts and parts; namely, both in reſpect of the preſent gift of prophecying, and of the ſpirit of wiſdom, valour and government, which ſhall be inſpired to fit thee for the calling of a King, ſo as thou ſhalt not, as formerly, like a meer ruſtick, according to thy education, ſet thy mind and heart upon thy cattle and husbandry, but upon ſuch things as belong to the government of thy Kingdom, in peace and war. In all which there was but a civil, not a ſanctifying change, no ſaving grace and holineſs, as appeareth by his fearful defection into outragious wickedneſs afterwards.

V. 7. do as occaſion ſhall ſerve thee: for God is with thee] q.d. I cannot give thee particular rules to direct thee in all thy future actions and proceedings, in reſpect of the intervening of various accidents: but, as occaſion ſhall be offered, make uſe of thine own prudence, wherewith God will endue thee, to do that which ſhall appear to be beſt, both for the wel-governing of thy people in time of peace, and the making military preparations againſt Gods enemies, and the right ordering of all things in time of war, when the Lord called thee to fight his battels: In all which proceed with a couragious and undaunted ſpirit, ſeeing the Lord will not onely enable thee with gifts, to direct thee in all thy waies, and to overcome all difficulties, but will alſo be preſent with thee, to aſſiſt and protect thee in all thy undertakings, to do him ſervice in thy kingly calling.

V. 8. And thou ſhalt go down before me to Gilgal, &c.] This cannot be underſtood of Sauls preſent going to Gilgal, as ſoon as he parted with Samuel, not yet after he ſaw the ſigns given come to paſs. For firſt he went to Mizpeh, aud was there choſen King by lot. After that, he returned to his own houſe, and lived ſome time in a private condition, ch.11.4,5. Then hearing of the beſieging of Jabeſh-gilead by Nahaſh, and the hard conditions he tendred unto them, he made war againſt the Ammonites, and wholly vanquiſhed them. That being done, Samuel ſummoneth the people to make their appearance at Gilgal, there to renew the Kingdom; Which they did, and there made Saul King, and offered ſacrifices of peace-offerings before the Lord, and greatly rejoyced in their King, ch.11.14,15. Therefore, for ought I can conceive, there muſt be two goings of Saul to Gilgal; the firſt appointed, to renew the Kingdom; the other, to make preparations againſt the Philiſtims. And this later being a weighty buſineſs, *S*amuel appointed Saul to go thither, and to wait for him there ſeven dayes, that they might together conſult about it, offer ſacrifices unto God, and pray for his direction and bleſſing. Now this ſeven dayes waiting was enjoyned, either becauſe Samuel might be hindred from coming ſooner by ſome neceſſary occaſion, or rather for trial of Sauls faith and obedience to God, in waiting his appointed time; upon which condition, and not otherwiſe, he was to be eſtabliſhed in the Kingdom. And of this ſecond coming to Gilgal, which was above two years after this parting of Saul from Samuel, ch.13.1,2. muſt this place needs be meant. For in the firſt going to renew the Kingdom *S*aul waited not for *S*amuel at all, but they and all the people went thither to perform the ſolemnity of the Kings Inauguration, and there they continued together till all was finiſhed, ch.11.14,15. & 12.1,2, &c. Some underſtand this appoinment not to be limited to either of thoſe two goings to Gilgal, but to be a general direction to Saul, what he ſhould do when any weighty affairs of the Kingdom hapned, eſpecially in the time of great ſtraits and dangers, namely, that he ſhould on ſuch occaſions go to Gilgal, and there attend Samuel, to conſult with him about them; and becauſe he might be in places far remote, therefore he ſhould there attend him ſeven dayes, that he might have time to come to him, But we read of no ſuch matter done in any other time: Neither is it like, that Samuel ſhould in his old age, and when Saul reigned, be ſo far diſtant that he ſhould need ſeven dayes for his coming thither.

V. 9. God gave him another heart] i. e. Wrought in him a ſenſible change, and taking him off from his former thoughts and deſires about private and country affairs, endowed him with heroical gifts and parts, fit for a King, and the government of a Kingdome.

and all thoſe ſigns came to paſs that day] There were four ſigns given, but the fulfilling of the two firſt is not particularly ſet down; onely it is here ſaid in generall, that they all came to paſs: Which was ſufficient, in relation to the end for which they were given. Yet of the two laſt, namely, Sauls meeting with the Prophets, and his own prophecying and being turned into another man, here now followeth a more full relation, theſe being of greater concernment, and more pertinent to Sauls perſon and condition.

V. 10. a company of prophets met him] i. e. Both the prophets themſelves, and their ſons, that is, their diſciples and ſcholars. See on verſ.5.

and the Spirit of God came upon him] i. e. The Spirit of prophecy, inabling him to ſpeak of Divine matters above his natural abilities, or his former education and imployments.

and he prophecied] See on v.6.

V. 11. all that knew him before-time] i. e. All his acquaintance, kindred and friends, the Inhabitants of Gibea, amongſt whom he dwelt, and who had formerly known his perſon, parts and breeding, and how unſutable they were to his preſent carriage and condition, were amazed to ſee this ſudden and great change, and queſtioned one with another what ſhould be the cauſe of it.

Is Saul alſo among the prophets?] q. d. It is ſo ſtrange that it may juſtly be wondred at, that *S*aul ſhould not onely be conſorted in ſuch an equipage, but alſo that he ſhould on the ſudden be furniſhed with ſuch gifts and abilities, as to perform theſe Divine exerciſes, in praiſing God and prophecying, as well as thoſe who have imployed themſelves to the theſe ſtudies, and have had the help and benefit of education, and the inſtruction and example of their Fathers and Tutors, the elder prophets. So ch.19.24.

V. 12. But who is their father?] When they ſaw Saul prophecying among the prophets, they wondred at it, and asked one of another, what he did there, and how it came to paſſe that he who was of a far different calling and profeſſion, and never had any education in the School of the Prophets, ſhould now on a ſudden come to prophecie? Unto whom one of the ſame place, who it ſeemeth was wiſer then the reſt, (and, as ſome probably think, the father of thoſe Prophets) anſwereth by asking another queſtion; But who is their father? i. e. the father of thoſe other Prophets? q. d. Wonder not at this, ſeeing all this whom ye hear and ſee prophecie, have not theſe gifts by patrimony, but from God, who is a free agent, and inſpireth whom he pleaſeth; and the ſame Father of ſpirits, who by inſpiration hath conferred theſe gifts on them, is alike able at his pleaſure to infuſe the ſame gifts into Saul.

Therefore it became a proverb] i. e. An uſual and common ſpeech among the people. When they ſaw in any man a thing above all expectation, eſpecially when he was raiſed and ranked with men of eminent parts and gifts, in ſuch a place and calling as he was never capable of, as being far above his birth and breeding, then admiring at it, they would apply this proverb unto him, Is Saul alſo among the prophets? Thus they wondred at Paul, who of a perſecutor became a preacher of the Goſpel, Acts 9.21. and at the other Apoſtles, when they ſaw their gifts, and knew that they were illiterate, and of mean birth and low condition, Acts 2.7,8. & 4.13. Yea, thus they wondred at our *S*aviour Chriſt himſelf, when they heard his high and heavenly doctrine, and ſaw his miracles, Mark 6.2,3. Joh.7.15.

V. 13. And when he had made an end of prophecying, he came to the high place] To wit, where was the School of the Prophets, and it is very likely alſo a Synagogue and place for Divine worſhip; whereof it is called the hill of God, v.5. Hither Saul went to praiſe God for his high advancement, and to pray for his further direction in his weighty buſineſs, and for his protection and bleſſing upon his endeavours.

V. 14. And Sauls uncle ſaid unto him] That is, in likelyhood, Ner, the father of Abner, ch. 14.50. He meeting him either in this place of religious ſervice, (whither he alſo went to do his devotion) or elſe as he was coming down from it into the City, inquired after his journey, and it may be the more curiouſly, becauſe ſeeing this ſtrange change in him, he might think that ſome wonderful accident had befaln him in the way, which had been the cauſe of it.

and when we ſaw that they were no where] i. e. Not in any place whither we went to ſeek them.

V. 16. But of the matter of the Kingdom, whereof Samuel ſpake, he told him not] Either out of modeſty, becauſe, if he did not believe it, he would think him proud and ambitious; or, if he thought it would prove ſo, becauſe Samuel the Lords prophet had told him it, leſt it might expoſe him to his uncles envy, when he heard that he ſhould be advanced ſo far above him; or finally, becauſe Samuel had hitherto carried it on as a great ſecret, and upon good grounds, he did not think fit to diſcover it before the due time. So Moſes concealeth from Jethro his father in law the cauſe of his returning into Ægypt, Exod.4.18.

V. 17. And Samuel called the people together unto the Lord] That is, to make their appearance before the Lord,that he might declare unto and convince them of their ſin in asking a King, and alſo to ſhew Gods ſentence therein, and proceed to the election of him. See Judg.11.11. & 20.1.

to Mizpeh] Hither he had appointed the Ark to be brought, and the high prieſt to come with Urim and Thummim to ask counſel of God, and by caſting lots before the Ark to find out who ſhould be their King, v.22. *S*ee on ch.7.5.

V. 18. I brought up Iſrael out of Egypt] See on Judg. 2.1. & 6.8. He telleth them of his former mercies, eſpecially of that main and chief one, their deliverance out of the Egyptian bondage, to aggravate their ſin in asking a King, and thereby ſhaking off Gods government.

and out of the hand of all kingdoms] i. e. The Canaanites, Moabites, Midianites, Ammonites, Philiſtims.

V. 19. And ye have this day rejected your God] i. e. Ye ſtil continued in your former rebellion, by asking a King, and ſo rejecting Gods government. *S*ee on ch.8.7.

and ye have ſaid unto him] i. e. Unto me, who being his prophet and ſent on his meſſage do repreſent his perſon, ch.8.19. & 12.12.

Nay, but ſet a King over us] i. e. After all that I could either do or ſay to diſſwade you ye have wilfully perſiſted in asking a King.

preſent your ſelves before the Lord by your tribes] That in an orderly proceeding by caſting lots it may be known whom God will make choice of.

and by your thouſands] The tribes of Iſrael were divided into thouſands, ch.23.23. Numb.10.36. Deut.33.17. Joſh.22.14,21. Mic. 5.2.

V. 20. the tribe of Benjamin was taken] That is, by caſting lots. So Joſhua cauſed them to do, Joſh.7.14——18. where firſt the tribe, then the family, then the houſhold of that family, and laſtly the perſon of that houſhold was taken. *S*o here firſt the tribe of Benjamin, then the family of Matri, then the houſhold of Kiſh, and laſtly the perſon of Saul was taken. *S*ee the manner of caſting lots on Joſh.14.2.

V. 22. Therefore they inquired of the Lord] Either by Urim and Thummim, or by Samuel, who by prayer, as an holy Prophet, deſired God to ſhew what was become of him.

Behold, he hath hid himſelf among the ſtuff] To wit, belonging either to the camp, or his own tent. This he did out of the humble conceit he had of himſelf in reſpect of the meanneſs of his condition, and the inſufficiency of his gifts and parts to manage the great affairs of the kingdom, that ſo he might decline the government, as an over-heavy burden, eſpecially in thoſe times, wherein the common-wealth was ſo unſetled, ch.15.17. and alſo out of prudence, that he might hereby make it appear he did not ambitiouſly affect the kingdom, nor uſe indirect means to aſpire unto it; but was called thereunto by Gods immediate and free choice.

V. 23. And they ran and fetched him thence] Out of their eager deſire to have a King they made all poſſible haſte to fetch him unto the aſſembly.

V. 24. And all the people ſhouted] i. e. The generality or greateſt part: for ſome of them deſpiſed him, v. 26.

God ſave the King] Heb. Let the King live, i. e. proſper and flouriſh with long life and happy government.

V. 25. Then Samuel told the people the manner of the kingdom] Not as it is commonly practiſed, ch.8.9——18. but as it ought to be in a lawful and free monarchy, appointed by God himſelf, according to the fundamental laws of the kingdom, teaching what duties the King ought to perform in the government of his people, and the people in their ſubjection and obedience to their King; according to that deſcription of a King ſet down by Moſes, Deut.17.14,&c. Ezek.45.9,10. & 46.16. Rom.13.1. 1 Tim.2.2.

and wrote it in a book] Not now extant.

before the Lord] i. e. In the tabernacle, (Where alſo were reſerved the ſtandards of juſt weights and meaſures) or it may be (at this time, when the Ark and tabernacle were ſeparated) before the Ark; that it might be read continually, to put both King and people in mind of their mutuall duties.

V. 26. And Saul alſo went home to Gibeah] Where for a time he lived privately, ch.11.5. by reaſon of the diſcouragements and oppoſitions he found at his election v. 27. waiting till God gave him ſome opportunity of ſhewing himſelf a King rather by his actions then by his words.

and there went with him a band of men] Who attended upon him as a voluntary guard, both to ſecure his perſon from any attempts of thoſe wicked men that deſpiſed him, and to do him honour as their King, as thinking it unfit, in reſpect of his royall eſtate unto which God had called him, he ſhould return home having none to attend him.

whoſe hearts God had touched] i. e. Inclining by his Spirit to yield willing obedience to their new King.

V. 27. But the children of Belial ſaid] *S*ee on Judg.19, 22. This name is fitly applyed unto them here, becauſe they ſhook off the yoke, and were unwilling to ſubmit to Sauls government. Here it is well worthy our obſervation, that though the Lord was much diſpleaſed with the people for asking a King, yet when one was ſet over them by his own choice and appointment, he was much more offended with their contumacie and rebellion, when as they deſpiſed him, and were unwilling to ſubmit to his government, and therefore ſtileth them ſons of Belial, i. e. men moſt flagitious and deſperately wicked.

deſpiſed him] To wit, becauſe, in reſpect of his mean condition and having ſmall power, they thought him unworthy to be their King, and unable to deliver them from their enemies.

and brought him no preſents] As ſubjects uſed to do to their Kings, after they were elected, to do them homage, and to teſtifie their fealty and allegiance. *S*o 1 Kings 10.25. 2 Chr.17.5. Matth.2.11.

But he held his peace] Or, he was as though he had been deaf. Prudently conſidering that it was no fit time to take notice of their unworthy dealing with him, before he was ſetled in his kingdom, leſt it might cauſe ſedition and rebellion, he rather thought to win them by lenity and forbearance. See ch.11.13.

CHAP. XI.

Verſ. 1. THen Nabaſh the Ammonite came up] Of his preparations againſt them the Iſraelites having formerly heard, and being terrified therewith, deſired a King to go out before them as their General, that they might be ſaved out of his hand. *S*ee on ch.8.20. & 12.12. And now, after they had elected their King, according as they feared, he cometh up to invade their country, and beſiegeth one of their Cities. And this he did, partly out of the innate hatred which the Ammonites bare the Iſraelites, (which they ſhewed at their coming out of Egypt, in not relieving them, and in hiring Balaam to curſe them, and for which they were excluded from coming into the Congregation unto the tenth generation, Deut.23.3,4.) and partly to renew their old claim unto the land which the Iſraelites had taken out of the hands of the Ammonites, and which they challenged in the time of Jephthah, Judg.11.13. and to revenge their quarrel and ancient grudg for that great defeat and overthrow which they then gave them. Now having gathered more ſtrength, and taking advantage on the ceſſation of *S*amuels government, and the unſetledneſs of their ſtate, and diſtractions about the election of a new King, they make war againſt them, and preſume of good ſucceſs and certain victory; and the rather, becauſe the Philiſtims, being alſo their enemies, were ready to invade them on the other ſide of their country.

and encamped againſt Jabeſh-gilead] Unto this city they made their firſt approach, not only becauſe it was neer their country, but alſo becauſe the weakeſt part of the land to make reſiſtance, ſeeing not long before all the inhabitants thereof were put to the ſword, becauſe they came not out to aſſiſt the army of the Iſraelites againſt the Benjamites, Judg.21.8. and therefore alſo the more unlikely to be reſcued and relieved by the reſt of the tribes, becauſe of the old quarrel.

And all the men of Jabeſh ſaid unto Nabaſh, Make a covenant with us, and we will ſerve thee] This was expreſly againſt Gods commands, who had given his people a ſtrict charge, not to make any covenant or have any communion with the curſed nations, much leſs to receive them as their lords, to rule over them, But this they did out of a baſe and cowardly fear, and diſtruſt in God, notwithſtanding all his gracious promiſes, that he would protect them, and give them victory over all their enemies, if they would ſerve and cleave unto him, Deut.20.1,3,4. & 23.3,4.

V. 2. On this condition will I make a covenant with you, that I may thruſt out all your right eyes] Nahaſh preſuming on his own ſtrength, and the weakneſs of the men of Jabeſh, out of pride, inſolence and cruelty offereth unto them this diſhonourable condition of ſaving their lives, which was far worſe than death it ſelf, ſeeing it would (if yielded unto) have enthralled them in perpetual ſlavery. For thereby they ſhould for ever have been diſabled from taking up arms to free themſelves out of ſervitude: for carrying their ſhields on their left arms, their eye on that ſide was thereby covered, and hindred from ſeeing with it before them; and ſo their right eye being put out, they became little better then blind. But his main end herein was to bring a perpetual reproach, not onely upon them, who ſhould for ever wear in the ſight of all men this badge and mark of diſgrace, but alſo upon all Iſrael, as being a baſe people, who would for fear of death yield to any ignominious conditions; and howſoever they profeſſed that they ſerved an Almighty God that was able to deliver them from all their enemies, yet when it came to the trial, they had no confidence in him in their extremities. And this, it ſeemeth, was a courſe that the Ammonites pleaſed themſelves in, when they had the Iſraelites at an advantage, to bring ſhame and reproach upon them, as appeareth in the cauſe of Davids Ambaſſadors, ſent to Hanun, 2 Sam.10.3.

V. 3. And the Elders of Jabeſh ſaid] i.e. The rulers and magiſtrates.

Give us ſeven dayes reſpite] Here again they greatly ſin againſt God, in preſcribing him a time for their deliverance, as though it muſt be then or never; whereas he was al-ſufficient to do it when and by what means he pleaſed. So Judith 7.30.

we will come out to thee] i. e. Yeeld our ſelves unto thee, to diſpoſe of us at thy pleaſure. Which though it was ſinfully done by them, yet God by his wiſe and powerful providence did ſo order it, that it ſhould be a means of their deliverance by the hand of Saul; and that hereby ſhewing his valour and magnanimity, he might by all the people be received as their King. And to this end, he alſo inclined the proud heart of the tyrant to yield unto their motion, as thinking that it would little avail them for obtaining of any ayd; that hereby he might be brought to deſtruction; whereas, if he had preſently ſet upon them, he might, in all probability, have ſurprized and ſupplanted them.

V. 4. Then came the meſſengers to Gibeah of Saul] Called before Gibeah of Benjamin, as lying in that tribe; and now, Gibeah of Saul, either becauſe Saul was born there, or becauſe he did now reſide there who was their King and Captain: And therefore now they addreſs themſelves to him in this their extremity, and crave his ayd.

and all the people lift up their voices, and wept] Not onely out of compaſſion and fellow-feeling of their brethrens diſtreſs and miſery, but alſo out of apprehenſion of their own and all Iſraels reproach, which hereby would redound unto them; and it may be alſo out of fear that it might ſhortly be their own caſe, ſeeing if the Ammonites thus prevailed againſt Jabeſh-Gilead now, they might hereafter do the like againſt other Cities.

V. 5. Saul came after the herd out of the field] For though he were elected King, yet he was not crowned, nor received generally by all the people as their Soveraign; yea, contrariwiſe, was deſpiſed and murmured againſt by many Sons of Belial. And therefore he retired himſelf, and returned to his old countrey-condition, till God was pleaſed to give him ſome good opportunity of approving himſelf, unto all the people, worthy to be their King. And this was no diſparagement to his Royall dignity, ſeeing it hath been the practice of many great Potentates, as divers of the Counſuls, Dictators, and Emperours of Rome, yea of David himſelf, who, after he was anointed King by Samuel, ch.16.13. continued ſtill for a time to keep his fathers ſheep, ch. 17.20, 28. And though this may ſeem not to agree with that royal guard which did attend Saul home from Mizpeh, ch.10.26. yet ſeeing this was onely a company of volunteers, who did him this honour, to bring him home, and did not ſtay with him, but returned when that was done; and ſeeing he did not chooſe his royal guard till two years after his Coronation, ch.13.2. this could be no hindrance to his retyring, and leading for a time a private life. Neither doth it ſeem that his coming after the herd was accidental, ſeeing it is ſaid that he came after the herd out of the field, and did not onely happen and chop upon them, being driven by others, as he came from following his kingly ſports and recreations; which is the conceit of ſome Expoſitors.

What ayleth the people that they weep?] In this they ſhewed their womaniſh weakneſs: For whereas they ſhould have taken unto them courage and reſolution, and adviſed of the beſt means to be uſed for relieving their diſtreſſed brethren, they effeminately ſpent their time in weeping and mourning.

V. 6. And the Spirit of God came upon Saul] Not the Spirit of regeneration and ſanctification, but of fortitude and princely prudence, as upon Samſon, Judg.14.6. and upon David, ch.16.13. or an heroical ſpirit of courage and ſtrength fit for a King and Captain, moving him to go out as a General of the Lords people, to fight againſt this cruel tyrant, for propounding ſuch diſhonourable and inſolent conditions.

and his anger was kindled greatly] Hereby it appeareth how excellently Saul was indued with divers moral vertues, till by his wickedneſs he had quenched Gods Spirit, and cauſed it to depart from him: For though he was mild and meek in his own cauſe, when he was deſpiſed by the ſons of Belial, ch.10.27. yet when he heareth that the God of Iſrael was thus diſhonoured, and his people abuſed and oppreſſed by a proud tyrant, his anger is kindled; which being the whetſtone of true fortitude, maketh him reſolute to take revenge. So Moſes, Numb.12,3. compared with Exod.32.19,20.

V. 7. And he took a yoke of oxen, and hewed them in pieces, and ſent them, &c.] Following herein (as it ſeemeth) the Levite as his precedent Judg.19 29. and knowing that men are more affected, and their paſſions raiſed with on object preſented to their ſight, than onely by hearing of it in a bare narrative and relation, he taketh this courſe, that thoſe who would not be moved by hearing this meſſage, in juſt anger to take revenge, might yet be induced to joyn with the reſt of their brethren in this war, for fear of puniſhment.

Whoſoever cometh not forth after Saul and after Samuel] Samuel accompanied this new and unſetled King in this expedition, not onely as a Prophet to direct him, but alſo as a Judge to aſſiſt him, v. 12. that if they would not follow their King, whom they deſpiſed, having no experience of his worth, yet they might at leaſt follow Samuel, whoſe government they had long known to be wiſe and juſt; eſpecially conſidering that he had not wholly given over his government, but executed the office of a Judg as long as he lived.

And the fear of the Lord fell upon the people] Though Saul had ſet forth a ſevere edict, as it became a King elected, that his authority might not run into contempt, yet this alone would not have prevailed with many; for they that deſpiſed his perſon would have as eaſily neglected his proclamation and threatning: and therefore this is added as the chief cauſe of their ſubmiſſion and obedience, that the fear of the Lord fell upon the people, and moved them to lay this threatning to their heart, which otherwiſe they would have ſlighted and contemned. And ſo it is ſaid before, ch.10.26. that a band of men waited upon him from Mizpeh to his own houſe, whoſe hearts, God had touched. And this is rendred as a reaſon, why the Canaanites did not purſue Jacob and his family, to revenge the ſlaughter of the Sichemites, becauſe the terror of God fell upon all the Cities round about, and reſtrained them, Gen.35.5.

V. 8, And when he numbred them in Bezek] Or, at Bezek. i. e. In the territories belonging to it, or, neer about it. See Judg.1.5.

the children of Iſrael were three hundred thouſand, and the men of Judah thirty thouſand] The reaſons given in the Expoſitors why Judah was here and elſewhere numbred alone by themſelves in the general muſter of all the tribes, are divers: I. Becauſe it was the greateſt tribe in number, and in the extent of their inheritance. II. Becauſe they uſed to have the precedency in all expeditions, which was firſt given them by God, Judg.1.2. and alſo in encampings, Num.2.3. III. Becauſe the Meſſias was to deſcend out of this tribe, that ſhould weild the Royal Scepter, according to Jacobs prophecy, Gen. 49. and alſo the race of Kings ſhould come by lineal deſcent, untill his coming; howſoever the firſt King, which was not to continue, choſen by God out of Benjamin, the leaſt of the tribes, becauſe God gave him in his anger, and intended not to eſtabliſh the Kingdom in him and his poſterity. Where by the way we may obſerve the humble ſubmiſſion of the tribe of Judah to the government of Saul, notwithſtanding they had a former promiſe of the kingly throne and ſcepter, onely upon this ground, becauſe they ſaw it thus determined by Gods good will and pleaſure.

V. 9. And they ſaid] To wit, Saul and Samuel.

V. 10. the men of Jabeſh ſaid] Namely, to Nahaſh and the Ammonites, that beleaguered them.

to morrow we will come out unto you] Hereby they intimate that they had ſent to their brethren for ayd, but getting none, they were deſtitute of all hope, and therefore would the next day yeeld themſelves over into their hands. This they ſaid to make the Ammonites the more ſecure, that the Iſraelites, when they came, finding them unprepared, might obtain a more eaſie victory. Now this was not a direct lye, but onely in ſuppreſſing of the condition of their former covenant, namely, that they would come out and yeeld themſelves, if in the mean time they had no help; yet it was a mental reſervation, wherein they concealed part of the truth, and their intention in it, which they were not bound to diſcover to an enemy that ſought to deſtroy them, ſeeing they would have made this uſe of it, to have aſſaulted them the ſame night, and to have prepared themſelves againſt Saul and his army, coming the next day.

V. 11. Saul put the people in three companies] This he did, that he might (like Gideon, Judg.7.16.) ſtrike the more terror into the hearts of his enemies, when they ſaw themſelves ſurrounded on every ſide on a ſudden (to which end alſo he ſurprized them in the night, or at the break of day) and alſo, when he had routed them, that there might none of them eſcape the deſtroying ſword. And this he is ſaid to have done on the morrow, that is, after that he and the army had marched all night, (as Joſhua had done before in the like caſe, Joſh.10.9.) they came upon the Ammonites betimes in the morning, on the eighth day after the truce taken, on which the citizens of Jabeſh had promiſed to ſurrender themſelves, if in no day of the ſeven they were relieved.

and they came into the midſt of the hoſt in the morning-watch] This is ſpoken to commend Sauls diligence and military prudence, in making a long march in a ſhort time, that he might on a ſudden ſurprize the enemy, and in the night, coming upon them in the morning-watch, that is, the third and laſt part of the night towards the morning, when uſually they begun to withdraw their morning watch. For the Jews in former times divided the night into three watches, as afterwards the Romanes divided into four. Hence it appeareth that it is lawful to uſe warlike frauds and politick ſtratagems againſt an enemy, as well as the ſword, ſo that covenants be not broken, and faith violated, as we ſee in the example of Saul here, of Joſhua, Joſh.8.4,9. & 10.9. and David, ch.30.17.

ſo that two of them were not left together] Namely, to make any reſiſtance. The men of Jabeſh afterwards ſhewed themſelves thankfull to Saul for this benefit, ch.31.11. 2 Sam.2.4, &c. Here expoſitors queſtion whether Nahaſh himſelf were ſlain in this battel. Joſephus ſuppoſeth he was, but it is thought, amiſs. For Nahaſh dyed in the beginning of Davids reign, who, becauſe he had received much kindneſs from him in the time of Sauls perſecution (not as it may be well thought, ſo much out of love to David, as hatred to Saul his mortal enemy, who had given him this great overthrow) ſent meſſengers to comfort his ſon, 2 Sam.10.1. unleſs it ſhould be ſuppoſed that that was another Nahaſh, who ſucceeded this here; which is not likely.

V. 12. Who is he that ſaid, Shall Saul reign over us?] Sauls good ſucceſs procured him many friends, who were now zealous in his cauſe, and ſeek that they ſhould be brought to condigne puniſhment who had ſpoken high treaſon againſt him, and deſpiſing him, had refuſed to ſubmit to his government. See Luke 19.27.

V. 13. And Saul ſaid, There ſhall not a man be put to death this day] In this ſpeech he ſheweth his Piety, in refuſing to take private revenge; his Clemency, in remitting ſo foul a fault, which is a princely vertue, than the which, nothing more (except Piety and Juſtice) graceth a King; and his Wiſdome and kingly prudence, in applying himſelf to act ſeaſonably, according to the time and occaſion, not uſing ſeverity in the firſt entrance into his government, but rather chooſing to win the people with lenity; which did, no doubt, much take with them. And laſtly, he ſheweth and exerciſeth his kingly Authority and Prerogative, in pardoning ſuch offenders as deſerved death. The like example we have in David, 2 Sam.19.23. But it may be demanded whether Saul did well in pardoning theſe traytors, ſeeing it is the duty of Kings to execute juſtice and judgment, Rom.13.4. Prov.17.15. To which I anſwer, that as juſtice is the vital heat of government, ſo mercy is the natural humor, which, qualifying and tempering it, maketh it durable; and both are good, if rightly and duly uſed. There are ſome laws meerly humane and political, which chiefly receive life from the Prince; this power being put into his hand by the fundamental laws of the Kingdom: and anſwerably he may diſpenſe with ſuch laws as inflict puniſhment meerly in their own ſtrength, and pardon the tranſgreſſions of them, when in his princely prudence he thinketh it equitable, profitable and ſeaſonable. But there are other laws that are meerly Divine, or neceſſarily and inſeparably grounded upon them: and with them the Prince ought not to diſpenſe, nor pardon the tranſgreſſors, or remit their puniſhment, unleſſe it be when the penalty is not expreſſed, but left to be determined by poſitive laws of Princes and Nations. And therefore, (as I conceive) though Kings may remit treaſon againſt themſelves, at leaſt in ſome caſes, yet they may not pardon wilfull murder, againſt that negative Commandment, Thou ſhalt do no murder; ſeeing the puniſhment thereof is expreſly and morally determined, both before Moſes law, Geneſ.9. verſ.6. and alſo under the law, Num. 35. verſ. 16,30. and by our Saviour Chriſts own ſentence and ſanction in the time of the Goſpel, Matth. 26.52. Rev. 13.10.

Yet in ſome caſes the puniſhment may be reſpited; as when the inflicting of it would bring greater damage to the Common-wealth than preſent execution could bring profit; as in the caſe of Joab, when he had murdered Abner, 2 Sam.3.39. But altogether to remit ſuch capital ſins as God hath morally ſentenced to be puniſhed with death, the Prince cannot lawfully do it by connivency and partiality, as David did in the cauſe of Amnon and Abſalom.

For to day the Lord hath wrought ſalvation in Iſrael] Here two reaſons are implyed why he would not have thoſe offenders put to death; I. Becauſe he would not have the day of their triumph become unto any a day of mourning, nor their victory over their enemies to be ſtained with the blood of his ſubjects: II. Becauſe God having ſhewed himſelf ſo gracious unto them, notwithſtanding their provocations, as not onely to pardon their ſins, but alſo to give them ſuch a glorious victory and deliverance out of the hands of their enemies, it was utterly unfit for him, at ſuch a time, and upon ſuch an occaſion, to ſhew himſelf rigorous in inflicting puniſhment upon thoſe that had offended. Thus meekly and mercifully Saul demeaned himſelf, whilſt the Spirit that came upon him infuſed into him theſe moral vertues; but afterwards he breathed out nothing but blood and barbarous cruelty, when this Spirit departing from him, he was poſſeſſed and led by that evil ſpirit, ch. 16. 14.

V. 14. Then ſaid Samuel to the people, Come, and let us go to Gilgal] A place neer unto Jericho, where the people were circumciſed at their firſt coming over Jordan, and ſo renewed their Covenant, Joſh. 5.9. and therefore thought by Samuel the more fit for renewing the covenant of the Kingdom between the new King and his people. Beſides, it was one of the three places which Samuel did viſit in his Circuit, ch.7.16. and there (it is thought) was an altar upon which they ſacrificed peace-offerings; and in his reſpect alſo it was reſorted unto in their publick and general aſſemblies, as at this time. See on Hoſ.4.15.

V. 15. and there they made Saul King] i.e. They anointed him King publickly, as Samuel had before done privately, (And hence it is that Samuel afterward giveth unto him the title of the Lords anointed, ch. 12. 5.) and uſed all other ſolemnities requiſite for his Inauguration, ſacrificing ſacrifices of peace-offerings and thanks-giving unto the Lord, praiſing him for giving them a King by whoſe conduct they had obtained ſuch an happy victory, and praying for him, and craving Gods bleſſing upon his government. For though he was elected before, yet they now meet again to confirm him in his Kingdome, and to prevent all future rebellion by giving their univerſall conſent; ſeeing now having good experience of his wiſdom and valour, none could queſtion his calling and the validity of his election, of which formerly ſome doubted, ch. 10. 27.

before the Lord in Gilgal] i. e. In a ſolemn manner, as in Gods preſence, upon the altar there erected, and (as it is likely) before the Ark, the ſign of Gods preſence, which was by Samuels appointment brought thither, that they might conſult with God, as occaſion ſerved, in this weighty buſineſs; and alſo (it may be) that it might grace the action.

CHAP. XII.

Verſ. 1. AND Samuel ſaid unto all Iſrael] Having aſſembled the people of all the tribes together, with all their Elders, Captains and Magiſtrates, like a faithful Judge and religious Prophet, he layeth hold on this opportunity to make a ſpeech unto them; the main ſcope whereof is to convince them of their ſins, and to bring them to unfeigned repentance, for the averting of thoſe heavy judgments which otherwiſe God would ſurely inflict upon them. But more eſpecially he laboureth to make them ſenſible of that great ſin by them lately committed, in asking a King in that violent and impetuous manner, whereby they rejected God from reigning over them as their Soveraign, and himſelf as his Deputy and Vicegerent. And though he had formerly done it in the eighth Chapter, yet he thought fit to preſs it again at this time upon their conſciences with more earneſtneſs, for divers reaſons, as being an high diſhonour unto God, and a moſt ungrateful wrong offered unto himſelf; it being now moſt ſeaſonable and neceſſary, both for the peoples good, and the clearing of himſelf from unjuſt calumnies and aſperſions. For as for them, they were apt to be puffed up by their late victory, and to applaud themſelves in their wickedneſs, ſeeing they found ſuch good ſucceſs by having a King and Captain to conduct them; and on the other ſide, to cenſure Samuel, as one that aimed at his own ends in diſſwading them from him, as namely the continuance and ſetling of the government upon himſelf and his ſons; to which end he had ſpoken worſe of Monarchy then it deſerved, branding it with ſuch imputations of tyranny as they found it to be innocent of, and free from, in their own experience; ſeeing the King whom they had choſen, was not onely wiſe and valiant, and ſo fit to be their Captain in time of war, but alſo meek and merciful in governing his ſubjects, & far from rigour in taking revenge. Again, he could not have a better opportunity to clear himſelf from all thoughts of ambition in his former courſes, ſeeing he had now voluntarily laid down the government, and from acts of injuſtice, ſeeing by deveſting himſelf of all his former power, and reſigning it over to their new King, as his Soveraign, he was liable to give accompt of all his former dealings, if they had now any thing to lay to his charge. And therefore if any thing afterward fell out under their new government, which being intolerable ſhould give them cauſe of complaining, they could not lay the blame on him, that he had neceſſitated them by his avarice and injuſtice to run into thoſe miſchiefs by deſiring a King, to be eaſed of his corrupt government, ſeeing he was clear of theſe crimes. And here by the way he tacitely upbraideth and convinceth them of their groſs ingratitude, who being weary of ſuch a mild and juſt Judge, had rejected him as a man unworthy to continue in his place. And finally, by their clearing him from all rigor and injuſtice in the preſence of their new King, he tacitely propoundeth unto him an example, in his own carriage, of a juſt and gracious governour, that herein he might be unto him a pattern and precedent for his imitation; becauſe he knew that Princes ears are tender in hearing plain and direct inſtructions and admonitions, putting them in mind of their duties, and much more reproofs, when they do amiſs. See 2 Sam. 12.1,2.

and have made a King over you] i. e. Not onely choſen him by lot at Mizpeh, but alſo eſtabliſhed, anointed and crowned him at Gilgal, by general conſent of the whole people, whereby all occaſion of rebellion is taken away.

V. 2. And now behold, the King walketh before you] i. e. Is ſetled in his kingly office to govern you, and to go before you as your General in time of war, Numb. 27.16,17.

and I am old and grey-headed] And therefore the more unfit to manage the great affairs of the Common-wealth, and willing, in reſpect of my ſelf and my own intereſt, to give over the ſupreme authority to another, which in reſpect of my age is grown heavy unto me.

and behold, my ſons are with you] Not now as rulers, but as private men, to do you ſervice, and to give account to you and your King of their former courſes and carriage, and to make ſatisfaction for any thing they have done amiſs whilſt they were in place of government.

and I have walked before you from my child-hood unto this day] i. e. I have faithfully, and in the uprightneſs of my heart, performed the duties of my calling in the ſight of you all, both in the ſervice of the Sanctuary in my younger dayes, when I was a Levite, and in my riper age by adminiſtring juſtice, ſince I was called to be a Judg.

V. 3. Behold, here I am, witneſs againſt me] To wit, not as your ſupreme Magiſtrate, whom ye might fear to accuſe, but as a private perſon, I having now ſurrendred my power to your King; and therefore, being ready to give an account to you and him of all my actions ſince I undertook the government of the Common-wealth, you may freely and without fear challenge me for any faults or fallings in all my fore-going adminiſtrations, Eccl. 46.19. See the like conteſtations, Numb. 16.15. Acts 20.33. 1 Theſſ.2.5. All rare precedents for ſuch to look upon as take upon them any publick charge in Church or State.

and before his anointed] i.e. Before Saul, who is newly anointed your King, as v.5. So ch. 24.6.

of whoſe hand have I received any bribe to blind mine eyes therewith] i. e. That I ſhould not ſee to adminiſter righteous judgment, being foreſtalled and prejudiced by taking a bribe, ſo as I could not ſee, nor be able to put a difference between a good and a bad cauſe, no more then a blind man can ſee his way. And ſo it is ſaid, Deut. 16.19. that a gift doth blind the eyes of the wiſe, cauſing a Judge partially to wreſt judgment, and to paſs ſentence on his ſide from whom he received the bribe. And Solomon ſaith, that a gift is as a precious ſtone in the eyes of him that hath it, Prov. 17.8. and if it be taken in our ſenſe, it is a pearl in the eye, which maketh it blind. Or, if we read it thus, that I ſhould hide mine eyes at him, the meaning is, that I might not take notice of his faults, to puniſh him according to his demerits, being corrupted with his bribes.

V. 5. Te have not found ought in mine hand] To wit, which I have taken to pervert juſtice. Thus he cleareth and juſtifyeth himſelf in all his former government, (as Moſes had formerly done, Numb. 16.15.) both that he might be an example to their new King, whom he calleth to witneſs, to make him avoid thoſe oppreſſions and acts of injuſtice, which he told them before would be incident to a tyrannical government, ch.8. 11. and alſo that he might hereby convince the people of their ſinful folly in rejecting him, and with him the upright and unpartial government of their Judges, and making choice of the hard and oppreſſive government of Kings, which in many of them they ſhould after find and feel by woful experience.

V. 6. It is the Lord that advanced Moſes and Aaron] Heb. made. i.e. making Moſes the governour of his people, and Aaron the high Prieſt; and when your fathers were oppreſſed in that grievous Egyptian bondage, ſent them to deliver them out of it.

V. 7. Of all the righteous acts of the Lord] Heb. righteouſneſſes, or, benefits. To wit, as well benefits as puniſhments. In both which he juſtifyeth God againſt them, and ſheweth how faithfully God had kept covenant with their fathers, in giving them help and deliverance out of the hands of all their enemies, that hereby he might convince them of their diffidence, in not relying ſtill upon him, and of their unthankfulneſs, in rejecting his government, who had alwayes been ſo good and gracious unto them.

V. 8. When Jacob was come into Egypt] Gen. 46.5,6. i. e. when he and his poſterity had long continued in Egypt, and were exceedingly multiplyed, Exod. 1.13,14. and being grievouſly oppreſſed, cryed unto the Lord for deliverance, Exod. 2.23,24.

made them dwell in this place] i. e. made way for their enjoyment of that inheritance which God had given them in Canaan, by leading them through the wilderneſs, and overcoming the Amorites, Sihon and Og, and giving unto them their land to inherit, as an earneſt of all the reſt; and ſubſtituting Joſhua, as Captain and General, to perfect what they had begun, and to give them poſſeſſion of Canaan according to Gods promiſe.

V. 9. And when they forgat the Lord] He maketh their forgetfulneſſe of God to be the cauſe of all their rebellion, apoſtaſie and idolatry; into which they had never fallen, if they had born in mind Gods mercies in their marvailous deliverances, and multiplying upon them ſo many favors, Pſa. 10. 4.

V. 10. And they cryed unto the Lord] i. e. Confeſſing their ſins, and repenting of them, they addreſſed themſelves unto the Lord by fervent prayer for help and deliverance.

V. 11. And the Lord ſent] He giveth divers inſtances of Several deliverances, not much regarding their number, (for there were many more then are here mentioned) not naming all the Judges by whoſe means they were delivered, nor the order of time in which they lived, nor the enemies out of whoſe hands they had deliverance, but only inſiſteth upon four, as ſufficient to put them in mind of all the reſt.

Jerubbaal] i. e. Gideon, Judg. 6.

and Bedan] Whom ſome ſuppoſe to be that Jair the Manaſſite ſpoken of Judg. 10. 3. becauſe it agreeth with the order of time of theſe Judges here named, he being after Gideon and before Jephthah, and becauſe he was the grand-ſon of Machir the Manaſſite, who is called Bedan, 1 Chron. 7. 17. a name given him, to diſtinguiſh him from an elder Jair deſcended from Manaſſeh, Numb. 32. 41. Others conceive, that Samſon is here meant, and called Bedan, becauſe he was of the tribe of Dan: for Bendan ſignifieth a ſon of Dan; and Bedan, in or of Dan. Neither in ſome few ſpecial inſtances was it much material that the order ſhould be exactly obſerved. Neither indeed is it here, as appeareth, in that the oppreſſion of Iſrael under Eglon the King of Moab was before that of Siſera and Jabin, and alſo the Philiſtims, and yet it is named laſt, v. 9. And they rather think Samſon to be here meant, becauſe there is no ſpecial deliverance ſpoken of in all Jairs government, as was in the time of Samſon; to which end chiefly theſe are here named.

and Samuel] He nameth himſelf, not out of vain-glory, but becauſe his victories being lately atchieved, were freſh in mind, & ſo fitteſt to convince them of diffidence and ingratitude both to God and him, in that they would ſhake off the Judges government, even in Samuels dayes, though the Lord had honoured him with ſuch proſperous ſucceſs in all his undertakings, and under his conduct and care had given them ſuch great deliverances.

V. 12. And when ye ſaw that Nahaſh —— come out againſt you] Though they had a King before Nahaſh came againſt them in this great and laſt expedition, yet he had made ſome incurſions into divers parts of the country, afflicting and vexing the inhabitants, and they had heard alſo of his great preparations before he came againſt Jabeſh; and this moved them to deſire a King.

when the Lord your God was your King] i. e. Held in his own hand the Royal rights, and did accordingly rule over you by Judges, as his Subſtitutes and Deputies. And with his government he ſhould have been contented, till he had been pleaſed to alter it, by giving you a King.

V. 13. And behold, the Lord hath ſet a King over you] i. e. When you would have no nay, nor be ſatisfied in your importunate ſuit by any reaſon or perſwaſions to the contrary.

V. 14. Continue following the Lord your God] i. e. Though ye have greatly offended, and by your ſin juſtly deſerved to be caſt off from being Gods people, as you have rejected him from being your King, yet upon your unfeigned repentance he will ſtill continue to be your King and Leader; and under his government you ſhall be ſafe, by his grace and power protecting you.

V. 15. as it was againſt your fathers] i. e. He will puniſh you with all ſeverity, as he did your fathers, when they rebelled againſt him, by cauſing them to fall in the Wilderneſſe. And as for their ſin he would not ſuffer them to enter into the land of promiſe, ſo if you follow them in the ſame way, and provoke the Lord to juſt diſpleaſure, he will caſt you out of this good land, which you now have in poſſeſſion.

V. 16. Now therefore ſtand and ſee this great thing] i. e. That you may be more throughly convinced of your ſin, and brought to repentance, take ſpecial notice of this great miracle of thunder and ſudden rain, which the Lord will preſently ſend, becauſe you are ſo hard-hearted and ſtiff-necked that no words will move you, unleſs they be confirmed by miracles and wonders: Matth. 12. 38, 39. 1 Cor. 1. 22. Hereby it will appear, that all my former words, in diſſwading you from a King, were not ſpoken from my ſelf, who am but an old weak man, but from God, who hath ſent me unto you as his Prophet and Ambaſſador.

V. 17. Is it not wheat-harveſt to day? I will call unto the Lord, and he ſhall ſend thunder and rain] Though among us, whoſe climate is colder and moyſter, we have ſometimes thunder, and oftentimes rain, in the time of harveſt, which ſtill falleth towards Autumn, yet in thoſe hot and dry Countries of Syria and Canaan they never hapned, becauſe their wheat-harveſt was in the very heat of Summer, which dryed up the vapours and exhallations that are the cauſes of thunder. And this was the reaſon why it was thought miraculous to have rain and thunder at this time, eſpecially ſeeing the day when Samuel ſpake unto them was fair, and there was no likelihood of ſuch weather, Prov. 26. 1. And whereas it may be objected, that it was no great wonder to have rain in harveſt, ſeeing it is ſaid that in the time of harveſt Jordan overfloweth its banks, Joſh. 3. 15. I anſwer, Howſoever, it could not be but a great wonder, that the day being fair there ſhould preſently upon Samuels prayer be rain and thunder. But further, though Jordan overflow its banks in time of harveſt, yet not in wheat-harveſt, ſpoken of here, but in barley-harveſt, which was neerer the ſpring, to wit, in the beginning of March (ſeeing the Iſraelites paſſed over Jordan the tenth of that moneth) and before the Paſſeover; whereas the wheat-harveſt was in May, before the feaſt of Pentecoſt. Neither is it neceſſary that the overflowing of Jordan ſhould be cauſed by abundance of rain, but either from the melting of Snow upon that high mountain of Lebanon, (at whoſe bottom Jordan ſpringeth) with other hills neer unto it, Jer. 18. 14. or from ſome hidden property of that river, or ſecret cauſe; as it is in the riſing of Nilus.

that ye may perceive and ſee that your wickedneſſe is great, —— in asking a King] i. e. Not only ſinful, in rejecting the Lord from being your King, but alſo fooliſh, in with-drawing your ſelves from him who is ſo mighty a Protector, that hath rain and thunder, heaven and earth at command, and is able from thence to deſtroy all his enemies, as in Joſhua's time, Joſh. 10. 11. and lately within your own experience, ch. 7. 10. and alſo from my government, as being his Deputy, who, of Gods free Grace, have ſuch power and prevalency with him by my prayers, as to obtain thunder and rain from heaven to convince you of your ſin, and to clear mine own integrity. See on ch. 8. 7. But it may be demanded, how it could be ſaid, that they thus ſinned in asking a King, when as it is ſaid before, ch. 10. 24. that God had choſen Saul to be their King. I anſwer, Becauſe they failed in the manner and circumſtances, asking him, 1. very unſeaſonably, not waiting for Gods time, but in their own time, when they thought good. 2. Not meekly, ſubmitting to Gods Wil, but with impetuous impatience, brooking no delay. 3. Proudly, becauſe they would be like other nations. 4. Diſtruſtfully, reſting more on their King then on Gods power and promiſes. 5. Rebelliouſly, ſhaking off Gods Government, as weary of it, and deſiring to exchange it, that they might have a King ſet over them.

V. 18. And the Lord ſent thunder and rain that day] In ſuch an unuſable and terrible manner, (the more powerfully to convince them of their ſin) that they were afraid leſt they ſhould have been utterly deſtroyed by the horrible tempeſt: which cauſed them to deſire Samuel to pray for them unto the Lord that they might not dye, v. 19. Ezra. 10. 9.

and all the people greatly feared the Lord and Samuel] The Lord, whom thunder, rain and tempeſts readily obey; and Samuel, who was ſo highly in his favour as to obtain them from him by his prayers. See Exod. 14. 31.

V. 19. For we have added to all our ſins this evil, to ask us a King] The people are by this Great miracle ſo throughly convinced of their wickedneſſe, that they are brought to the humble acknowledgment, not only of this laſt ſin, but upon occaſion thereof, of all other their ſins formerly committed.

V. 20. And Samuel ſaid unto the people, Fear not] i. e. Not in ſervile manner, which would make you flee further from God with a more fearful apoſtaſie, and ſo add ſin unto ſin; but with filial fear, which will cauſe you to cleave cloſer unto him. For though you have grievouſly ſinned, yet there is no ſin ſo great but ſhall be forgiven, if ye turn unto God by unfeigned repentance.

V. 21. And turn yee not aſide] Namely, from following the Lord in the way of his Commandements, either on the right hand or on the left, but continue faithful in Gods pure worſhip with integrity and ſincerity of heart.

for then ye ſhall go after vain things] i. e. Idols; which being empty vanities, and of no worth, do lead men into vanity, and do prove to be juſt nothing, and unable to give any help in time of trouble to them that truſt in them, Jer. 2. 9. and 10. 8, 14. Hab. 2. 18. 1 Cor. 8. 4. Deut. 32. 21. Jon. 2. 8.

V. 22. For the Lord will not forſake his people for his great Names ſake] Though you by your ſins have juſtly deſerved to be rejected, yet the Lord will not do it, becauſe his name is called upon you, as being choſen by him to be his peculiar people; and therefore being in covenant with him, it will not ſtand with his glory to leave and caſt you off before ye have forſaken and rejected him; ſeeing other nations, taking notice of it, would be ready to ſay, That the Lord was mutable in his purpoſes, or unfaithfull in his promiſes, or impotent and inſufficient in his performances.

becauſe it hath pleaſed the Lord to make you his people] Of his free-grace, not for any merits of yours, above others. So Deut. 7. 7. and 9. 5.

V. 23. Moreover, as for me, God forbid, that I ſhould ſin againſt the Lord, in ceaſing to pray for you] Though ye have dealt unjuſtly and ingratefully with me, yet God forbid that I ſhould ſin againſt him by neglecting my duty towards you, either in praying for you, or preaching to you, that you may be inſtructed in the true knowledg of God, & of his wil and ways. With which duties I neither can nor will diſpenſe, ſeeing he, whoſe meſſenger I am, requireth them at my hands, howſoever you neglect your duty towards me; 1 Cor. 9. 16. Matth. 5. 44.

V. 24. Only fear the Lord] i. e. Be careful, with my prayers to joyn your own religious duties, the neglect whereof would make my prayers inefficacious. Here by fear, he meaneth all other holy vertues and graces, and alſo the exerciſe of them in Gods ſincere worſhip and ſervice.

and ſerve him in truth with all your heart] i. e. In ſincerity, without any mixture of hypocriſie and diſſimulation; and in integrity and ſimplicity, not dividing the heart between God and Idols.

V. 25. But if ye ſhall ſtill do wickedly, ye ſhall be conſumed, both ye and your King] i.e. If you perſiſt and continue in your rebellious courſes againſt God, it is not your King that ſhall be able to ſave you, as you have fooliſhly imagined: but both you and he ſhall periſh together, if you communicate in the ſame ſins. We have in theſe Books frequent examples of both people and Prince puniſhed for their wickedneſs.

CHAP. XIII.

Verſ. 1. S*Aul raigned one year*] Heb. the ſon of a year in his raigning i.e. From the time when he was elected King at Mizpeh, unto the time when he was anointed, crowned and eſtabliſhed in his Kingdom by general conſent in Gilgal. In this year thoſe things related in the two former Chapters were done, to wit, the defeating of Nahaſh and his army, and the raiſing of the ſiege before Jabeſh-Gilead, and the peoples aſſembling at Gilgal, and Samuels ſpeech made there unto them to bring them to repentance.

and when he had raigned two years] i.e. Another whole year from the time of his Coronation, which being added to the former year between his election and inauguration, make two years; And then he began to take upon him the royall ſtate of a King.

V. 2. Saul choſe him three thouſand men of Iſrael] Namely, to be his Guard, or ſtationarie and legionarie ſouldiers, to attend his ſervice upon all occaſions, as he pleaſed to imploy them; eſpecially to preſerve the people from the invaſions and incurſions of the Philiſtims, and from the oppreſſions and inſolencies of their ſtationary ſouldiers, which were in thoſe gariſons that bordered upon them. Some gather from hence that Saul raigned onely two years before he was rejected of God, and forſaken of his Spirit, ch. 15. 26. and 16. 12, 13, 14. And though he be ſaid to have reigned fourty years, computing the time of Samuels government with his, Act. 13. 21. yet he reigned onely two years lawfully, (being afterwards depoſed from his regiment by God) and the reſt of his time as a tyrant; the Lord, for his own ends, tolerating and permitting his government, though wicked and unlawful. And this they gather from ch. 14. 47. where it is ſaid that Saul took the Kingdom; i.e. like a tyrant uſurped it by force and violence.

whereof two thouſand were with Saul in Michmaſh] This was not a city, but a tract of ground ſo called, in the border of Benjamin, neer the mountain of Bethel. So v. 5.

in Gibeah of Benjamin] See on ch. 10. 5.

and the reſt of the people] To wit, which he had aſſembled, that out of them he might make his choyce of his Legionary ſouldiers. Some think this was done at the time of the general aſſembly at Gilgal, before it was diſmiſſed.

V. 3. And Jonathan ſmote the gariſon of the Philiſtims] To wit, by Sauls command, as appeareth v. 4. See on ch. 7. 14.

and the Philiſtims heard of it] i.e. Hearing of it, prepared to revenge their quarrel.

and Saul blew the trumpet throughout all the land] i.e. Diſpatched his agents into all parts of the Kingdom, with commiſſion to publiſh by ſound of trumpet both Jonathans victory, to hearten and encourage the people againſt their enemies, and the Philiſtims preparations, being thus provoked, to make war againſt Iſrael, in way of revenge; that ſo taking notice of it, they might ſtand on their own defence, and alſo ſend ſuch forces as they could ſpare unto him to Gilgal, that he might be enabled to give them battel, if they made any attempt againſt him.

Let the Hebrews hear] i.e. Take notice of the Philiſtims preparations againſt them, that they likewiſe may prepare for the war.

V. 4. that Saul had ſmitten a garriſon of the Philiſtims] i.e. Jonathan by Sauls command. It is aſcribed to Saul, becauſe he had put his ſon upon this ſervice, as his King and General.

and that Iſrael alſo was had in abomination with the Philiſtims] Heb. did ſtink. Not onely out of that ancient deadly fewd that was between them, but alſo upon this new quarrel, wherein they were ſo much incenſed that they breathed nothing but revenge. So Gen. 34. 30. 2 Sam. 10. 6.

and the people were called together after Saul to Gilgal] According to Samuels appointment. See on ch. 11. 7.

V. 5. and people as the ſand which is on the ſea-ſhore in multitude] An hyperbolical expreſſion of a great multitude, uſual in Scripture, Gen. 22. 17. Joſh. 11. 4. 1 King. 4. 29. And this is expreſſed, that the greatneſs of this army might ſerve the more to magnifie Gods infinite power and goodneſſe towards his people, who did cauſe it to be routed and ruined by ſuch weak and deſpicable means as that ſmall handful of Sauls army.

Beth-aven] It ſignifieth a houſe of vanity and wickedneſs; So called by way of anticipation, becauſe of the Idols afterwards there erected and worſhipped, Hoſ. 4. 15. if at leaſt it were not abuſed to theſe uſes both in latter and former times. But here it ſignifieth the city and wilderneſs of Beth-aven. Of which ſee Joſh. 18. 12.

V. 6. When the men of Iſrael] To wit, which were of Sauls army, and for fear had left him, and fled away to ſhift for themſelves, as appeareth by the verſe following, where the other Hebrews are oppoſed unto them which were not in the Camp.

for the people were diſtreſſed] i.e. They were indeed much diſtreſſed, and in great ſtraights; as they, not without great reaſon, apprehended their danger, in reſpect of an innumerable multitude of enemies well armed and prepared with all manner of warlike ammunition, horſes and chariots; and their own poor handful of ſouldiers to reſiſt them, and that ſmall number unarmed and diſheartned.

in rocks] i.e. In the clefts of the rocks.

and in high places] Which were places of ſtrength, and more fit for defence, if their enemies aſſaulted them.

V. 7. And ſome of the Hebrews went over Jordan] Thoſe that were neer the Philiſtims in the Weſt part of the countrey, left their habitations, and fled into the Eaſt, as moſt remote from them, and paſſed over Jordan into the land of Gad and Gilead, that they might be out of their reach.

and all the people following him trembling] Thoſe few of Sauls legionary ſouldiers mentioned v. 2. that did not flee away and leave him, were ſo ſurprized with fear of the imminent danger, that they were quite heartleſſe and hopeleſs, and ſo unfit for any ſervice, if put unto it. Hereby is intimated the vanity of creature-confidence, and the folly of thoſe that leave God, our chief ſtrength, and put their truſt in the arm of fleſh. The Iſraelites in this place, who formerly deſired a King to go before them and fight their battels, preſuming he would ſave them from all their enemies, now when they have him, are perplexed with fear, as not finding themſelves any whit by his preſence ſecured from danger, and ſo are taught by woful experience, that there is no ſafety but under Gods protection.

V. 8. And he tarryed ſeven dayes, according to the ſet time that Samuel had appointed] i.e. Towards the latter end of the ſeventh day, not the whole day, according to Samuels appointment, ch. 10. 8. For which he is reproved, v. 13.

V. 9. And Saul ſaid, Bring hither a burnt-offering to me, and peace-offerings. And he offered the burnt-offering] That is, as ſome conceive he himſelf did offer it. For though it was unlawful for any, ſave a prieſt, to offer a burnt-ſacrifice upon that publick altar in the tabernacle appointed for it, yet (as they ſay) a private man might offer it upon a private altar; for ſo Samuel, though but a Levite, offered a whole-burnt-ſacrifice, ch. 7. 10. And therefore Saul was not reproved by Samuel for offering it, wherein he offered not; but becauſe he had not ſtaid the full time, according to Gods appointment, ch. 10. 8. Others (and, as I conceive, more probably) think that Saul is ſaid to have offered it, becauſe the prieſt did offer it by his appointment. And thus Elkanah is ſaid to have ſacrificed in Shiloh, ch. 1. 3. and Solomon at Gibeon, 1 Kings 3. 4. and that he offered a thouſand burnt-offerings upon that altar there. Neither ſhould Saul have needed to have ſtayed ſeven dayes for this, ſeeing he had the Prieſts with him appointed for this ſervice; eſpecially conſidering that when Samuel came, it was as unlawful for him to have ſacrificed, being onely a Levite, as for himſelf or Uzziah to offer incenſe. Therefore the ſin of Saul was, partly, that he did not ſtay the full time appointed by God, out of his diffidence in him, and fear to be ſurprized by his enemies; and partly, that he preſumed to ruſh upon ſo weighty a buſineſs without the advice and direction of Gods Prophet, which was required of him; and in an hypocritical manner ſought to pleaſe God, and ſecure himſelf and the people from danger, by ceremonial ſacrifices performed in an external manner, and not in faith and obedience. Unto which might be added his diffidence in Gods power and promiſes, as being inſufficient to protect them by ſo weak means againſt their many and mighty enemies, many of thoſe few ſouldiers which attended him, being fled away; and it may be alſo ſome diſtruſt in Samuel, though he had alwaies found him faithful, as if he would not now come unto him according to his promiſe.

V. 10. as ſoon as he had made an end of offering the burnt-offering, behold Samuel came] Saul waited for Samuels coming until the time of the evening ſacrifice on the ſeventh day; and having offered the whole-burnt-offering, before the peace-offering, which was to follow after it was done, Samuel came; and ſo for default of waiting a ſmall time longer he tranſgreſſed Gods commandment, and became guilty of deſerved puniſhment. Which ſhould teach us this wiſdom, not to diſpenſe with Gods commands in the leaſt tittle or circumſtance, leſt we make our ſelves guilty of ſin, and liable to puniſhment.

and Saul went out to meet him, that he might ſalute him] Or, kiſs him. That is, as one well obſerveth, after the manner of hypocrites, he neglecteth to obey Gods commands brought unto him by his Miniſtry, and ſeeketh to pleaſe him with an outward formality and ceremonial complement.

V. 11. And Samuel ſaid, What haſt thou done?] This is not a queſtion of one deſirous to be informed (for he knew what he had done) but an expreſſion of juſt indignation, for Sauls diſobedience to Gods command, and an intimation of ſome great miſchief into which thereby he had plunged himſelf; like unto that of Gods unto Eve, Gen. 3. 13.

And Saul ſaid, Becauſe I ſaw that the people were ſcattered from me] In ſtead of an humble confeſſion of his ſin (as we ſee afterwards in David, 2 Sam. 12. 13.) Saul, after the manner of hypocrites, gildeth over his fault with fair, yet falſe excuſes, and ſo addeth ſin unto ſin. For firſt he pretendeth the defection and departure of the greateſt part of his ſouldiers to be the cauſe of his making this haſte; who, if they had ſtaied, would little have availed againſt ſuch a multitude of enemies: And herein he diſcovereth his confidence in the arm of fleſh, and his diffidence in God, when that failed; though it be alike with him to ſave with many or with few, as appeareth in Gideons victory, Judg. 7. and Jonathans afterwards. And then he ſaid he did it becauſe Samuel came not within the dayes appointed. And ſo he putteth off the fault from himſelf, and layeth it upon Samuel; as Adam did upon Eve, and conſequently on God himſelf. But this excuſe was untrue; for Samuel came on the ſeventh day, though not at that hour when Saul expected him.

V. 12. The Philiſtims will come down upon me to Gilgal] As though the Lord of Hoſts wanted power to reſtrain them, or would have wanted will, if they would have put their truſt in him, and obeyed his commands, having graciouſly bound himſelf thereunto by his free promiſe.

and I have not made ſupplication unto the Lord] Namely, for protection from our enemies, direction in our courſes, and his bleſſing on our endeavours. As though ſacrifices were better then obedience, or that God would hear ſinners having their hands and hearts polluted with wilful tranſgreſſions.

I forced my ſelf therefore, and offered a burnt-offering] q. d. I was very unwilling to have done it before thou cameſt; but I was neceſſitated unto it, unleſs I would by my delay have had the Philiſtims ſurprized me and my weak ſupplies before I had ſued unto God for his protection; which would have laid us open to ruine and deſtruction. Others read it, I reſtrained, or contained, my ſelf; in which ſenſe the word is taken, Gen. 45. 1. and Iſai. 42. 14. And ſo the meaning is, I contained my ſelf with much ado till I could no longer reſtrain, expecting the ſix daies, and a good part of the ſeventh, and then I made bold to offer a burnt-offering in the latter part of the day at the evening-ſacrifice, being now quite out of hope that thou wouldſt come at all, or at leaſt in due time.

V. 13. And Samuel ſaid to Saul, Thou haſt done fooliſhly] To wit, becauſe thou haſt not waited the ſeven dayes appointed thee, ch. 10. 8. Here he ſpeaketh, not as a ſubject to his Sovereign, but as Gods Prophet, ſent by him to do his meſſage; in delivery whereof, repreſenting Gods perſon, he was to ſpeak what he had put into his mouth plainly and impartially, making no difference between King and Subject, ſeeing to this ſupreme King all are alike; neither doth he accept the perſon of Princes, nor regardeth the rich more then the poor; for they are all the work of his hands, Job. 34. 19. Yea, if they ſin againſt him, he poureth contempt upon Princes, as well as upon mean men, and weakneth the ſtrength of the mighty. Therefore Gods Prophets, howſoever they have carried themſelves with all meekneſs and humility in their own cauſe, and civil affairs, yet coming in the cauſe of God, as his Ambaſſadors, they have done his meſſage with all impartial plainneſs, as we ſee in the carriage of Nathan to David, 2 Sam. 12. 7, 9, &c. compared with 1 Kings 1. 23, 24. of Jeremiah to Zedekiah, Jer. 37. 20. and Elijah to Ahab. 1 Kings 18. 18, 46.

Thou haſt not kept the commandment of the Lord thy God] He ſheweth him wherein he had done fooliſhly, namely in that wherein he thought he had done moſt wiſely and providently for his own and the peoples ſafety. But this he ought to have declined, truſting in the Lord with all his heart aud leaning to his own underſtanding, Prov. 3. 5. For our chief wiſdom conſiſteth in our obedience to Gods commandments, Deut. 4. 6. Keep therefore, and do them: for this is your wiſdome and underſtanding in the ſight of the nations, &c. Hence it is that in the Scriptures ſin is called folly; and though in our plotting and contriving of ſin, we think that we do moſt wiſely, as Saul here, and Pharaoh Exod. 1. 10. Yet certainly therein we do moſt fooliſhly, by provoking God to anger, who is ſtronger then we, and ſo draw upon our ſelves ſwift and fearful deſtruction, 1 Cor. 10. 22.

For now would the Lord have eſtabliſhed thy Kingdom upon Iſrael for ever] i. e. All the dayes of thy life. And ſo for ever is taken Deut. 15. 17. 1 Sam. 1. 22. For the promiſe of a durable Kingdome over Iſrael was before made to Judah, Gen. 49. 10. and the everlaſting Kingdome was eſtabliſhed upon David and his ſeed only, who came of the tribe of Judah, and principally to be underſtood of our Saviour Chriſt, whoſe Kingdom is for ever. Now whereas it may be ſaid, that Saul, notwithſtanding his ſin, held the Kingdome as long as he lived, and therefore the perpetuity of his kingdome in himſelf and his poſterity is here meant, had he not ſinned, to this I anſwer, That he did not hold it lawfully, as a gift of Gods grace and favour, (for ſo he ceaſed to be a King when he was rejected of God, and David choſen and anointed in his room) but as a Tyrant and uſurper; and ſo was cut off by an untimely and unnatural death, whereby he was taken from his kingdom, and his kingdom from him; whereas, had it not been for his ſin, they might long have continued one with another. Or if we ſhould underſtand this place of the eſtabliſhing of the Kingdom upon Saul and his poſterity, this doth not croſs Jacobs prophecy, ſeeing it is not ſpoken of Gods ſecret and abſolute decree, whereby the Kingdom was deſigned to the tribe of Judah, but of a revealed and conditional will, which is not effectual unleſs the condition be obſerved. This was the caſe of Saul in this place, and of Jeroboam, 2 Kings 11. 38, who had a promiſe of the continuance of the Kingdom to himſelf, and his houſe, if he hearkened to all that God had commanded him; but God knew he would make that promiſe void by his apoſtaſie and rebellion.

V. 14. But now thy Kingdome ſhall not continue] i. e. Shall not be eſtabliſhed upon thee and thy poſterity, but ſhall be rent from thee, and another ſhall be choſen in thy room. At the firſt ſight this may ſeem a ſore and over-ſevere puniſhment for ſo ſmall a ſin as Saul had committed, as not waiting upon Samuels coming, as he was appointed, and offering a ſacrifice a little ſooner then he ſhould have done, and that out of ſome diffidence in Gods power and promiſes, when he was in great extremity, and did lye under a ſore and ſearching tentation. To which I anſwer, I. That no ſin can be counted ſmall which is committed againſt a great God, and infinite in majeſty, ſeeing it deſerveth no leſs then eternal damnation, if in his juſtice he be pleaſed to proceed againſt a ſinner. II. That ſin is not to be meaſured by the materiality but the formality of it, as it is the tranſgreſſion of Gods law, the ſupreme Lord of Heaven and Earth. And the leſs the thing is about which we offend, the offence in this reſpect is the greater, in that we will in ſo ſmall a matter offend ſo great, glorious, and gracious a God; as it was in the caſe of Adam. III. God doth not ſo much look on the outward act of ſin as the maliciouſneſs of his will who doth commit it: and he eſteemeth that ſin but ſmall which is committed through humane frailty and infirmity, with reluſtancie of the will; and as nothing, when it is done unwittingly and unwillingly, though it ſeem never ſo horrid in the outward act; as appeareth in their caſe who killed a man unawares and againſt their will, for whoſe ſafety God purpoſely provided cities of refuge; And on the other ſide he accounteth even ſmall ſins capital and heinous when committed wilfully, preſumptuouſly and maliciouſly; as is manifeſt in the puniſhment of him that gathered ſticks on the Sabbath-day. To which aggravations it ſeemeth Sauls offence was liable, who was at the beſt a groſs hypocrite, deſtitute of faith and a good conſcience, without true fear and love of God, and proved afterwards a malicious and bloody tyrant, when his vail of hypocriſie was taken from him. IV. God eſteemeth of men, and ſo either rewardeth or puniſheth them, not according to their particular acts, but according to their conſtant courſe in which they continually walk. And ſo he paſſeth by and pardoneth great ſins in thoſe whoſe hearts are upright before him, and who conſtantly walk in the way of his commandments; howſoever he may, for their ſpiritual and everlaſting good, correct them with his fatherly chaſtiſements; as we ſee in the example of David, who though in ſome few things he tranſgreſſed and fell fearfully, yet he roſe again by repentance, & having erred and as it were ſlipped aſide, returned into his old and uſual way of holy obedience. And on the other ſide, God regardeth not the fits & qualms of ſome religious or righteous acts done by wicked men, when as in their conſtant courſe they go on in the waies of wickedneſſe; becauſe their hearts are rotten and unſound; and if they do any good, it is out of meer hypocriſie, not for any true love of it, but for by-reſpects and worldly & carnal ends: and he ſeverely puniſheth their ſins which ſeem leſſer, becauſe they are filthy ſtreams flowing from a much more polluted and ſtinking fountain. And this was Sauls caſe in this particular, whoſe ſin God did thus ſeverely puniſh upon theſe grounds; and the rather alſo (it may be) that he being the firſt King of Iſrael, might be an example to all that ſhould ſucceed him, and make them by his puniſhment keep cloſe to Gods commands, and not in the leaſt thing to ſwerve aſide.

the Lord hath ſought him a man after his own heart] i. e. Hath wiſely choſen and appointed him to be King and Captain over his people; to wit, David, though Samuel at this time had no knowledg of him, ch. 16. 6, 12. but ſpeaketh of him by a prophetical Spirit.

and the Lord hath commanded him to be Captain] i. e. hath deſigned him, though he yet knoweth not of it. He ſpeaketh of the future as of a thing already done, to ſhew the certainty of it, as it is uſual in the Scriptures.

V. 15. And Samuel aroſe, and gat him up from Gilgal, unto Gibeah of Benjamin] To which place Saul ſoon after followed him, if at leaſt he did not accompany him thither, as appeareth v. 16. For though Samuel were diſpleaſed with him for his ſin, yet it is not likely that he left him in this his extreamity, when he moſt needed counſel and comfort, directions from him, and the help of his prayers; eſpecially, ſeeing Saul did ſtill continue to perform the duty of a King and General, in leading and defending his people, notwithſtanding that hard & unpleaſing meſſage ſent unto him from God by his Prophet. Neither is it probable that Saul in that weak condition wherein he now was, would have gone with this ſmall handful of men from Gilgal to Gibeah, which was far neerer to Michmaſh where the Philiſtims encamped, if he had not been incouraged ſo to do by Samuels councel and company.

and Saul numbered the people that were preſent with him, about ſix hundred men] The reſt of his two thouſand being fled for fear, and theſe onely remaining with him, v. 6, 8.

V. 16. And Saul and Jonathan his ſon——abode in Gibeah of Benjamin] i. e. Being in great fear, by reaſon of their ſmall number, and the great ſtrength of their enemies, they made choice of this place for their better ſecurity, becauſe being ſituate on an hill, it was of ſome ſtrength (if they were aſſaulted) to defend them againſt their enemies; and they were likely here to have the beſt aſſiſtance, being among their kindred and ſureſt friends.

V. 17. And the ſpoilers came out of the camp of the Philiſtims] i. e. They ſent out of their camp three ſeveral parties of ſouldiers to waſte all the bordering parts of the country, and to bring all the ſpoyl they got by plundering to victual the camp. And they preſumed thus to divide their army, becauſe they truſted in their huge multitude, and deſpiſed the ſmall and unprepared number of the Iſraelites: In which regard, though they ſent many to do this ſervice abroad, yet they reſerved enough behind to defend their ſtanding camp in Michmaſh.

Ophrah] A city of the Benjamites, Joſh. 18. 23. South-weſt from Michmaſh, or, as others think, towards the North.

unto the land of Shual] Called Shaliſha, ch. 9. 4. Others read it, to the land of Saul, and ſo the vulgar Latine hath it; that is, ſome part belonging to the tribe of Benjamin, in which Saul was born, and had his inheritance. And the rather (as ſome think) they turned to waſte this country, to revenge themſelves upon Saul and Jonathan, who had ſmitten their gariſon.

V. 18. Beth-horon] A city of Ephraim, on the borders of Benjamin, Joſh. 16. 3. and 6. 18. 13. North-weſt from Michmaſh.

Zeboim] In the tribe of Benjamin, towards the deſert of Jordan on the Eaſt, mentioned Neh. 11. 34.

V. 19. Now there was no ſmith found throughout all the land of Iſrael] Here a reaſon is rendred why the Iſraelites were ſo ill provided of weapons, namely, the tyrannical government of the Philiſtims over them, who having diſarmed them, took care to hinder them from getting any arms or ammunition for the time to come. Yea, ſo jealous were they over them, that they took order to keep from them not onely arms and warlike weapons, but even neceſſary inſtruments of husbandry, as mattocks, ſpades, axes, plowſhares and coulters; onely they gave them liberty to come to their ſmiths to make new when the old were worn, and allowed them files to ſharpen their tools when they were blunted; which they that lived in places remote could not do without much trouble and expence of time. This ſheweth into what a miſerable bondage & ſlavery the people of God were plunged, who deſerting Gods ſervice had made themſelves the vaſſals and ſlaves of ſin and Satan. See 2 Kings 24. 14. Jer. 24. 1. So Porſena, as Plinie relateth l. 34. c. 14. bound the Romanes not to uſe any iron tools except about their husbandry.

Leaſt the Hebrews make them ſwords or ſpears] i.e. They thus reaſoned with themſelves, and one with another, Let us take care leſt the Hebrews procure arms to free themſelves from being under our ſubjection. So Gen. 3. 22. But if the Iſraelites were thus diſarmed, how came they to be ſo, ſeeing a while ſince they had an army of three hundred and thirty thouſand, which fought in a warlike manner againſt the Ammonites? and could they do this without weapons of war? To which it is anſwered, That in ancient times, when they were neceſſitated unto it, they came into the field to fight againſt their enemies with clubs, long ſtaves, ox-goads, pitchforks, bows and ſlings, which were of great uſe in thoſe dayes, and they skilful in uſing them, as we ſee in the ſeven hundred left-handed Banjamites, Judg. 20. 17. and David, that ſlew Goliath with a ſtone out of a ſling, ch. 17. 50. and the army of Iſrael under the conduct of Deborah and Barak, which overcame Siſerahs mighty hoſt with no other weapons but ſuch as theſe, ſeeing (as ſhe ſaith in her ſong) there was not a ſhield nor ſpeare ſeen among fourty thouſand of Iſrael, Judg. 5. 8. And Shamgar ſlew ſix hundred of the Philiſtims with an ox-goad, or a plow-ſhare, as the word may ſignifie Judg. 3. 31. and Samſon routed a whole army of them, and ſlew heaps upon heaps, with the jaw-bond of an aſs, Judg. 15. 15. In all which God magnified his power and al-ſufficiency, and his great goodneſs towards his people, in giving them glorious victories over their mighty enemies by ſuch weak and contemptible means.

V. 21. Yet they had a file] Heb, a file with mouths. i.e. To point and ſharpen their inſtruments and neceſſary utenſils, when they could not go to the Philiſtims forges.

V. 22. There was neither ſword nor ſpear found in the hand of any] The Philiſtims had diſarmed them of all their ſtore, & deprived them of their workmen, who ſhould have made them new. But they might have ruſtick inſtruments, as clubs, goads, ſtaves, ſlings, which for want of better ammunition they might, being neceſſitated, uſe for weapons. See on v. 19.

but with Saul and with Jonathan his ſon was there found] Who, in reſpect of their place and command, had this priviledg above all the reſt.

to the paſſage of Michmaſh] To the end that having taken it, they might make themſelves maſters of all the country that lay before it, and hinder the Iſraelites from coming on a ſudden upon their gariſon: This is added to prepare a way to the ſtory in the following chapter,

CHAP. XIV.

Verſ. 1. N*ow it came to paſs upon a day,* (or, there was a day) that Jonathan the ſon of Saul ſaid] The ſpecial inſtinct of Gods Spirit moving him thereunto; which had endued him not only with heroical gifts of valour and fortitude, but alſo with an extraordinary ſtrong faith in Gods promiſe, that if his people obeyed him, one of them ſhould chaſe a thouſand of their enemies, and two put ten thouſand to flight, Deut. 32. 30. and that their enemies ſhould be ſmitten before their face; and coming out againſt them one way, ſhould flee before them ſeven waies, Deut. 28. 7. becauſe the Lord their God would fight for them, Joſh. 23. 10. For otherwiſe, if he had in this enterpriſe relyed upon their own ſtrength, it had been but fooliſh preſumption, carnal confidence, and a meer tempting of God, for him and his armour-bearer alone to have ſet upon a garriſon, yea, and with it, a whole Army of the Philiſtims.

that is on the other ſide] i.e. Encamped in Michmaſh, beyond the rocky paſſage, but he told not his father] Namely, of his purpoſe and reſolution; becauſe he had aſſurance in himſelf, that God by the inward motion of his Spirit had called him unto it; and knew that his father, who was ignorant of it, and would not have given credit to him, if he had told him of it, whould have diſſwaded him from undertaking ſuch a dangerous and deſperate enterpriſe. For otherwiſe, in an ordinary way, according to martial diſcipline, it had been unlawful for him to have made ſuch an attempt without the knowledg and conſent of his King and General; and though it ſhould have proſperouſly ſucceeded, yet in ſtead of reward he ſhould have deſerved puniſhment; as we ſee in the caſe of Manlius Torquatus his ſon.

V. 2. And Saul tarried in the uttermoſt part of Gibeah] i.e. Neer one part of the ſtrait towards Gibeah; where having fortified himſelf and his ſmall camp, he obſerved the motions and actions of the Philiſtims.

which is in Migron] A place, or plain, on the other ſide of the narrow paſſage towards Gibeah, of which mention is made Iſai. 10. 28.

V. 3. And Ahiah the ſon of Ahitub, Ichabods brother, the ſon of Phinehas] Phinehas the ſon of Eli had two ſons, the elder named Ahitub, the other Ichabod, born after the death of his father. Ahitub not being in the ſtorie before, now is ſaid to have been the brother of Ichabod, formerly named upon that ſad occaſion of his fathers and grandfathers death, & the captivating of the Ark, ch. 4. 21. Now this Ahitub by ſucceſſion came to the high Prieſthood after the death of his father Phinehas, but (as it ſeemeth) continued not long in it, but according to the threatning of the man of God dyed before he came to be old, ch. 2. 31. leaving behind him this Ahiah to ſucceed him in the high Prieſts office. Who (as it is uſual with the Hebrews) had more names then one. He is called Abimelech, ch. 21. 1, 2, 8. and elſewhere. He is alſo named Abiathar, 2 Sam. 8. 17. Mark. 2. 26. Him Saul afterward cauſed to be ſlain upon ſuſpicion of his compliancy and confederacy with David, ch. 22. 9, 20.

wearing an Ephod] Hereby is ſignified that he was now high Prieſt, ſeeing he wore the rich Ephod, accompanied, with all the breſt-plate in which was the Urim and Thummim, wherewithal they conſulted with the Lord, Exod. 28. 30. To which purpoſe he was ſent for by Saul, or at leaſt came of himſelf into the camp, and brought with him the Ark, v. 18. which they ſometimes uſe to do upon weighty occaſions, or when they were in ſome great exigent. See on ch. 4. 3.

V. 4. And between the paſſages by which Jonathan ſought to go over to the Philiſtims garriſon] In theſe and the following words is ſet down the high and hard attempt of Jonathan in going over to the Philiſtims garriſon, by deſcribing the difficulty of the paſſages that led unto them. In the deſcribing whereof it may ſeem that there is to us as much difficulty as there was to them in the action and execution. And therefore, though I deſire not, to enter into a labyrinth of curioſity where I have not the thread of Scripture or Reaſon to lead and guide me out, eſpecially when it is not a matter of great moment to come to the clear and diſtinct underſtanding of it, ſeeing it is ſufficient in ſuch caſes that the Scripture telleth us ſuch a thing was ſo, though the manner be not cleerly evidenced to our weak capacity, yet ſeeing ſomething is expreſſed in the text which may give ſome light unto theſe intricate and dark paſſages, I will ſet down briefly what I conceive. The paſſage here ſpoken of was a certain in-let between mountains on either ſide, in which there was a paſſage between Gibeah, where Saul was, and Michmaſh, in which was the garriſon and camp of the Philiſtims. They are called paſſages in the plural number, becauſe the ſame ſerved for both parties, to paſſe the one to the other, from Michmaſh to Gibeah, and from Gibeah to Michmaſh; although it may be in ſuch an mountainous place there might be two paſſages meeting together in the firſt in-let or entrance. And on the one ſide and the other of this paſſage there was a ſharpe rock, not in reſpect of the breadth Eaſt and Weſt on either hand, but in reſpect of the length, it being the firſt entrance into the paſſage on both ſides, that is, where the Iſraelites and the Philiſtims encamped: For ſo it is plainly ſaid, that the fore-front of the one was ſituate, Northward over againſt Michmaſh, and the other Southward over againſt Gibeah, v. 5. And he that would paſs either to the Philiſtims or Iſraelites, muſt climbe over both theſe rocks, which were placed on either end of the in-let or paſſage.

V. 6. Come and let us go over unto the garriſon of theſe uncircumciſed] Being aliens and out of covenant with God, they are not under his protection; whereas we, who are in covenant, and ſo the people of God, have his promiſes, that he will give us victoy over his and our enemies; yea, a ſpecial promiſe, that Saul ſhall ſave us out of the hand of the Philiſtims, ch. 9. 16.

it may be that the Lord will work for us] This is not a ſpeech of diffidence and doubting, ſeeing he was carried on to this dangerous adventure by the inward motion of Gods Spirit, and perſwaded of Gods al-ſufficiency to give victory by few as well as many; but to ſhew unto his ſervant the great difficulty that was in the enterpriſe in it ſelf, to the end they might not in any part rely, upon themſelves or their own ſtrength, but putting all their confidence in God, might by fervent prayer ſue unto him for aſſiſtance and good ſucceſſe, as Caleb did in the like caſe, Joſh. 14. 12. Yea, and it may be alſo, that ſeeing we cannot have ſuch abſolute ground of aſſurance for temporal as we have for ſpiritual things, and becauſe he had no ſpecial promiſe from God of victory at this time, he thus ſpeaketh, to ſhew his humble ſubmiſſion to Gods will, and his readineſſe to adventure his life in the cauſe of God, and his Church and people; and to yield himſelf over to be diſpoſed of according to his good pleaſure both in life and death. So Judg. 7. 7. Joſh. 14. 12. 2 Chron. 14. 11.

there is no reſtraint to the Lord] He is in himſelf omnipotent and alſufficient, that it is as eaſie for him to ſave with few as with many. So 2 Chron.14.11. 1 Macc.3.18. & 2. Macc.15.27. See examples Judg. 7.4. 1 Sam 17.47. 2 Chron.25.8.

V. 7. Do all that is in thine heart] Whatſoever ſeemeth good unto thee.

I am with thee according to thine heart] i.e. I will follow thee whitherſoever it pleaſeth thee to go.

V. 9. If they ſay thus unto us, Tarry untill we come unto you] Here Jonathan, for the ſtrengthening of their faith, that they might couragiouſly go on in this dangerous enterpriſe, pitcheth upon a ſign which no doubt was ſuggeſted unto him by Gods Spirit, whereby he doth not doubtingly tempt God, (for we are ſaid truly thus to do when we make an unneceſſary experiment of his truth and power) but onely deſireth this ſign for his better confirmation, that God would bleſs and aſſiſt him in this weighty buſineſs: as Eleazar, Abrahams ſervant, did to the ſame end, Gen.24. 13,14. and Gideon, Judg.6.36,37. & 7.13. Neither was this ſign (as ſome of the Hebrews would have it) without ſome natural reaſon: For if the Philiſtims ſaid, Tarry till we come to you, it was a ſign of their courage and boldneſs; but if they ſaid, Come up unto us, it was a bewraying of their fearfulneſs to ſet upon their enemies. Others will have it thus, That if they ſaid, Come up unto us, it was an argument that they put their confidence in their own ſtrength, which God hating, would therefore confound them in their pride and preſumption.

V. 10. And this ſhall be a ſign unto us] i.e. As it pleaſed God to put it into my heart to deſire this ſign, ſo it is my earneſt prayer unto God, that it may prove a true ſign unto us, for the confirmation of our faith in the aſſurance of our good ſucceſs.

V. 11. And both of them diſcovered themſelves to the garriſon of the Philiſtims] i.e. They went up towards their garriſon in the ordinary paſſage.

Behold, the Hebrews come forth out of the holes where they had hid themſelves] To wit, for fear of our great army; againſt which having no power to defend themſelves, they lay hid in caves and rocks, ch.13. 6. Or elſe they ſpeak this by way of jeer and ſcoff againſt *S*auls army, who had fortified and intrenched themſelves for fear of being ſuddenly ſurprized by their many and mighty enemies.

V. 12. And the men of the garriſon anſwered] i.e. Spake, or, ſaid unto them. Which phraſe is uſual with the Hebrews, where there is no queſtion propounded. See on v.28.

Come up to us, and we will ſhew you a thing] Words of ſcorn and contempt. q.d. Come up if you dare: but if you be ſo fool-hardy as to preſume to come up hither, we will teach you more wit then thus to thruſt your ſelves into ſuch deſperate danger.

V. 13. And Jonathan climbed up upon his hands and upon his feet] Being full of true valour and courage, and thus provoked with their ſcorns and jeers, but much more becauſe God had anſwered his deſire in giving him this ſign of victory, he bendeth himſelf with all his might to ſet upon the work; and becauſe the rock which was in his paſſage was ſo high, craggy and ſteep that he could not in a uſual manner get up to the top of it, he clambereth and climbeth upon his hands as well as his feet, to keep him from ſlipping and falling backward. Joſephus obſerveth, that Jonathan and his ſervant did not go up on that ſide where the Philiſtims firſt eſpyed them, but fetch'd a little compaſs about unto another place, which was not kept with any garriſon, becauſe they thought it ſurely defenced by nature; and ſo unexpectedly and ſuddenly fell upon them.

and they fell before Jonathan; and his armour-bearer ſlew after him] i.e. Jonathan himſelf, like a valiant leader, ſlew ſuch as he firſt met with; and his armour-bearer, having gotten weapons from ſome that fell, did alſo ſlay others that came in his way.

V. 14. Within as it were an half-acre of land, which a yoke of oxen might plow] i.e. They made quick diſpatch, and ſlew ſo many in a very ſmall compaſs of ground. This is mentioned to make it appear that the ſlaughter was miraculous, ſeeing it was made upon the Philiſtines, not when routed and put to flight, but while they were yet cloſe in a body.

V. 15. And there was a trembling in the hoſt] i.e. They were all generally, both the garriſon, and thoſe three companies which went out to ſpoyl, and were now returned to the camp, with all the reſt of the Philiſtims army, ſtricken with ſuch fear and amazement, and with ſuch giddineſs and diſtemper of brain, that they miſtook their fellows and friends for their enemies, and ſo fell upon and ſlew one another. This befell them by the deluding & blinding of their phantaſie, but principally by the power of God inflicting this judgment upon them. And with ſuch a blindneſſe and giddineſſe the Lord ſmote the Sodomites, Gen.19. 11. and the Midianites, Judg.7.22. and the Syrians, 2 Kings 6.17.

and the earth quaked] i.e. God alſo ſent a terrible earth-quake, which did much increaſe their fear and aſtoniſhment. We read of eight Earthquakes in the Scripture; this here, and Exod. 19.18. Numb.16.31. Amos 1.1. Matth.27.51. & 28 2. Act.4.31. & 16.26.

ſo it was a very great trembling] Heb. a trembling of God. that is, a very great trembling, as we have it in our Tranſlation; and ſo the phraſe is ſometimes taken, Gen.30.8. or a fear not grounded upon any reaſon, (for why ſhould a great army fear onely two men purſuing and ſetting upon them?) but ſent miraculouſly from God; ſuch as the Lord threatned to ſend upon his people for their ſin, Lev.26.36,37. And with ſuch a fear he ſmote the Philiſtims, 2 Sam. 5.4. and the Syrians, 2 Kings 7. 6.

V. 16. the multitude melted away] i.e. The army of the Philiſtims were deſtroyed by their ſlaughtering one another.

V. 17. and ſee who is gone from us] Saul ſuppoſed it might be ſome of his Army that were the cauſe of all this ſtir and tumult in the Philiſtims camp, by ſome skirmiſh with them.

V. 18. And Saul ſaid to Ahiah, Bring hither the ark of God] Namely, to enquire what was to be done, whether to puſue the Philiſtims, or to keep their ſtanding. Now the Prieſt being to conſult with God, was to ſtand before the Ark, having on his rich Ephod and breſt-plate, and there to receive Gods Oracle and anſwer from between the Cherubims on the mercy-ſeat, as ſome conceive. See on Exod.28.30. and Num.27.21.

V. 19. While Saul talked unto the Prieſt] i.e. About ſuch things as concerned the preſent buſineſſe, namely, the bringing of the Ark, and what he would have him to enquire when it was come. Now this had been commendable in *S*aul, to conſult with God in ſuch a weighty matter; but as he did it, it was but the colourable act of an hypocrite, who fleeth unto God only when he is in ſtraits, and neglecteth him and his ordinances when the danger is paſt, as the ſequel ſheweth.

And Saul ſaid unto the Prieſt, Withdraw thine hand] i.e. When he perceived by the increaſing of the noiſe, that ſome great diſaſter had befallen the Philiſtims, and if he took hold on the preſent opportunity, there was great hope of victory, he thought it was but loſt time to ſtay to conſult with God, and to crave his direction, ſeeing he now knew of himſelf, upon this occaſion offered, what he was to do, without his help. And here *S*aul diſcovered his falſe, prophane and hypocritical heart, who, whileſt he apprehended danger, ſought unto God for direction and protection, but when he did but hope the danger was once over, and he out of his ſtrait, then he thought himſelf ſtrong enough to walk on his own legs without any reliance on God, and ſo wholly neglected his ordinance, Num.27.21. as thinking it needleſſe to be directed by him. And thus, when he was in danger by the defection of his own *S*ouldiers and the approaching of the Philiſtims great army, he was ſo devout that he ſought unto God by ſacrifice in all haſte, not having the patience to ſtay Gods appointed time, chap. 13.11, 12. but here, when he conceived that he was in no ſuch need of him, he profanely neglected his ordinance, and truſted to his own courſe, as if he had ſaid, In theſe ſtraits of time we have no leiſure to attend Gods anſwer, but will lay hold on the preſent opportunity, which already appeareth.

V. 20. every mans ſword was againſt his fellow] Not being able, through fear and amazement, to diſcern friends from enemies. So Judg. 7.22. 2 Chr. 20.23.

V. 21. Moreover the Hebrews which were with the Philiſtims] i.e. Thoſe who being formerly taken captive, and were now their ſlaves and bondmen, and forced to follow their camp, and attend upon their carriages, and they alſo who as fugitives had fled unto them to ſave their lives, joyned now with their brethren againſt the Philiſtims: So that there were divers ſorts of men which joyned in this battel to work their deſtruction; the Philiſtims themſelves, who ſlaughtered one another; Sauls army, the Iſraelites which the Philiſtines had among them, both bondmen and fugitives; and the Iſraelites who had for fear left Sauls camp, and hid themſelves in caves and rocks, ch.13.6.

V. 23. So the Lord ſaved Iſrael] Not they themſelves, but the Lord of Hoſts, who gave them victory.

over to Beth-aven] Not far from Michmaſh, ch.13.5.

V. 24. And the men of Iſrael were diſtreſſed that day] To wit, with hunger and faintneſs, not daring to eat.

For Saul had adjured the people] i.e. Had bound them by an oath, under the penalty of a fearful curſe, devoting them who tranſgreſſed unto death, v.44.

ſaying, Curſed be the man] i.e. Let him be rooted out as an accurſed thing.

that eateth any food] Heb. bread, Hereby all food is ſignified; elſe Jonathan had not offended in eating honey, v.43. See Gen.43.31.

may be avenged on mine enemies] His end was, that by ſtaying to eat they might not be hindred from purſuing the victory. This though it had a ſhew of zeal, and a good intent, to deſtroy Gods enemies, yet it was in many reſpects ſinful and wicked. For I. it ſavoured of pride and arrogance, ſeeing hereby he deſired to have the glory of the victory aſcribed to himſelf, and his zeal and policy, which more duly belonged to his ſon. II. he raſhly and inconſiderately inſnared the conſciences of the people by a curſe and oath, meerly out of his own head and will, having no warrant for it from God. III. though he pretended a good end, yet he uſed ill means, the interdiction of food to the people, though never ſo much neceſſitated to eat, and the binding them by an oath and curſe, and that under penalty of preſent death, v.43,44. which it was unlawful for him to inflict (though a King) without juſt cauſe. IV. becauſe hereby he weakned and diſabled the people, and ſo hindred them from obtaining a much more glorious victory, verſe 30. V. he was hereby an occaſion of the peoples ſinne, who afterwards being hunger-ſtarved, for greedineſſe, did eat the fleſh with the blood ver.32.

V. 25. And all they of the land] i.e. All the Iſraelitiſh ſouldiers; which purſued the Philiſtims, v.20.

came to a wood] To wit, which lay between Michmaſh and Aialon ver.31.

and there was honey upon the ground] In that Country bees in great abundance bred in the woods, in hollow trees, and gathered there ſuch plenty of honey that it dropped thence upon the ground. This being an ordinary thing in many places of Canaan, it was therefore ſaid to be a land flowing with milk and honey, Exod.3.8,17. Jer.11.5.

but no man put his hand to his mouth] Namely, to take and eat of the honey.

V.27. But Jonathan heard not] Not being with his father in the camp when he adjured the people, v.3, 17. and therefore was wholly innocent, ſeeing by reaſon of his abſence he could take no notice of the oath.

when his father charged the people with the oath] Unto which was annexed the penalty of the curſe and death. And therefore, being through weakneſs, hunger and wearineſs ready to faint, he taſted ſome of the honey which he ſaw lying on the ground.

and dipt it in an honey-combe] Or, wood-honey. i. e. the wilde honey which lay before him. See Matth.3.4.

and his eyes were enlightened] i. e. He gat new ſtrength and vigour, and his eyes grew cleer, that were dim with faſting and faintneſſe for want of ſpirits.

V. 28. Then anſwered one of the people] i. e. One of the Souldiers, who following him in the purſuit, and taking notice of his taſting the honey, ſpake unto him. For in the Hebrew phraſe a man is ſaid to anſwer, when his ſpeech relateth to a thing before done, as well as to a thing before ſpoken. So Numb.11.28. Joſhua is ſaid to have anſwered Moſes, when he asked him no queſtion, and his ſpeech hath reference onely to Eldads and Medads prophecying, related by the young man that came from the camp with the news. So Joh.2.18.

that eateth any food this day] i. e. Till the evening, v. 24. For with the Hebrews the day ended at evening, and then the next day began.

And the people were faint] Or, weary, ſo as they could not any longer purſue their enemies: Which was the occaſion of Jonathans following ſpeech.

V. 29. My father hath troubled the land] i. e. The whole army of Iſrael, by impoſing upon them this inconſiderate oath, ſeeing it is the cauſe that hindreth them from obtaining a full and compleat victory.

V. 30. How much more, if haply the people had eaten freely] q. d. If I by the alone taſting of a little honey am ſo much refreſhed that I am thereby enabled to go on cheerfully, as your Leader, in the purſuit, how much more, if all the ſouldiers had eaten freely of the enemies ſpoyl, as they hapned to light upon it, would they have been enabled thereby to have purſued and ſlaughtered their enemies? Others read the words thus, How much more, if the people had freely eaten of that ſpoyl of their enemies which they had gotten? but now there is no great ſlaughter made amongſt the Philiſtims. Junius, word for word, readeth it according to the Hebrew, and ſo the ſenſe is perfect; Yea, becauſe (I would to God the people had been permitted freely to eat; becauſe, I ſay) by their being reſtrained no greater ſlaughter hath been made of the Philiſtims, by reaſon of their fainting for want of food. Here he diſalloweth his fathers curſe for three reaſons.: 1. becauſe the people were hereby diſabled to purſue their enemies, as he found in his experience. 2. becauſe the ſlaughter of the enemy was not ſo great as it would have been, had the people eaten, they by faſting being ſo faint that they could not purſue. 3. becauſe the people by this raſh oath were reſtrained of their lawful liberty.

V.31. To Aijalon] There were two Cities of this name, one in Dan, Joſh.19.42. given to the Prieſts, Joſh.21.24. another in Judah, 2 Chron. 11.10. And the later (as I conceive) is here meant, ſeeing Michmaſh, which did lie on the border of Benjamin, was not far from it, and the lots of Judah and Benjamin joyned together, and bordered on the Philiſtims Country,

V.32. And the people flew upon the ſpoyl] i.e. Night being come and the time of the oath expired, and being with long faſting extremely hungry, they ſeized on the ſheep, oxen and calves which were in their enemies camp, for their proviſion, as a ravenous hungry hawk upon her prey; and before the blood could have any time to be drained out of the ſlain beaſt, (being killed on the ground, and not after the uſual manner hung up, that the blood might run out) they did dreſs and eat the blood with the fleſh, ſcarce half roſted or ſod which was contrary to the law, Gen.9.4. Lev.3:17. & 17.14. Deut.12.16. & 15.23. And ſo though hunger could not force them to tranſgreſſe the Kings commandment, for fear of death, yet it would not reſtrain them from breaking Gods commandment, though it brought them under the penalty of his curſe, and hell it ſelf.

V. 33. And he ſaid, Ye have trangreſſed] Or, dealt treacherouſly. Like an hypocrite, he chargeth their ſin upon them, and condemneth them for it; but without any acknowledgment of his own, which was the cauſe of theirs.

roll a great ſtone unto me this day] To wit, that the beaſts might be killed on it, and their blood preſſed out. Or, becauſe it is not probable that one ſtone could not be ſufficient to have the beaſts of ſo many thouſands, all haſty and hungry people, at the ſame time ſlain upon it, others with more likelyhood conceive that it was to build that altar ſpoken of v. 35. that ſo killing and eating before it in Gods preſence, and in the ſight of the King, they might no more preſume to eat the blood with the fleſh.

V. 35. And Saul built an altar unto the Lord] To wit, that all who would might offer upon it peace-offerings, in thankfulneſſe for this great victory, and that it might be a monument and memorial thereof in time to come. See on ch.9.12. & Judg.21.4.

the ſame was the firſt altar that he built unto the Lord] Heb. that altar he began to build unto the Lord. It is ſaid to be the firſt, becauſe it was the firſt that he built himſelf, or that was built by his ſole appointment: for thoſe at Gilgal were built by Samuel and others, though he had the uſe of them, ch.11.15. & 13.9. And this (as ſome think) is ſaid to tax him of impiety and profaneneſs, that whereas he had before great cauſe to ſhew his thankfulneſſe to God by ſacrificing peace-offerings and gratulatory ſacrifices, as namely, his famous victory over the Ammonites, yet he had not till now built any altar for this uſe.

V. 36. Then ſaid the Prieſt, Let us draw neer hither unto God] i. e. Before we undertake ſuch a weighty enterpriſe, let us firſt conſult with God by Urim and Thummim before the Ark, and crave his direction in it: Num.27.21. See on Eccl.5.1.

V. 37. And Saul asked counſel of God] To wit, by the high Prieſt as he adviſed v.36.

But he anſwered him not that day] This was a ſign that God was diſpleaſed, as ch.28.6. but not with Jonathan, for eating the honey; but with Saul, for the raſh oath and curſe which he in his arrogancy and tyranny impoſed upon the people, having no warrant for it from God. Howſoever, it muſt be granted, that God took occaſion from Jonathans eating of the honey, to uſe this ſilence for other ends, as appeareth by Gods directing the lot to fall upon him; Not becauſe Jonathan had ſinned in eating the honey, for he did it in caſe of preſent neceſſity, and to a good end, that being refreſhed thereby, he might be more able to purſue his enemies: and though his father had bound the people by an oath, under the penalty of a curſe, not to eat, yet he was ignorant thereof, and was not, being abſent, bound to know it, unleſſe ſome means had been uſed by his father or ſome other to give him notice of it: But rather, God by lot did diſcover his fact, when by this means he was ſought unto, I. for his own glory: For ſeeing the diſpoſing of lots belongeth unto him, Prov.16.33. it was for his honour to give a true lot. II. to diſcover unto all Jonathans innocency, when the cauſe came to a full hearing; which thoſe might have queſtioned that ſaw him eat the honey, and did not know that he was ignorant of the oath. III. to convince Saul of his inconſiderate raſhneſs and folly, together with his hypocriſie, cruelty and tyranny, in ſentencing men to death before he knew whether their fault deſerved it, and ratifying his dreadful doom when he knew it did not deſerve it; and to let him ſee what miſchiefs that haſty oath had wrought, in hindring the greatneſs and glory of the victory, in being the occaſion of the peoples ſin, and indangering his ſon to death, who, in reſpect of his true worth, and his own natural affection, could not but be moſt dear unto him, if at leaſt pride and arrogancy did not quench the heat of his love, and cauſe him to envy him the glory of this victory, as afterwards it fell out between him and David, ch.18.7,8.

V. 38. all the chief of the people] Heb. corners. See on Judg.20.2. He commanded all the chief, i. e. all the Elders and Heads of the tribes and families, to approach unto him, that they might by lots find out the man who by his ſin had provoked Gods diſpleaſure, ſo as being conſulted with he would give no anſwer. He concluded that ſin, as in the caſe of Achan, Joſh.7. was the cauſe; and preſumed it muſt needs be the breach of that oath he had impoſed, and nothing elſe; and never thought how himſelf and the people had broken Gods law; himſelf, by impoſing a raſh and ſinful oath; and they, by eating the blood with the fleſh; but like a groſs hypocrite, preferring his own groundleſs command before the law of God, he will have this puniſhed with all rigor, but never ſpeaketh or thinketh of the other.

V. 39. though it be in Jonathan my ſon, he ſhall ſurely dye] This he ſpeaketh to magnifie his unpartial juſtice, though all proceeded from arrogancy and tyrannical cruelty. For what lawful power had he to inflict death upon any for tranſgreſſing his lawleſs and raſh oath? eſpecially on Jonathan, who had done it ignorantly, and had ſo well deſerved both of him and the whole Common-wealth by his undaunted valor, when he in the mean time durſt not look in the face of his enemies?

V. 40. Be ye on the one ſide, and I and Ionathan my ſon will be on the other ſide] To wit, that being thus divided, we may ſee on which party the lot will light, and ſo he that hath ſinned may be known:

V. 41. Therefore Saul ſaid unto the Lord God of Iſrael] i. e. Prayed unto him that he would diſpoſe of the lots.

Give a perfect lot] Or, Shew the innocent. i. e. an upright and unpartial lot, or a lot which may ſhew and cleer the innocent, as the words may ſignifie, though Saul meant the contrary.

but the people eſcaped] i.e. were cleered and freed by lot. Here the Lord heareth the prayer of Saul, though it were void of faith, not out of any reſpect to his prayer, but to his own prerogative, as being the ſole diſpoſer of lots. And in this reſpect, when the heatheniſh Mariners referred it unto him by lot to diſcover the offender that was the cauſe of the tempeſt, he cauſed it juſtly to fall upon Jonah, Jon.1.

V. 42. And Ionathan was taken] Really and truly Jonathan was innocent and faultleſs, but not in Sauls ſenſe. But why is he taken by lot who was innocent? Many reaſons are rendred by ſundry men: as I. that hereby God might ſhew how tender he is in allowing the leaſt ſhew of diſobedience to the ſupreme power; II. to make children fear and avoid even the raſh and cauſeleſs curſes of parents, which out of Gods ſecret judgment are ſometimes inflicted; III. to puniſh Sauls raſh oath, by bringing thereby his deareſt ſon into extreme danger; IV. to diſcover Sauls groſs hypocriſie, who was ſcrupulous in keeping a raſh and wicked oath, yet made no conſcience of killing his innocent ſon.

Others alledg other reaſons; as I. becauſe if Saul, who was the chief offender, had been diſcovered by lot, it would have impaired the credit of the King, and ſo weakned his government; II. becauſe this taking of his ſon was a greater grief to Saul then if himſelf had been taken; III. becauſe no man durſt have preſumed to execute the ſentence of death upon him, being the Sovereign King. IV. becauſe the Lord hereby would eſtabliſh military diſcipline, and ſhew that orders made in armies ſhould be ſtrictly obſerved.

V.43. I did but taſte a little honey——and lo, I muſt die] q.d. Though the fault be little or nothing, ſeeing I was ignorant of the oath, yet I muſt dye for it. Here one well obſerveth the candor, ingenuity and honeſt ſimplicity of Jonathan. He doth not ſhift the matter off by excuſes, and plead his innocency, but plainly confeſſeth the fact; he doth not alledg ignorance of his fathers oath, nor his extreme neceſſity by reaſon of hunger and faintneſs, nor the benefit he had by his eating; nor accuſeth his father of temerity and raſhneſs in impoſing the oath, or of cruelty in puniſhing the breach of it; nor pleadeth his own merit in this his ſervice, by which all the Common-wealth fared the better; nor appealeth to the army, being unjuſtly oppreſſed by a rigorous ſentence; nor craveth their help for his deliverance: onely he ſaith, This have I done, and lo, I muſt die.

V.44. And Saul anſwered, God do ſo and more alſo] See on Ruth. 1.17. It appeareth by this and many other places that Saul was much given to ſwearing and curſing.

thou ſhalt ſurely die, Jonathan] A ſtrange zeal was this of Sauls! He that here in purſuance of his own raſh oath will not ſpare a good ſonne, a while after contrarie to Gods expreſs command ſpareth a wicked King, ch.15.8.

V.45. Shall Jonathan dye, who hath wrought this great ſalvation in Iſrael?] Here the people oppoſe a juſt oath againſt Sauls vain-glorious and hypocriticall one, ſwearing that Jonathan ſhould not dye; I. becauſe he had committed no crime worthy of death, implyed in theſe words, Shall Jonathan dye? q.d. Should he dye that is innocent, and hath committed no offence that deſerveth death? II. becauſe he was rather worthy of all honour & reward, ſeeing the Lord by him, as his chief inſtrument, had given a great and miraculous deliverance to his people, when they were in a forlorn and deſperate condition. And this act of the people was very commendable, if they carried it on by humble ſupplication and interceſſion; but not ſo, if they did it in a mutinous and forcible manner, as it ſeemeth they did, for then it was againſt military diſcipline, in the relation of ſouldiers to their General, and againſt that loyal obedience that is due from ſubjects to their King.

V.47. So Saul took the Kingdome] i.e. Being by this glorious victory better confirmed-&ſetled on the royal throne; he took upon him the managing of all the affairs of the Kingdome; but eſpecially in fighting againſt all the enemies that made war againſt him; or elſe hereby is meant, that hearing Gods doom againſt him by Samuel, that the kingdom ſhould be taken from him, chap.13.14. he uſed all the means he could, to ſtrengthen himſelf againſt all thoſe who were any wayes likely to deprive him of it. and whitherſoever he turned himſelf, he vexed them] i.e. Though he did not wholly vanquiſh and ſubdue them, becauſe God had reſerved that work and glory of it for David, who did ſucceed him, yet he much moleſted and weakned them, ſo as they did not with that confidence, courage and ſucceſſe fight againſt Iſrael as they had formerly done. And all this came to paſs out of Gods meer mercy to his people, who gave good ſucceſſe to Saul in his wars, though he were a wicked man, for their ſakes.

V.49. Now the ſons of Saul were Jonathan, and Iſhui, and Melchiſhua] Iſhui is alſo called Abinadab, ch.31.2. In this regiſter of Sauls ſons Iſhboſheth (who is called alſo Eſhbaal, 1 Chr.8.33.) is omitted; and that, as ſome think, becauſe here are onely reckoned up his ſons, Soldiers and valiant Worthies that fought his battels, and both lived and dyed with him; whereas Iſhboſheth ſurvived him, and was a man of no great worth either for wiſdom or valour. CHAP. XV.

Verſ. 1. Samuel alſo ſaid unto Saul, The Lord ſent me to anoint thee to be King over his people, over Iſrael] i.e. Appointed me as his Prophet. For Samuel was not ſent by God to go unto Saul, but Saul by Gods providence was directed to go unto him, though he intended it not to this end. Here Samuel, before he telleth him of the duty which God required of him, putteth him in mind of Gods ſingular favour towards him, that hereby he might move him to undertake and perform Gods command with more diligence and cheerfulneſs; namely, that when he ſeemed little in his own eyes, he advanced him to the ſupreme dignity of being a King, and that over Iſrael his own people, and to ſupply his own place of Government, as his Viceroy and Lievtenant.

Now therefore hearken thou unto the voice of the words of the Lord] i.e. Howſoever thou haſt formerly failed, and diſpleaſed the Lord by thy diſobedience, ch.13.13. yet now at laſt obey his commands, in thankfulneſs unto him for ſo high an advancement.

V.2. Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts] He who hath an abſolute command over all his army, according to that, Iſa.40.26. He hath created all theſe things, and bringeth out their hoſt by number, and calleth them all by their names: Therefore he is in all things to be obeyed, ſeeing all creatures obey him: And being Lord of hoſts, and of omnipotent power, and able to protect his ſervants that obey his commands, and to deſtroy his enemies that riſe up againſt him, Saul might be aſſured of good ſucceſs when he did fight his battels.

I remember that which Amalek did to Iſrael] God cannot properly be ſaid either to remember or forget, becauſe he ſeeth all things paſt, preſent and to come at one perfect view; but by ſuch phraſes the holy Ghoſt ſpeaketh to our weak capacity, after the manner of men. And whereas by Gods long deferring to puniſh the Amalekites for the wrong they had done unto Iſrael, Exod.17. he might ſeem to have forgotten it, he is now ſaid to remember, when as he taketh order to puniſh it, and avenge his people. Amalek was the ſon of Eliphaz, and the grand-child of Eſau, Gen.36.4,12. 1 Chron.1.35,36. Now as there was innate enmity in Eſau againſt Jacob, even in the womb, ſo it perpetually continued in Eſau's off-ſpring againſt the Iſraelites the poſterity of Jacob. Amaleks malice and cruelty broke out betimes. For when the Iſraelites were but newly come out of the Ægyptian bondage, and were yet in a low and afflicted condition in the wilderneſs, the Amalekites encountred them in their paſſage, they paſſing along peaceably, and giving unto them no cauſe of quarrel.

how he laid wait for him in the way when he came up from Egypt] The wrong and cruelty done unto the Iſraelites by the Amalekites, was of two ſorts, whereby they ſhewed their extreme malice againſt Gods people, without any cauſe by them offered: The one was, that in ſecret ambuſh they way-laid them, and as they paſſed by fell upon their rear, cutting off their old and impotent perſons, women and children, who for weakneſs were not able to march with the formoſt or middle ranks: The other, that they openly aſſaulted them, by giving them battel, that ſo they might hinder them from entring into Canaan, Deut.25.17,18. Exod.17.8. Numb.24.20.

V.3. Now go and ſmite Amalek] Not onely taking juſt revenge for the old wrongs, but alſo ever ſince they have continued in the ſame malicious hoſtility. For in Sauls dayes (it ſeemeth) they had fought againſt and ſlain many of Gods people, v.33.

and utterly deſtroy all that they have] This is ſpoken both generally and particularly, to take away from Saul all ſhew of excuſe, if he neglected to do all and every thing that God commanded.

ſlay both man and woman, infant and ſuckling, ox and ſheep] i.e. I have anathematized and devoted all to deſtruction, as I did Jericho in former times, Joſh.7. and therefore ſee thou ſpare nothing. In this caſe it had been no cruelty in Saul to execute that to the uttermoſt which he had in charge, ſeeing he had Gods abſolute command for it. Neither is it injuſtice in God to puniſh infants with death, even to the third and fourth generation, who are the children of thoſe that hate him; ſeeing death is but a temporal puniſhment, whereas the corruption of nature derived from their parents maketh them guilty of death eternal; nor yet to ſlaughter their cattel, ſeeing they are their maſters goods, and are to ſtand or fall with them, and being made for them and their uſe, are ſubject to vanity for their ſakes, Rom.8.20,22. Gen.3.17,18. This juſtice is here exerciſed for the manifeſtation of Gods glory, in making the Amalekites examples of his vengeance againſt them that deal cruelly with his people; and of his truth, hereby cauſing his word and oath to be fulfilled, Exod.17.14,16.

V.4. numbred them in Telaim] i.e. Muſtered them in the fields of Telaim, or the country adjoyning to Telaim, a City in the tribe of Judah, called alſo Telem, Joſh.15.24.

and ten thouſand men of Judah] Judah, though it were the greateſt tribe, ſent out the leaſt number in this expedition, becauſe their inheritance bordering upon their arch-enemies the Philiſtims, they were conſtrained to imploy the chief part of their ſtrength in defending their own coaſts againſt their inroads and incurſions. Now concerning the cauſe why they are numbred apart from the reſt of the tribes, ſee on ch.11.8.

V.5. And Saul came to a City of Amalek] i.e. Either the firſt that was in the march, as it is likely, becauſe the Kenites lived neer unto it, who inhabited upon the borders of Judah and Amalek; or the chief city or Metropolis of their Kingdom, where their Kings dwelled, as ſome think; but it doth not ſeem ſo probable to me that they ſhould have their Royal city on the very borders of their enemies.

and laid wait in the valley] i.e. Not onely to take advantage againſt them by ſome ſudden ſurprize, which was hard to do with ſuch a numerous army; though the word waiting may ſeem to imply it: but to make ſome ſtay there in the valley for a time, till he had given the Kenites, who dwelt in the hills in the way to Amalek, warning to avoid being involved in the common deſtruction; as they might eaſily do on the ſudden, ſeeing they lived in tents, which were ſoon removed, Judg. 5. 24.

V. 6. And Saul ſaid to the Kenites] Theſe were the nation of whom Jethro Moſes his father in law came, who is called a Kenite, Judg.1.16. They dwelt on the borders of Judah, neer Amalek. And of them deſcended the Rechabites mentioned Jer.35. See on Numb. 24. 21,22.

For ye ſhewed kindneſs to all the children of Iſrael when they came up out of Egypt] i. e. Jethro your progenitor, Moſes father in law, by his counſel & conduct in the wilderneſs, Exod. 18.9,10,19. Num. 10.29,31. Thus as God remembred the unkindneſs of the Amalekites long afore ſhewed to his people, to puniſh their poſterity for it: ſo he remembred the kindneſs of the Kenites to reward it in their poſterity, by preſerving them from ruine. To this end Saul willed them, becauſe they dwelled in rocks and mountainous places, Numb.24.21. and uppergrounds, in reference to the Amalekites, to go, depart, and get them down, uſing divers words to the ſame purpoſe, thereby intimating his earneſtneſs to have them do it with all ſpeed, ſeeing there was no hope of any ſafety, if they did not preſently abandon the company of that wicked nation, which God had devoted to utter deſtruction. And hereby is implyed, that they that would eſcape the puniſhments of the wicked, muſt ſeparate themſelves from their company and fellowſhip, 2 Cor.6.17. Rev.18.4. Iſa.52.11.

V. 7. from Havilah] A region of Arabia, Gen.2.11. See on Gen. 25. 18.

to Shur] The uttermoſt border of Arabia towards Egypt, Gen.25. 18. Exod.15.22.

V. 8. And he took Agag the King of the Amalekites alive] Agag it ſeemeth was the common name of the Kings of Amalek, Numb.24.7. as Pharaoh was of the Kings of Egypt, and Abimelech of the Philiſtims. See on Eſth.3.1. Now whereas Saul ſhould have ſlain Agag with the ſword by Gods command, he kept him alive, either out of pride, that at his coming home he might lead him in triumph; or out of fooliſh pity, looking upon him as a King, and with the eye of ſelf-love reflecting upon himſelf, and fearing that in time to come it might happen to be his own caſe; or out of covetouſneſs, (as ſome ſuppoſe) that he might diſcover unto him ſome hidden treaſure, Jer.41.8. or, being his priſoner, he might put him or his friends to pay ſome great ſumme for his ranſome. So Ahab ſpared Benhadad, 1 Kings 20.

and utterly deſtroyed all the people with the edge of the ſword] i. e. All that came out with Agag to fight againſt them, with all other which they met with or could come at, and all their Cities and Towns, with all the inhabitants, men, women, and children: Yet many of them might eſcape the common ſlaughter, either becauſe the army in their march could not find out all that were in every hamlet, village, wood and mountain, or becauſe many hid themſelves from the devouring ſword, or ſaved themſelves by flight. And that all the nation was not at this time deſtroyed and utterly rooted out, plainly appeareth, in that ſoon after, before the death of Saul, David is ſaid to have invaded the Amalekites, and brought away their ſpoyl, ch.27.8. and that afterward they in revenge ſacked and burned Ziklag, and carried away captive all Davids company which they found there, ch.30.1,2.

V. 9. But Saul and the people ſpared Agag] Not out of a merciful nature and diſpoſition, but out of pride, covetouſneſs, or ſelf-love; or at beſt, it was joyned with rebellion againſt God. And ſo he who here would ſeem ſo merciful as to ſpare thoſe whom God by an abſolute command had devoted to utter deſtruction, ſhewed himſelf afterwards ſo bloody and barbarouſly cruel, that he cauſed all Gods Prieſts, whom he ſhould have preſerved, to be ſlaughtered and butchered moſt unjuſtly and without cauſe, meerly out of his rebellious will, upon a falſe ſuſpicion, ch. 22.

and the beſt of the ſheep, and of the oxen, and of the fatlings] In an hypocritical manner pretending that herein they aimed at Gods glory, in reſerving the beſt for his ſervice by ſacrifice; but it ſeemeth they did it out of a covetous deſire to enrich themſelves with the ſpoyl, as the word flying upon them implyeth, v. 19. But howſoever, herein they greatly ſinned, in diſobeying Gods abſolute command, ſeeing obedience is better then ſacrifice, and rebellion as the ſin of witchcraft, v.22,23. And beſides, God having anathematized and devoted all to deſtruction, he would have eſteemed it a pleaſing ſacrifice, if they had thus offered them unto him; as in the caſe of Jericho, Joſh.6.17. So Jer.46.10. Iſa. 34.6. whereas the ſacrifices they intended, after their manner, were meer will-worſhip, and directly contrary to Gods command.

V.11. It repenteth me that I have ſet up Saul to be King] God cannot properly be ſaid to repent, ſeeing it would argue mutability in his Will, and a defect either in his Knowledge and Wiſdom, in that he did not at the firſt ſee what was beſt, or in his Power, in that ſeeing it, he was not able to effect it; and that his counſel is not abſolute in it ſelf, but dependeth upon mens courſe, and ſecondary cauſes. But he is ſaid to repent, in an humane phraſe, according to our capacity, when he doth as men do when they repent of their actions. He doth not change his counſel and purpoſe; but his manner of working, as if he repented of what he had done. He doth not change his mind; but the things, and his manner of adminiſtration, his preſence and counſel remaining immutable. So v. 29. Numb.23.19. The repentance of God is (as one ſpeaketh) an unchangeable courſe of things changeable, which he ſo decreed that they ſhould be changed. And thus God is here ſaid to repent for making Saul King, not that he changed his purpoſe (for he had decreed that the Kingdom ſhould not continue in his poſterity, or tribe, but in the tribe of Judah) but the change was in Saul, when he rebelled againſt Gods commandment; upon which God changed the manner of his adminiſtration, his decree in the mean time remaining unchangeable; namely, fore-ſeeing Sauls defection, he purpoſed to take the Kingdom from him, and to give it to David, who was of the tribe of Judah, according to Jacobs prophetical bleſſing, Gen.49 10. See on Gen.6.6.

And it grieved Samuel] Not becauſe Gods Will was fulfilled in Saul, by caſting him off from being King, but becauſe by his ſin he had pulled upon him this heavy doom of being rejected and depoſed.

and he cryed unto the Lord all night] i.e. Thinking that this temporal judgment threatned againſt Saul was not abſolute, but conditionall, if he repented not of his ſin, therefore he earneſtly prayed unto God for him, that turning unto him by repentance, he would not caſt him off from being King. But God, being otherwiſe determined, would not grant his ſuit, v.23,26,28. & ch.16.1.

V. 12. Saul came to Carmel] A Town belonging to Judah, lying in the way from Amalek, Joſh.15.55.

and behold, he ſet him up a place] Heb. an hand. i. e. as ſome think, a monument of triumph for his victory, like an hand, to ſignifie that by his hand and ſword he had conquered his enemies. Others think they pitched their tents in Carmel, ſtaying there a while to refreſh themſelves, and divide the ſpoil. But this agreeth not ſo well with the expreſſion here uſed, appropriating the action unto Saul, Behold, he ſet him up a place, ſeeing the other, of pitching tents for thoſe uſes, was common to him with the whole camp.

V. 13. And Saul ſaid unto him, Bleſſed be thou of the Lord] At the firſt meeting he fawningly ſaluteth Samuel; and (as is the manner of hypocrites) he expreſſeth himſelf in a glorious manner, with pious and religious words.

I have performed the commandment of the Lord] Here, like a proud hypocrite, he vain-gloriouſly boaſteth of his obedience to all Gods commands, but falſely, for by that which followeth it proved to be apparently untrue. So the proud Phariſee in the Goſpel, Luk.18.11.

V. 14. And Samuel ſaid, What meaneth then this bleating of the ſheep in mine ears, &c.] q. d. This convinceth thee of untruth and diſobedience, ſeeing the cattell ſtill live, bleat and lowe.

V. 15. They have brought them from the Amalekites] Though both he and they joined in this diſobedience, v. 9. yet Saul ſhuffleth it off from himſelf, and layeth the blame wholly upon the people, as hypocrites uſe to do; whereas true penitents being convinced of a ſin which is common to them with others, are ready to acknowledg the ſame, and to accuſe themſelves, that they may excuſe others; as we ſee in David, 2 Sam.24.17. But Saul here fearing leſt upon due examination he likewiſe might be found to have had an hand in the action, gildeth it over with a pretence of piety, that the beſt of the cattel were reſerved that they might offer them to God for ſacrifices, to teſtifie their thankfulneſs for the great victory he had given them.

to the Lord thy God] This he ſpeaketh to pleaſe and humour Samuel, ſeeing all was done for ſervice in whom he had intereſt in a ſpecial manner. q. d. We have kept this cattell alive, not for our own uſe, but to offer them in ſacrifice to the Lord thy God, whom thou loveſt and ſerveſt, and therefore thou canſt not but allow the means of his worſhip. See on Eccleſ.4.6.

the reſt we have utterly deſtroyed] This, if rightly underſtood, was in truth rather an aggravation of his ſin then an excuſe, in that he was content to obey God in deſtroying the refuſe cattell, which were of no worth, but as for the beſt and fatteſt, he reſerved them to be diſpoſed of according to his own pleaſure.

V. 16. And he ſaid unto him, Say on] He is willing to give him the hearing, hoping that he ſhould (having had ſuch a fair pretence for what he had done) by him have received ſome good tydings.

V. 17. When thou waſt little in thine own ſight] i. e. But of a mean condition, (as he confeſſed, ch.9.21.) God advanced thee to a Kingdom. And with this he upbraideth him, to aggravate his ſin, and to convince him of his great ingratitude, having received ſuch eminent favours from God.

V. 18. And the Lord ſent thee on a journey] i. e. A warlike expedition againſt Amalek.

Go and utterly deſtroy the ſinners, the Amalekites] i. e. Theſe tranſcendent ſinners, above others, in malice and wickedneſs againſt God and his people. So Gen.13.13. Matth.9.10. Joh.9.24,31.

V. 19. but didſt flie upon the ſpoyl] To wit, as an hungry hawk upon his prey, converting that to thine own uſe which God had devoted to deſtruction; like Achan, Joſh.7.

V. 20. And Saul ſaid unto Samuel, Yea, I have obeyed the voice of the Lord] Here again Saul diſcovereth his hypocriſie, inſtead of humble confeſſion of his ſin, juſtifying himſelf, and gracing his rebellion with the name of obedience.

and have brought Agag the King of Amalek] Whom, if he had obeyed the voice of the Lord, he ſhould have ſmitten and ſlain, v.3.

V. 21. But the people took of the ſpoyl] q. d. It was not I, but the people, unto whom I gave way for fear of mutiny, v.24. And therefore, if this were a fault, yet I am clear, ſeeing it was they, not I, that committed it. But it ſeemeth to me to have been no fault at all, ſeeing out of a good intention they have reſerved the chief of the things which ſhould have utterly been deſtroyed, namely, to ſacrifice them to the Lord thy God in Gilgal, in token of their thankfulneſs for their great victory over their enemies.

V. 22. Behold, to obey is better then ſacrifice] Of this, one giveth two good reaſons. I. Becauſe obedience preſerveth from ſinning, and ſacrifices were ordained to cleanſe from ſin, when committed; and it is much better to prevent a diſeaſe then to be cured of it. II. Becauſe God alwaies accepteth of obedience, and is well pleaſed with it; but rejecteth ſacrifices, as but a dead carkaſe, when obedience, which is their life and ſoul, is ſeparated from them; as a bare ſhadow, and formal and fruitleſs ceremony, divided from it. So Jer.7.22. Iſa.1.13. & 66.3. Pſal.50.8,13. Prov.15.8. Eccleſ.5.1. Hoſ.6.6. Matth.12.7. In which places God doth not ſimply reject ſacrifices, which he himſelf had commanded; but comparatively, in reſpect of moral obedience. He doth not chiefly require and delight in them, but in a leſs and lower degree; and that in the Scripture phraſe is ſaid not to be done which is not done chiefly and principally. So Paul ſaith he was not ſent to baptize, but to preach the Goſpel, 1 Cor. 1. 17. i.e. not chiefly to baptize, but to preach: For all the Apoſtles were ſent to do both, Matth.28.19. and himſelf baptized, as he ſpeaketh in the ſame place.

V. 23. For rebellion is as the ſin of witchcraft, and ſtubbornneſs is as iniquity and idolatry] Rebellion and ſtubbornneſs is when men wilfully tranſgreſſe Gods known commandments, and commit a ſin the rather becauſe God hath forbidden it. Neither is the quantity of the ſin ſo much to be reſpected as the quality, nor the materiality as the formality of it, to intitle it to the name of rebellion; ſeeing the leaſt ſin is rebellion which is committed with a ſtubborn heart, againſt Gods revealed and expreſſe commands. And this was Sauls cauſe here. For had not God plainly and ſtrictly required him to deſtroy all the Amalekites, with all their cattel and ſubſtance, it had been at his own choice to do with them what he pleaſed; but having received ſo expreſs a charge, his wilful and ſtubborn diſobedience was plain rebellion. And this Samuel ſaith was as witchcraft or divination, when as men leave God and ſeek to divels, and as iniquity, whereby generally is meant all ſin, and a courſe of wickedneſs, Gen.15.16. Rom.4.7. and idolatry, when men forſake God and ſerve idols. For as Witches and Diviners leave Gods Word, and go to the Devil for counſel and direction: ſo Rebels reſiſt Gods known will, and obey the Devil in their works: and as Idolaters ſerve and ſacrifice unto their idols, and neglect Gods true worſhip: ſo ſtubborn and obſtinate ſinners, deſpiſing Gods commands, ſerve their own luſts, and ſacrifice to their own nets, Hab.1.16. whereby they rob God of his glory, and prefer before him contemptible creatures, as witches and idolaters uſe to do. See on Joſh.22.19.

V. 24. And Saul ſaid unto Samuel, I have ſinned] This confeſſion was falſe and hypocritical, like that Exod.9.27. not ariſing from a true repentant heart, or from love of God, or hatred of ſin, but from ſelf-love, fear of puniſhment, and ſuch baſe and by-ends. Saul here uſeth the very ſame words that David did, 2 Sam.12.13. yet there was great difference between their confeſſions: For David confeſſed readily, but Saul is very hardly drawn to it, and a long time ſhuffles it off with frivolous excuſes. The one, like a ſound penitent, taketh the whole guilt and blame upon himſelf; the other, when ſo convinced that he could no longer ſhift it wholly off, like an hypocrite, will not (even in his confeſſion) bear the burden alone, but layeth it chiefly upon the people, who had compelled him to do what he would not have done, if he had been at his free choice; though herein he muſt needs confeſſe he had faulted and failed, in that he had obeyed their voice rather then Gods.

V. 25. Now therefore, I pray thee, pardon my ſin] i.e. Pray for me to God that he will pardon it, and be reconciled unto me.

and turn again with me, that I may worſhip the Lord] i.e. That we may together praiſe him for our victory, and offer unto him peace-offerings and gratulatory ſacrifices.

V. 26. And Samuel ſaid unto Saul, I will not return with thee] This he ſaith to ſhew his indignation, and that he would have no communion and converſation with him that had ſhewed himſelf ſuch a rebell in rejecting the Lord, leſt he ſhould by accompanying him ſeem to allow and countenance him in his rebellion. Neither did he mean to do otherwiſe then he ſaid, if Saul did not uſe importunity to retain him in his company. So Luk.24.28,29.

V. 27. And as Samuel turned about to go away, he laid hold on the skirt of his mantle, and it rent] Saul was extremely loath that Samuel ſhould depart from him, becauſe the people would have taken notice of the breach between them, and conſequently, that he was deeply in Gods diſpleaſure for ſome ſin; and that would have impaired his credit, and weakned his government; and therefore uſing ſome force to hold him, he renteth his mantle.

V. 28. The Lord hath rent the Kingdome of Iſrael from thee this day] He taketh occaſion by this ſudden accident, as a ſad omen and ſign ſent of God, to ratifie the ſentence of his depoſition. For though he was not actually depoſed to the day of his death, yet he was deprived of the right of his Regency by Gods doom, and David choſe and anointed King in his ſtead. And by the renting of the mantle (as ſome think) was intimated and fore-ſhewed Sauls violent death, whereby he was rent from his Kingdom, and his Kingdom from him. See 1 Kings 11.30.

And hath given it to a neighbour of thine that is better then thou] i.e. to David: Who was not yet known either to Saul or Samuel himſelf. He is ſaid to be better then Saul, both becauſe of Gods free grace he was accepted and preferred before him, and alſo in reſpect of the uprightneſs of his heart, and his ſincere obedience to Gods will; in both which Saul failed and came much ſhort of him.

V. 29. And alſo the ſtrength of Iſrael] Some read it, the Eternity of Iſrael, and chooſe rather ſo to take it in this place, becauſe (as they conceive) Gods unalterable decree is better ſet forth by the attribute of his Eternity then of his Power. Others think this reading of ſtrength may as well ſtand, ſeeing the word moſt properly ſignifieth ſtrength, and in this ſenſe may fit the occaſion of Samuels uſing it, namely, That Gods decree of depoſing Saul ſhould ſurely ſtand. For though he ſeemed to be firmly ſetled in the Kingdom, and had great ſtrength to maintain his title and intereſt againſt all oppoſers, yet God, who is omnipotent, was able to dethrone and caſt him out. And though Saul, who was the Captain and King of Iſrael, appointed by God to ſave his people, ch.9.16. were taken away, yet the Kingdom and people of God ſhould not miſcarry with him, or fare the worſe, ſeeing the Strength of Iſrael ſtill remained to preſerve and protect them againſt all their enemies, and alſo to exalt and eſtabliſh him whom he had deſigned ſhould ſit upon the throne.

will not lye, nor repent] See v.11. & Gen.6.6.

V. 30. Then he ſaid, I have ſinned: yet honour me now, I pray thee, before the elders of my people] Here with the confeſſion of his ſin he reneweth and preſſeth his ſuit, not on the ſame ground, that he might be pardoned, but that he might be honoured in the ſight of the people; q.d. Though the ſentence of my depoſing be ſo firmly decreed that it cannot be revoked, yet for the preſent uphold my credit with the people by gracing me with thy company.

V. 31. So Samuel turned again after Saul] Being thus importuned he yeeldeth to his requeſt, partly to ſhew his allegeance to his King, who though rejected by Gods ſentence, was not yet actually depoſed and dethroned, partly to uphold the Government for the preſent, and preſerve it from diſreſpect and contempt of the people, and partly to execute juſtice and judgment upon Agag, which Saul had neglected.

V. 32. Agag came unto him delicately] i.e. Retaining ſtill the countenance and carriage, the garb and gate of a King, although in his preſent condition he was become a priſoner.

And Agag ſaid] i.e. thought with himſelf, or ſpake to others about him.

Surely the bitterneſs of death is paſt] This he ſaid, either becauſe his onely care was to retain the Majeſty of a King in that laſt tragical act of death, having prepared himſelf and armed his reſolution againſt the fear of it, which is the greateſt part of deaths bitterneſs; or elſe he perſwaded himſelf he had now no cauſe to fear it, ſeeing having eſcaped the fury of a martial King in the battel and heat of war, he could now be in no danger of being ſlain by a feeble old Prophet, in cold blood, being their priſoner.

V. 33. And Samuel ſaid, As thy ſword hath made women childleſs, ſo ſhall thy mother be childleſs] Here is implyed, that not onely Agags progenitors had ſlain many of Gods people in former times, Exod.17.11. Numb.14.45. but that he alſo himſelf in his wars with them had ſlain many with the ſword; and therefore Samuel would deal with him by the juſt law of requital, grounded on the law of Nature, Gen.9.6. Matth.26.52. and repay him with the ſame meaſure which he had meted unto others, Matth.7.1,2. See Judg:1.7.

And Samuel hewed Agag in pieces before the Lord in Gilgal] i.e. Either by appointing executioners to do it, or (as it is more probable) he did it with his own hands; as Elias ſlew Baals Prieſts, 1 Kings 18.40. and the two Captains with their companies, 2 Kings 1.10,12. and Phinehas, Zimri and Coſbi, Numb.25.7. But if ſo, then no doubt it was by a ſpecial and extraordinary inſtinct and motion of Gods Spirit, before whom he is ſaid to have acted it. And therefore this heroicall act ought not to be drawn into precedent by ſuch as are of the like profeſſion. For a Biſhop muſt be no ſtriker, 1.Tim.3.3. And the Councels and Canons of the Church have alwayes interdicted the uſe of the ſword unto men conſecrated to Gods ſpiritual ſervice, ſaving in the lawful defence of themſelves and their own lives. See on 1 Sam.7.15.

V. 35. And Samuel came no more to ſee Saul] Though Saul went to Ramah upon occaſion of Davids being there, ch.19.22. and ſo accidentally ſaw Samuel, and Samuel him, yet Samuel never purpoſely went to ſee him, or at leaſt not, as formerly, to direct and aſſiſt him in the affairs of the Kingdom.

untill the day of his death] Some think theſe words words have reference to that apparition ch.28.19. Eccl.46.20. but they are rather to be underſtood as the like phraſe is elſewhere. See on 2 Sam.6.23.

neverthleſs Samuel mourned for Saul] Not chiefly becauſe God had juſtly rejected him, and ſentenced him to be depoſed, but becauſe by his ſin he had brought this heavy judgment upon him, and ſtill continued in it without repentance, thereby hazarding the loſſe of a Kingdom heavenly and eternal.

And the Lord repented that he had made Saul King] See on v.11.

CHAP. XVI.

Verſ. 1. How long wilt thou mourn for Saul] See on ch.15.35. God was not diſpleaſed with Samuels mourning either for Sauls ſin and impenitency, whereby he had brought his judgements upon him, or ſimply for his calamitous condition, in reſpect of his being rejected by God, and ſentenced to loſe the Kingdom; for it is lawful to bewayl the miſeries of others, into which they have plunged themſelves by their ſins: but becauſe he continued ſo long in his mourning, after

God had evidenced it unto him, that the decree of his rejection was abſolute, and therefore could not with all his mourning be revoked.

I will ſend thee to Jeſſe the Bethlehemite] Who was the ſon of Obed, and the grand-child of Boaz and Ruth, of the tribe of Judah, Ruth.4. 21, 22.

for I have provided me a King among his ſons] i. e. I have out of my free grace, and in favour to my people, made choice of a King to rule over them; but not ſuch an one as *S*aul, whom I gave them in my anger, being preſſed thereunto by their ſinful importunity, who in that reſpect might be ſaid to be a King of their chooſing rather then of mine.

V. 2. And Samuel ſaid, How can I go? If Saul hear it, he will kill me] Though *S*amuel here might diſcover ſome infirmity and humane frailty, in making ſome doubt of his ſafety in executing Gods command, having had ſo much experience of his goodneſs, power and providence watching over him; (And thus even the beſt men naturally fear death, as we ſee in Abraham, Iſaac, Moſes and Ezekiah) yet his ſpeech proceeded not out of diffidence and reluctancy to Gods revealed will, but was rather an expreſſion of his deſire to be directed by God how he might do it with moſt ſafety, like that of the bleſſed Virgin, Luke 1.34. How ſhall this be, ſeeing I know not a man?

And the Lord ſaid, take an heifer with thee, and ſay I am come to ſacrifice to the Lord] i. e. peace-offerings, or a ſacrifice of thankſgiving after which followed a feaſt made out of the remainders of the offerings. See ch.9.12. *S*uch ſacrifices it was lawful to offer upon an altar erected in another place beſides the Tabernacle, before the building of the Temple; eſpecially at this time, when the Tabernacle and Ark were ſeparated, and when the action was to be performed by an holy Prophet. But above all, it was lawful for *S*amuel to do it, having Gods ſpecial command for it, which is above all laws. Now whereas he biddeth him ſay, I am come to ſacrifice unto the Lord, though the chief cauſe of his coming was to anoint David King, this was no untruth, (for God, who is truth it ſelf, cannot command a lye) but onely a prudent concealing of ſome part of the truth which was not fit to be diſcovered. For as he is a fool that believeth all things, Prov.14.15. ſo he is no leſs that ſpeaketh all he knoweth. *S*o Jeremiah being queſtioned what ſpeech had paſſed between him and the King, telleth the truth in part, but concealeth the main buſineſs, Jer.38.27.

V. 3. And call Jeſſe to the ſacrifice] i. e. the Feaſt made of the remainders of the ſacrifice and peace-offerings. The ſacrifice uſually was offered in ſome high and publick place ſet apart for that ſervice, where none were to be preſent but Prieſts, Levites, Miniſters of the tabernacle; but it is probable that the Feaſt after it was held at the houſe of Jeſſe.

V. 4. And the Elders of the town trembled at his coming] Becauſe it was not uſual for Samuel, ſo great a Prophet, to come unexpectedly to ſo ſmall a city, eſpecially now in his old age, when he went little abroad, therefore they feared leſt ſome heinous crime committed among them had drawn him thither to deliver ſome ſad meſſage of Gods heavy judgments; or elſe that coming ſo ſuddenly, privately & without attendance, he was fled thither to avoyd Sauls fury, incenſed againſt him by his ſharp reproofs and denunciations of Gods judgements, and therefore if they received, and either concealed or protected him, they ſhould hereby make themſelves liable to Sauls rage and revenge.

V. 5. ſanctifie your ſelves] To wit, by legal purifications, as waſhing of themſelves and their clothes, and abſtaining from their wives, Exod.19.10. And anſwerable to theſe legal cleanſings, inward and ſpiritual ſanctification and devotion was required; but eſpecially faith in Chriſt, whoſe blood purifieth from all ſinful defilements, of which theſe legal ceremonies were types and ſhadows; and repentance for their ſins, bathing themſelves in tears of unfeigned ſorrow. *S*ee Joſh.3.5.

And he ſanctified Jeſſe and his ſons] i. e. He commanded them to prepare and ſanctifie themſelves, that they might be fit gueſts to come to this holy Feaſt, ſeeing it was principally provided for their ſakes. Whereby it appeareth that this was no common Feaſt unto which they were invited, as ſome have conceived, but an holy Feaſt, which followed the gratulatory ſacrifice. Neither could Samuel indeed under any other pretence have gone thither, and taken an heifer with him.

V. 6. And it came to paſſe] The Author uſeth great brevity, reſpecting onely the main buſineſs, and omitting many preceding circumſtances, which yet neceſſarily muſt be underſtood; as firſt the offering of the ſacrifice, then the meeting of the feaſt, the acquainting of Jeſſe with Gods purpoſe and will to have one of his ſons anointed King over Iſrael, (which was done, it is moſt likely, in ſome private place, before they ſate down to the feaſt) and the with-drawing of Jeſſe and his ſons into ſome room from the reſt of the gueſts, that the matter might not be commonly known, and come to Sauls ear.

and ſaid] Namely, to himſelf; or, thought in his own heart.

Surely, the Lords anointed is before him] Becauſe Eliab was the eldeſt ſon, and a goodly perſon, both in reſpect of his beautiful countenance and tall ſtature, fit ornaments to commend and grace a King in the ſight of his people, *S*amuel reſolveth that this was the man whom God would chooſe; yet not by the inward motion of Gods *S*pirit, as a Prophet, but onely out of his own opinion; unto which he did the rather incline, not onely becauſe he was taken with his beauty and countenance, but becauſe Saul was ſuch an one, whom by Gods appointment he had formerly anointed. See on 2 Sam.7.3.

V. 9. Then Jeſſe made Shammah to paſs by] Who is alſo called Shimeah, 2 Sam.13.3. and Shimma, 1 Chron.2.13.

V. 10. Jeſſe made ſeven of his ſons to paſs before Samuel] i. e. four more beſides thoſe three that paſſed by firſt. By which it plainly appeareth that Jeſſe had eight ſons in all: and ſo likewiſe, ch.17.12. But 1 Chron.2.13. it is ſaid that he had ſeven, which are alſo there named, becauſe it may be that one of the eight was dead, not having any iſſue when that Book was written: and there are named in the genealogie only that were either then alive, or had ſome iſſue deſcending from them.

V. 11. And Samuel ſaid unto Jeſſe, Are here all thy children?] *S*amuel ſuppoſing that, according to his appoinment, Jeſſe had brought all his ſons and ſeeing that God had refuſed them all, was at a ſtand, and therefore maketh a more curious inquiry, if he had no more. And it came to paſs by a ſpecial providence that David ſhould not be ſent for at the firſt to come in with the reſt, that by Gods refuſing the other it might more clearly appear that he had choſen him.

And he ſaid, There remaineth yet the youngeſt, and behold he keepeth the ſheep] He implyeth, that he had not brought him, as not thinking him conſiderable in this election, both in reſpect of his youth, and the meanneſs of his imployment. For whereas his elder brethren were men of ſome note, and the Kings ſervants, following the wars, he poor boy was imployed to keep his fathers ſheep, and to run on his errands, and to wait on his brethren, when he was pleaſed to appoint him, ch. 17.17. 1 Chron.17.17. Herein David was a type of Chriſt, who when he was moſt deſpiſed and rejected of men, was moſt eſteemed in the eyes of God.

we will not ſit down till he come hither] This he ſpake out of the honour and reſpect which he bore him, ſeeing he was the chief gueſt, for whoſe ſake the feaſt was provided.

V. 12. Now he was ruddy] Of a freſh complexion, in the due mixture of white and red. Which argued that he was of a lively diſpoſition, and full of ſpirit. See Gen.39.6.

And the Lord ſaid, Ariſe, anoint him, for this is he] It was not Gods purpoſe that David ſhould ſoon after Sauls rejection come to the Crown, but that Saul ſhould ſtill reign divers years, (ſeven at leaſt, as ſome think) even to the day of his death; and yet he was pleaſed that David ſhould preſently be anointed. Becauſe David was to be throughly humbled by many trials and tentations, afflictions and dangers, before he was to be exalted to the Crown and Scepter, there was great need that this ſeal of anointing ſhould be added to God promiſe, for the ſtrengthening his faith in all his doubts and difficulties. This was alſo done for the comfort of Samuel, and other of the faithful which came to the knowledg of it, and to aſſure them that, though God had rejected Saul, yet he would ſtill take care of his people; and when he was gone, would give them a King that ſhould fight their battels, and ſave them out of the hands of all their enemies.

V. 13. Then Samuel took the horn of oyl, and anointed him in the midſt of his brethren] The relation of this action is paſſed over with as great brevity as the other, v.6. with omiſſion of divers circumſtances; which is the cauſe of ſome doubts and difficulties. For it is not ſaid, when, or where, he anointed him. Nor is it cleer by the text, whether he did it ſecretly and privately, none knowing of it but onely Jeſſe, David and himſelf, or whether it was done before many witneſſes. Therefore there is much diverſity of opinions among Expoſitors. Some think he was anointed openly before all the gueſts, to the end there might be many witneſſes of it: becauſe Samuel dyed before a way was made for David, to be elected & crowned, by *S*auls death. But this is not probable, ſeeing Samuel uſed much ſecrecie in the action, that it might not come *S*auls knowledg, leſt he ſhould kill him; as it would ſoon have done, if it had been done in the preſence of many. And we ſee alſo, that afterwards David was much loved and eſteemed by Saul, verſ. 21: whereas had he known that he was anointed King in his room, he would have mortally hated him; ſeeing he did it afterwards upon a bare jealouſie and ſuſpicion of it, conceived upon the hearing the women ſing his praiſes, ch. 18.8. Others think he was anointed King in the preſence of all his brethren. But neither can this ſtand, for the ſame reaſon; ſeeing it was not likely it would have been concealed, if they had all known it, in regard of that envy it would have cauſed, when they ſaw themſelves refuſed, and he that was youngeſt choſen to be King over them; as we ſee in the example of Joſephs brethren, Gen.37.8,11. And further, it is not probable, if they had ſeen him anointed King by Samuel the Lords Prophet, that Eliab afterwards would have inſulted over him with ſuch pride, arrogance and cauſeleſs choler as he did, ch.17.28. Others ſuppoſe he was anointed before them, yet not as a King, but as a Prophet, or for ſome other ſpecial end, that being endued with a prophetical Spirit he might compoſe Pſalms and Hymnes to the praiſe of God. But this had been little to the purpoſe of having them therefore preſent that they might be witneſſes after Samuels death that they had formerly ſeen him anoint him King, but would rather have made againſt it, ſeeing they could not witneſſe that, of which they had taken no cognizance; but rather, that he had not anointed him King, but Prophet onely. Finally it cannot be imagined that, when *S*amuel anointed him, he made a dumb ſhew, pouring the oyl out of the horn upon him, and ſaying nothing; but that with this ceremony he uſed ſome words to explain his meaning, namely, that he had anointed him to be King over Iſrael. And this is implyed in the ſpeech of the tribes that came unto Hebron to anoint David their King, 2 Sam. 5. 2. And the Lord ſaid to thee, (namely, by *S*amuel his prophet, when he anointed thee) Thou ſhalt feed my people Iſrael, and thou ſhalt be a Captain over Iſrael. This no doubt Samuel ſpake David and his Father, but not before his brethren, upon the former reaſons. Now the onely conſiderable objection againſt what I have ſaid, is this, That the Author of this book ſaith, that he anointed him in the midſt of his brethren. But this proveth not that his brethren ſtood by and ſaw it done, ſeeing it may be otherwiſe underſtood, namely, that amongſt all Jeſſes ſons Samuel by Gods appointment anointed David; or, that he took him from among all the reſt of his brethren, and anointed him King. Thus this phraſe is uſed, Deut. 18, 15. The Lord thy God will raiſe up unto thee a Prophet from the midſt of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me. and Exod. 23. 25. I will take ſickneſs away from the midſt of thee, i.e. from among you. See Exod. 33. 5.

And the Spirit of the Lord came upon David] i. e. not onely the ſpirit of wiſdome, courage, ſtrength and fortitude, whereby he was enabled ſoon after to encounter the Lyon and the Bear, but alſo all other heroical gifts fit for a King, and it may be the gift of prophecy and poeſie, wherein he excelled; and with them, all ſanctifying graces fit for a good King; with which though he were formerly endued, yet now much more, and in an extraordinary manner and meaſure, when he was thus anointed. And of theſe this unction was a ſign. See Judg. 13. 25. Acts 13. 22.

V. 14. But the ſpirit of the Lord departed from Saul] i. e. Thoſe kingly and heroical gifts of wiſdome and fortitude, whereby God by his *S*pirit had fitted and qualified him when he called him to be King, were taken from him, ch. 10. 6, 9.

and an evil ſpirit from the Lord troubled him] Or, terrified him. i. e. Sathan, who is ſaid to be an evil ſpirit from God, becauſe he was ſent from God to puniſh Saul for his ſins, and to vex and torment him by fits both in his mind and body, like a man poſſeſſed and given up into his power. This evil ſpirit taking advantage of his extreme melancholy and diſcontent for the loſs of Gods favour, and with it, of his Kingdome, filled him with frights and fears ariſing from a guilty conſcience, and with diſquietneſs of mind and grief of heart, which ſo diſtempered and diſtracted him that he fell into fits of phrenſie, whereby he was ſo tranſported and hurried that he became outragious, and ready to kill and deſtroy all that came in his way, friends as well as foes; with which diſtempers of mind his body likewiſe was ſo affected and afflicted that ſometimes he fell into trances and extaſies, ch. 28. 20.

V. 15. troubleth thee] i. e. vexeth and diſquieteth thee.

V. 16. which are before thee] i. e. attend and wait upon thee, and are at thy command, to do thee ſervice.

and it ſhall come to paſs, when the evil ſpirit God is upon thee, that he ſhall play with his hand] Not that there was any efficacy in muſick and the melody of an harp to drive away Devils; for ſpirits are not wrought upon by corporal means: But becauſe it diſpoſed and fitted Saul for eaſe, by raiſing up his heart and ſpirit out of melancholy dumps, tempering his rage, and moderating his griefs and diſcontents, by which the Devil tooke advantage to drive him into frenzie fits and furies: For which muſick is thought to be very efficacious. And therefore Eliſha finding his ſpirit depreſſed by the preſence of an idolatrous King and the diſtreſs in which Gods people were deeply plunged, calleth for a Muſician to cheer & revive his ſinking heart, that he might be the better fitted for prophecy, 2 Kings 3. 15. And this effect *S*aul found of it, in this natural way. But God by his power and providence ordered this, not ſo much for Sauls eaſe, as that it might be a means to bring David to the Court, and into Sauls acquaintance and favour, for the furthering of that end which he intended, the fitting of him for the Kingdom.

and thou ſhalt be well] i. e. thy ſpirit ſhall be compoſed, and thy paſſions and diſtempers qualified and moderated.

V. 18. Behold I have ſeen a ſon of Jeſſe——that is cunning in playing, and a mighty valiant man, and a man of War] Hence Junius hath probably gathered, comparing it with ſome paſſages in the Chapter following, that there is an hyſteroſis or tranſpoſition in the ſtory, and that David had ſlain Goliath before he now came to Saul, and that this commendation, that he was a mighty valiant man, and a man of war, and the Lord was with him, that is, helped and aſſiſted him in all his deſigns, was grounded upon that experience which they then had of him. But though I conceive this opinion to be ſo weighty and probable that it ſhould not be ſlighted and rejected, yet this commendation doth not clearly evince it, ſeeing Davids ſtrength, valour and good ſucceſs in his enterprizes might be taken notice of by his killing of the Bear, and Lion, and other famous and valorous exploits which he atchieved ſoon after that he was anointed, when the Spirit of God came upon him, v. 13. See on ch. 17. 1.

V. 12. Send me David thy ſon] Saul finding that he might have ſome good uſe of Davids ſervice, ſendeth for him, uſing that kingly power and prerogative of which *S*amuel had fore-warned the people, ch. 8. 11.

which is with the ſheep] Here Saul cloſely coucheth a motive to make Jeſſe willing to condeſcend to his motion, ſeeing it was for his ſons great preferment to be taken from his mean imployment of keeping ſheep, and retained as a Courtier to ſerve the King neer unto his perſon. Here, by the way, it appeareth that David, though choſen by God, and anointed King, yet in humility of ſpirit returned to his old imployment of keeping his fathers ſheep, waiting upon God till it ſhould be his pleaſure to provide and give the means of raiſing him to his Royal dignity.

V. 20. And Jeſſe took an aſs laden with bread, and a bottle of wine, and a kid, and ſent them by David his ſon unto Saul] This preſent he ſent to teſtifie his love, homage and allegeance; and therefore, though it were but of ſmall worth in it ſelf, yet it could not but be well accepted, being ſent with ſuch due reſpects. For though great perſonages (as one ſaith) are not pleaſed with ſmall gifts, out of their covetouſneſs; yet out of ambition they delight in them, ſeeing they are ſigns that their inferiours do reſpect and honour them. *S*uch a preſent Jacob ſent to Joſeph, under that notion of his being Lord over all Egypt, that his ſons might be accepted of him with more favour, Gen. 43. 11. See on ch. 10. 27.

V. 21. And David came to Saul, and ſtood before him] i. e. waited upon him, being alwaies ready to do him ſervice., Gen. 41. 46. Deut. 1. 38 & 10. 8.

and he loved him greatly, and he became his armour-bearer] This great love of *S*aul towards David, evidenced by this preferment, was ſoon afterwards turned into mortal hatred, and proved to be but as a warm ſun-ſhine before a fearful ſtorm, leaving an example to future ages of that which the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh, That it is better to truſt in the Lord then to put confidence in Princes, Pſal. 118. 9. & 146. 3.

V. 22. And Saul ſent to Jeſſe, ſaying, Let David, I pray thee, ſtand before me] i. e. continue ſtill in my ſervice. For though he had power, as a King, to command it, yet he choſe it rather to make it his requeſt, that he might enjoy him with his love and liking.

V. 23. So Saul was refreſhed, and was well, and the evil ſpirit departed from him] He was for the time freed from his fits of rage and melancholy paſſions, God working with Davids muſick, and giving Saul eaſe thereby, that he might make way for his advancement to the Kingdom. Yet it was no perfect cure, but onely an intermiſſion of his fits, becauſe he uſed not the right means, faith and repentance, faſting and prayer, but onely muſick, to drive away melancholy.

CHAP. XVII.

Verſ. 1. NOw] Some think that this whole Chapter, which is a relation of things done before David came to court, is a tranſpoſition of the ſtory, and that it is added for the confirming of thoſe words whereby one of the ſervants of *S*aul commended David unto him, ch. 16. 18. Unto which opinion they think themſelves neceſſitated, for the reconciling of divers paſſages in both Chapters, eſpecially v. 55, 58, and ch. 16. 21.

the Philiſtims gathered together their armies to battel] Having gotten new ſtrength, and recruited their army, ſince that great defeat and ſlaughter cauſed by Jonathan and thoſe that followed him, ch. 14. they reſolve to make a new attempt upon the Iſraelites; and to this end gather together all their forces, preparing for another battel; that ſo they might put off the ſhame and diſhonour which their whole nation had contracted by having their puiſſant army, which they thought invincible in reſpect of their huge multitude and warlike preparations, diſgracefully foiled by a ſmall number of the Iſraelites. And unto this new attempt it is probable they might be encouraged by hearing that Saul, the Iſraelites King and Captain, was ſo much diſtracted and diſtempered with melancholy paſſions that he was thereby diſabled to perform the duties of a prudent and valiant General.

V. 3. And the Philiſtims ſtood on a mountain on the one ſide, and Iſrael ſtood on a mountain on the other ſide] Having had long and great experience of eithers valour and proweſs in war, they were not haſty in attempting one another with any diſadvantage; but both of them kept on the mountains, on either ſide, one againſt another, having a valley between them; expecting who ſhould adventure to give the firſt onſet againſt their enemy that had the advantage of the higher ground. Only they ſent from the body of their army ſome parties to skirmiſh one with another, v. 20. like Abner and Joab at the pool of Gibeon, 2 *S*am. 2. 13.

V. 4. And there went out a champion out of the camp of the Philiſtims] Heb. a man between two. Or, a duelliſt. *S*o called either becauſe he put himſelf between the two camps, or offered a duel between two, that is, himſelf and another.

named Goliath, of Gath] A mighty and monſtrous Giant, of the race of the Rephaims or Anakims, who being beaten out of Hebron by Joſhua, Joſh. 11. 22. placed themſelves in the country of the Philiſtims, about Gath, Gaza, and Aſhdod.

whoſe height was ſix cubits] i. e. three yards, counting according to the common cubit.

and a ſpan] i. e. three hands bredth, or twelve inches. So Goliath was higher then any ordinarie man by a yard and a foot.

V. 5. And he had a helmet of braſs upon his head, and he was armed with a coat of mail] He had arms ſutable to his huge and vaſte ſtature, namely, an helmet of braſs, or, as Junius hath it, of ſteel, ſeing that is more fit for ſuch an uſe, and the word may ſignifie any metal; and a coat of mail, made after the ſimilitude of fiſh-ſkales, one piece lying over another.

and the weight of the coat was five thouſand ſhekels of braſſe] Counting a ſhekel at half an ounce, (which was the weight of the common ſhekel) Goliaths coat weighed two thouſand and five hundred ounces, i. e. one hundred fifty ſix pounds and four ounces. Others compute it to two hundred and eight pounds and four ounces, aſſigning to every pound twelve ounces. Unto which if we add the weight of his greaves of braſs on his legs, of his target of braſs between his ſhoulders, of the ſtaff of his ſpear like a weavers beam, and of his ſpears head, all together amounted to more then two hundred pounds according to the loweſt eſtimate; a burden heavy enough for any ordinary man to bear; yet ſo ſtrong was this mighty giant, that he was able to walk and fight with ſuch arms upon him. And this is brought to ſhew the vanity of all humane ſtrength, when it is at the higheſt, and Gods almighty power, who is able to quell it by ſuch weak means.

V. 6. a target of braſs between his ſhoulders] Others chooſe rather to read, a ſhort ſpear, or truncheon, of braſs, which he carried on his ſhoulder; the word it ſelf being ſo taken Joſh.8.18. Job 41.29. Jer.6.23. becauſe one bearing a ſhield is ſaid to have gone before him, v.7. For though there be alſo mention made of another ſpear, yet (as they think) theſe two were of divers kinds; one a braſs truncheon born on his ſhoulder, the other, a long ſpear which he had in his hand, both of them offenſive and not defenſive weapons. So David uſeth the word, v.45.

V. 7. ſix hundred ſhekels of iron] i. e. Five and twenty pound, computing twelve ounces to a pound.

V. 8. Why are ye come out to ſet your battel in array?] i. e. If you think your ſelves two weak for us, and dare not try out the quarrel between us in a battel, to what purpoſe do you order your army as though ye would fight? But if for all your brave ſhew ye dare not now do it when it is come to the point, I will offer another way to put an end to the controverſie of Sovereignty, about which we contend, which will bring the matter to a quicker trial, and with much leſſe effuſion of blood, and that is a duel or ſingle combat. Let that party which prevaileth by his champion, and getteth the victory, have the dominion; and the other that is vanquiſhed, be under rule and ſubjection.

am not I a Philiſtim] i.e. Choſen by the Philiſtims for their Champion? Or, am not I the Philiſtim, who am famous for my valour and warlike exploits?

and you ſervants to Saul] He doth not ſay in a right antitheſis, and you Iſraelites, but, ſervants to Saul, by way of contempt, who having ſubjected themſelves to his government, were as ſervants at his command.

chooſe you a man for you] i. e. A Champion, to try your cauſe and title in a ſingle combat.

V. 10. I defie the armies of Iſrael] i. e. By daring them to fight with me I expoſe them to ſcorn and contempt, if not a man in their whole army can be found that dare anſwer my challenge. Thus he began to inſult when he ſaw none durſt come out to fight with him. So ver.25.26.

V. 11. When Saul and all Iſrael heard thoſe words of the Philiſtine, they were diſmayed and greatly afraid] Here they diſcovered both their infidelity, in not believing Gods promiſes, that, if they truſted in him and walked in his wayes, one of them ſhould chaſe a thouſand of their enemies, and alſo their forgetfulneſs of his omnipotent power, who by a word of his mouth was able to quell and cruſh this proud inſulting giant, yea, and that after they had had ſo late experience of it in Jonathan and his armour-bearer, whom God ſo endued with courage and ſtrength that they alone routed the whole army of the Philiſtims; and yet now, as if all were forgotten, none of the whole camp, no not Jonathan himſelf, durſt anſwer this Philiſtines challenge. Of which we can give no other reaſon, but that confidence and courage being Gods free gifts, which he beſtoweth on whom, and when he will, he had now withdrawn them both from Jonathan and all the reſt, and beſtowed them upon David, that he anſwering the challenge and obtaining the victory, and ſo becoming famous and in high eſteem both with Prince and people, there might thereby a way be made for the fulfilling of Gods purpoſe and promiſe of advancing him to the Crown and Kingdom.

V. 12. Now David was the ſon of that Ephrathite of Bethlehem-Judah, whoſe name was Ieſſe] Jeſſe is called an Ephrathite, not becauſe he was of the tribe of Ephraim, but becauſe he was born at Bethlehem-Judah, which city, and the country adjoyning to it, was formerly called Ephrath, Gen.35.19. Now this deſcription of David by his lineage, country and parentage in a more exact manner then before, ch.16.18. maketh their opinion more probable that think there is ſome tranſpoſition in the hiſtory, ſeeing Authors uſe more fully to deſcribe a man when they firſt begin to ſpeak of him, then they afterwards do when they have ſpoken much of him already.

and he had eight ſons] See on ch.16.10.

and the man went among men for an old man in the dayes of Saul] i.e. When they muſtered their men for war, he was reputed ſo old, that he was not thought fit, being ſuperannuated, to be thus imployed. Therefore in this expedition he ſtaid at home, but yet ſent three of his ſons to attend the ſervice of the King and State.

V. 13. And the names of his three ſons[See ch.16.6,8,9.

V. 15. But David went and returned from Saul] i. e. He was often ſent by his father to Sauls camp, to and fro, to viſit his brethren and ſupply their wants; which being done, he returned to his ſheep. Others underſtand it of his returning from Sauls Court, where he was entertained and lived ſome time, doing him that ſervice unto which he had called him; and afterwards being diſmiſſed by Saul, went back to keep his fathers ſheep. The which his diſmiſſion they impute either to the fickleneſs and inconſtancy of Saul, as being diſtracted with melancholick fits and humerous paſſions, whereby his affection towards David being cooled and quenched, he began to neglect him; Or, becauſe being recovered by Davids muſick, he conceived he had no further need of him; Or elſe, becauſe his mind and heart were ſo wholly taken up with the preſent wars that he had ſhaken off his melancholick fears and diſtractions, and wholly intended thoſe weighty affairs, that no leſs concerned him than the loſs of his Kingdome, liberty, yea and life it ſelfe; Or finally, Saul returned him to his aged father, to be a comfort unto him in the abſence of his three other ſons, who were imployed in the wars, having now no uſe of him or his muſick, but rather of a Sword and Spear. But theſe reaſons do not throughly ſatisfie, ſeeing the text giveth not the leaſt hint of Sauls alteration and diſaffection towards David. And though his preſent imployment in the war abated for the time his fears, and eaſed his fits, yet this would not not have cauſed him, being a King, to ſend away a ſervant of whom he might have need again when the war was ended. And if he found himſelf recovered by Davids muſick, this would the more have indeared his ſervice, and made him the more loath to part with him, for fear of a relapſe. And ſuppoſe he had no need of David as his Muſician, yet he had now more ſpecial occaſion to uſe his ſervice and attendance, as being his Armour-bearer. Neither is it the manner of Princes to reſpect more the comfort of a private parent then their own ſervice in the publick affairs of the State and Comman-Wealth. Therefore, ſaving other mens better judgments, I conceive that this going and returning is meant of Davids going to and fro from his fathers houſe to the Camp, which was the preſent occaſion why it was here ſpoken of. But whether this was done before Saul ſent for him and entertained him into his ſervice, or afterwards, (as we have it here expreſſed) I will not determine.

to feed his fathers ſheep at Bethlehem] After that David was by Samuel anointed King, he returneth to his former imployment, and leadeth a private life, (as Saul likewiſe had done, ch.11.5. and Moſes, after he had long lived in Pharaohs Court, Exod.3.1.) waiting upon God till it pleaſed him to provide means for the accompliſhment of his promiſe. And hereby he ſhewed great humility and patience in the exerciſe of his faith and hope. One would have thought that both his father and himſelf, being acquainted with Gods purpoſe of raiſing him to be King, ſhould have deſired that he, above the reſt of his brethren, ſhould have been imployed in the wars, that his valour and prudence being approved, he might become famous and in high eſteem with the King and people. But contrariwiſe they whom God had refuſed were imployed in the wars, and David, whom he had choſen, is uſed as a ſervant, to run to and fro on their errands, becauſe God would have the whole glory of raiſing him to Sovereignty from ſuch a low condition, as the Pſalmiſt obſerveth, Pſa. 78.70,71. without the intervenience of ſecondary cauſes, or the contrivances and plottings of humane policy. And in this David was a notable type of our Lord Chriſt, who, after God had deſigned and anointed him to be King over his Church, Pſal.2.6. humbled himſelf to take upon him the form of a ſervant, and was obedient to the death; and ſo from the croſs was exalted to the crown, Phil.2.6,7,9.

V. 16. and preſented himſelf fourty dayes] In all which time not one in the whole army of Iſrael durſt anſwer his challeng, God withdrawing from them their courage and reſolution, that the victory might be reſerved for David, and make him much the more famous in the eſteem of the people, when as they had ſo long continued in their fear and diſtreſs before there came any deliverance.

V. 17. an ephah of this parched corn] An Ephah contained ten homers, and an homer about a pottle, a ſufficient allowance for a days food. See on Exod.16.16,36.

V. 18. And carry theſe ten cheeſes to the Captain of their thouſand] To gain his favour, that he might uſe them with more reſpect, and not put them upon dangerous and deſperate ſervices.

take their pledge] i. e. bring me ſome token from them, whereby I may know that they are alive and well. Or, as others take it, if they have laid out to pawn for victuals or other neceſſaries, take mony with thee to redeem it. Others expound it of a token which he received to go out and in to his brethren in the army without ſuſpicion of coming as a ſpie.

V.19. Were in the valley of Elah fighting with the philiſtims] i. e. In the valley between the two mountains, skirmiſhing one with another.

V. 20. And David roſe up early, &c.] Here David is commended for his diligence in executing his fathers commands, although he were anointed King, and for his care and providence in looking to his charge, not leaving his ſheep without a ſhepherd.

and took and went] i. e. He took that which his father had ſent, and haſted on his journey.

and he came to the trench] Or, place of the carriage. i.e. Where the carts and carriages lay which brought proviſions for the army, with their ſtuff and neceſſaries; which compaſſing the camp in the reer, were unto it as a fort or barricado, to defend it from ſudden attempts and breaking in of enemies. The like we read of ch.26.5.

as the hoſt was going forth to the fight] Or, battle array; or, place of fight.

V. 21. For Iſrael and the Philiſtims had put the battel in array] i. e. Stood in battalia, ready to fight upon any advantage which ſhould be given them by the adverſe party.

V. 22. And David left his carriage] Heb. the veſſels from upon him. i. e. He left the things ſent by his father to the Captain and his brethren, that he might with more ſpeed go into the army.

came and ſaluted his brethren] Heb. asked his brethren of peace. i. e. How it fared with them.

V. 23. There came up the Champion] i. e. Towards the mountain where the Iſraelites ſtood in battel-aray.

and ſpake according to the ſame words] To wit, which were before expreſſed v.8.

V. 24. And all the men of Iſrael, when they ſaw the man, fled from him] Heb. from his face. Thereby diſcovering their cowardiſe, and diſtruſt in God and his promiſes.

V. 25. Surely to defie Iſrael is he come up] i. e. To reproach them as daſtards, who durſt not fight with him, being ſo often challenged and provoked.

and it ſhall be, that the man who killeth him, the King will enrich] q. d. All men are ſo poſſeſſed with fear, that there is not one to be found that will hazard himſelf by undertaking the combat, notwithſtanding the King hath given ſuch great encouragement to him that ſhall get the victory.

and make his fathers houſe free in Iſrael] i. e. Will ennoble his family by freeing it from all taxes and impoſitions. And this they ſaid to encourage one another to undertake the combat; but all in vain: for though they all hungred after the bayt of honour and riches, yet they durſt not bite at and ſwallow it for fear of the hook.

V. 26. What ſhall be done to the man that killeth this Philiſtine, and taketh away the reproach from Iſrael] David again hearkeneth after the rewards promiſed, not becauſe he was taken with them, or thereby encouraged to undertake the combat; for after he had gotten the victory, and was brought into Sauls preſence, he never laid any claim unto them: But his chief inducements were Gods glory, the honour of his nation, and the welfare of the Common-wealth, which with the hazard of his life he was willing to vindicate from thoſe impious blaſpemies and foul reproaches which were belched out of the filthy mouth of this heatheniſh miſcreant, as his queſtions here to the ſtanders by do plainly import. And to this end he buſieth himſelf in all companies where he came, by making theſe enquiries, both to ſhew his inclination to fight in the quarrel of God and his people, and that ſome of thoſe who heard him might take notice of it, and relate unto Saul his courage and confidence.

V. 28. and Eliabs anger was kindled againſt David] Out of meer pride and envy, that David ſhould ſo buſily intermeddle with affairs of this high nature, making ſuch diligent enquiry, as though he had ſome thoughts of undertaking the combat, when as neither he himſelf, who was his eldeſt brother and a martial man, nor any of the great Worthies of Iſrael, durſt accept of the challenge, but even fled for fear when they did but ſee Goliaths face.

And with whom haſt thou left thoſe few ſheep in the wilderneſs] q. d. It had been much fitter for thee to have buſied thy ſelf about thine own charge in tending the ſheep, eſpecially being in the wilderneſſe, where they are in danger of wild beaſts, then to thruſt thy ſelf into the army, and there talk of combating with a mighty giant, whom better men then thou cannot look upon without fear and horrour. A ſheep-hook would better become thee then a ſword, and an harp to play upon rather than arms, unto which thou haſt never been accuſtomed. Theſe words of diſparagement, though they might ſeem to have proceeded from ſcorn and contempt, yet it is probable were ſpoken out of malicious pride and envy, ſeeing Eliab having had experience of Davids ſtrength and valour, and eſpecially of Gods aſſiſtance and bleſſing upon him, in killing the Lion and Bear, might fear he would have the like ſucceſſe if he undertook this combat, and ſo dazle his glory, who was his eldeſt brother, by having all the honour and praiſe conferred upon him.

I know thy pride, and the naughtneſſe of thine heart] He arrogateth to himſelf that which is peculiar to God, i.e. to ſearch and know the heart: But in truth he knew no ſuch thing by David, but took a falſe ſcantling, meaſuring his heart by his own, that was full of pride and envy. Here again we have David a true type of our Lord Chriſt, who, though he were the true patern of meekneſſe and humility, Matth. 11.29. Phil. 2. 6,7. yet was not onely accuſed of pride and ambition by the Scribes and Phariſees, but ſuſpected thereof by his own brethren and kinſmen alſo, Joh.7.3,4. & 10.33.

for thou art come down that thou mighteſt ſee the battel] Out of his own jealouſie he chargeth him falſly, that he had thruſt himſelf into the battel out of an ambitious deſire of doing ſome exploit to gain glory, when as his conſcience could have told him that he was ſent thither by his father to bring them proviſions.

V. 29. And David ſaid, what have I now done?] David returneth not reproach for reproach, but anſwereth him with all meekneſs, as being his eldeſt brother, What have I now done? i. e. Wherein have I ſo offended as to deſerve ſuch a ſharp reproof: Is it not lawful for me to ſpeak that which is in every mans mouth? and have I herein given any cauſe to be taxed of pride?

Is there not a cauſe?] i. e. Have I not had juſt cauſe of coming to the Army, being ſent of my Father? And being come, have I not as juſt cauſe to buſie my ſelf in making this enquiry, when I hear God thus diſhnoured and his own peculiar people ſcorned and reproached by a blaſphemous wretch and an uncircumciſed infidel?

V. 30. and he turned from him towards another] Finding ſuch harſh entertainment from his brother, he made tryal of others, to ſee if he could ſpeed better.

and ſpake after the ſame manner] Both that he might know the certainty of the matter, and alſo ſhew his willingneſs to fight, and that thus ſpeaking to many, the King at laſt might come to the knowledge of it.

V. 32. Let no mans heart fail becauſe of him, &c.] Namely, becauſe there is none found that dare encounter with this hideous Monſter. For I my ſelf, though the weakeſt of many, truſting in Gods ſtrength and aſſiſtance, will anſwer his proud challenge, and enter combat with this boaſting Philiſtine.

V. 33. Thou art not able to go againſt this Philiſtine] To wit, with any hope of obtaining victory.

for thou art but a youth] Not yet come to thy full ſtrength, and alſo unexpert in warlike affairs.

and he a man of war from his youth] A man grown to full age and vaſt ſtature, and an expert Souldier trained up in war. See on Exod. 15.3.

V. 34. And David ſaid unto Saul, Thy ſervant kept his fathers ſheep] He confirmeth his own courage and Sauls faint hope by a reaſon grounded upon experience, which giveth way to no diſputes.

and there came a lion and a bear] Not both together, but at ſundry times, one after another, taking ſeveral lambs, or kids, out of the flock.

V. 35. And I went out after him, and ſmote him] i. e. I purſued both the lion and bear, one after another, and ſmote them, taking from either of them the prey on which they had ſeverally ſeized.

I caught him by his beard] i. e. Laid faſt hold of the lions long hair under his nether jaw.

V. 36. Thy ſervant ſlew both the lion and the bear] i. e. killed the bear, as I had done the lion. This being performed by clean ſtrength, grapling together, and not at a diſtance by a long ſword or ſpear, was an argument of great might and magnanimous valour.

and this uncircumciſed Philiſtine ſhall be as one of them] i. e. Seeing I truſt ſtill in the ſame God, who can give the ſame ſtrength, and not in my ſelf, who can do nothing without his aſſiſtance, I am aſſured I ſhall have the like ſucceſs; And the rather, becauſe I fight not in my own quarrel, but in the quarrel of the Lord of hoſts, who giveth victory, when he pleaſeth, to the weakeſt over the ſtrongeſt: And becauſe I fight againſt an uncircumciſed Philiſtine, who being out of covenant, is an alien to God, and therefore out of his protection, whereas I being in covenant with him, have intereſt in all his promiſes, and namely of victory over his and his peoples enemies; yea, and not againſt an infidel of the ordinary ſort, but againſt a blaſphemous miſcreant, who hath reproached and defyed the armies of the living God, and conſequently God in them, as though having taken them into his protection he were not able to defend them. But he is Al-mighty, and ever liveth to take revenge on ſuch blaſphemers.

V. 37. The Lord that delivered me——he will deliver] By the experience which he had in time paſt of Gods gracious aſſiſtance againſt the Lion and Bear, he doubteth not of victory over Goliath. So 2 Cor. 1. 10.

And Saul ſaid unto David, Go, and the Lord be with thee] Seeing Davids confidence ſo well grounded, not on his own ſtrength, in which there could be no hope, but in God, who is omnipotent and al-ſufficient, he giveth him leave to undertake the combat, and diſmiſſeth him with prayer to God that he would be with and aſſiſt him, according to that truſt he repoſed in him.

V. 38. And Saul armed David with his armour] i. e. With armour taken out of his own ſtore, fit for Davids body; and not with his own perſonal armour, which himſelf uſed to wear, ſeeing that would have been unfit for David, Saul ſo much exceeding him in ſtature, Ch. 10. 23.

V. 39. And David ſaid unto Saul, I cannot go with theſe, for I have not proved them] i. e. I cannot go with theſe arms and weapons, becauſe I have not been uſed to wear them; Hereby their opinion ſeemeth more probable that think this was done before David was ſent for to Court, becauſe in his private ſhepherds condition he had never been accuſtomed to the uſe of arms, with which he could not have been ſo much unacquainted after he was Sauls armor-bearer.

And David put them off him] Perceiving they rather would hinder then help him, he putteth them off, and made no uſe of them, as he would have done if they had fitted him. This God ſo diſpoſed of by his providence, that he alone might have the glory of the victory. And herein David was a type of Chriſt, who ſubdued his enemies, not with outward pomp and power, but by ſpiritual weapons, and the virtue of his Divine nature.

V. 40. And he took his ſtaff in his hand] i. e. His ſhepherds crook.

and choſe him five ſmooth ſtones out of the brook] i. e. the valley; or, the brook that did run through the valley. Out of this he picked five ſtones, that if one failed he might make uſe of another.

and his ſling was in his hand] In the uſe of ſlings the Iſraelites were the more expert, becauſe of late, when oppreſſed by the Philiſtims, they were forbidden the uſe of iron weapons, ch. 13. 19. And with theſe weak means God was pleaſed David ſhould prevail, that himſelf alone might have the glory. Thus Moſes his rod wrought miracles in Egypt, divided the red Sea, and brought water out of the rock in the Wilderneſs; Gideon by his earthen pots and lamps vanquiſhed the Midianites, and Chriſt with clay and ſpittle gave ſight to the blind man.

and he drew neer to the Philiſtine] Being full of courage and confident of Gods aſſiſtance, he ſtayeth not for the approach of his enemy, but haſteth to go out againſt him.

V. 42. He diſdained him, for he was but a youth, and ruddy, and of a fair countenance] Here three cauſes are expreſſed of the Giants contempt;

tempt ; Davids youth , which argued his weakneſs and want of experience ; his ruddy colour , which ſhewed his youthful raſhneſs and undiſcreet choler ; and his beauty, which made him ſeem effeminate and too tender to hold out in a combat.

V. 43. Am I a dog , that thou comeſt to me with ſtaves ?] A ſtaffe, he thought , was fitter to beat a dog then to fight a combat with a giant armed with ſpear and ſword. Though David had but one ſtaff, he ſpeaketh in the plural number. So Gen. 21. 7.

And the Philiſtine curſed David by his gods] i. e. Dagon, Aſhtaroth, and Baalim. Theſe he invoked againſt David, that they ſhould deſtroy him.

V. 44. Come to me , and I will give thy fleſh to the fowls of the air] Out of carnal confidence he boaſteth in his own ſtrength, and gloriouſly triumpheth before the victory , that he might ſtrike terror into David and make him flee before the fight.

V. 45. Thou comeſt to me with a ſword , and with a ſpear , and with a ſhield] i. e. Thou truſteſt in the arm of fleſh , in thine own ſtrength and warlike preparations , which commonly deceive thoſe that confide in them.

but I come to thee in the name of the Lord of hoſts] i. e. Wholly relying upon his power and promiſes who is ſupreme Lord of heaven and earth , and hath all creatures at his command , to do him ſervice , and having a commiſſion from him , I come now to vindicate his glorious name from thy reproaches and blaſphemies, ſeeing what thou haſt ſpoken againſt his people he eſteemeth as ſpoken againſt himſelf.

V. 46. This day will the Lord deliver thee into my hand] He doth not ſay that he would vanquiſh Goliath in his own ſtrength , but that the Lord would deliver him into his hand , and inable him to deſtroy both him and his army. And this confidence he had partly out of well-grounded Reaſon , becauſe I. he fought in a good cauſe , and his enemies in a bad ; II. becauſe Goliath had reproached the Lord of hoſts , who would not ſuffer his blaſphemies to go unrevenged ; III. becauſe Goliath came in pride , preſumption and ſelf-confidence , which God abhorreth and ſeverely puniſheth , whereas he he came againſt him with an humble conceit of his own ſtrength , relying wholly upon Gods power and promiſes ; IV. becauſe God would do it for the glory of his own holy Name , that all the earth might know that there is a God in Iſrael ; and that all the preſent aſſembly, both Iſraelites and Philiſtims , might know and acknowledge that the Lord ordereth and giveth iſſue to all battels , and ſaveth not with ſword and ſpear, but by his word and almighty power : And partly this was made known unto David by prophecy and the inſpiration of Gods Spirit , enduing him with heroick gifts , and exciting him to undertake this combat.

V. 47. the Lord ſaveth not with ſword and ſpear] i. e. Is not tyed to ſave by theſe means, Pſal. 44. 6.

for the battel is the Lords] To guide it by his providence, and to give victory to whom he pleaſeth. Or, as others underſtand it, This battel is the Lord, we fighting for him, and ye againſt him ; and therefore it concerneth his honour to give us victory, & to overthrow you, 2 Chr. 25. 15.

V. 48. when the Philiſtine aroſe] i. e. Prepared himſelf for the combat, Gen. 31. 17.

and drew nigh to meet David] To wit , that he might get him within the reach of his ſword or ſpear , and ſo fight it out with handy-blows.

that David haſted and ran toward the army to meet the Philiſtine] Thereby ſhewing his courage and confidence , and with all his prudence and policy in defeating the Philiſtines deſign, by making himſelf at a diſtance ready to uſe his fling and ſtone , which he could not have done if they had come cloſe together.

V. 49. And ſmote the Philiſtine in his forehead] Though he had his helmet on his head , he had not yet pulled down his bever before his face and forehead, becauſe he would more cleerly ſee his way before him, intending to do it time enough when they came neer together ; although it is not like that the proud daring Philiſtine cared much for the covering of his face, when he ſaw David , whom he ſo much contemned, come againſt him unarmed , and with his face bare. Or it may be that that he had onely an helmet , and no bever , ſeeing they were to fight their duel on foot.

that the ſtone ſunk into his forehead] i. e. Pierced deep into it , as a ſtone ſpeedily ſinketh into the waters. And here Gods ſingular providence is moſt obſervable in directing the ſtone to the onely killing place. For though David and many other of the Iſraelites excelled in the art of ſlinging ſtones , and coming very neer the hitting of a fixed mark , as appeareth Judg. 20. 16. yet ſeeing the forehead of the Philiſtine was in continual motion , it was not likely to be hit , even at the firſt caſt , without the ſpecial guidance of Gods al-ruling providence.

V. 50. So David prevailed over the Philiſtine with a ſling and a ſtone] God uſing ſuch contemptible means, the more to manifeſt his own power and glory, 2 Cor. 12. 9.

V. 51. David ran and ſtood upon the Philiſtine , and took his ſword, ——and cut off his head therewith] Goliaths own weapon, which he had prepared for the deſtruction of David and Gods people , was uſed for his own ruine. So Haman was hung on his own gallows which he intended for Mordecai. David thus fighting and prevailing againſt Goliath , was a ſingular type of Chriſt fighting againſt Satan , Sin, the World and Death , and vanquiſhing them with their own weapons: For by his death he deſtroyed him that had the power of death , that is, the devil , Heb. 2. 4. ſwallowed up Death in victory ; took away Sin, which is the ſting of death ; and the ſtrength of ſin, with is the Law ; cancelled the hand writing of ordinances , and nayled it to his croſſe ; and finally , by his burial broke open the priſon of the grave , and ſo ſet all his elect at liberty 1 Cor. 15. 54, 55. Col. 2. 14, 15.

And when the Philiſtims ſaw their Champion was dead, they fled] Not that they had any true cauſe of fleeing for the loſs of one man, having ſuch a ſtrong and numerous army ; but becauſe they having placed all their confidence in him, God juſtly ſtruck them with terror and amazement, when they ſaw their idol, in whom they truſted, taken away.

V. 52. fell down by the way to Shaaraim] A Town in the Confines of Judah, Joſh. 15. 36.

V. 53. and they ſpoyled their tents] Like wiſe Souldiers, not plundering before they had obtained a full victory. And ſo it ſeemeth that Goliaths armour and ſword came to Davids ſhare, who had beſt deſerved it.

V. 54. And David took the head of the Philiſtine , and brought it to Jeruſalem] After he had firſt brought it in his hand before Saul, v. 57. he carried it as a trophie unto Jeruſalem ; which was before conquered, and now poſſeſſed by Judah and Benjamin , though the ſtrong fort of Sion was in the hands of the Jebuſites till the beginning of Davids reign, 2 Sam. 6. Hither the Iſraelites and men of Judah going in triumph , and David accompanying them , he carried this head with him, and (as it is probable) ſet it upon ſome high turret , to the terror of the Jebuſites , and the comfort and encouragement of Gods people , exciting them hereby to praiſe God for giving them this glorious victory.

but he put his armor in his tent] This ſome think is ſpoken by way of anticipation, and that the meaning is, that in after-times, when David was King, he made a tent inſtead of the Tabernacle, and therein placed the Ark, and alſo amongſt other things the armour and ſword of Goliath. And that tabernacle or tent is here called Davids, becauſe he prepared and pitched it, 2 Sam. 6. 17. 1 Chron. 15. 1. Or, as others conceive, hereby is meant his own private tent, in which he might reſerve Goliaths arms for a time, though afterwards they were kept in the Tabernacle at Nob in the cuſtody of Ahimelech the high prieſt, ch. 21. 9. that being ſometimes preſented to the view of the people, they might be put in mind of that great victory, and be moved thereby to praiſe the Lord, who had given it.

V. 55. Abner, whoſe ſon is this youth ? And Abner ſaid, As thy ſoul liveth , O King , I cannot tell] Hence ſome very probably gather that this battel was fought before David lived in Court, ch. 16. 21. Otherwiſe Saul muſt needs have known David , ſeeing he greatly loved him, and had him daily in his ſight : Or though Saul by reaſon of his melancholick fits might have forgotten him, yet it was only whileſt the fit was upon him , and not when it was over , as it ſeemeth it was in the time of his wars, and at this preſent when he talked with Abner : Or though his memory had failed , yet Abners could not, who was a great Courtier, and much reſident in the time of Davids waiting ; ſeeing there were no wars we read of that ſhould cauſe his abſence as General of the army ; Or though he might excuſe himſelf by ſuch abſence and imployment , (as we ſee he doth not) yet there were Courtiers enough beſides that might have reſolved the queſtion , though Abner could not, ſeeing he was appointed by Saul to make enquiry, v. 56. and yet it ſeemeth neither the other Courtiers could inform them of him , ſeeing , when all failed , he asked David himſelf whoſe ſon he was. And herehence (though divers other reaſons might be alledged) they conclude there is a tranſpoſition in the ſtory , that being ſet down before , ch. 16. which followed after. And whereas the main cauſe why godly Expoſitors reject this opinion is becauſe it is dangerous to admit of ſuch tranſpoſitions in the Scriptures , to this it is anſwered. That ſuch are to be found in divers other places ; As Gen. 5. for the continuance of the Genealogies the birth of Noah is recorded divers hundred yeers before he was born. And the matters related in the five laſt chapters of the book of Judges were done in the time of the firſt Judges, long before the dayes of Samſon but are placed in the end of that Book, that the ſtory of the Judges might not be interrupted but be orderly continued. And ſo in the book of Ieremiahs prophecies we have ſome paſſages done in the reign of Iehoiakim inſerted after divers things done in the time of Zedekiah , who came after him, as appeareth by comparing ch. 36. with the precedent chapters. Notwithſtanding almoſt all Expoſitors will allow no tranſpoſition in this place , and thus they endeavour to anſwer the objections that ſeem to make for it : Though David had formerly lived in the Court , and had neer imployment about the King , and therein ſo much pleaſed him that he greatly loved him , yet this was ſuch a love of a King to a ſubject of mean quality as might ſoon be forgotten when he had no further uſe of him : And though Saul had formerly known him, yet now after ſome diſtance of time he could not ſo well remember his face nor favour, becauſe being diſmiſſed and ſent home to comfort his father, he had been a good while abſent from the Court before this battel ; and a little time might make a great change in growing youth, eſpecially there being alſo a change in his habit, he having deveſted himſelf of his Court-apparel and coming to the Camp in his ſhepherds weeds ; Though I confeſs, the time in which this change in him was wrought could not be long , if he were diſmiſſed by Saul and ſent home (as they ſay) to comfort his father during his brethrens abſence in this war. Unto which they add, that Saul being diſtempered with frantick fits might eaſily forget him, though he had formerly known him well and greatly loved him. And as for Abner, he had taken no great notice of him, becauſe being

General of the army, he was much abſent from Court, and wholly taken up in martial imployments. Others conceive upon the former reaſons, that Saul might know his perſon, and yet enquire after his condition and parentage, his family and tribe, having promiſed to give him his daughter as the reward of his victory. But of this it is ſcarce probable that Saul could be ignorant, if he were thus made known unto him when firſt he entertained him, ch. 16.18,19. Thus having ſet down the ſeveral opinions of expoſitors, and the grounds of them, I leave the Reader to his own choice.

CHAP. XVIII.

Verſ. 1. The ſoul of Jonathan was knit with the ſoul of David] This was cauſed by thoſe excellent and eminent gifts and graces which he obſerved in him, as Wiſdom, Courage, Fortitude, Faith and confidence in God, Zeal for Gods glory and the good of his people: The which gifts and good parts God having wrought in Jonathan alſo, from the ſuitableneſs of their qualities and diſpoſitions did ariſe a firm and extraordinary love and friendſhip between them, which is uſually grounded on the ſimilitude of natures, conditions and manners. Again, Jonathan thus dearly loved him becauſe he perceived he was highly in Gods favour, ſeeing by his aſſiſtance he had obtained ſuch a glorious victory over ſo mighty and malicious a giant as had lately breathed out miſchief and ruine to all Gods people; from which they were now delivered by his means and valour, when the caſe ſeemed deſperate, not any one man daring to undertake the quarrel but himſelf. Unto which we may add that which is alſo implyed in the text, though not plainly and fully expreſſed, namely, that Jonathan ſtanding by, and hearing Davids ſpeeches to his father, obſerved therein much piety, grace and goodneſſe, in his ſelf-denyal, and giving God the whole glory of the victory. But above all, this love and friendſhip is to be aſcribed unto God as the chief Author of it, who having the hearts of all in his hands to incline them which way he pleaſeth, wrought this extraordinary love in Jonathan towards David, that he might have alwayes a ſure, able and faithfull friend at hand, to aſſiſt and comfort him in all thoſe great troubles wherewith God was pleaſed afterwards to try and exerciſe his faith, hope and patience.

V. 2. And Saul took him that day, and would let him go no more home to his fathers houſe] To wit, as he formerly had done, ch. 17. 15. going and returning from Saul to feed his fathers ſheep, but continued and retained him ſtill in his Court, after he had firſt ſent to Jeſſe his father, deſiring that it might ſtand with his liking, as it is ch. 16. 22. For whereas the moſt Expoſitors hold that David, after he was entertained to be Sauls Muſician and Armour-bearer, was diſmiſſed and ſent home to his father by Saul before this battel with the Philiſtims and combate with Goliath, there is no mention made of it. And therefore ſome learned Expoſitors think that there is a tranſpoſition in the ſtory, and that in theſe words there is a regreſſion to that hiſtory which is intermitted, ch. 16. 22. And whereas it is here ſaid that Saul would let him go no more home to his fathers houſe, hereby is meant, as they conceive, that he would not let him go to and fro between the Court and his fathers houſe, as he is ſaid to have done ch. 17. 15.

V. 3. Then Jonathan and David made a covenant] i. e. After that Saul had taken him to abide in the Court (which was, as ſome conceive, when Saul firſt entertained him to play on his harp before him, when he was in his fits of diſtemper and diſtraction) Jonathan & David obſerving the piety & good parts that were in one another, and dearly loving them, entred into a neer league of love, and contracted a firm covenant one with another, that they would joyn together in ſeeking Gods glory, the advancement of religion, the good and welfare of the Common-wealth, and continue for ever faithful friendſhip between them, which ſhould not be limited to their own perſons only, but extend alſo to their poſterity.

V. 4. And Jonathan ſtript himſelf of the robe that was upon him, and gave it to David] i. e. Not onely his courtly ornaments, but alſo his arms and military garments, even to his ſword, bow and girdle, becauſe in making contracts they uſed outward ſigns and ſymboles as pledges and pawns of their inward love and affections. And though he might have ſtill reſerved theſe things to himſelf, & procured the like for David, yet he choſe rather to diveſt himſelf, and to adorn him with theſe ornaments peculiar to his own perſon, to intimate that neer communion of perſons and good which was between them, and that whatſoever he had ſhould be at Davids ſervice.

V. 5. And David went out whitherſoever Saul ſent him, and behaved himſelf wiſely] Or, proſpered. i.e. When Saul, having had experience of his valour in his combate with Goliath was pleaſed to employ him in any other expedition againſt his enemies, he cheerfully undertook it, and carried himſelf ſo wiſely and valiantly in the managing of it that he ſtill proſpered in all his wayes: for which he was accepted of Saul and all the people.

and Saul ſet him over the men of war] i. e. Advanced him from being his Armour-bearer to be Captain and Commander over his Guard and legionary Souldiers. For he did not (as ſome think) make him General of his Army, ſeeing that was the place of Abner his neer kinſman, which he now held, and long after retained, even after Sauls death.

V. 6. And it came to paſs as they came] i. e. In proceſs of time, when David was thus advanced and imployed in the ſervice of the King and State againſt their enemies, this fell out which followeth.

when David was returned from the ſlaughter of the Philiſtine] i. e. Of Goliath the Philiſtin eſt firſt, (as ſome underſtand it) and afterwards of the army in general. Others take the word Philiſtim indefinitely, the ſingular number for the plural, as is uſual in the Scriptures, and in our common ſpeech, ch. 17. 43. Gen. 13. 7. and thus underſtand it, That when Saul, David, and the reſt of the army, after divers warlike exploits, came from ſome other fight, wherein they had obtained ſome great victory over the Philiſtims, the women came out of all the cities of Iſrael ſinging and dancing, &c. The which practiſe was of antient uſe in their triumphs, as we ſee Exod. 15. & Judg. 11. 34.

V. 7. And the women anſwered one another] Singing interchangeably by turns, ſongs of triumph unto their inſtruments. For as that ſex are deep ſharers with men in the miſeries of war when their enemies are victorious, ſo have they as great intereſt in joy and triumph, when their enemies being vanquiſhed, they are freed from their fears. Theſe expreſſions of joy by ſinging ſongs of praiſe unto God for deliverances from worldly enemies were ſhadows and types of the rejoycing of Gods Saints for their ſpiritual deliverances out of the power of the enemies of their ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt our onely Lord and Redeemer, Luke 1. 46. & 2. 13. Rev. 5. 9. & 7. 9,10,12.

Saul hath ſlain his thouſands, and David his ten thouſands] q. d. As Sauls valour deſerveth much praiſe, but Davids ten times more, ſeeing by his means the whole army of the Philiſtims was defeated, which was of more moment then if he had ſlain ten thouſand with his own hand. Others underſtand theſe words indefinitely of all thoſe ſlaughters which Saul and David had made among the Philiſtims, both in and ſince that firſt battel, eſpecially of ſome great victory which they had now lately obtained. Theſe triumphant ſongs were ſo ſolemnly acted that they became famous even in the Philiſtims country, Chap. 21. 11. & 29. 5.

V. 8. And Saul was very wroth, and the ſaying diſpleaſed him] Heb. was evil in his eyes. Where he ſhewed his arrogance and ambition, in affecting that praiſe which he had not deſerved, and envying it unto another unto whom it was due by juſt merit. Saul had not merited that praiſe which the woman gave him; ſeeing when he heard the God of Iſrael blaſphemed by the Giant, and his Army defied and reproached, through fear and cowardize he kept himſelf in his camp and place of advantage, and durſt not by fighting vindicate Gods glory and the honour of his people, though he were challenged and provoked fourty dayes together, and twice every day: But Kings admit of no partners in their glory. And yet it may wel be thought that Davids tranſcendent praiſes did not ſo much vex and diſpleaſe him ſimply, becauſe he was preferred before him in valour and fortitude, as becauſe this wrought him into the hearts and high eſteem of the people, and ſo made way for his depoſing and Davids reigning; ſeeing, in reſpect of his graces and good parts, and the proſperous ſucceſs which through Gods bleſſing he had in all his interpriſes, he now began to look upon him as that man ſpoken of unto him by Samuel, who was better then he, and choſen by God, after his rejection, to be King in his room, as being a man after his own heart, ch. 13. 14. & 15. 28. And this the laſt words in the verſe do plainly imply, and what can ye have more but the Kingdome.

V. 9. And Saul eyed David from that day and forward] i. e. Not onely carefully and curiouſly pried into all his actions, to obſerve unto what end they tended, but alſo did behold and cenſure them with a malicious eye and aſpect; the heart no otherwiſe ſo plainly diſcovering it ſelf as by the eye and countenance, Gen. 4. 5,6. But being a diſſembling hypocrite, and intending to do him ſecret miſchief, there is no doubt but that he gilded over and diſguiſed his inward malice and envy with outward complements and ſhews of love; though ſometimes they broke out in his raging fits: Howſoever he did not ſtick afterwards to profeſs them openly, when as they ſo ſwelled in his breſt that he could no longer conceal them.

V. 10. the evil ſpirit from God came upon Saul, and he propheceed in the midſt of the houſe] Not as he had done before, ch. 10. 10. when Samuel had anoynted him King; for then being inſpired with Gods Spirit, and endued with the common graces, he propheſied and praiſed God together with the reſt of the Prophets, and ſpake of ſpiritual and heavenly things: but now that Spirit being departed from him, and the evil ſpirit Satan being ſent of God, and poſſeſſing him, he fell into deviliſh extaſies and raptures, and carried himſelf, in his uncompoſed motions and actions, in an extraordinary manner, ſeemingly like the true Prophets in their viſions, and was as a man raviſhed and beſide himſelf, either uttering ſtrange languages which he had never learned before, or imperfect and broken ſentences, dark ſpeeches and myſtical riddles, like the heathen Oracles. Or it may be, being prompted by the devil, he did fore-tel things to come, though in an ambiguous and doubtfull ſenſe, ſeeing Satan himſelf hath no perfect and cleer knowledge of future contingents, unleſs revealed unto him by God, but only ſome probable gueſs out of natural cauſes. Thus Balaam propheſied, and Baals Prieſts, 1 King. 18. 29. and the divining maid, Act. 16. 16. And ſuch were the propheſies of the heathen Oracles, and the Sibylls.

and David played with his hand] i. e. To quiet Sauls ſpirit, and moderate his raging paſſions, as at other times. See ch. 16. 16.

and there was a javelin in Sauls hand] The which, as a tyrant, (who is ſtill in fear) he uſually had in his hands, or neer about him, Chap. 20. 33. & 22. 6. & 26. 7.

V. 11. And Saul caſt the javelin] To wit, at David, whileſt he playd before him to give him eaſe, deſiring to kill him that ſought his cure. Herein David was a true type of Chriſt, who when he ſought the ſalvation of the Jews, they ſought his ruine and deſtruction, Luk.4.28,29. Joh. 8.59.

For he ſaid, I will ſmite David to the wall] i.e. He thought and reſolved in this mind. So v.17,21.

and David avoided out of his preſence twice] i.e. At two ſeveral times, when he intended to do him this miſchief. And thus the ſame good providence of God that guided the ſtone which David did fling unto Goliaths fore-head for his ruine, diverted the point of Sauls javelin from piercing his body, for Davids preſervation; being a fairer mark, and neerer hand; though he himſelf ſerved Gods providence in declining the ſtroke.

V. 12. And Saul was afraid of David] i.e. Obſerving how God proſpered him in all his enterpriſes, and watched over him with his providence preſerving him from imminent danger, he feared that he was the man whom God had choſen to be King in his room. And therefore having failed in thoſe violent attempts againſt him, he now reſolveth to to try other wayes, and to ſupplant him by ſecret and ſubtile fraud, ſeeing he could not do it by open force with his own hands.

V. 13. Therefore Saul removed him from him] As thinking that he was not lyable to much danger, living in the Court with thoſe that highly honoured him for his worth and famous exploits, v.5.

and made him his Captain over a thouſand] i.e. A chief Commander and Colonel in his Army. Neither do I think (as ſome conceive) that Saul did diſparage him by this remove, but rather pretended it to honour and advance him. Neither would it have ſtood with Sauls policy, by ſhewing his diſpleaſure, to give David any diſcontent, when as he intended to encourage him to the undertaking of dangerous ſervices; hoping that at one time or other, going out in military expeditions, he would be ſlain by his enemies, ſeeing he was valourous and venturous. So v.17,25.

V. 14. And David behaved himſelf wiſely] See v.5,12.

V. 16. But all Iſrael and Judah loved David, becauſe he went out and came in before them] i.e. Becauſe as a chief Commander he led them out againſt their enemies, and acted all his martial affairs with ſuch prudence and valour that he ſtill proſpered in them, therefore Saul durſt no more attempt to kill him with his own hand, being ſo generally beloved among the people, leſt they ſhould have been ready to mutiny and ſhake off his government, but chooſeth rather to lay a plot to deſtroy him by the hands of the Philiſtims.

V. 17. Behold my elder daughter Merab; her will I give thee to wife] He had bound himſelf before in the general, that whoſoever killed Goliath ſhould for his reward have his daughter in marriage; but David having performed the condition, he forgetteth his promiſe, and falleth upon a new covenant, and offereth David his daughter under pretence of love, with a treacherous intent to work his ruine: For becauſe he durſt not kill him himſelf, being the peoples chief favourite, for fear of a mutiny or rebellion, he engageth him by marriage to undertake dangerous exploits, that he might fall by the hands of his enemies.

onely be thou valiant for me, and fight the Lords battels] i.e. Such as are undertaken to maintain Gods glory againſt idols and idolaters, and to protect his people againſt their enemies. Thus he hypocritically pretendeth zeal for Gods glory, when as he maliciouſly intended Davids ruine.

V. 18. And David ſaid unto Saul, Who am I?] q.d. How far unworthy am I of ſuch high honor and advancement as to marry the daughter of the King, being ſo mean a perſon? David, though but mean in birth and education, had ſo ennobled himſelf by that glorious victory over Goliath that he was looked upon as a Saviour of the Kingdom and people, and Saul had indefinitely promiſed that he would dignifie that perſon who ſhould vanquiſh the Giant with this royal marriage; and yet David out of great modeſty and humility is ſo far off from challenging this honour as his due, that he declineth it now it, is offered him.

and what is my life?] i.e. How mean is my ſtate and condition of life, in reſpect of my education, being taken from the ſheep-coat, from following the ſheep, 2 Sam.7.8. Pſalm.78.70. Thus David in humility abaſeth himſelf, though he well knew that God had advanced him to the higheſt dignity, and anointed him to be King over Iſrael.

or my Fathers family in Iſrael] i.e. My parentage alſo is ſo low and mean, that though there were no other cauſe, yet this alone, that I come of ſo poor a ſtock, were ſufficient to render me unmeet to be ſon in law to a King.

V. 19 But it came to paſs that the time when Merab Sauls daughter ſhould have been given to David] i.e. After he had approved his valour in fighting the Lords battels, and contrary to Sauls expectation run through and eſcaped many difficulties and dangers, Saul perfidiouſly broke his promiſe with David, and married his daughter to another man.

that ſhe was given to Adriel the Meholathite to wife] This Adriel was the ſon of Barzillai the Ephraimite, and was born at Meholah, called Abel-meholah Judg.7.22. and hence he is called a Meholathite. 2 Sam. 21.8. this mans five ſons were hanged to ſatisfie the Gibeonites for thoſe cruelties which Saul had exerciſed upon them. Where by the way we may obſerve, that though David (with much meekneſs ſubmitting himſelf to Gods will) did with great patience bear this indignity and foul affront offered by Saul, (who it may be did purpoſely give him this doge & diſgrace to incenſe & provoke him to do ſomething by way of revenge, or at leaſt utter ſome diſcontented ſpeeches unbeſeeming a ſubject, which might bring him under cenſure, and give Saul ſome colour to cut him off) yet God, to whom vengeance belongeth, would not ſuffer Sauls ſin to go unpuniſhed, but cut off his poſterity by an untimely death.

V. 20. And Michal Sauls daughter loved David: and they told Saul, and the thing pleaſed him] Not becauſe David was beloved, (for Jonathans love to him did highly diſpleaſe him) but becauſe he hoped to gain ſome opportunity by this match to ſupplant him, either by cauſing him to run deſperate adventures for procuring it, or by inticing her, being his daughter, to complot and joyn with him to do him miſchief. For it is ſaid, that when he failed of his hope, by reaſon of Michals love, he was in greater fear then he had formerly been, v.29.

V. 21. And Saul ſaid, I will give him her, that ſhe may be a ſnare to him] i.e. He thought and reſolved with himſelf to beſtow her upon him in marriage, that one way or other ſhe might be a means to inſnare him. And thus he wickedly ſeeketh to pervert Gods inſtitution and the end of marriage, which was, that the wife ſhould be a comfort and help to her husband; whereas Saul intendeth by giving his daughter to bring David to death and deſtruction. But it pleaſed God to croſs his deſign, making Michal a means of his preſervation out of the ſnare which he maliciouſly had laid for him, ch.19.11,12.

and the hand of the Philiſtims may be againſt him] To wit, when to compaſs this match he went out to fight againſt them. Herein alſo God croſſed his deſign, and made the miſchief he intended againſt David to fall upon his own pate, Pſal.7.16. cauſing him afterwards to periſh by the hand of the Philiſtims, ch.31.

Thou ſhalt this day be my ſon in law in the one of the twain] i.e. This day I will give thee full aſſurance that thou ſhalt become my ſon in law (namely, upon a condition now concealed, but afterwards expreſſed) by one means or other: and howſoever, upon ſome weighty cauſes, I did not perform my promiſe in giving thee Merab in marriage, yet I will now do it in her other ſiſter; whereby I ſhall do thee no wrong, but rather be better then my word, in reſerving her for thee who, as I hear, doth deerly love thee. Thus Saul ſhuffles over the buſineſſe, and ſets a fair gloſs on a foul matter. Heb. in the twain. See on Judg.12.7.

V. 22. And Saul commanded his ſervants, ſaying, Commune with David ſecretly] i.e. As ſpeaking of your ſelves, out of your meer love and reſpect towards him, and not as ſent by me. This perhaps he did, becauſe he thought that David would rather believe them then himſelf, who had formerly deceived him; and eſpecially when they had notice of Sauls mind, by his ſpeeches with him, which had paſſed in ſecret between them, without any intention that they ſhould tell David.

Behold, the King hath a delight in thee] i.e. Doth highly eſteem thee, and is ſo well pleaſed with thy perſon and parts, that he much deſireth to make thee nearer unto him, and one of his own family, by contracting affinity with thee; and thou haſt no back friends, who envying thy high preferment would hinder this match, ſeeing all the Courtiers are ſo taken with thy worth that they dearly love thee, and think no advancement too high for thee. Therefore do not loſe time by making demurrs, but accept of a fair offer when it is tendred.

V. 23. And David ſaid, Seemeth it to you a light thing to be a kings ſon in law?] q.d. Do you think it ſo ſmall a matter that there needs no deliberation, ſeeing there is ſuch apparent diſparagement in the match, ſhe being ſo high, and I ſo mean; ſhe a Kings daughter, who may have daily the greateſt offers of Nobility and wealth, and I a poor man, not able to give her any befitting dowry, and in this regard of no great eſteem; ſeeing, men uſually are valued rather by their wealth than by their worth?

V. 25. The King deſireth not any dowrie] In thoſe dayes, and long before, it was the cuſtome to give dowries to their wives, and not, as now, to receive portions, Gen. 34.12. Exod. 22.16. Deut. 22.29. And the dowry was at the womans diſpoſing, and, if her husband dyes before her, ſerved for her maintenance, and the education of her children, if no other portion were left them.

but an hundred fore-skins of the Philiſtims] To wit, in lieu of a dowrie.

to be avenged of the Kings enemies] This he hypocritically and deceitfully pretendeth. For in truth his main deſign was that the Philiſtims ſhould revenge themſelves on him for this great deſpite, if he haply did atchieve it. Elſe why did he require their fore-skins rather then their Hands or Heads, but becauſe hereby he would exaſperate their ſpirits againſt him, for impoſing upon them this ſcorn and diſgrace, in circumciſing them being dead who above all things abhorred it when they were alive, and ſo cauſe them being filled with malice and rage to bend and imploy their whole ſtrength in revenging themſelves upon David, who had thus diſhonoured their nation. By this and many other paſſages in the ſtory it may ſeem that Saul was not ſo ſtupid and ſenſeleſs, when he was out of his frantick fits, but that he could know a man after ſome ſmall diſcontinuance, with whom he had formerly had familiar acquaintance, ch.17.55,58.

V. 26. And the days were not expired] Namely, a certain number of daies appointed by Saul for the bringing in of the fore-skins, which in all likelyhood were not many, that ſo going ſuddenly and eagerly about this deſperate ſervice he might run into the greater danger, and make more haſte then good ſpeed.

V. 27. and ſlew of the Philiſtims two hundred men; and David brought their fore-skins, &c.] And ſo preſenting them unto Saul in a double number, and within the time prefixed, Saul having no colour of excuſe to put it off, gave unto him Michal in marriage.

V. 28. Saul ſaw and knew that the Lord was with David, &c.] i.e. Seeing and finding by continual experience that God proſpered him in all things, both in his victories and the love of his wife, he was the more afraid of him, that he was the man whom God had choſen to eſtabliſh in the Kingdom after his rejection: And yet contrary to his knowledg and conſcience he oppoſed Gods Will, and perſecuted David with all malice and fury, even untill his death, to prevent (if it were poſſible) his coming to the Crown; quite contrary to Davids practice, who when he was in danger to loſe both his Kingdome and life by the rebellion of Abſalom, meekly ſubmitted himſelf to Gods good pleaſure, 2 Sam. 15. 25, 26.

V. 30. Then the Princes of the Philiſtims went forth] Namely, to raiſe a new war againſt the Iſraelites, partly to revenge themſelves upon them for their former defeats; but eſpecially (as ſome think) being incenſed and enraged with the diſhonour which David by his laſt fact had put upon their nation.

David behaved himſelf more wiſely] See on v. 5.

CHAP. XIX.

Verſ. 1. AND Saul ſpake to Jonathan his ſon, and to all his ſervants, that they ſhould kill David] He had looked upon him ever ſince he heard the womens ſongs in his praiſes, with an evil, envious and malicious eye, as fearing he was the man whom God had choſen to be King in his room; and ſtudying by all means to prevent it, he thinks none more effectual then to take away his life. Therefore he attempteth to do it by murdering him with his own hands, when he was in his frantick fits, thinking this bloody fact would by the people be aſcribed rather to his madneſſe then malice, becauſe he did not then know what he did, & ſo their hatred and diſcontent would be (if not quite taken off, yet) at leaſt abated. When this project failed, (God watching and preſerving David by his ſpecial providence) then he contriveth his death by fraud and treachery maſked under the viſard of piety, zeal for Gods glory, and love of the Common-wealth, yea, even of Davids perſon, whom he would ſeem to advance to great honour, both by marrying him to his own daughter, and alſo by giving him occaſion of doing famous exploits in deſtroying Gods enemies. But when he ſaw that neither this would ſucceed, and that David proſpered in all his dangerous undertakings, and ſo more and more gained reputation and love among his ſervants and all the people, he could now no longer contein his hidden malice and madneſſe, but burſting out into open and profeſſed enmity and fury, he giveth command to his ſon and ſervants to kill David, alledging no reaſon or cauſe of his cruel and barbarous deſign but his tyrannous will.

V. 2. But Jonathan Sauls ſon delighted much in David: and Jonathan told David] q. d. Though Jonathan were Sauls ſon, and by ſucceſſion heir to the Crown, yet he would not conceal his fathers deſign, but revealed it to David, that he might uſe all good means to prevent it: For which he is not to be blamed as a man that betrayed his fathers ſecrets, but highly to be commended, ſeeing he choſe rather to obey God then man. For he knew that God had forbidden murder under the penalty of his curſe and death; and that if any man concealed it, he made himſelf guilty of the fact; that David was not onely an innocent, but alſo one that excelled in all grace and goodneſs; that he was a man of heroical vertues and parts, the which he had imployed for the advancement of Gods glory and good of his people. He remembred that he had entred into a ſolemn covenant with David in Gods preſence, whereby they had mutually bound themſelves one to the other, to ſeek by all means the preſervation, welfare and proſperity of not onely either party, but alſo of their poſterity after them. Finally, he conſidered that by revealing this treacherous and bloody deſign to David, to prevent it, he did not only approve his duty and faithfulneſs to God, to the Common-wealth, and to his dear friend, but even to his father alſo, in keeping him by this means from plunging himſelf into a gulf of miſery, to his preſent and eternal perdition, by imbruing his hands in innocent blood. In all which reſpects his faithfulneſs to God & man is highly to be commended: And contrariwiſe, all other Sauls ſervants and Courtiers are worthy to be branded with perpetual ignominy, who, when David was in favour with the King, fawned upon him and pretended much love, ch. 18. 5, 22. but now that he was in his diſpleaſure, there was not one of them to be found that would ſpeak a word in his behalf, or diſſwade Saul from his bloody deſign, or refuſe to be his inſtruments and agents in ſo wicked an act, or do ſo much (if fear reſtrained them from all theſe) as diſcover it to David ſecretly, that he might prevent it.

Now therefore, I pray thee, take heed to thy ſelf untill the morning] So great was Jonathans love that he thinketh it not enough to forewarn David of his danger, and ſo leave him to himſelf, but he maketh it his earneſt ſuit that he would uſe all means to ſecure himſelf by abiding in ſome ſecret place until the morning, and then he would mediate with his father in his behalf, and perſwade him all he could to deſiſt from his bloody intention.

and hide thy ſelf] To wit, in ſome cave of that field where his father uſed to walk for his recreation, to take the air, as appeareth v. 3. whither he would accompany him to ſpeak in Davids behalf; that as much as might be, he might be an ear-witneſs of what paſſed between them, and be ready at hand to underſtand the reſt from him, of that which he ſhould diſcover and diſcern, which David could not hear.

V. 4. And Jonathan ſpake good of David unto Saul] Though it might have endangered his life to ſpeak unto him in his mad mood, as afterwards it appeared, ch. 20. 32, 33. yet the utmoſt peril could not make him deſert his friend in his righteous cauſe.

let not the King ſin againſt his ſervant] i. e. Do not ſeek to take away his life who is innocent, and hath done thee no wrong, eſpecially ſtanding in the relation of a ſervant, who ought to be ſecured by his maſters protection; and above all, David, who is both thy ſervant and thy ſon, who by his worth in himſelf and by his actions towards thee and the whole ſtate hath highly merited thy love and favour.

V. 5. For he put his life in his hand, and ſlew the Philiſtim] i. e. He expoſed his life to much danger in undertaking a ſingle combat with a mighty giant, from whom all others did flee at the firſt ſight. And ſo this phraſe is uſed ch. 28. 21. Judg. 9. 17. See on Judg. 12. 3.

and the Lord wrought a great ſalvation for all Iſrael] Therefore do not thou cauſeleſly deſtroy him whom God hath uſed as his inſtrument to work ſalvation for all his people.

thou ſaweſt it, and didſt rejoyce] i. e. Thou needeſt not, for the convincing thee of this truth, to hear of it by my relation, ſeeing thy ſelf waſt an eye-witneſſe of it, and didſt greatly rejoice in the victory. Therefore what groſſe ingratitude and even helliſh impiety were it to murder him who hath ſo highly merited both of thee & the whole Kingdom of Iſrael? Thus Jonathan having gotten the opportunity of ſpeaking unto his father alone, doth freely admoniſh him, that he might keep him from ſinning, though he had ſaid nothing againſt Sauls bloody command when he firſt heard it in the preſence of the Kings ſervants. The which he did then forbear out of good diſcretion, as thinking it no fit time to diſſwade him when he was in his fury and madneſſe, which would but have made him to become more deſperate, and to break out into greater violence; nor yet in the preſence of his ſervants, before whom he would have ſcorned to be convinced of his ſin. And this it may be made him ſo furious afterwards againſt Jonathan for ſpeaking in Davids defence, becauſe it was done at the table in the preſence of many others, ch. 20. 32, 33.

V. 6. And Saul ſware, As the Lord liveth, he ſhall not be ſlain] This ſacred oath he ſeeketh ſoon after to violate; and by his example proveth that to be true, that great and frequent ſwearers do often foreſwear themſelves and falſifie their oaths.

V. 7. and he was in his preſence as in times paſt] i. e. He was again received to do him ſervice, and to play before him when he was in melancholick fits.

V. 9. And the evil Spirit from the Lord] Which was ſent from God, as his executioner, to vex and torment Saul for his ſin and rebellion. See ch. 16. 14. & 18. 10, 11.

with his javelin in his hand] See on ch. 18. 10.

V. 10. And Saul ſought to ſmite David even to the wall with the javelin] Upon occaſion of Davids great victory over the Philiſtims, Saul, inſtead of honouring him the more for his valour and good ſucceſſe, doth the more envy and rage againſt him, as thinking that all his merits were but ſteps to climb up by into his throne. See on ch. 18. 11.

V. 11. Saul alſo ſent meſſengers unto Davids houſe] When David by Gods good providence had eſcaped the deadly blow which Saul intended to give him, and had avoyded his preſence, he ſtill perſiſting in his wickedneſs and encreaſing in his rage and malice ſendeth after him ſome of his ſervants to ſurprize and murder him at home the next morning. Of which time he made choice for this aſſaſination, rather then to have it acted in the night, (being over-ruled by Gods ſpecial providence herein, that David by this delay might have time to eſcape) either becauſe he thought they might do it with leſs noiſe, when they aſſaulted him in his paſſage, at his coming out of his doors, ſuſpecting nothing, and ſo making no reſiſtance, then if they ſhould break in upon him in a violent manner in the night, when they were likely to find ſome oppoſition; or elſe becauſe he feared that, if he were aſſaulted in the night, he might, whilſt they were breaking open the doors, make an eſcape by ſome back-door or ſecret paſſage, which he could not do if they ſuddenly ſet upon him in the day-light.

And Michal Davids wife told him, ſaying, If thou ſave not thy life to night, to morrow thou ſhalt be ſlain] This ſhe knew either by ſecret intelligence from ſome friend in Court, or becauſe by her ſelf or ſome other ſhe had diſcovered the meſſengers whom Saul had ſent, to watch about the doors of the houſe.

V. 12. So Michal let David down through a window] Becauſe the doors were beſet with Sauls ſervants. See Acts 9. 25.

V. 13. And Michal took an image] Heb. Teraphim: Which properly is taken for ſuch images as they uſed for their oracles, by which they divined. See on Gen. 31. 19 & Judg. 17. 5. This was kept by Michal without Davids knowledge, (as Rachel dealt by Jacob) either out of ſuperſtition, or it may be out of her love to it for the curioſity of the workmanſhip. Or elſe, becauſe Teraphims repreſented a man, this perhaps is here called by that name, though it were no other then an ordinary ſtatue or mans image.

and laid it in the bed] Intending by this device to delude the watchmen, if haply they ſhould by violence break into the houſe to ſurprize David, by making them believe that he lay ſick in his bed, and therefore, in all humanity, was not to be diſturbed, if their commiſſion were not over-ſtrict and rigorous; Or, if ſo, yet at leaſt David might gain ſome time, before it were diſcoved, to make his eſcape, whilſt the matter was in examining, and be gotten out of their reach, though they ſhould purſue him.

and put a pillow of goats hair for his bolſter] As if it had been Davids hair: Hereby deluding Sauls men with hope of taking him at their leiſure, though they did not do it preſently, being intreated by her firſt to know Sauls pleaſure. Or it may be it was a pillow onely ſtuffed with goats hair, ſuch as they then uſed to lay under their heads, as being fit for that ſervice both in reſpect of eaſe and warmth.

V. 14. And when Saul ſent meſſengers to take David, ſhe ſaid, He is ſick] i. e. When the meſſengers whom Saul ſent to watch Davids houſe, had waited till morning, and ſaw that he came not out of doors, as they expected, they went back and told it unto Saul: and thereupon he ſent others, or the ſame again, with a new commiſſion to enter his houſe, and take him. But Michal, thinking *S*ickneſs a reaſonable excuſe to keep them from too eager preſſing upon him, that ſhe might gain time for her husbands eſcape, telleth them an officious lye, that he was ſick.

V. 15. And Saul ſent the meſſengers again to ſee David] Suſpecting it might be but an excuſe which Michal made out of love to her husband, to preſerve him from danger, he returneth them back to ſee whether it were ſo or no; but howſoever, whether he were ſick or well, with a ſtrict commiſſion to bring him, that he might ſlay him; being now not ſatisfied, as before, that they ſhould kill him, unleſs himſelf, for more ſecurity, did ſee it done.

V. 16. And when the meſſengers were come in] To wit, with a full reſolution to execute *S*auls wicked command, they were fruſtrated of their hope, and found in the bed an image inſtead of a ſick man.

V. 17. And Saul ſaid unto Michal, Why haſt thou deceived me ſo] Being certified by his meſſengers what Michal had done, he goeth to her, or ſendeth for her, challenging and reproving her for deceiving her own father, as having therein committed a foul fault, whereas ſhe rather deſerved great praiſe to her love and loyalty towards her dear husband, yea, even to her father himſelf, in uſing this means to withhold him from falling into a bloody and barbarous ſin, and taking (as it were) a ſword out of the hands of a mad man, wherewith he was ready to have killed a faithful friend inſtead of an enemy.

And Michal anſwered Saul, He ſaid unto me, Let me go, why ſhould I kill thee?] i. e. Why ſhouldſt thou, by forcing me to ſtay in a place of much danger, conſtrain me contrary to my will, and the love I bear thee, to take away thy life, rather then loſe mine own? *S*o 2 Sam. 2, 21. Here though Michals loyal love to her husband in ſeeking his preſervation be highly to be commended, and imitated by good wives, yet ſhe cannot be acquitted for telling ſuch a groſs untruth, but was faulty and ſinful in divers reſpects. Firſt, becauſe it was a direct lye, and none of the leaſt ſinful, as ſhe told it. For thereby ſhe layd an unjuſt ſlander upon her husband, which might give great offence, and raiſe a ſcandal upon him, as though, to eſcape danger, he would not ſtick to commit wilful murder. And ſecondly, becauſe hereby ſhe diſcovered her faithleſs fear and diffidence in Gods power and providence, as being unſufficient to preſerve her from her fathers anger, unleſs by lying ſhe provided for her own ſafety. And here by the way obſerve the nature of this ſin of Lying. If once way be given unto it, it doth increaſe and multiply, one lye drawing on another, and a leſſer a greater and lowder; as we ſee in Michals example, who firſt told an officious lye to preſerve her husband, v. 14. and now a pernicious one to ſave her ſelf; Whereas ſhe ſhould rather have imitated her brothers example, and ſpoken boldly to her father in defence of her husbands innocency.

V. 18. So David fled and eſcaped, and came to Samuel to Ramah] Namely, to ask his advice and counſel in theſe extreme dangers, and to be comforted by him in his diſtreſs, and to have his faith confirmed in the promiſe of the Kingdom, by Samuel from God made unto him, which through theſe great trials was ready to waver, ch. 27. 1. Pſal. 116. 11. and (as it is likely) alſo for ſecurity, thinking that the Prophets preſence would protect him, and over-awing Saul, would deter him from his bloody practiſes; and that the place, which was a School of the Prophets, would be a ſanctuary unto him; ſeeing they had lived ſafely there though the Philiſtims garriſon was neer unto it, ch. 10. 5.

V. 19. And it was told Saul, ſaying, Behold, David is at Naioth in Ramah] i. e. by ſome ſpie which he had ſent abroad to ſearch for him, or ſome pickthanks, who had diſcovered him, and did tell it in this manner to Saul, Behold, the man after whom thou ſo much enquireſt, that is, David thine enemy, is at Naioth in Ramah. There was *S*amuels dwelling-houſe, And Naioth, which was neer Ramah, and ſituate in the field and territory belonging to it, being (as the word ſignifieth) a ſolitary place and fit for ſtudy and meditation, there was a School of Prophets near unto it, whereof *S*amuel was overſeer, Father and Preſident.

V. 20. And Saul ſent meſſengers to take David] Being now grown bloody and worſe then barbarous, he purſueth David with ſuch deſperate boldneſs that neither ſanctuary nor preſence of the holy and highly eſteemed Prophet could protect him from his rage and malice.

the Prophets prophecying] i. e. praiſing God with Pſalms and Hymns, praying unto him, and ſpeaking of divine matters. See on ch. 10. 5.

and they alſo prophecied] i. e. were for the time tranſported (like the Prophet) with a divine rapture and ſpirit of prophecie, and ſo forgot the bloody buſineſs about which they were ſent, which was to take David and bring him to Saul.

V. 21. And Saul ſent meſſengers again the third time, and they prophecied alſo] Thus God by his good providence diſpoſed of them, to convince *S*aul of his ſin in purſuing David, when he ſaw him preſerved by ſuch a miracle, and in vain he perſecuted him whom God thus protected; or elſe at leaſt to leave him without excuſe. The like example we have in the high Prieſts officers, which were ſent to apprehend Chriſt, and bring him unto them, Joh. 7. 45, 46.

V. 22. Then went he alſo to Ramah] i. e. when the meſſengers returned not, and he knew not what was the matter; or, being returned,, had related unto him, in their excuſe, this ſtrange wonder, they failing him, he thought to make ſure work by going himſelf, whom he might now think priviledged from the good ſpirit of prophecy, which had inſpired his meſſengers, the evil ſpirit from God being ſent to poſſeſſe him. But it fell out quite contrary to his expectation. For whereas his meſſengers did not prophecy till they came into the company of the Prophets at Naioth, he prophecied before he came thither, in the way as he went, ſhewing by his example that the hearts of Kings are in the hand of the Lord as the rivers of water, to turn them whitherſoever he will, Prov. 21. 1.

and came to a well that is in Sechu] See ch. 17. 1.

V. 23. And the Spirit of God was upon him alſo; and he went on and prophecied] i. e. as it had befallen his meſſengers, ſo it did likewiſe himſelf; he alſo was tranſported with divine raptures, as in an extaſie, and joyned with the reſt in their prophetical exerciſes.

V. 24. And he ſtript off his clothes alſo] That is, he put off his upper and out-ſide habit, whether his military coats and habiliments, or Princely robes, now making no difference between a King and a common perſon.

and lay down naked all that day, and all that night] Not altogether without any clothes to cover his nakedneſs, and to keep him from cold and ſhame, but onely without his Kingly garments and ornaments. In which ſenſe David is ſaid to have uncovered himſelf when he danced before the ark in a linen Ephod, having laid aſide his Princely robes, though Michal in ſcorn and ſpite diſgraceth his humble deportment to a more uncivil end, 2 *S*am. 6. And Iſaiah alſo is ſaid to have gone naked, when he had put off his ſhooes, and looſed the ſack-cloth from his loyns, Iſa. 20. 2. and the Prophet Micah alſo, ch. 1. 8. And thus Saul, as one diſtracted in his mind and ſenſes, lay, or fell down, like one in a trance, not knowing what he ſaid or did, like Balaam, Numb. 24. 4. And here as God was glorified in his power by the dejection of Saul in his proud rage, ſo was Saul diſhonoured and diſgraced, when as all that ſaw him in this plight took notice how he was hampered and reſtrained, maugre all his malice and fury.

Is Saul alſo among the Prophets?] See on ch. 10. 5. and Matth. 7. 22.

CHAP. XX.

Verſ. 1. AND David fled from Naioth in Ramah] i. e. Whilſt Saul, being diſtracted in his prophetical extaſie a whole day and night, minded him not, to apprehend or kill him, David maketh uſe of this opportunity which God by his providence had given him, to eſcape Sauls fury by flying from Naioth, and haſting unto Gibeah unto Saul, where Jonathan was reſident, and Preſident in the govornment whilſt his father was abſent, that he might bemone himſelf unto him, as his dear and ſure friend, and deſire his counſel and aſſiſtance.

and ſaid before Ionathan, What have I done? what is mine iniquity? &c.] This he ſpeaketh not by way of enquiry, to know his fault; for both he and Jonathan too well knew that he was wholly innocent; but by way of expoſtulation and complaint, becauſe he was thus unjuſtly perſecuted; q. d. Thou knoweſt right well that I have done nothing that deſerveth thy fathers diſpleaſure, though he hath fully reſolved to take away my life.

V. 2. And he ſaid unto him, God forbid] To wit, that my father ſhould ſeek thy life; and therefore let ſuch an hard conceit be far from thee. And this Jonathan ſpeaketh with ſuch confidence, out of a filial charity, which would not ſuffer h im to entertain ſuch an ill opinion of his father, David having given him no juſt cauſe: And he had (it may be) not yet heard of his ſending meſſengers to kill him at his own houſe, or of his purſuing him to Naioth: Or if he had any intimation of theſe things, yet he imputed all, not to his malice, but to his diſtemper in his frantick fits, which being over, he would (as he thought) be as readily reconciled unto him as he had been in former times. And beſides, having lately ſo ſolemnly ſworn that he ſhould not dye, ch. 19. 6. he could not think him to be ſo perfidious and wicked as preſently after to violate his oath.

behold, my father will do nothing either great or ſmall, but that he will ſhew it me] q. d. This alſo perſwadeth me that there is no ſuch matter as thou ſuſpecteſt, becauſe there is no ſecret of any importance which he doth noth not impart unto me: and therefore ſeeing he hath not ſpoken a word of any ſuch bloody intention, be not afraid; for it is not ſo.

V. 3. And David ſware moreover, and ſaid] i. e. When he ſaw Jonathan ſo confident in his conceit that he gave no credit to what he had ſaid, he took a ſolemn oath that the thing was ſo, and alſo giveth him a reaſon why his father had concealed his intention from him, becauſe it would but anticipate his grief, in reſpect of that great love that was between them, and alſo would cauſe him to uſe all means to hinder him from that which he was fully reſolved to do.

but truly as the Lord liveth, and as thy ſoul liveth] Here is expreſſed the form of the oath which he uſed to perſwade Jonathan of the truth of that whereof he much doubted. For when the thing is of great importance, (as this here was, Davids life being highly concerned) and can no otherwiſe be proved by convincing reaſons or cleer teſtimonies, and the party alſo to whom we make our atteſtation will no otherwiſe be moved to give credit to our words, in ſuch a caſe it is lawful and neceſſary, even in private dealings between man and man, to call God to witneſſe, as being omniſcient and omnipotent to defend and reward truth and to puniſh falſhood and perjury, that ſo all jealouſies and miſconceits may be removed, love and peace preſerved, and an end put unto all controverſies, Heb. 6. 16. Now whereas he joyneth here theſe together, As the Lord liveth, and as thy ſoul liveth, we are not to take it as though he ſware by both. For an oath is a part of Divine worſhip, peculiar unto God alone, Deut. 6. 13. and we are expreſly forbidden to ſwear by any creature, Matth. 5. 34, 35, 36. for God will not give his glory to another,

Truth,

Iſa.42.8. i.e. the glory of his Omnipotence, Omniſcience, Juſtice and Truth, as they do that ſwear by any creature. Neither doth it follow that the latter of theſe is an oath as well as the former, becauſe they are here both joyned together: For it is ſaid that the people believed the Lord, and his ſervant Moſes, Exod.14.31. yet not with the ſame faith, belief in God, in and for himſelf, being peculiar unto him, and fidelity and credence onely belonging to man; and 1 Chron.29.20. that they bowed their heads, and worſhiped the Lord and the King, but not with the ſame worſhip, Divine worſhip being proper unto God, Matth.4.10. and civil worſhip belonging to the King. And therefore we are not to take theſe words, as thy ſoul liveth, for an oath, but as an earneſt aſſeveration; either thus, As ſurely as I deſire that thy ſoul may live, ſo ſure this is which I ſpeak unto thee; or thus, It is as certain that this thing is true as it is certain that thou liveſt, or the fire burneth, or the Sun ſhineth. And this kind of aſſeveration Hannah uſeth ch.1.26. and Abner ch.17.55. and Uriah 2 Sam.11.11. and the woman of Tekoah 2 Sam.14.19. yea the Lord himſelf Jer.31.36.

there is but a ſtep between me and death] i.e. I am in extreme and imminent danger of death, like a man that is upon the brink of a gulf, and within one ſtep of falling in. Here David cannot be acquitted of humane frailty and infirmity, ſeeing his diffidence appeareth in this paſſionate expreſſion, and alſo ch.27.1. I ſhall now periſh one day by the hand of Saul: And himſelf acknowledgeth it as a fault and failing, Pſal.116.11. in that having a ſure promiſe from God, who had cauſed Samuel to anoynt him King, that he would eſtabliſh him in the Kingdom, he ſhould faint in his faith and hope, and be lyable to theſe fears. Howſoever in this combat with doubting, faith ſtill prevailed, and got the upper hand, as appeareth in many paſſages in the book of Pſalms.

V.4. Whatſoever thy ſoul deſireth, I will even do it for thee] Or, Say what is thy mind and I will do it. This indefinite promiſe is to be limited within the bounds of things lawful, pious, and juſt. And this caution is to be alwayes underſtood, though not here expreſſed, becauſe he well knew that David was ſo pious and juſt that he would deſire nothing of him but that which he knew to be lawful and honeſt.

V.5. Behold, to morrow is the new moon] Here David doubting or rather deſpairing of Sauls good affection towards him, propoſeth a way whereby it might be diſcovered. The Iſraelites by Gods appointment in the ceremonial law had a ſolemn feaſt on the firſt day of every moneth, wherein they offered peace-offerings and gratulatory ſacrifices, ſounding trumpets over their offerings, Numb.10.10. & 28.11. Pſal.81.3. and on the remainder of theſe oblations they feaſted together. This feaſt was to be kept holy as a memorial before the Lord; and though it were not required that they ſhould wholly abſtain from bodily labour, ſaving on the firſt day of the ſeventh moneth, which was to be kept as a Sabbath, and no ſervile work to be done therein, Lev.23.24,25. yet ſome legal preparations and purifications were to go before, as appeareth v.26. This feaſt was to be kept at Sauls court the next day in a ſolemn manner, his chief Nobles accompanying him at the table, and every one having his known ſeat, which was ſo peculiar to him that (as it ſeemeth v.25.) if he were abſent, no other ſat in his place. Among the reſt David, being a great Commander in the army, and the Kings ſon in law, had his ſeat, of which here he ſpeaketh.

Let me go, that I may hide my ſelf in the fields unto the third day at even] i.e. Give me leave to go, that I may keep the feaſt of the New-moon with my kindred at Bethlehem, and on the third day I will come and hide my ſelf in the field, v.6,16,35. David having little reaſon to truſt Saul with his life, in reſpect of the late experience he had had of his rage and malice, deſireth, before he made an appearance at Court, to make ſome tryall of his diſpoſition towards him, for Jonathans better ſatisfaction, by ſeeing how he would take his abſence. And to this end he craveth leave of Jonathan (who was his fathers Lievtenant whilſt he was abroad now at Naioth) that he might hide himſelf three dayes. For though the feaſt it ſelf laſted one day onely, yet there being proviſions in ample and plentiful manner provided, eſpecially at the Kings Court, they were allowed to eat what remained on the next day, if the ſacrifice which was offered were a vow or a voluntary offering, Lev.7.16. (of which kind it ſeemeth this ſacrifice and feaſt was, v.27.) and required on the third day to burn all that was left. But becauſe David knew not what conveniency Jonathan might have on either of theſe dayes to acquaint him with what had paſſed, he deſireth a third day for his non-appearance, for better ſurety and ſecurity.

V.6. If thy father at all miſſe me, then ſay, David earneſtly asked leave of me] i.e. If obſerving who are preſent at the feaſt, he take notice of my abſence, (my place being empty) and ſpeak of it as one that expected my company, then make this excuſe unto him. But how could Saul reaſonably expect Davids preſence, being ſo lately put in fear of his life both at his own houſe and at Naioth? I anſwer, Though he had little aſſurance of it, yet he might conceive ſome hope that David would not refrain coming, becauſe he might be ready to impute thoſe aſſaults and outrages unto Sauls frenzie fits, rather then to any ſettled and reſolved malice; and to think that thoſe fits being over, and he coming himſelf, he would be reconciled, and entertain him again without any danger to him, as he had done divers times before, ch.18.11,17. & 19.7.

Bethlehem his City] i.e. In which he was born, Joh.7.42. So Gen.23.18. & 24.10.

for there is a yeerly ſacrifice there for all the family] This excuſe, it is likely, was in the reality of it very true, although in his main intention he went not thither ſo much for the ſacrifice ſake as to make it his pretence for abſenting himſelf from the Court. That family having in time paſt received from God ſome ſingular benefit, might annually ſet apart a day for memorial of it, and might on it offer peace-offerings and gratulatory ſacrifices; it being lawful to offer ſuch at their houſes before the Temple was built, eſpecially at this time, when as the Ark and Tabernacle were ſeparated. See on ch.9.12.

V.7. If he ſay thus, It is well; thy ſervant ſhall have peace] He deſireth Jonathan to obſerve how his father would take his abſence, ſeeing thereby he might plainly diſcern how he was affected towards him. For if he were not diſpleaſed with it, he intended him no harm; but if he were highly offended, it was a manifeſt ſign that his abſence did croſs his purpoſe and reſolution of doing him a miſchief.

V.8. deal kindly with &c.] To wit, in giving me timely warning to eſcape danger.

Thou haſt brought thy ſervant into a Covenant of the Lord with thee] i.e. A juſt covenant, agreeable to Gods will, and contracted in his preſence, with invocation of him as Witneſs and Judge, to reward the faithful obſervers, and to puniſh them that tranſgreſſed it.

if there be in me iniquity, ſlay me thy ſelf] Seeing if I have deſerved death, thou haſt power to inflict it. This he ſpeaketh, not only in confidence of his own innocency, but alſo becauſe he knew that he was ſo approved in Jonathans own conſcience.

bring me to thy father] To wit, to be killed by him.

V.9. Far be it from thee] i.e. That thou being innocent ſhouldſt dye either by my hand or my fathers.

then would not I tell it thee?] i.e. Aſſure thy ſelf, without all queſtion, that I would not keep it from thee.

V.10. Then ſaid David to Jonathan, Who ſhall tell me?] i.e. What thy father ſpeaketh, good or bad towards me, ſeeing thou canſt hardly come to me thy ſelf without ſuſpicion, or intruſt any ſervant with ſuch a ſecret.

V.11. Come, and let us go out into the field] Where we may talk privately together, and none over-hear us; and where we may adviſe of ſome fit and ſecret place where thou mayſt hide thy ſelf, till I can diſcover unto thee my fathers intentions by ſome means which we ſhall there agree upon.

V.12. And Jonathan ſaid unto David, O Lord God of Iſrael] Or thus, Jehovah the God of Iſrael. Which I conceive to be the better reading in the nominative caſe, rather then in the vocative, ſeeing it may be taken in either. For he doth not here ſpeak unto Jehovah, but unto David of Jehovah in the third perſon, q.d. When I have ſounded my father, and know his mind and purpoſe, if I do not deal faithfully with thee, and truly reveal it unto thee, whether it be good or evil, then let the Lord God of Iſrael, let the Lord, I ſay, do ſo and much more to Ionathan, i.e. inflict deſerved puniſhments upon me as a falſe and faithleſſe friend. This his ſpeech, being uttered with ſome vehemency, he abruptly breaketh off, and ſtopeth in the beginning of it, The Lord God of Iſrael, and then includeth the condition in a parentheſis, in the following words when I have ſounded my father &c. and ſo reſuming the ſpeech broken off, v.13. he imprecateth a curſe againſt himſelf if he proved perfidious and treacherous, The Lord do ſo and much more to Ionathan; and then addeth the other branch of the condition, to wit, If his father intended miſchief againſt him, and he ſhould conceal it, that then he might be liable to the ſame curſe. See Ruth 1.17.

V.13. And the Lord be with thee, as he hath been with my father] i.e. Both in raiſing thee to the Kingdom, and in giving thee many famous victories over thine enemies. This he prayeth, being aſſured of his fathers rejection, and that God had made choyce of David to ſucceed him, ch.23.17.

V.14. And thou ſhalt not only whileſt I yet live ſhew me the kindneſs of the Lord, that I die not] i.e. When God ſhall have made the King after my father, thou ſhalt not cut me off, as thou maiſt do, when the Regall power being in thine hand thou maiſt do what thou pleaſeſt, and alſo haſt ſome cauſe to be ſevere againſt me, my fathers rigorous courſes and unjuſt perſecution of thee having made all his family guilty of death; but having reſpect to my fathfulneſs and love towards thee, thou ſhalt ſhew unto me the kindneſs of the Lord, that is, unchangeable love to them that love him, and great love, according to his own greatneſs and goodneſs; or ſuch kindneſs as thou haſt bound thy ſelf to ſhew unto me by ſolemn covenant, which thou haſt contracted with me in Gods name and in his preſence, which God will therefore require from thee. Here Jonathan ſheweth his great piety and humility, in ſubmitting himſelf patiently to Gods will, even to the loſs of a Kingdome, unto which he was heir by lineal deſcent.

V.15. But alſo thou ſhalt not cut off thy kindneſs from my houſe for ever] Namely, becauſe the covenant made between us extendeth not only to our own perſons but alſo to our poſterity after us. See 2 Sam.21.7.

no not when the Lord hath cut off the enemies of David] i.e. When thou ſhalt have abſolute power in thy hands, there not being an enemy left to oppoſe or hinder thee from doing any thing that ſeemeth good in thine eyes.

V.16. So Jonathan made a covenant with the houſe of David] i.e. Renewed and ratified the covenant which was formerly made between them, ch.18.3.

Let the Lord even require it at the hand of Davids enemies] i.e. call to a ſtrict account, and ſeverely puniſh all Davids perfidious enemies, and my ſelf among the reſt, if I diſcover my ſelf to be one of them, by ſhewing my ſelfe falſe in breaking promiſes, and not revealing my fathers purpoſe towards David, whether he intendeth him good or evil.

V. 17. And Jonathan cauſed David to ſwear again] i. e. As he had renewed and confirmed his covenant by a ſolemn oath with David and his houſe, ſo he requireth him to do the like with him and his poſterity: Which at his motion David willingly did, as appeareth v.42. & 2 Sam.21. having not done it before in this place. Others read it thus, Ionathan ſware again to David. But of this there was no need, ſeeing he had ſworn before, and not David; and in a covenant a mutuall oath is required. And beſides, the other reading ſtandeth better with the Original.

becauſe he loved him] i. e. He made David confirm the Covenant by an oath, becauſe in reſpect of his ardent love towards him he much deſired it might be inviolably obſerved for ever between them and their poſterity after them.

V. 18. to morrow is the new-moon] See on v.5.

V. 19. And when thou haſt ſtaid three dayes] i. e. At Bethlehem, or ſome other ſecret place of ſecurity and ſafety, where he hid himſelf.

then thou ſhalt come down quickly] Namely, from that place where thou didſt lye hid.

and come to the place where thou didſt hide thy ſelf when the buſineſſe was in hand] i.e. that ſecret place where he at the firſt hid himſelf by Jonathans advice when he gave him notice of Sauls reſolution to kill him, ch. 19.2. Hereby it is evident that he did not lye there hid all the time, but rather was at Bethlehem, whither he got leave to go, ſeeing he appointeth him from thence to this hiding-place at the end of the third day.

and ſhalt remain by the ſtone Ezel] Or, by the ſtone that ſheweth the way] i. e. Either which ſtood in the croſs wayes, directing-travellers which way to take, or where Jonathan and David uſed to walk when they intended to have private and ſecret conference.

V. 20. And I will ſhoot three arrows on the ſide thereof, as though I ſhot at a mark] i. e. This ſhall be the token between thee and me, whereby I will ſhew thee what thou ſhalt do, (if I cannot with conveniency, and unſeen, come to ſpeak with thee) as thou didſt deſire, v.10. This device Jonathan uſed to acquaint David with his fathers reſolution towards him, whether good or evil, rather then to go unto him in the place where he lay hid, becauſe he might fear the coaſt would not be cleer, but ſome paſſing to and fro would eſpie him, and ſpeak of it, and ſo it would come to his fathers ear, and make him more jealous of him, when as he underſtood there was ſtill ſuch intercourſe between them.

V. 22. For the Lord hath ſent thee away] i. e. By this ſign given unto thee by me he hath commanded thee to be gone, and to ſhift for thy ſelf. And ſo he telleth him by what means he would perform what he had promiſed and ſworn, v.13.

V. 23. And as touching the matter which thou and I have ſpoken of] i. e. The covenant which we have made between us, and confirmed by oath, the Lord be a juſt Judge and Witneſſe of it, that it may for ever ſtand firm and inviolable.

V. 24. The King ſate him down] i. e. Being returned that morning from Naioth, he ſitteth down at the feaſt of the New-moon at Gibeah.

V. 25. And the King ſat upon his ſeat] In a chair of ſtate ſet at the midſt at the table on the wall ſide, as being the chief place for honour and royalty.

and Ionathan aroſe, and Abner ſate by Sauls ſide] Theſe words by divers Expoſitors are diverſly underſtood. But to omit the moſt of their conceits, which have little probability; ſome think that Abner coming late, after they were ſat, Jonathan roſe up and gave him place, out of that honour and reſpect which he bore him: But this is not likely, that the Prince and heir to the Kingdome being ſat ſhould riſe up and give place to the General of the army, being a ſubject; or that Abner would have taken it, though he had in courteſie offered it. And therefore, to make it more probable, it is conceived that Jonathan compelled him to ſit next his father, under ſhew of doing him honour, or for ſome other pretence; whereas indeed he feared to ſit next his father, leſt he ſhould do him ſome miſchief for ſpeaking in Davids excuſe and defenſe, when he was in his frantick fits; the which he was likely to do, as appeared the day following, v.30,33. Others think (according as Joſephus hath it) that Jonathan uſed to ſit on Sauls right hand, and David on his left, and Abner next unto him; and ſo Davids place being at this time empty, Abner was next unto Saul on his left ſide, there being none between them; and that the meaning of theſe words, And Jonathan aroſe, is no more but this, that Saul being already ſet down in his chair of ſtate at the table, Jonathan aroſe, i. e. did addreſſe himſelf to the table, and ſate down by his father.

V. 26. He is not clean; ſurely he is not clean] And therefore he cometh not to the feaſt, becauſe the law forbiddeth it under the penalty of being quite cut off from the people, Lev.7.20,21. & 11.24. & 15.16. And theſe legal uncleanneſſes were by flux of ſeed, touching dead bodies, &c. as by thoſe places appeareth: and they laſted but to the evening of the ſame day in which they were contracted, Lev.7.39. Therefore Saul asketh for him the next day. And here again Saul ſheweth his groſs hypocriſie, in ſcrupling at ceremonial uncleanneſſes, in the mean time making no conſcience of moral pollutions, malice, envy, and the ſhedding of innocent blood.

V. 27. Wherefore cometh not the ſon of Jeſſe to meat?] i. e. David, whom he calleth the ſon of Jeſſe in ſcorn and contempt, to ſhew his diſpleaſure and indignation againſt him. So Doeg, ch.22.9. and Nabal, ch.15.10.

V. 29 our family hath a ſacrifice] See on ch.9.12.

and my brother hath commanded me to be there] i.e. Having Commiſſion ſo to do from my father.

Let me go, I pray thee] i. e. Thou having authority to grant my ſuit in thy fathers abſence.

V. 30. Thou ſon of the perverſe rebellious woman] Heb. ſon of perverſe rebellion. To make his fault more deſperate he implyeth it was hereditary and fixed in him by birth and blood; and therefore being deſcended from a mother who being perverſe and rebellious had alwayes croſſed him in his deſigns, he could expect no other from him, nor better fruits from ſuch a tree. Neither (ſaith he) can I account thee my ſon, (for then there would be ſome likeneſs of affections and diſpoſitions) but a rebell, who reſiſteſt my known will; nor lawfully begotten by me, but by ſome ſtranger, and born of a mother rebellious like thy ſelf. Others refer the firſt to Jonathans mother, Thou ſon of the perverſe woman; and the latter to Jonathan himſelf, repeating the word ſon, thou ſon of rebellion, or, moſt rebellious ſon. Now it is not much material to inquire whether Jonathans mother were ſuch an one as he reporteth and rendreth her in his raging fit; ſeeing though ſhe were innocent, yet it is the property of men tranſported with frenzy and fury, to vent and eaſe themſelves by ſpeaking as much ill againſt them whom they maligne as wit and malice, ſpite and ſpleen can invent.

thou haſt choſen the ſon of Ieſſe to thine own confuſion] i.e. By making him thy choice friend and favourite, thou haſt ruin'd and undone thy ſelf, ſeeing he will take the Crown and Kingdome from thee, which by right of inheritance belongeth to thee.

and to the confuſion of thy mothers nakedneſſe] Either becauſe thou doſt deprive her of her due honour, of having a King to her ſon; or brand her with a ſuſpicion of diſhoneſty, that therefore thou art illegitimate and not lawfully begotten, becauſe thou doſt not ſucceed me in the Kingdom, but David choſen in thy place.

V. 33. And Saul caſt a javelin at him to ſmite him] Whereby he diſcovered his deſperate reſolution, and ſo gave David ſufficient warning to avoid his preſence, and ſhift for himſelf. And thus by his rage and fury he croſſeth his own purpoſe and deſires: for whereas, if he had diſſembled his anger, he might eaſily have gotten David into his hands, now by thus proclaiming it he teacheth him to uſe his beſt means to provide for his own ſafety.

V. 34. So Jonathan aroſe from the table in fierce anger] Being provoked by the groſſe injuries and foul affronts which his father had offered him, as by railing againſt him, branding him with the ſuſpicion of baſtardy, and attempting to ſmite him with his javelin; and all this, to a wicked and pernicious end, to draw him to partake with him in a horrid and bloody wickedneſſe, by killing David, and in a deſperate impiety againſt God and his known will, by bandying againſt him, and uſing all indirect courſes to keep the Crown ſtill on his own head after God had rejected him, and to intayl the Kingdome to his poſterity, when as God had declared unto him that he had choſen another man better than he.

For he was grieved for David] To wit, becauſe his fathers wrath againſt him was implacable, though he were innocent, and becauſe he had in that furious manner diſgraced him in a publick aſſembly, as though he had been a traytor and rebell.

V. 35. And it came to paſs in the morning] i. e. The third day of the new-moon, which was the time appointed between Jonathan and David, v.5,19.

V. 40. And Jonathan gave his artillery] Heb. inſtruments. i. e. His bow, arrows, and quiver.

Go, carry them to the City] i.e. Gibeah, that he might the more freely and ſecretly talk with David when he was gone.

V. 41. And aſſoon as the lad was gone, David aroſe] To wit, out of the ſecret place where he lay hid. For though Jonathan had agreed of the former ſecret way, by ſhooting arrows to give David intelligence of his fathers purpoſe, fearing he ſhould no otherwiſe do it with conveniency and ſecrecie, becauſe paſſengers going to and fro might haply diſcover them; yet now ſeeing the coaſt cleer, and none in ſight that might take notice of them, David aroſe out of his place to go unto Jonathan, that ſo having gotten this opportunity, they might more freely and fully conſult and confer together.

out of a place towards the South] i. e. The South-ſide of the field, or of the ſtone Ezel, by which David had hid himſelf.

and wept one with another] Bewailing their compelled parting, who were ſo dear one to the other.

untill David exceeded] Becauſe his condition was moſt lamentable, dangerous, and almoſt deſperate; ſeeing he was conſtrained not onely to loſe the ſweet ſociety of a dear friend, but alſo of his wife and family, to leave off the affairs of the Common-wealth, and the proſecution of the wars againſt Gods enemies, in which he had been ſo often victorious, and (which was moſt grievous unto him) to be baniſhed from the houſe of God, the Tabernacle and Ark, with all the holy ordinances, in which he ſo much delighted, Pſal.42.1. & 84.1,2. and to flee as an exile he knew not whither, where he might live in any ſafety; not to Sauls friends, (and who will not at leaſt ſeem ſo to a King that liveth in proſperity?) for they would be ready to betray him; nor to his enemies, for thoſe alſo he had incenſed againſt him by his many victories over them. Into all theſe and many other ſtraits God was pleaſed to thruſt David, for the exerciſe of his faith, hope and patience, and to teach him to make him his onely rock and refuge, and to flee unto him by frequent, fervent and effectual prayer, Pſal.16.1,2. & 144.1,2.

V. 42. For as much as we have ſworn both of us in the name of the Lord] Or, the Lord be witneſſe of that we have ſworn both of us.

The Lord be between thee and me] i. e. Namely, to bleſſe and protect us, to preſerve and deliver us from all difficulties and dangers, and to confirm and perpetuate for ever this love and friendſhip between us and our poſterity after us, which we have renewed and ratified by a ſolemn covenant in his preſence.

And he aroſe and departed] i. e. To Nob.

and Jonathan went into the City] i. e. To Gibeah-Saul, where he kept his Court and reſidence, ch. 23. 18, 19.

CHAP. XXI.

Verſ. 1. T*Hen came David to Nob*] A City in the tribe of Benjamin, twelve miles from Gibeah, and not far from Anathoth, Neh. 11. 32. where the inheritance lay that belonged to the high Prieſt of this family, as appeareth 1 Kings 2. 26. It ſeemeth Saul had cauſed the Tabernacle, with the Altar and table of ſhew-bread, to be removed from Shiloh unto this place (but the Ark remained at Kirjath-jearim untill Davids time) becauſe it was in his own tribe, as before Joſhua an Ephraimite had placed it in Shiloh, a City of Ephraim, for his own uſe and conveniency, that he might upon all occaſions with more ſpeed and eaſe reſort unto it; and David afterwards cauſed the Ark to be removed from Kirjath-jearim to Jeruſalem, that he might have Gods Oracles and Ordinances neer him. And this was the cauſe why at this time there were ſo many Prieſts at Nob, that they might be ready to attend the ſervice of the Sanctuary. Hither David, intending to flee for the ſafegard of his life into the land of the Philiſtims, reſorted, that he might viſit the Tabernacle before his departure, although he could not do it without much danger, in reſpect of the great reſort thither from all parts of the land; and that he might there call upon God in a fervent and publick manner for direction and protection, help and comfort in his diſtreſſed condition; and alſo that he might conſult and ask counſel from Gods Oracle, ch. 22. 10, 13, 15. as Ahimelech is accuſed, and himſelf there confeſſeth.

to Abimelech the Prieſt] He is alſo called Abiah. And it was the manner of the Hebrews to give divers names to the ſame man. He was with Saul in Migron, executing the office of the high Prieſt, ch. 14. 2, 3. But others conceive that this man might be brother to that Ahiah, and, he being dead, ſucceed him in his place. He is called alſo by our Saviour Abiathar, Mar. 2. 26: which was likewiſe the name of his ſon, ch. 22. 20. even as afterwards Ahimelech is ſaid to be the ſon of Abiathar, 2 Sam. 8. 17. Whereby it ſeemeth that both of them had the ſame names, and were called promiſcuouſly, ſometimes by one, and ſometimes by the other. See on 2 Sam. 8. 17.

And Abimelech was afraid at the meeting of David] Either ſuſpecting that ſome ſingular accident had befallen him, or knowing him to be in Sauls diſpleaſure, he feared he was now fled from him, and might bring them into danger that did entertain him. So ch. 16. 4.

Why art thou alone, and no man with thee?] Or, with ſo ſmall a retinue as doth not befit thy place. For from v. 4. and Matth. 12. 3, 4. it appeareth that David had ſome company to attend him, ſome of his ſervants at his departure following either of themſelves, or by Jonathans direction, or by himſelf called by the way to wait upon him. Unleſſe we will ſay (as it is very probable) that David, to the end he might come with more ſecrecie, did come alone, and no man with him, as it is in the text, and had appointed his company to ſtay in ſome place till he returned, as himſelf telleth Ahimelech, v. 2.

V. 2. The King hath commanded me a buſineſſe] Here David through fear and humane frailty, that he might relieve his preſent and preſſing neceſſity of hunger, telleth a flat untruth; the conſequents whereof, through Sauls and Doegs maliciouſneſs, were very lamentable; as the utter deſtruction of Ahimelech, and fourſcore and four of the Lords Prieſts, the whole City of Nob, with all the Inhabitants, men, women and children, yea even the very beaſts. Of which horrible maſſacre though David were innocent, yet it cannot be denyed but that he wittingly gave the occaſion of it, by coming to the high Prieſt for relief when he ſaw Doeg there, whom he knew to be a curſed pick-thank and Sycophant, that would undoubtedly diſcover all to Saul: In which reſpect it muſt needs be acknowledged that it was a great ſin which David committed in telling this pernicious lye, though his preſent neceſſity did much extenuate it, ſeeing Hunger, (as we uſe to ſay) breaketh through ſtone-walls, and Neceſſity hath no law: Yet David himſelf doth not ſo excuſe it, but charging it home, like a true penitent, upon his own heart and conſcience, doth acknowledg that he was the occaſion of this bloody and horrid ſlaughter, ch. 22. 22. And as no doubt he did much bewail it long after, ſo it made him hate the more this ſin of lying, and earneſtly beg of God to be freed from it, as appeareth Pſal. 119. 28, 29. But howſoever, God in his wiſe and juſt providence ſo ordered the whole carriage of this buſineſſe that upon this occaſion his righteous ſentence was in a great part executed upon Eli's houſe, ch. 2. 31.

to ſuch and ſuch a place] Heb. Peloni Almoni. See on Ruth. 4. 1.

V. 3. Now therefore what is under thine hand?] i. e. In thy preſent cuſtody, and at thy diſpoſing, ready to be eaten.

V. 4. There is no Common bread under mine hand] Namely, of what there was there preſent, as David deſired, v. 3. He had no doubt, being an eminent perſon, good ſtore of proviſions at his own houſe, both for thoſe that belonged unto him, and for the entertainment of ſtrangers: but his dwelling, it ſeemeth, was at ſome diſtance from the Tabernacle; and Davids haſte was ſuch, through his apprehenſion of danger, that he could not ſtay, but muſt preſently be gone; and therefore his requeſt is, that without any further delay he might be ſupplyed with five loaves out of the ſtore belonging to the uſe of the Tabernacle; of which at this time there was none to be had but the Shew-bread only, v. 6.

but there is hallowed bread] i. e. Not in reſpect of the matter and ſubſtance, but of the inſtitution, it being conſecrated to a ſacred uſe. This was the Shew-bread: twelve loaves whereof were to be ſet on the table covered with pure gold, ſix on the one ſide, and ſix on the other, which were to ſtand before the Lord alwayes; every Sabbath new ſtore being brought in, and the old taken away, which belonged to the Prieſts alone, and none other might eat of it. See Exod 25. 30. and Levi 24. 5—10. This holy bread was called ſhew-bread, becauſe it was alwayes in Gods preſence, and was a type of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt the Bread of life that came down from heaven, who alwayes appeareth before his Father to make interceſſion for us, Heb. 9. 24. Now though this bread were appropriated to the Prieſts in the ordinary uſe, Lev. 24. 9. yet in the caſe of neceſſity and charity others alſo might eat of it, Matth. 12. 4, 7. ſeeing it is a ruled caſe, that in all matters of weighty concernment ceremonials muſt give place to morals when they cannot both ſtand together. Now whereas ſome on this ground think it was lawful for the Iſraelites to eat things legally unclean, as ſwines fleſh, and the like; it is true, if it were in caſe of neceſſity, and ſo preſſed upon them under this notion: But if the breach of a ceremony did bring with it the tranſgreſſion of a moral duty, there being no ſuch neceſſity, and were impoſed as a neglect or contempt of the law, (as Antiochus preſſed the Jews, in the hiſtory of the Maccabees) then it was not to be done, though they died for it; becauſe thereby they did profeſſedly renounce their religion and obedience unto Gods law, and ſo commit an heinous ſin. The ſame is to be ſaid of things offered unto idols; of which we may eat in a common and civil way, for neceſſities ſake, to ſatisfie our hunger, but not in a religious way, to teſtifie our approbation of idolatrous ſervice, 1 Cor. 10. 27.

if the young men at leaſt have kept themſelves from women] i. e. Their wives: For of no other women can it be reaſonably underſtood, if we reſpect David or thoſe whom he had choſen to attend him. Now this in the judgement of Ahimelech contracted a legal and ceremonial uncleanneſs, Exod. 19. 15. Lev. 15. 18. yet not in it ſelf, (for marriage is honourable and the bed undefiled, Heb. 13. 4. and it is Gods own ordinance, inſtituted in the ſtate of innocency) but in reſpect of the abuſes of the marriage-bed, unto which it is lyable through mans corruption. And in this regard the Apoſtle would have Chriſtians forbear the uſe of it when they ſeriouſly devote themſelves to religious duties, eſpecially faſting and prayers, becauſe natural and carnal pleaſures do not ſuit with exerciſes of humiliation and mortification. But admit that the uſe of their wives did bring with it a ceremonial uncleanneſs, yet Ahimelech was much miſtaken when he thought that for this they were to be debarred from eating the ſhew-bread to ſatisfie their hunger and preſerve their lives; ſeeing this was a moral duty, which might make them lawfully to diſpenſe with it, as well as with the other, of eating the ſhew-bread, which by the ceremonial law belonged only to the Prieſts.

V. 5. Women have been kept from us about theſe three dayes] All which time we have been in our journey, and abſent from our wives.

and the veſſels of the young men are holy] Some underſtand the veſſels in which they carried their proviſions for their journey, as bags, baskets, ſcrips, wallets and the like. But it is not likely they would bring out ſuch veſſels with them but they would alſo bring proviſions in them: and if ſo, they muſt needs be very ſcant, and ſcarce worth the carriage, or elſe how could they be ſo ſoon ſpent, and they reduced to ſuch want and hunger, having yet travelled but a few miles? Or if they had none to bring, is it not likely that where they expected meat they would alſo finde portage and means to carry it? eſpecially if they were ſo moderate and temperate as David, who onely deſireth five loaves for himſelf and his company. And what holineſs do we read of legally required in ſuch veſſels as they carried their ordinary proviſions in for their journey? Therefore I rather incline to their judgement who by veſſels underſtand the young mens bodyes, ſeeing the word is ſometimes taken in this ſenſe, as 2 Cor. 4. 7. 1 Theſſ. 4. 3, 4. Act. 9. 15. 2 Tim. 2. 21. 1 Pet. 3. 7. Neither is this addition ſuperfluous becauſe he had ſaid before that women had been kept from them three dayes, but a neceſſary conſequence of it, that therefore their bodies muſt needs be clean, ſeeing for the ſpace of three dayes they had been kept from them. And this might ſoon be ſpoken, though David were in much haſte.

and the bread is in a manner common, yea, though it were ſanctified this day in the veſſel.] Or, eſpecially when this day there is other ſanctified in the veſſel. i. e. Though whileſt it ſtood upon the table in Gods preſence, conſecrated to his ſervice, it was ſo holy that whileſt the dayes of conſecration laſted it was not lawful, no not for the Prieſts themſelves, to eat of it; yet when the time being expired, it is taken out of the diſhes from the table, and hot bread put in its place, then it becometh but as common and ordinary food, which the Prieſts may lawfully feed upon, as being that portion which God hath allowed them; and therefore we having the like allowance by the moral law, in the caſe of neceſſity and charity, for the preſerving of our lives, may lawfully eat of the ſhew-bread. Hereby it ſeemeth it was the Sabbath-day on which David came to Nob, wherein new bread was put in the place of the old, or at leaſt there was ſtill ſome remaining of that which had formerly been taken away. The like judgement is paſſed on the outward reſt of the Sabbath by our Saviour himſelf: It is to give place to the moral duties of Neceſſity and Charity, upon this ground becauſe the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath, Math. 12. 7. Mark. 2. 27. And by this alſo it appeareth that the outward elements and ſigns in our Sacramens are holy onely in their ſacramental uſe, as water in Baptiſm, and bread and wine in the Lords Supper, but become again ordinary and common when the celebration is paſt and finiſhed.

V. 7. was there that day, detained before the Lord] i. e. Either to keep the Sabbath, or to pay his vows, or to perform ſome other religious ſervice, or upon ſome other occaſion not expreſſed.

and his name was Doeg an Edomite] So called, either becauſe he had ſojourned among the Edomites, though by birth he was an Iſraelite, and of the City Adamah, Joſh. 19. 36. Or rather becauſe he was by Nation an Edomite, but by profeſſion a Proſelyte unto the religion of the Iſraelites; though a notorious wicked man, and a malicious enemy to David: Which was the cauſe why David was ſo much troubled when he ſaw him there, leſt he ſhould relate to Saul his coming thither, and what he did. Some make him a type of Judas, who betrayed Chriſt to the Prieſts.

V. 8. for I have neither brought my ſword, nor my weapons with me, becauſe the Kings buſineſſe required haſte] The true cauſe why he thus came without his ſword and weapons, was becauſe, when he parted with Jonathan, he came ſuddenly away and durſt not go to his own houſe to fetch them, for fear of being ſurprized by ſome whom Saul had appointed to watch for him: But this he concealeth, and telleth another untruth to excuſe the matter: For one lye told maketh ſuch a breach in the conſcience that another following it will find an eaſie paſſage.

V. 9. And the Prieſt ſaid, The ſword of Goliath the Philiſtine,—— it is here] The reſt of his arms David had diſpoſed of, ch. 17. 54. But his ſword was brought to the Tabernacle, there to be reſerved, as a memorial of that victory, to the praiſe of God.

wrapt in a cloth behind the Ephod] i. e. laid by the Ephod in the Tabernacle, as ſome would have it. But ſeeing the Ephod and Breaſtplate were kept in the holy place, where none came but the Prieſts onely, it is not likely that Goliaths ſword was reſerved there, becauſe it would not have fitted the uſe for which it was kept, which was to be unto the people a memorial of the victory, when as none of them might come into that holy place. Therefore others read it thus, after the Ephod, i. e. After Ahimelech had put on the Ephod to ask counſel of God; of which mention is made ch 22. 10, 13, 15. Yet no place in this Chapter but this ſpeaketh of any ſuch conſulting with God. Thus the like phraſe is uſed Gen. 24. 67. & Deut. 24, 20, 21.

And David ſaid, There is none like that; give it me] i. e. None ſo fit for my uſe, ſeeing as oft as I look upon it, it will ſerve both to put me in mind of Gods gracious aſſiſtance for my obtaining of that victory, and move me to praiſe him for it, and alſo to ſtrengthen my faith and affiance in God in the like difficulties and dangers. Nor was it more unlawful for David to take this ſword, in caſe of preſent neceſſity, for his defence, (he having no other) though it were kept in the Tabernacle as a monument of that victory, to the praiſe of God, then to eat the Shewbread in the like caſe; eſpecially if (as it is probable) he had a purpoſe of returning it again when he was otherwiſe provided. But it may ſeem that Goliaths ſword was leſs convenient for his preſent uſe then any other ſeeing he was to go among the Philiſtims, where in all likelyhood it would be known, and bring him into danger. It was his purpoſe to live ſecretly and unknown, as a ſojourner, in that country; but by ſome meanes, and it may be (though it be not ſo expreſſed) by wearing of Goliaths ſword, he was diſcovered to Achiſh his ſervants, & ſo by them brought unto him: And then God juſtly uſed this ſword, which he had gotten by lying for his ſafety and defence, as a means to bring him into extreme danger and fled that day for fear of Saul and went to Achiſh] Achiſh was his proper name; but Pſal. 34. 1. he is called Abimelech, the common name to all the Philiſtine Kings, Gen. 20. 2. as Pharaoh to the Kings of Egypt. To him being King of Gath, one of the five chief Cities of the Philiſtims, ch. 5. 8. did David flee. i. e. not to his Court and perſon, but to his country, where he hoped to lye undiſcovered. But howſoever, ſuch was his fear of Sauls cruelty, that he made choice at all adventures to go into the countrey of the Philiſtims, though profeſſed enemies to the Iſraelites, (eſpecially to him, who had killed their Goliath, and gotten ſo many victories over them) rather then expoſe himſelf to Sauls rage and fury; Even as Proteſtants at this day find it leſſe dangerous to live among the Turks then among the Papiſts in Spain or Italy.

V. 10. And David aroſe] i.e. Prepared and ſet himſelf to go on in his journey.

V. 11. Is not this David the King of the land] i. e. The famous Warriour and chief Commander in the Land, and as it were another King in the eſteem of the people? Or, Is not he the man whom Saul looketh upon, as him whom God hath choſen to be King in his room, and therefore doth purſue and perſecute him to prevent and hinder this choice?

V. 11. And David laid up theſe words in his heart] i. e. Seriouſly conſidering the dangerous conſequence of the words he heard them ſpeak, and how likely they were to incenſe Achiſh againſt him, he much feared he would take occaſion thereby to revenge himſelf upon him.

V. 13. And he changed his behaviour before them] Heb. his taſte. i. e. his geſture, words and carriage, whereby it may be diſcerned whether a man be wiſe or fooliſh, mad or in his right wits; as the taſte diſcerneth of meats whether they be ſavoury or unſavoury, Job. 12. 11. & 34. 3. And this David did, both becauſe mad men are uſually objects of pity rather then of malice and revenge, and alſo becauſe they might now well ſpare him, ſeeing he was not likely, being in this caſe, to do them any further miſchief. Now this carriage of Davids ſome excuſe as lawful, becauſe it was not a lye, (which is properly in words, not in ſigns and actions) but onely a changing of his behaviour, and diſſembling of that which was in him in reality and truth, i. e. Reaſon and underſtanding, under the outward ſhew of madneſſe; and becauſe his end was good, not to hurt any, but to preſerve himſelf from extream danger. But I ſee little difference between ſpeaking and doing that which is falſe, and not as it is pretended, ſeeing they are both contrary to truth, and the one a real, as the other a verbal lye; eſpecially when there is in both an intention to deceive. And though Davids end were good, to preſerve his life, yet this cannot juſtifie his uſing of unlawful meanes. And whereas they ſay, that howſoever he diſſembled with men, yet at the ſame time he put his truſt in God, and prayed unto him for deliverance, as appeareth by the 34 and 56 Pſalms, both made by him on this occaſion; this doth not prove but that there might be much diffidence mixed with his affiance, (as it uſually fareth with Gods deareſt children) which made him uſe this baſe diſſembling, and un-man himſelf, as though he had loſt the uſe of reaſon, and were now become a bruit, without al underſtanding. Neither doth Chriſts ſtaying at Emmaus, when he made ſemblance to the two Diſciples of going further, excuſe Davids diſſembling here; ſeeing Chriſts intention was not abſolute, but conditional, (though real) if the Diſciples did not importune his ſtaying with them. Thus alſo God threatneth to inflict judgements on thoſe whom he intendeth to ſpare, as he did to the Ninevites; and maketh ſhew of preſent execution, when as he doth not intend it, as he dealt with the Iſraelites, 2 Sam. 24. 16. Becauſe his threatnings are not abſolute, but conditional, if they did not repent, and appeaſe his wrath by building an altar, and offering ſacrifice. So Jer. 18. 7, 8.

feigned himſelf mad in their hands] i. e. Becauſe the fame of his wiſdom and valour might bring him into danger, he layeth them by, and counterfeiteth madneſſe, while it was in their power to do him a miſchief.

and ſcrabled on the doors] Or, made marks i. e. uſed the poſtures, geſtures and actions of a mad man, herein exerciſing his wit to act ſeeming madneſſe.

V. 14. Then ſaid Achiſh unto his ſervants, Lo, you ſee the man is mad, &c.] It appeareth that David came not of himſelf to Achiſh, but that having for a time kept cloſe, he was at laſt diſcovered by Achiſh his ſervants, and brought by them before him, that he might deal with him as he pleaſed. And this alſo the title of the fifty ſixth Pſalm importeth.

wherefore then have ye brought him to me?] q. d. Though it might well beſeem me as a King to revenge my ſelf on my enemy when as he is in arms againſt me, or as a man to do to him as he hath done to me, being in the like condition to my ſelf; yet it is below a King, or a man, to revenge himſelf on one who being neither ſouldier nor man, is ſuch an unworthy object of his diſpleaſure.

V. 15. Have I need of mad-men] i. e. Seeing I ſhall gain no honour, but diſgrace and obloquy, by revenging my ſelf on my enemy upon ſuch an advantage, who was able to encounter me whileſt he was himſelf, therefore I ſcorne to defile my hands by imbruing them in his blood; and yet I am not willing he ſhould upon any terms ſtay here any longer, ſeeing it is a diſhonour to my houſe to have ſuch a mad fellow in it: and therefore ſend him away with all ſpeed. Thus God in his all-wiſe providence maketh Davids ſeeming madneſs the means to befool Achiſh, who here ſendeth the man away, when he was in his hands, that was ordained to bring him and his people to utter ruine.

CHAP. XXII.

Verſ. 1. D*Avid therefore departed thence*, and eſcaped to the cave Adullam] Adullam was a city in the tribe of Judah, not far from Bethlehem, eight miles from Jeruſalem South-weſt: Of which ſee Joſh. 12. 15. & 15. 35. From this Town a Cave bordering neer upon it had its name; unto which David reſorted, partly becauſe it was an hold of ſome ſtrength, 2 Sam. 23. 13, 14. and partly becauſe lying in his own tribe, and among his kinred and friends, he expected from them favour and protection.

And when his brethren and all his fathers houſe heard it] To wit, by ſome meſſengers which he ſent unto them to give them notice of his being there; otherwiſe they could not have known of it. Now hearing (as it is likely) that his friends and kindred were oppreſſed and hardly uſed by Saul for his ſake, and that it was likely it would be worſe and worſe with them, he took care for their preſervation, and ſo ſent for them, that they might be ſafe under his protection.

V. 2. And every one that was in diſtreſſe, and every one that was in debt, &c] Not becauſe David, a man after Gods own heart, holy and juſt in all his wayes, intended to make himſelf a Protector of, and the place of his abode a ſanctuary for rebells, fugitives and outlaws, (though his enemies took occaſion thus to calumniate and reproach him, ch. 25. 10.) but onely to releive, comfort and protect ſuch as were afflicted and ſuffered in a good cauſe; as thoſe who either were oppreſſed by Sauls tyrannical government, or were indebted to cruel creditors, that would not be ſatisfied with their lands and goods nor any other means they had to make payment, unleſſe alſo they made them and their children ſlaves, or ſuch others as were embittered in their ſpirits, and groaned under the burden of the like diſcontents. And if any other did thruſt themſelves into his company under theſe pretences, (as is uſual in ſuch a caſe) it was unknown to him, neither would he countenance them in their ill courſes when diſcovered. Nor did he countenance any of his followers in any way of rebellion againſt their King, although his mortal enemy; but if they had any hard thoughts or bad intentions towards him, he checked and reſtrained them, ch. 24. 4, 6, 7. and 26. 8, 9. Neither were they a neſt of robbers, that lived upon plunder and the ſpoyl of the country, but were rather a wall of defence unto the people amongſt whom they lived, to preſerve them from the incurſions and inroades of the common enemies, as Nabals ſervants witneſſe of them, ch. 25. 15, 16. But they were men that lived in a poor, afflicted and diſtreſſed condition, and were in no ſafety but under Davids protection. In which reſpects David and his followers were types of Chriſt and his Diſciples that believed in him; ſeeing Chriſt alſo entertained ſuch as were baſe and contemptible in the eyes of the world, maligned by their enemies, and under the preſſures of many afflictons, deeply and deſperately indebted to Gods juſtice, and groaning eſpecially under the heavy burden of their ſins, Joh. 7. 48. 1 Cor. 1. 26, 27. Matth. 11. 28. See on Judg. 11. 3.

V. 3. to Mizpeh of Moab] There were divers places of this name; but this was a watch-tower or ſtrong hold in the land of Moab. See on Judg. 20. 3. and Hoſ. 5. 1.

Let my father and my mother I pray thee, come forth and be with you] i. e. Out of the land of Judah, and ſojourn for a time in thy country and kingdom. This ſuit he maketh for his parents, that he might provide partly for their eaſe, that they might not be forced in their old age to poſt from place to place with him, as his preſent condition would neceſſitate him to do; and partly for their ſafety, that they might be out of the reach of *S*auls cruel perſecutions. And this requeſt he maketh to the King of Moab upon this ground, as ſome think, Becauſe David was deſcended from Ruth a Moabitiſh woman, Ruth. 4. 17. or rather (as is more probable, this pedigree being ſo far off) he hoped to find the more favour at his hands, becauſe *S*aul, who perſecuted him, was this Kings enemy alſo, and had proſperouſly made war againſt him, ch. 14. 47, 48.

V. 4. And they dwelt with him all the while that David was in the hold] i. e. Davids father and mother dwelt with the King of Moab, i. e. in his country, all the time that David was in the hold; as ſome underſtand it, in Mizpeh, where the King had placed him; becauſe it is unlikely that, having received them into his protection, he would leave them in a ſtrange and heatheniſh country; and becauſe it is ſaid v. 5. that the Prophet Gad bad him from God, not to abide in the hold, but to depart and get him into the land of Judah; which implyeth that he was not now in the cave of Adullam, which was in that tribe, but in the hold of Mizpeh. Others think that by the hold is meant the cave of Adullam; becauſe there was no need that David and his parents ſhould live in a ſtrong hold at Mizpeh, ſeeing they were now out of *S*auls reach, and lived among their friends, who had given them courteous entertainment; and alſo becauſe it is ſaid, that he left his father and mother in Mizpeh of Moab, which he could not have been ſaid to do if himſelf had there ſtill lived with them. And beſides, his ſuit to the King of Moab was not for himſelf, but that his father and mother might live in his countrey. And this reaſon hath ſome colour for it, but the other is grounded on a miſtake: For it is not ſaid that David left them with the King of Moab, but onely that he brought them before him, and having obtained his grant that they ſhould ſojourn in his countrey, they lived in the hold together, till Gad gave David warning to be gone. See on 2 Sam. 8. 2.

V. 5. And the Prophet Gad] Davids *S*eer, 1 Chron. 21. 9. and a Prophet of the Lord, with whom he uſed to conſult. He was ſent unto him by God after he had numbred the people, 2 Sam. 24. 11.

Abide not in the hold, depart, and get thee into the land of Judah] Either becauſe the King of Moab and his people were treacherous or idolatrous, or becauſe God was pleaſed to bring Davids faith to a further trial by Sauls perſecutions, and by many trials and tentations in his own country.

V. 6. Now Saul abode in Gibeah under a tree in Ramah] Or, a grove in an high place. And it is the better reading to take Ramah here appellatively for an high place, then properly, for the name of a city, becauſe it cannot be ſaid that he was in Gibeah, or the territories of it, and alſo in Ramah at the ſame time, ſeeing theſe two places were diſtant one from the other twelve miles. And the other word here uſed is better tranſlated Grove then Tree, as being the more proper ſignification. Thus it is taken Gen. 21. 33. And Abraham planted a grove in Beer-ſheba.

having his ſpear in his hand] Like a tyrant ful of jealouſies and fears, who thinketh not himſelf ſafe and ſecure though compaſſed by his friends and followers.

V. 7. Then Saul ſaid to his ſervants that ſtood about him, Hear now, ye Benjamites] Or, you ſons of Jemini. q. d. Why do you, who being of mine own tribe and kindred ſhould chiefly provide for my welfare and ſafety, conſpire with David againſt me, and keep him and his counſels hidden from me?

will the ſon of Jeſſe] *S*ee on ch. 20. 27.

give every one of you fields and vineyards] i. e. Either can he do it now, being a baſe and beggarly fugitive, who hath nothing in preſent poſſeſſion to relieve himſelf? Or is it likely that he would do it if he ſhould come to be King, ſeeing he is of another tribe, and you but ſtrangers unto him? Thus Saul, like a tyrant, having no true worth in himſelf or his government, ſeeketh to make ſure unto him his followers and favourites by his largeſſe and bounty, conferring upon them ſuch gifts and riches as he got by oppreſſions and exactions from his other ſubjects, as Samuel foretold ch. 8. 14.

V. 8. that ye have all conſpired againſt me] This he ſpeaketh out of jealouſie and ſuſpicion, not out of certain knowledg; yea, rather the contrary was true. For howſoever *S*auls Courtiers had fawned upon David in his proſperity, yet now they had left him, and were at *S*auls command, to execute his deſignes, and do all ill offices againſt him.

and there is none that ſheweth me that my ſon hath made a league with the ſon of Jeſſe] For this he could not juſtly blame them, ſeeing they could not know that which they had done in ſecret by themſelves. Neither indeed did himſelf know it, but only ſuſpected it, and it may be on this ground, becauſe Jonathan had ſince that groſſe affront offered him abſented himſelf from the Court. And he thought alſo that David durſt not have returned into the land with ſuch little ſtrength, unleſſe there were ſome new plot and conſpiracy between them.

that my ſon hath ſtirred up my ſervant againſt me to lye in wait] This alſo was utterly falſe, ſeeing David did not lye in wait for him, but he for David, ſeeking by all meanes to take away his life. But here to make the matter more odious, he joyneth together his ſervant and his ſon in this conſpiracy; the one a mean and contemptible perſon, whoſe chief honour was to obſerve and pleaſe his maſter; the other, who being ſo neer and deer unto him, ought to prefer his welfare and honour before all other friends in the world.

V. 9. Then anſwered Doeg the Edomite] A Court-Sycophant, who conceiving by Sauls ſpeech ſome likelihood that he would prefer and enrich thoſe who would be helpful unto him in his malicious deſigns againſt David and his friends, applyeth his ſpeech to the humour of his Maſter, rather then to inform him in the truth; and maliciouſly and ſlanderouſly traduceth an innocent, Pſal. 52. 1, 2.

which was ſet over the ſervants of Saul] i. e. As the chief and maſter-heardſman over all the reſt, ch. 21. 7. Or, as others read it, Who ſtood among the ſervants of Saul, as v. 6. This Doeg, being a right Edomite, and ſo an enemy to David a true Iſraelite, as Eſau before was to Jacob, telleth Saul the ſtory of Davids coming to Abimelech, and what paſſed between them; maliciouſly wreſting all they did to the worſt ſenſe, and concealing all that might any waies excuſe them, as will appear in the particulars. And this cauſed David to charge him with lying and ſlandering as well as with malice and miſchief, and to threaten againſt him utter ruine and deſtruction, Pſal. 52. 3, 4, 5.

I ſaw the ſon of Jeſſe coming to Nob] He calleth David by way of contempt the ſon of Jeſſe, to pleaſe *S*aul in his humour, who had ſo called him in Doegs hearing; although he being King might better do it then ſuch a baſe fellow as Doeg, who was but the Kings herdſman, and David his ſon in law and a great Commander.

V. 10. And he enquired of the Lord for him; and gave him victuals] Here he telleth *S*aul that which might incenſe his wrath, but concealed what might have appeaſed it, and cleared Ahimelech from any fault or blame; as that David told him he came, ſent by *S*aul, upon his ſervice, and that in ſuch haſte that he had no time to make further enquiry; neither did he think he needed, ſeeing he had been before ſent upon many imployments; and in ſuch caſes he had often enquired of God for him with Sauls good liking and approbation.

V. 11. Then the King ſent to call Abimelech] That he might lay to his charge thoſe things which Doeg had witneſſed againſt him, *S*ee ch. 14. 3.

and all his fathers houſe, the Prieſts that were at Nob] Who were the moſt of the remnant of Eli's houſe, that God threatned to cut off, ch. 2. 31.

V. 12. And Saul ſaid, Hear now, thou ſon of Ahitub] So he calleth him, without any other title, by way of contumely and diſgrace, not vouchſafing to give him his own name, to ſhew his diſpleaſure and indignation againſt him.

V. 13. Why have ye conſpired againſt me, thou and the ſon of Jeſſe] Theſe words contain his arraignment and inditement; in all the parts whereof there is not one word of truth in that ſenſe that it is laid againſt him. For there was no conſpiracy between him and David againſt *S*aul, but he had done all theſe things here charged upon him in the truth and ſimplicity of his heart, having therein this reſpect, to do *S*aul ſervice. But *S*aul, being a bloody Tyrant, and fully reſolved to cruſh and ruine him, taketh upon him to be his accuſer, a witneſſe aginſt him, and his judge.

that he ſhould riſe againſt me, to ly in wait] This was utterly falſe, ſeeing Ahimelech had no ſuch end in relieving David; neither had David the leaſt purpoſe to rebel againſt Saul, or to watch for any opportunity to do him the leaſt hurt; but contrariwiſe *S*aul did riſe againſt him with all his might, and uſed all poſſible means he could to deſtroy him utterly.

V. 14. Then Abimelech anſwered the King and ſaid, And who is ſo faithful among all thy ſervants as David] Here he maketh his juſt apology with all honeſt ſimplicity, without any worldly policy. For ſpeaking in his own defence, he alſo juſtified David, whom *S*aul mortally hated; and by commending him in an high manner he ſecretly taxeth the King of injuſtice and tyrannical cruelty, in ſeeking to deſtroy him that had ſo well deſerved of him and the whole Common-wealth; and thereby he did the more incenſe his wrath both againſt himſelf and David alſo. The Politicians of our dayes, had they been in Abimelechs caſe, would have acknowledged their error and miſtake, and have profeſſed that, now they knew David better, they would take heed of him for the time to come. But this good man abhorred theſe ſubtle and ſinful ſhifts; and rather then he would not keep a good conſcience, in juſtifying the righteous, he is content to run himſelf into danger. In this his apologie he acknowledgeth the doing of the things wherewith Saul chargeth him, but utterly denyeth that they were done with any treacherous mind againſt Saul, but rather herein to do him ſervice, out of that good opinion which he had of David, and was by him well deſerved; ſeeing he had alwaies approved himſelf, above all the reſt of the Kings ſervants, to be faithful in all his undertakings, for which the King himſelf had ſo highly valued him that he had received him into neer alliance, and done him that honour to make him his ſon in law; and had been ever obedient to the Kings commands, going out on all ſervices, when he was pleaſed to appoint, though never ſo full of difficulties and dangers; and alſo who was highly advanced in the Court, and held in great honour among all the Kings ſervants.

V. 15. Did I then begin to enquire of God for him?] q. d. If I had now onely done it, when David was ſomewhat in the Kings diſpleaſure, there might be ſome ground of jealouſie, though it hath been often ſo before, and yet they have been again reconciled: but ſeeing it hath been my uſual cuſtom thus to enquire of God for him in former times, when he hath gone out on the Kings ſervice, it cannot now be imputed unto me for any fault, much leſſe for a treacherous conſpiracy againſt my Lord and Sovereign, which my ſoul abhorreth: Therefore be it far from me to deſerve ſuch a hard cenſure, and from the King to conceive and entertain it.

for thy ſervant knew nothing of all this, leſs or more] i. e. Of any conſpiracy or rebellion againſt thee. In all this his apology he ſaith nothing at all of that which (as it ſeemeth) would have been moſt effectual for his excuſe, namely that he had been deceived by David, and drawn on to do all he did by thoſe untruths which he had told him. And this he forbore to ſpeak, either to avoid Davids diſpleaſure, who, if either he were again reconciled to Saul, or himſelf ſhould come to the King, might revenge upon him the diſcovery of his ſecrets ſo much to his prejudice; or rather, as I think, the good man was loath, by excuſing himſelf of a ſeeming fault, to accuſe David of one that was foul and real, and thereby to incenſe *S*aul the more againſt him, whom he ſaw already out of meaſure inraged.

V. 16. And the King ſaid, Thou ſhalt ſurely dye, Abimelech, thou and all thy fathers houſe] Thus, like an unjuſt Judge and bloody Tyrant, he pronounceth the ſentence of death againſt the innocent Prieſts, deſperately ſhutting his eares to Abimelechs juſt defenſe, becauſe he was fully reſolved to execute his malicious Will upon not only Abimelech himſelf, but his whole family, though he had not ſo much as any colour of faultineſſe to lay to their charge. As this cruel doom was tranſcendently horrible in it ſelf and the matter of it, ſo was *S*aul moſt unjuſt and illegal in his manner of proceeding. For whereas by the law none ſhould dye under two or three witneſſes, he condemneth ſo many upon the bare and malicious teſtimony of a falſe and flattering Sycophant. Neither doth he take any time of deliberation to examine the cauſe, and the reaſons, and further teſtimonies which might be produced; but in rage and fury proceedeth from a raſh ſentence to a preſent execution, without any delay. And thus this damnable hypocrite, who out of ſeeming pity and mercy would ſpare Agag, that was appointed by God to dye, is now ſo fleſht in blood and cruelty that he ſticketh not to murder and maſſacre a multitude of innocents.

V. 17. And the King ſaid unto the footmen] Or, to the guard, which waited upon him, and attended his perſon, to preſerve him from danger.

Turn and ſlay the Prieſts of the Lord] Theſe words have an emphaſis in them, ſhewing that Sauls malice was bent againſt the Lord himſelf, becauſe he favoured David, and had rejected him; and becauſe his rage could not reach unto God himſelf, therefore he ſlew his Prieſts. Hence ſome very probably gather that *S*aul committed that unpardonable ſin againſt the Holy Spirit, maliciouſly oppoſing Gods known Will, and perſecuting to the death thoſe who ſubmitted unto it and laboured to execute it.

But the ſervants of the King would not] Chuſing rather to obey God, who had forbidden murder, than this wicked King, in being his inſtruments and agents in ſuch an horrid maſſacre.

V. 18. And the King ſaid to Doeg, Turn thou and fall upon the Prieſts] i. e. When all others refuſed, Saul knowing him to be a deſperate bloody villain, that made no conſcience of perpetrating any miſchief, commandeth him to be his executioner; and that joyning to him his ſervants, who were alike bloodily minded to himſelf, they ſhould together fall upon them, and put them all to the ſword. For it is not probable that Doeg himſelf in one day could murder ſuch a multitude without help.

and he fell upon the Prieſts, and ſlew on that day fourſcore and five perſons] Whileſt this baſe wretch and his cruel maſter thought of nothing but revenge and ſatiating their barbarous bloody thirſt, they are unwittingly made the executioners of Gods juſt ſentence againſt Eli's family, ch. 2. 31:

that did wear a linen Ephod] i. e. Such Prieſts as were of full age to execute their function, Exod. 28. 40, 42, 43. See ch. 2. 18. He ſlew beſides a multitude of others which were children, youths, and ſuperannuated: for all the whole family was ſentenced to death, v. 16. and execution done accordingly, v. 19. All which togethar amounted, as Joſephus relateth it, to the number of three hundred eighty five perſons.

V. 19. And Nob, the City of the Prieſts, ſmote he] Having, it is very likely, *S*auls command for this horrid execution, though it be not here expreſſed. Of Nob ſee on ch. 21. 1. & Joſh. 18. 1.

V. 20. And one of the ſons of Abimelech——named Abiathar, eſcaped] To wit, by Gods providence and protection, who according to his promiſe preſerved ſome of Eli's poſterity, ch. 2. 33. But all the reſt were ſlain. For though God was pleaſed to ſuſpend the execution of his threatning againſt Eli's houſe, which was juſtly deſerved by the outragious wickedneſs of his ſons, and his diſhonouring God by not puniſhing them, yet at laſt he cauſed it to be inflicted on them in this fearful yet juſt manner. For though he may juſtly puniſh the ſins of the forefathers, unto the third and fourth generation, with temporal puniſhment, becauſe in a civil relation they are all members of the ſame body, communicating with one another in temporal benefits and afflictions, weal and wo; yet he doth ſeldom inflict any temporal judgement upon the poſterity even of wicked men without reſpect to their own ſins, wherein they go on following their parents in the ſame ſteps of wickedneſſe, or the like. And though little infants cannot be guilty of, nor acceſſary to the actual ſins of their parents, yet for that original corruption which they have derived from them, and wherewith their whole nature is poyſoned and infected, they have deſerved even death it ſelf of body and ſoul, which God may juſtly inflict at what time, or in what manner he pleaſeth, as will moſt turn to the advancement of his glory. And therefore howſoever theſe Prieſts were innocent of thoſe crimes for which they ſuffered, yet they were guilty of other ſins in the ſight of God, for which he inflicted upon them theſe puniſhments, which were moſt unjuſt in reſpect of Saul and Doeg. Yea, the ſmall infants had juſtly deſerved death from God for the ſinning ſin in which they were born, and which is the filthy fountain whence all actual tranſgreſſions ſpring and flow. In this reſpect it is not wiſdom in our afflictions to contend with God, as Job did before God had diſcovered unto him his folly, but, like him when he was convinced, to lay our hands upon our mouthes, and with David to pray that God will not enter into judgement with his ſervants, ſeeing in his ſight no fleſh living can be juſtified, Pſal. 143. 2.

and fled after David] And came to him when he was going to Keilah, chap. 23. 6. *S*o what is related here is by Prolepſis or Anticipation.

V. 22. And David ſaid to Abiathar, I knew it that day] i. e. I verily thought, or my mind did much miſ-give me, when I ſaw Doeg there, and knew his malice and wickedneſs, that he would in a malicious manner relate all that paſſed there unto the King; whereupon would follow theſe lamentable accidents. In which reſpect David was much to be blamed for bringing the Prieſt into danger by deluding and inveigling him with his untruths.

I have occaſioned the death of all the perſons of thy fathers houſe] i. e. Though I was no cauſe of it, as having no ſuch intention, (it being ſore againſt my will) yet I muſt needs confeſs to my great grief and ſorrow of heart that I have been the occaſion of it; ſeeing they ſuffered theſe calamities not onely for my ſake, but partly alſo through my fault.

V. 23. Abide thou with me] i. e. Under my protection and care that I may, as much as in me lyeth, repair thy loſs, and make thee ſome amends.

he that ſeeketh my life, ſeeketh thy life] i. e. We are both purſued even to the death by a common enemy: But be of good comfort: for I will adventure my own life to preſerve thine, and will be as careful of thy ſafety as of mine own; ſo that he who will take away thy life ſhall have mine alſo.

CHAP. XXIII.

Verſ. 1. THen they told David] i. e. Whileſt he abode in the forreſt of Hareth, ch. 22. 5. ſome man brought him this news; or the men of Keilah themſelves, being in this danger of the Philiſtims, and fearing that Saul could not ſo ſpeedily raiſe forces and come to their aid as David that was neer at hand and had his forces about him, ſent meſſengers unto him on purpoſe to acquaint him with their preſent diſtreſs, and to crave his help.

Behold, the Philiſtims fight againſt Keilah] This was a city of Judah, Joſh. 15. 44. bordering on the Philiſtims country, and not far from Hareth, which was likewiſe in the ſame tribe.

and they rob the threſhing-floors] To wit, of the corn that was brought into them, and beaten out in them. Theſe floors, it is likely, lay in the ſuburbs and out-parts about the city; it ſelf being defenſible againſt ſudden inrodes, having walls and gates, bolts and bars, to keep an enemy out.

V. 2. Therefore David enquired of the Lord, ſaying, Shall I go and ſmite theſe Philiſtims?] Before he would go out to war, he would conſult with God, and not raſhly undertake a buſineſs of ſo great weight. This had been formerly practiſed, Judg. 1. 1. and 20. 18, 27. And this David now the rather did, becauſe this was the firſt expedition he undertook of himſelf againſt Gods enemies, the former having been at *S*auls command; and becauſe having but an handful of men with him to encounter the Philiſtims, even neer their own borders, that were ſo potent and numerous, he would not raſhly attempt ſuch a dangerous ſervice, unleſs he had encouragement from God, and a promiſe of victory. Now he enquired of the Lord, it is moſt likely, by the Prophet Gad, who is ſaid to have been with him, ch. 22. 5. For, as it ſeemeth, ver. 6. Abiathar came not to him with the Ephod till he was at Keilah.

V. 3. And Davids men ſaid unto him, Behold, we be afraid here in Judah]

Judah] Namely, of being ſurprized by Sauls army, though we now are in the heart of the country among our friends: how much greater cauſe then of fear is there if we attempt the relief of Keilah againſt the Philiſtims great armies? For though it alſo be a city of Judah, yet it is ſituate on the very frontiers of the enemies country, whence they may have dayly freſh ſupplies: And moreover, Saul, when he heareth of our going thither, will purſue us; and ſo we ſhall be encloſed with enemies before and behind.

V. 4. Then David enquired of the Lord yet again] Not as doubting himſelf of the truth of Gods firſt anſwer, but to ſatisfie his followers, who were in fear, and took no notice of Gods former anſwer but by Davids report onely. *S*ee the like Matth. 11. 2, 3.

V. 5. So David and his men went to Keilah, and fought with the Philiſtims, and brought away their cattel] i. e. Either thoſe they had brought with them to victual their camp, and to carry back with them the ſpoiles of their enemies, or ſuch as they had taken from the Iſraelites in this expedition.

V. 6. And it came to paſs when Abiathar——fled to David to Keilah, that he came down with an Ephod in his hand] i. e. In his cuſtody and poſſeſſion, and together with it the Breſt-plate with Urim and Thummim, whereby he conſulted with God, being the high Prieſt, Exod. 28. 30. His coming muſt needs be very acceptable to David, not onely becauſe he had eſcaped the common ſlaughter, but alſo becauſe he brought with him the Ephod, whereby he might ask counſel of God in all difficulties. Of which comfort and priviledg *S*aul being by this means deprived, it was a plain evidence of his rejection, and of Davids advancement to the Kingdom.

V. 7. And it was told Saul that David was come to Keilah] Namely, by ſome of his ſpies whom he had appointed to obſerve his motions.

And Saul ſaid, God hath delivered him into my hand] Though *S*aul were hated and rejected of God, and David accepted and beloved as better then he, and a man according to his own heart, yet, like a fooliſh hypocrite, Saul here putteth out his own eyes, and is willing to delude himſelf and others, with a conceit, that God out of his love to him had by a ſecret providence, David not thinking of any ſuch matter, brought him into ſuch a nooſe as he might eaſily catch him.

V. 8. And Saul called all the people together to war] i. e. muſtred a great army, under colour of going to relieve Keilah, whereas his purpoſe and intention was to ſurpriſe David and his men.

V. 9. And David knew that Saul ſecretly practiſed miſchief againſt him] i. e. Both by ſecret intelligence from ſome of his friends and upon good grounds of reaſon he plainly underſtood that howſoever Saul pretended, in raiſing this army, to make war againſt the Philiſtims, yet he intended to come therewith againſt him and his followers, as ver. 10.

V. 10. Saul ſeeketh to come to Keilah, to deſtroy the city for my ſake] Thereby ſhewing himſelf not a good King, who ſeeketh the preſervation of his people, but a cruel Tyrant who ſought their deſtruction. Though he made no haſte to raiſe an army to ſave Keilah out of the hands of the Philiſtims, yet now out of malice to David he can do it, to ruine the City for his ſake, as he had done Nob before.

V. 11. Will the men of Keilah deliver me up into his hand? Will Saul come down] David was here in a great ſtrait. He ſaw the city of Keilah was of good ſtrength for defence againſt *S*auls forces, if the Citizens would be faithfull unto him; but though he had newly done them ſo great a favour, he much doubted whether he and his company might continue with any ſafety among them. He therefore maketh his addreſs unto God, and propoundeth theſe two queſtions, wherein he deſireth to be reſolved from Gods Oracle; I. Whither the men of Keilah would prove treacherous unto him, if they were put upon trial; II. Whether they would be put upon it, or no, by Sauls coming. Unto both which God giveth an affirmative anſwer, yet not to be underſtood abſolutely, ſeeing neither Saul came to Keilah, nor did the Keilaites deliver David; but conditionaly, if David ſtill ſtayed there: *S*o that it was rather a warning, to teach him what he ſhould do, then a poſitive truth, to inform him what they would do. God in his præſcience knoweth future contingents, what would come to paſs in the courſe of natural cauſes, though in his abſolute decree he hath purpoſed they ſhall never happen, and therefore croſſeth their courſe by other contingents. So here he telleth David that Saul certainly would come down, and that the men of Keilah would deliver him into his hands, if their purpoſe were not croſſed by Davids departure.

V. 12 Then ſaid David, Will the men of Keilah deliver me,——and the Lord ſaid They will deliver thee up] Though in common humanity they were bound to have protected David with the hazzard of their lives againſt Sauls rage, ſeeing they knew him to be innocent, and had ventured the life of himſelf and his followers in their defenſe, yet all this would not make them faithful to David, nor keep them from requiting his ſervice with baſe treachery. Yet this proceeded not out of any hatred to David, but love of themſelves. Who hearing that Saul was coming againſt them with a great army, and what cruel execution had been done on the City of Nob, they feared, if they ſhewed any favour to David, it would be their caſe, and therefore thought it better that one innocent perſon ſhould periſh then that their whole City ſhould be deſtroyed.

V. 13. Then David and his men, which were about ſix hundred aroſe and departed out of Keilah] Though having lately obtained ſo great a victory with his ſmall company againſt a great army of the Philiſtims he might conceive hope by the ſame aſſiſtance to prevail in like manner againſt Saul and his forces, yet he rather choſe to go away and make what ſhift he could for their ſafety, then to fight with Saul and his army, partly becauſe he would not lift us his hand againſt the Lords anoynted, and partly becauſe he would avoid the ſhedding of the blood of Gods people; who would have been ſlaughtered on both ſides, if it had come to a battel; which would have brought this ſcandal upon him, that out of ambition he had by forcible means aſpired to the Crown, and laid the foundation of his Kingdome in the blood of his people.

and it was told Saul——and he forbare to go forth] i. e. He deſiſted to perſecute his purpoſe of going to Keilah.

V. 14. And David abode in the wilderneſſe in ſtrong holds] As indending only to ſtand on his own defenſe, and not to raiſe an offenſive war.

and remained in a mountain in the wilderneſſe of Ziph] There were two Cities of this name; one ſpoken of Joſh. 15. 24. diſtant from Jeruſalem two and twenty miles, as travellers report, and neer unto Idumea; in which were many ſteep mountains and clifts of rocks, Obad. 3. The other neer Maon, mentioned Joſh. 15. 55. and four miles from Keilah. This is here meant; and from hence the wilderneſſe adjoyning had its name.

and Saul ſought him every day] i. e. So maliciouſly was he bent againſt him that he made it his chief work to proſecute him every day i. e. as long as he ſtayed in the land, 1 *S*am. 27. 4.

V. 15. And David ſaw that Saul was come out to ſeek his life] i. e. Had intelligence thereof by his ſpies and friends.

V. 16. And Jonathan——went to David into the wood] Being a moſt faithful and affectionate friend, no danger could reſtrain him from doing this ſeaſonable duty of viſiting and comforting David in his greateſt need and moſt deſperate extremities.

and ſtrengthened his hand in God] i. e. By putting him in mind of Gods promiſes, and aſſuring him of his protection and favourable providence watching over him, he ſtrengthened his faith, and filled his heart with comfort and courage. See ch. 30. 6.

V. 17. And he ſaid unto him Fear not for the hand of Saul my father ſhall not find thee] i. e. Neither ſhall he by all his diligent and daily ſearch diſcover thee, neither ſhall his power reach unto thee, to do thee any hurt.

and thou ſhalt be King over Iſrael] Or, but thou ſhalt be King, &c. Of this Jonathan had full aſſurance by Samuels anoynting him and Gods proſpering him in all his heroick acts and enterprizes.

and I ſhall be next unto thee] Of this he conceived hope grounded on Davids love and the firm covenant contracted between them, though he had no aſſurance of it, God having paſſed no ſuch promiſe unto him, but being purpoſed to diſpoſe otherwiſe of him, and to advance him from an earthly pilgrimage to an heavenly Kingdom. And thus (as it is obſerved) Gods faithful children do ſometimes fail of their hopes in earthly things, whereof they have no abſolute promiſe, for their better preferment unto things ſpiritual and heavenly. So Paul hoped that God would deliver him from death, as he had formerly done, 2 Cor. 1. 10. and that he ſhould be reſtored to the Philipians, and continue with them when he wrote from Rome to them, where he was priſoner; but he was not delivered from thence, but there ended his dayes by a glorious martyrdome, Phil. 1. 25.

and that alſo Saul my father knoweth] To wit, by remembring *S*amuels words, ch. 15. 28. and ſeeing Gods favour towards thee, in thy good ſucceſſe and continual preſervation, ch. 20. 30, 31. and 24. 20.

V. 18. And they two made a covenant] i. e. Renewed and confirmed their covenant by oath in the preſence of God the ſecond time, after it was firſt made, ch. 20. 16. and 18. 3. and (as ſome think) in the preſence of Abiathar the high Prieſt, with the Urim and Thummim.

V. 19. Then came up the Ziphites to Saul to Gibeah] The Ziphites were of the tribe of Judah, and of Calebs poſterity, deſcended from Ziph his grandſon, who gave them their name, 1 Chr. 2. 42. Then this muſt needs much trouble and afflict Davids ſoul, that his brethren of the ſame tribe ſhould deal thus treacherouſly with him, yea, and preſently after he had ſaved them out of the hands of the Philiſtims their mortal enemies. Therefore in anguiſh of ſpirit upon this occaſion he penned the fifty and fourth Pſalm, in which he complaineth of their perfidiouſneſſe under the name and notion of ſtrangers that were riſen up againſt him, ver. 3. For though they were brethren in reſpect of their tribe, yet they were ſtrangers in reſpect of their alienation in affection. Now of this their treachery there was, it is likely, the ſame cauſe that moved the men of Keilah, to wit, their fear of *S*auls wrath, and the horrid effects which had iſſued from it to all the inhabitants of Nob, and would to them alſo if David ſhould be ſuffered to ſhelter himſelf in their country.

Doth not David hide himſelf] i. e. Know aſſuredly that he hath hid himſelf.

in the hill of Hachilah, which is on the South of Jeſhimon] Heb. on the right hand of the wilderneſſe, as the Vulgar Latine readeth it, and others alſo take it. But I conceive they are in the right who uſe the words Hachilah and Jeſhimon as proper names of known places, as our Tranſlation hath it; ſeeing they were more fit to direct Saul to the particular place where David lay, then thoſe more general terms, the right hand of the wilderneſſe.

V. 20. And our part ſhall be to deliver him into the Kings hand] i. e. Do but grace our action by thy preſence, and back it by thy power and aſſiſtance, and there ſhall be no failing on our part for the apprehending of him and bringing him under thy power.

V. 21. And Saul ſaid, Bleſſed be ye of the Lord] Here, in his hypocriſie, he maketh ſhew of religion to encourage them in their treachery, and dareth to pronounce a bleſſing from the Lord, after that in defiance of him he had ſlain his Prieſts.

V. 22. Go, I pray you, prepare yet, and know —— for it is told me that he dealeth very ſubtilly] q. d. Ye cannot be too cautious and cunning in diſcovering his lurking-holes, ſeeing he is ſo full of craft and ſubtilty (as I am informed by thoſe who have well obſerved him) that he will deceive you, and eſcape out of your hands, if ye be not very circumſpect.

V. 23. And come ye again to me with the certainty, and I will go with you] i. e. So by your care and diligence provide for my eaſe and honour that I may not looſe my labour, and come off with ſhame and diſgrace by his eſcaping, and I will not be wanting on my part to do what you deſire, but will find him out, if he be above ground, though in the moſt ſecret corner of all the land.

V. 24. And they aroſe and went to Ziph] i. e. Prepared and addreſſed themſelves for their journey, and went before *S*aul as his guides to bring him to David.

But David and his men were in the wilderneſſe of Maon] i. e. Being told that the Ziphites had diſcovered him to Saul, and that he was coming with an army to take him, he removed with his company from that place where he was formerly hid, i. e. in the hill Hachilah in the wilderneſſe of Ziph, to a plain in the wilderneſſe of Maon, on the *S*outh-ſide of Jeſhimon.

V. 25. Saul alſo and his men went to ſeek him] Or, for Saul and his men, &c. Here a reaſon is rendred why David did leave the hill Hachilah in the Wilderneſſe of Ziph, and came down from the rock there into the plain of Maon, to wit, becauſe it was told him by his ſpies or friends that Saul was coming thither to ſeek him.

in the wilderneſſe of Maon] This was alſo in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. 15. 55.

V. 26. And David made haſte to get away for fear of Saul] i. e. Being thus hotly purſued by Saul, and thereby brought into extreme danger, they being ſo neer one another that they had only the mountain between them, he was in great fear of being ſurprized, and therefore made all poſſible ſpeed to get further out of Sauls reach, yet ſo, as that in his fear he was ſupported by his faith, though mixed with much doubting, and even ſtaggering with weakneſs; which cauſed him to call in queſtion the truth of *S*amuel the Prophet, and Gods own promiſes made by him, as appeareth by the 116 Pſalm. v. 10, 11. which David penned upon this occaſion.

V. 27. But there came a meſſenger unto Saul] Thus God even in the very nick of time was ſeen in the mount; and when the ſorrows of death and the pains of hell did compaſs David, and were ready to get hold upon him, he calling upon the Lord was delivered, Pſalm 116. 3, 4. God ſo ordering it by his providence that *S*aul by an unexpected meſſage was taken off from perſecuting him, and forced to imploy his forces in another ſervice. *S*ee the like 1 Kings 15. 21. and 2 Kings 19. 9.

V. 28. Wherefore Saul returned from purſuing after David] Becauſe he knew that the Philiſtims, if not prevented, would utterly waſte and deſtroy his land; therefore there was a preſent neceſſity of bending his ſtrength againſt them, whereas there was no ſuch haſt of purſuing David, ſeeing he might meet with him at better leiſure.

Therefore they called that place Selah-hammahlekoth] i.e. The rock of diviſions, ſo called, becauſe Saul there was forced to ſeparate himſelf, and to leave off from following David, and to turn his forces againſt the Philiſtims.

V. 29. dwelt in ſtrong holds at Engedi] A City of Judah, Joſh. 15. 62. called alſo Hazazon-Tamar, from the Palm-trees abounding there, Gen. 14. 7. 2 Chr. 20. 2. Here was a ſtrong Caſtle ſituate on an high mountain, and a craggie rock, neer unto the Dead ſea (as travellers relate) under which were fruitful places abounding with Balſam, vines and other fruits; unto which *S*olomons *S*ong alludeth, Cant. 1. 14. My beloved is unto me as a cluſter of Camphire in the vineyards of Engedi. Unto this place a wilderneſſe adjoyned that borrowed its name from it, unto which David now fled, and here (as it is thought) penned the fifty ſeven Pſal. Now to this place he came, hoping that *S*aul would not purſue him thither, ſeeing it was in the utmoſt borders of the land, ſix and thirty miles diſtant from Maon, eſpecially being ſuch a mountainous, rocky and craggy place that an army could not paſs through it without much difficulty. But herein he failed of his hopes, as appeareth in the next chapter: for *S*aul was ſo tranſported and as it were carried upon the wings of malice and fury that he purſued him hither alſo, there being no difficulty or danger that could hinder his paſſage.

CHAP. XXIIII.

Verſ. 1. WHen Saul was returned from following the Philiſtims] Which had invaded the land of Iſrael, ch. 23. 27.

V. 2. Went to ſeek David and his men upon the rocks of the wilde goates] i. e. Upon the high craggy rocks and clifts, upon which ſtore of wilde goates lived, as their manner is. Here Saul ſhewed his deſperate rage and mortal malice againſt David, in that nothing could diſcourage him from purſuing his life, though this expedition were likely to prove tedious, troubleſome and full of danger both to himſelf and his whole army

V. 3. And Saul went in to cover his feet] i. e. To do his eaſement. See on Gen. 49. 10. and Judg. 3. 24.

And David and his men remained in the ſides of the cave] i. e. Lay hid in the innermoſt parts of the cave. It is obſerved by writers and travellers that ſome caves in that country, and others alſo, as in Germany, are of ſuch vaſt wideneſſe that they are ſufficient to contain great numbers of men. *S*uch an one was this, which it is thought the inhabitants in thoſe parts made uſe of to ſhelter their ſheep from the ſcorching heat of the day, and to fold them in by night, to preſerve them from wild beaſts, which abounded in thoſe deſart places. Therefore into this *S*aul might enter and not diſcover them that lay hid in it, both in reſpect of the largeneſſe of it, and becauſe though they might ſee him coming into it, there being ſome light in the firſt entrance, yet he could not diſcover them in the inmoſt parts, having purpoſely hid themſelves in the dark, by the ſides of the cave, that *S*aul and his men might not find them.

V. 4. And the men of David ſaid unto him, Behold the day of which the Lord ſaid unto thee] We do not read of any ſet day that God had formerly ſpoken of wherein he would deliver Davids enemy into his hand: Therefore ſome think this might be ſaid unto him by *S*amuel, when he was with him laſt at Naioth: Others, that this might be comprehended under Gods general promiſe, that God would deliver all Davids enemies into his hand, which they here apply particularly to *S*aul, as being the chief, and above all the reſt: But others more probably think that no more is meant hereby but this, that God by his providence had offered unto him a preſent opportunity of cutting off his enemy that thirſted after his blood, which he could not let ſlip without offending God by neglecting ſo high a favour, and wronging himſelf and all his followers, whom *S*aul purſued with ſuch mortall malice.

Then David aroſe, and cut off the skirt of Sauls robe privily] This (as Expoſitors conceive) he might do, Saul not diſcerning him, either becauſe the noiſe of *S*auls ſouldiers about the cave might eaſily drown that little noiſe which David made ſtealing upon Saul as quietly as he could; or becauſe it was the cuſtome in thoſe times to cover their head and feet when they did their eaſement, for comlineſſe and modeſty ſake; whence the phraſe of covering their feet did come: Or finally, becauſe (as others ſuppoſe) it was his robe or upper garment, which haply *S*aul laying aſide till he had done his buſineſs in ſome diſtance from him, it was eaſie for David to cut off the skirt of it. And this David did to demonſtrate his own innocency, and to make the calumnies of his enemies, who ſaid he ſought to take away Sauls life, appear falſe and frivolous, ſeeing he ſpared him when he was in his power, and might as eaſily have cut his throat as the skirt of his robe.

V. 5. Davids heart ſmote him, becauſe he had cut off Sauls skirt] i. e. Checked him, out of the tenderneſs of his conſcience, becauſe he had done the leaſt injury to the Lords anointed, though it were upon good ground, and to a profitable end, namely to convince Saul of his falſe jealouſies, and his own innocency.

V. 6. And he ſaid unto his men] i. e. When he ſaw them much diſcontented and even ready to mutiny becauſe he would not kill Saul, having this opportunity put into his hand, that ſo both he and they might have an end of all their tedious troubles, and being freed from all further danger, might go quietly to their own habitations, and enjoy the comfort of their wives and children; he uſed this weighty, ſeaſonable and conſcionable ſpeech, to pacifie and keep them from burſting out in to further fury.

The Lord forbid that I ſhould do this thing to my Maſter the Lords anoynted] i. e. The Lord forbid that it ſhould once come into my thoughts to kill him unto whom I am ſo deeply bound in a double obligation; firſt, becauſe he is my Maſter, unto whom I ow the ſubjection and fidelity of a ſervant, and alſo my Sovereign Lord and King, anoynted and ſet over me by Gods own appointment, unto whom I ow fealty and alleagiance. And though he ſeeketh unjuſtly to take away my life, yet I will not revenge my ſelf upon him by taking away his but refer it unto God, to whom vengeance belongeth, becauſe the Lord, who made him King, hath only power and right to depoſe him.

to ſtretch forth mine hand againſt him] i. e. To kill, or lay violent hands upon him to do him any hurt. So Gen. 37. 22. and 22. 10.

V. 7. So David ſtayed his ſervants with theſe words] i. e. Pacified and took them off from proſecuting their purpoſe.

V. 8. David alſo aroſe afterward, and went out of the cave, and cryed after Saul] Though before he had for fear hid himſelf from *S*aul, yet now, having not only the teſtimony of a good conſciene inwardly witneſſing his innocency, but alſo a cleer evidence to convince Saul of his integrity, with all confidence and boldneſſe he cometh out of the cave, and crieth after him, that he might ſtay to hear him plead his cauſe; but withal uſeth the beſt means he could to appeaſe his wrath and diſpleaſure towards him, and to free himſelf from thoſe jealouſies and hard conceits which he had conceived of him. For firſt he ſtoopeth with his face to the earth, and boweth himſelf in all humility, doing his obeyſance as to his King and Sovereign; and then he maketh his juſt apology, wiping away thoſe foul aſperſions which ſlanderous tongues had caſt upon him, not imputing any blame to *S*aul, but to his Sycophants and ill counſellors, though in truth he himſelf was chiefly faulty; only herein he could not juſtifie him, that he had given an eaſie and open ear to thoſe ſlanderous tongues.

V. 10. Behold, this day thine eyes have ſeen, &c.] q. d. I ſhall need no other arguments to cleer my innocency againſt their falſe calumnies and pernicious imputations but thine own experience, in that when thou waſt this day in mine hand I ſpared thy life and that when I was much provoked and preſſed by ſome of my company to take that opportunity of killing thee which God had given me. Now this I alſo did on a religious and conſciencious ground, which will never fail, Becauſe thou art the Lords anoynted, and not out of a preſent pang of pity, which might quickly vaniſh.

how that the Lord had delivered thee to day into mine hand] Not that God had delivered him into his hand that he ſhould kill him, for then David had ſinned in ſparing him, as Saul did in ſparing Agag; and Ahab, Benhadad 1 Kings. 20. 42. But his meaning is, that God had offered him an opportunity of killing him, which in all likelihood he might have laid hold on, he being his mortal enemy, had not God reſtrained him, by making him know that he had done it to this end, not that he ſhould kill him, which he could not lawfully do, (for though he were anoynted King, yet *S*aul was ſtill in poſſeſſion, and his Lord and Soveraign: and though his ſins againſt God had deſerved death, yet David had no authority to inflict it) but rather that hereby he might have a fit occaſion to exerciſe and approve his patience, humanity and charity in ſparing him, and to manifeſt his innocency, and how guiltleſſe he was of that foul aſperſion with which his enemies had blacked and branded him, that he did lye in wait for *S*auls life.

V. 11. Moreover, my father] So he calleth him, becauſe he was both his father in law, and being a King, was the Father of his people, that he might ſhew his reverent reſpect unto him in both relations.

See, yea ſee the skirt of thy robe] i. e. Do not look upon it ſlightly as a ſmall matter, but ſeriouſly conſider of it, as a plain evidence to cleer my innocency, ſeeing if I had been ſo ill-affected as thy baſe flatterers render me unto thee, I might as eaſily have killed thee as cut the skirt of thy robe.

yet thou hunteſt my ſoul to take it] i. e. Thou doſt with as much eagerneſſe ſeek my life, as an huntſman purſueth the wilde beaſts through woods and hills, buſhes and hard paſſages, to catch and kill them.

V. 12. The Lord judge between me and thee, and the Lord avenge me of thee] i. e. Seeing I have not taken upon me to be judge in mine own cauſe, nor avenged my own quarrel upon thee, when it was in my power to have done it, as not belonging to me, but unto the Lord alone, the ſupreme Judge of heaven and earth, to whom vengeance belongeth; therefore I make my appeal unto him, and his judgement-ſeat, deſiring him to paſſe a righteous ſentence between thee and me, and hearing my innocent cauſe, in which I ſo unjuſtly ſuffer, to do me right. But howſoever, though it ſhould not pleaſe him to do it, yet I am fully reſolved not to avenge my ſelf by ſeeking thy ruine.

V. 13. As ſaith the Proverb of the ancients] Having convinced Saul of his innocency by that experience he had now of him, he confirmeth the ſame by an ancient Proverb, containing in it a truth of old generally received and approved.

Wickedneſſe proceedeth from the wicked: but mine hand ſhall not be upon thee] i. e. Wicked men like themſelves will act their evil councels in their evil actions: for ſuch as the tree is, ſuch will the fruit be: But thou needeſt not fear any thing from me to thy hurt and prejudice, ſeeing thou haſt found the contray by thine own experience: but let them do what is ſuitable to their wicked nature, I for my part am of another diſpoſition, and am reſolved to act accordingly, that is to refer my cauſe to God, and not to revenge my ſelf in my own private quarrel.

V. 14. After whom is the King of Iſrael come out? —— After a dead dog, after a flea?] i. e. In purſuing me thou holdeſt a courſe that doth much diſparage and diſhonour thee, ſeeing as when God hath exalted thee to be a great King, even over his own choſen people, thou doſt that which is far below thy greatneſſe, in taking ſo much pains, and bending thy ſtrength againſt me, who am ſo weak and contemptible that in compariſon of thee I am no more to be eſteemed then a Dog, or a Flea. So 2 Sam. 9. 8.

V. 15. The Lord therefore be Judge] i. e. Seeing I have neither will nor power to do thee any hurt, and yet thou purſueſt me with ſuch eagerneſs, the Lord, who hath promiſed by his mighty power to ſupport the weak and humble, and to protect the innocent againſt their oppreſſors; take my cauſe into his own hand, and preſerve me his humble ſervant againſt thy fury.

V. 16. Is this thy voice, my ſon David?] Being throughly convinced of Davids innocency by his late experience, and very ſenſible of the great danger out of which he had eſcaped through his humanity, he was poſſeſſed and affected with admiration, and for the time ſo rapt up and raviſhed with apprehenſion of it, that he ſeemeth to be in an extaſie or dream, doubting whether he heard David ſpeak or no. And ſo did it take with him that he expreſſeth his affection towards him in a ſweet compellation, and calleth him his ſon David, againſt whom lately his ſpirit was ſo embittered with rancor and malice, that ſcorning to give him his name, he contemptuouſly called him the ſon of Jeſſe, ch. 20. 31. and 22. 13.

And Saul lift up his voice and wept] Being for the preſent convinced of Davids innocency and his own ſin, he was, (as we ſay) overcome with kindneſs, and burſt forth into teares and other expreſſions of grief. Hence one taking notice of Sauls obdurateneſſe in all wickedneſſes ſaith that Moſes did a great miracle in bringing water out of a rock, but David a greater, who with his carriage and words ſo ſmote the flinty heart of Saul that there iſſued from it theſe tears and confeſſions.

V. 17. And he ſaid to David, Thou art more righteous then I] With expreſſions of ſorrow he joyneth confeſſion of his ſin, how unworthy he was to find ſuch favour at Davids hands whom he had purſued as an enemy; and a profeſſion and teſtification of Davids both innocency and merit, with a petition and prayer to God that he accordingly would reward him, eſpecially for preſerving his life when it was in his hands to take it from him.

V. 19. For if a man finde his enemy, will he let him go well away?] q. d. Surely a man will never do it; judging all others by his own diſpoſition, who was much addicted to ſeek revenge, and not according to the rule of true charity, which overcometh evil with goodneſs.

V. 20. I know well that thou ſhalt ſurely be King] Namely, becauſe I ſee that God hath endued thee with kingly vertues, proſpereth thee in all thy enterpriſes, and watching over thee doth preſerve thee from all dangers and from the attempts of all that riſe up againſt thee.

V. 21. Swear now therefore unto me by the Lord] Saul, being guilty of his own demerits, is affected more with fear of Davids hard dealing with his houſe and poſterity, then put in hope by the experience which he had of his humanity and clemency; and therefore carrying ſome natural affection to his children, he laboureth to ſecure them from the danger of Davids revenge, when he ſhould come to be King, and have power in his hand.

V. 22. And David ſware unto Saul] Having in effect bound himſelf by covenant and oath before unto Jonathan to do the ſame that Saul here required: And if he had refuſed to do it, his jealouſie would have been thereby increaſed, and he more excuſed for perſecuting David, of whom he had no better aſſurance. But here it may be demanded how David can be ſaid to have obſerved this oath, when as afterwards he delivered the five ſons of Merab *S*auls daughter and the two ſons of Rizpah his Concubine to the Gibeonites, to be hanged, 2 Sam, 21. To which it is wel anſwered, that David ſware in truth, having a full intention to obſerve his oath, for his part, as much as in him lay, as appeareth in his putting them to death that murdered Iſhboſheth, though he had taken up arms againſt him, 2 Sam. 4. and by his preſerving and cheriſhing Mephiboſheth, 2 Sam. 9. But in the other he was not left to his own choice, but neceſſitated by a ſpecial command from God to deliver them into the hands of the Gibeonites for their ſatisfaction, that Gods wrath being appeaſed, the heavy judgement of famine might be removed from the land, 2 Sam. 21. 6, 9. And therefore in this he brake not his oath, ſeeing he did it not voluntarily, but in obedience to Gods command, and by his ſpecial Commiſſion and direction, which is ſufficient to diſpence with all oaths.

But David and his men gat them up unto the hold] i. e. Of Engedi. David had no confidence in Sauls ſincerity, ſeeing after reconciliation he had ſo often returned to his malicious practiſes, chap. 26. 2. and 27. 1.

CHAP. XXV.

Verſ. 1. AND Samuel died] i. e. A natural and peaceable death. For though Saul, like a bloody tyrant, raged againſt David and the Lords Prieſts, yet he never attempted any thing againſt Samuel, though he had denounced from God the ſentence of his rejection, and of the election of another in his room better then he, who was David, as Saul vehemently ſuſpected, yea affirmed, ch. 24. 20. partly becauſe he was in high eſteem among the people, as being the Lords Prophet, who alſo had for many years been Judge over the land, executing his office with all juſtice and integrity, and to the ſingular benefit of all, both in time of peace and war; and partly becauſe he conceived he was no way dangerous unto him, ſeeing having retired himſelf to a private life he did not intermeddle with the affaires of the Common-wealth: But eſpecially it came to paſs by the good hand of Gods providence, who reſtraineth the rage of tyrants, Pſal. 76. 10. not ſuffering them to act ſuch cruelties as otherwiſe they would. By which providence alſo it came to paſſe that Samuel dyed not ſo long as his teſtimony was neceſſary that David was the man whom God had choſen King, but then departed this life when as Saul himſelf knew it, and alſo had confeſſed and profeſſed it. But withal, this is here brought in to ſhew that God, for the further trial of Davids faith, did add this to all other his afflictions, that he took away Samuel from him, who was his chief ſtay to ſtrengthen him with with his counſels and comforts in all his croſſes and calamities, doubts and difficulties, that ſo he might wholly reſt upon God as his rock and refuge. Now concerning the time of Samuels death, it is thought to have been not long before Saul was ſlain upon Mount Gilboa, he having lived as Judge twenty yeares, and eighteen years in the reign of Saul; unto which there are two years only wanting to make up thoſe fourty ſpoken of Act. 13. 21. which is likely to be the time between the death of *S*amuel and Saul. It is clear from hence that Samuel was not the pen-man of theſe two Books that are called by his name, at leaſt that he wrote no further but to this place: yet are the Books ſtiled The Books of Samuel, becauſe they contain the acts of thoſe Kings which were anointed by him.

and all the Iſraelites were gathered together, and lamented him] i. e. Very many of all ſorts and conditions aſſembled to ſolemnize his funeral, and to bewail not only their loſſe of him, as being a faithful Prophet who revealed unto them Gods Wil,but alſo their ſin in rejecting his government, which by ſad experience they had now found to be much more profitable then that of a King,which they had choſen and preferred before it.

and buried him in his houſe at Ramah] Which was the place of his habitation, and his fathers before him; in which was the uſual place of burial for that family.

And David aroſe, and went down to the wilderneſſe of Paran] This lay on the South-border of Judah, towards Idumea, and neer unto the wilderneſſe of Maon. Unto this place David withdrew himſelf from Engedi, taking advantage of the time and occaſion, when they were buſied about Samuel funeral, hoping (it is like) to find there more friends, and to be in leſſe danger of Sauls purſuit, lying hid in this Wilderneſſe, then in the other place where he had been diſcovered. Of Paran ſee on Hab. 3. 3.

V. 2. And there was a man in Maon, whoſe poſſeſſions were in Carmel] Maon and Carmel were Cities of Judah, neer one another, and therefore they are named together Joſh. 15. 55. in the one Nabal had his habitation, and by the other a great part of his lands and inheritance,where he kept his cattel, and much of his buſineſs lay. The word Carmel ſignifieth generally any place tilled and planted: but it was alſo the proper name of two places, one in the tribe of Iſſachar, where Elijah ſlew Baals Prieſts, neer the brook Kiſhon, 1 Kings 18. 20, 40. the other, this in Judah. See on Amos 1. 2.

And the man was very great] i. e. Abounded in wealth, 2 Sam. 19. 32. Wealth, if Gods grace be wanting, maketh men not the better, but the more proud, inſolent, churliſh and fooliſh, neither knowing themſelves nor other men, Prov. 1. 32. And theſe effects is wrought in Nabal; from whence it ſeemeth he had his firname ſignifying a fool,& not from any natural defect in his underſtanding. Now this is added as an aggravation of Nabals churliſh incivility towards David and his followers: For had he been a man of but a mean eſtate, he might have had ſome excuſe for not relieving Davids great number of men, ſeeing what he had been able to give had not been conſiderable among ſuch a multitude; but being of that vaſt wealth, and now upon occaſion of his great feaſt ſo well provided, he might have been bountiful to them, and reſerved plenty for himſelf and his ſervants, if his mind had been ſuitable to his preſent condition.

V. 3. And the name of his wife Abigail]Signifying the fathers joy, a name well ſuiting with her nature and condition. For what can bring more joy to a fathers heart then ſuch a vertuous, wiſe and beautiful daughter? Only it brought grief to his and her heart that ſhe was thus croſſe-match'd with a vitious, fooliſh and churliſh husband; As it is, and hath been, the lot of many of thoſe few her equals; God ſo in his providence diſpoſing of it for the experience of their faith, patience and obedience, and to work in them contempt of the world, and willingneſſe to leave it when he pleaſeth.

and evil in his doing] i. e. Ill-conditioned and wicked in all his courſe and carriage.

and he was of the houſe of Caleb] i. e. A degenerate off-ſpring of a vertuous, wiſe and noble parent. And ſuch often happen, ſeeing grace goeth not by inheritance, nor can be intailed to poſterity, but is Gods free gift, which he beſtoweth on whom he pleaſeth, and often denyeth to the children of vertuous and religious parents, that his graces may not be thought to come by nature or education, but that the glory of them may be aſcribed to him alone as the ſole donor. For though parents may provide for and bequeath to their children riches, lands and poſſeſſions, yet no grace, vertue and wiſdom; no,not yet thoſe common gifts, which can only be acquired by their own natural abilities, pains and induſtry.

V. 4. And David heard it in the Wilderneſſe] i. e. Being in the Wilderneſſe he heard it.

that Nabal did ſhear his ſheep] At which time it was the cuſtom in thoſe Countries to make a great feaſt for their ſervants, workmen and friends; which was the occaſion of Davids ſending unto Nabal: 2 Sam. 13. 23. See on Gen. 38. 12.

V. 5. greet him in my name] Heb. ask him in my name of peace.

V. 6. And thus ſhall ye ſay to him that liveth in proſperity] i. e. In my name pray that as he now liveth in peace, plenty and proſperity, ſo theſe bleſſings may be continued unto him ſtill,even to the end of his life.

Peace be both unto thee, and peace be unto thine houſe] i. e. Let all happineſſe reſt upon thy ſelf and all that belong unto thee, and a bleſſing from God upon all that thou haſt.

V. 7. And now I have heard that thou haſt ſhearers] i. e. That it is the time of thy ſheep-ſhearing, whereat it is the cuſtom to make a feaſt; which is the occaſion of my ſending unto thee, and making this my ſuit.

now thy ſhepherds which were with us, we hurt them not] i. e. Though it be uſual for Souldiers and men of war, having power in their hand of doing what they pleaſe, to be very vexatious to thoſe that live neer them yet it was not ſo with us; but we carried our ſelves peaceably and juſtly towards thy ſervants, doing no man wrong.

neither was there ought miſſing unto them] i. e. They loſt nothing by our means of thy goods, we taking nothing from them to ſupply our wants, though they lived neer unto us: A thing rare and commendable in military men. But ſeeing of neceſſity David and his men muſt have ſome relief to live upon, it is likely they fetch'd their proviſions further off, out of the Country of the Philiſtims and other their bordering enemies, as Jephthah did, Judg. 11. 3.

V. 8. Ask the young men, and they will ſhew thee] Unto them he referreth him, not only, becauſe their teſtimony might perhaps carry more credit then his ſpeaking in his own cauſe, but alſo becauſe they were able to teſtifie that which in modeſty he concealed, namely that they were ſo far off from doing them wrong themſelves that they protected them againſt all injuries which otherwiſe they ſhould have ſuffered at the hands of theeves or by the in-roads of bordering enemies.

wherefore let the young men find favour in thine eyes: for we come in a good day] i. e. In the time of mirth and feaſting, in which there is much plenty, and when men are bound by the law of charity to contribute to the reliefe of their brethren who are in want, Deut 14. 26, 29. and 15. 7. Neh. 8. 10. Eſt. 9. 19. Thus David,rich in grace and highly in Gods favour, is for the preſent brought ſo low and into ſuch a poor condition that he is fain to make his humble addreſſe to a rich and churliſh fool: Eccleſ. 10. 7.

give, I pray thee, whatſoever cometh to thine hand] i. e. Which thou haſt in readineſſe, and art willing to beſtow.

unto thy ſervants, and to thy ſon David] i. e. To Davids men, who have done thee ſervice, and are willing to do ſo ſtill; and unto David himſelf, whom thou canſt not but take notice of by his ſervice which he hath done to the Common-wealth, and his many victories over Gods enemies, whereby he hath deſerved thy love; eſpecially, ſeeing he carryeth towards thee a ſon-like affection. By which humble and modeſt carriage in his ſuit, interlaced and ſweetned with ſo much love, Nabals faultineſſe in his churliſh anſwer is much aggravated, as being contrary to reaſon, ſenſe and common humanity.

V. 9. They ſpake to Nabal according to all thoſe words, and ceaſed] i. e. They gave him no juſt offence by their further importunity, and preſſing him more then was fit to grant their ſuit, but only propounded it in this fair manner, and then were ſilent, expecting this anſwer.

V. 10. And Nabal anſwered Davids ſervants, and ſaid, Who is David?] So Pharaoh, Exod. 5. 2. Nabal here thinks it not ſufficient to deny the ſuit, unleſs he alſo vent his rancor and malice by rayling and reproachful ſpeeches. And firſt he ſlighteth Davids perſon, and in way of contempt asketh who he is, as though he were a man altogether obſcure & notworthy to be taken notice of,whereas indeed he was moſt famous for his vertues & good parts,his victories over Goliah & the reſt of Gods enemies, his marriage with the Kings daughter, and the high honour & eſteem he had been formerly in with all the Kings ſervants,yea, the whole land, Court and country. Therefore it was not the ignorance of Nabals mind, but the malice of his heart, when he ſaw David in an afflicted and poor condition, and now out of favour with the King, which made him by way of ſcorn to ask who he was. To which purpoſe alſo he addeth, and who is the ſon of Jeſſe? as not vouchſafing to call him by his own name,and much leſs the Kings ſon in law, but twitting and upbraiding him with his poor parentage.

There be many ſervants now adayes that break away every man from his maſter] i. e. That breaking away do run from their maſters. A metaphor borrowed from reſty horſes and refractory cattel, which break their bridles and bands, and run from their owners. And here unto his contempt Nabal addeth calumnie and reproach, as though David and his followers were no better then rogues and runnagates,that had left their callings to live in this idle courſe of life, ſeeing not only David himſelf had thus run from Saul his Lord and Maſter, but alſo had animated many of his followers to follow his example, ch. 22. 2.

V. 11. Shall I then take my bread and my water] He nameth Water, becauſe it was very ſcarce in that hot and dry Country, Gen. 21. 25. and 26. 15. Or it may be here and in many other places water is put generally for any drink.

V. 12. So Davids young men turned their way, and went again]Or went their way from Nabal, and returned to David their Maſter.

V. 13. And David ſaid unto his men, Gird you on every man his ſword] David is ſo incenſed and enraged with this inhumane, churliſh and contumelious anſwer of Nabal to his ſuit, that being out of all patience he breatheth nothing but ſharp revenge; and he that at other times could with humble meekneſſe bear Sauls perſecutions, Shimei's railings, and Abſaloms rebellion, here hath no power to contain himſelf from deſperate fury: Yea, he that before repreſſed the rage and violence of others, ch. 24. 6. is now the bellows to blow the coals, and inflame others; for he provoketh and cauſeth his followers to joyn with him. Now this was not onely from hence, becauſe groſs ingratitude and reproachful ſpeeches are more intolerable to a generous ſpirit then blows and wounds inflicted on the body, but eſpecially becauſe God is pleaſed ſometimes to withdraw his grace from his deareſt children, and leave them to themſelves, that diſcovering their frailty and weakneſs they may rely upon him as their onely upholder for the time to come, and not reſt upon the bruiſed and broken reed of their own ſtrength. And thus David being here left diſcovereth much inward corruption, and deeply plungeth himſef into groſs and gieveous ſins. For I. he reſolveth not onely to take private revenge, and ſo to incroach upon Gods royal prerogative, Rom. 12. 19. but to take it in a moſt unjuſt manner and meaſure: for though Nabals faults were great and odious, yet they were not ſuch as by the law of God deſerved death. II. He taketh upon him to act a thing of ſuch great conſequence very raſhly and without any deliberation. III. He bindeth himſelf to perpetrate this bloody fact by an oath, drawing hereby God himſelf, by being a witneſſe, to countenance his horrid ſlaughter; as if his corruption had not been ſtrong enough had it been left to its own liberty, nor haſty enough to perpetrate miſchief, unleſſe it were ſpurred on by an oath to act it by ſuch a time. IV. Though Nabal onely had offended, yet he reſolveth to deſtroy with him all his innocent family, wife, children, and ſervants, even to the very dogs, though they that knew his faults hated them as much as David himſelf.

V. 14. But one of the young men told Abigail] i. e. One of Nabals ſervants, fearing what miſchief would enſue upon his Maſters churliſh anſwer, and not daring to tell and fore-warn him of it by, reaſon of his froward and perverſe diſpoſition, addreſſeth himſelf to his Miſtreſſe, whom he knew to be vertuous and prudent, that ſhe taking notice of it by his information, might uſe ſome good means timely to prevent it.

to ſalute our Maſter, and he railed on them] i. e. In way of courteſie to ſhew his kind reſpects to him; and he, in ſtead of taking it kindly, did abuſe both him and them by reproaching and diſgracing them; Or, as it is in the Hebrew Text, he flew upon them, like a bird of prey, ſuddenly and ſecretly.

V. 15. But the men were very good unto us] To wit, when we lived by them in the wilderneſſe of Paran, and there kept our ſheep.

V. 16. They were a wall unto us both by night and day] i. e. A ſure and ſtrong guard to protect and defend us from receiving any hurt or damage either by wild beaſts or men, i. e. theeves or enemies.

V. 17. Now therefore know and conſider what thou wilt do] q. d. There is no deferring and demurring with the matter. For David being a man of worth and courage, will never ſuffer ſuch groſſe abuſe to go unrevenged; yea, rather you may well think he is already fully reſolved on it, and will ſuddenly put his purpoſe in execution, if you uſe not preſently ſome good means to prevent it.

For he is ſuch a ſon of Belial] See on Deut. 13. 13. & Iudg. 19. 22.

that a man cannot ſpeak unto him] i. e. He is ſo harſh and churliſh, that he hath no patience to hear a man ſpeak, though never ſo reaſonably. And that is the cauſe why I now addreſſe my ſelf unto you, and not unto him.

V. 18. Then Abigail made haſte] Knowing the danger her whole family was in would admit no delay, ſhe makes all poſſible ſpeed to pacifie Davids wrath with a liberal preſent; which could not but be accepted in this his great neceſſity, being joyned with an humble and juſt apology.

V. 19. Behold, I come after you] Herein ſhe ſhewed her prudence, not entruſting a buſineſſe of ſuch concernment to her ſervants, but acting it her ſelf, as being moſt able to manage it, and moſt faithful to her own cauſe.

but ſhe told not her husband Nabal] Becauſe ſhe knew him to be of ſuch a croſſe and crooked nature, that he would rather have expoſed himſelf and all his to deſperate danger, then have yielded to her enterpriſe.

V. 20. As ſhe rode on the aſs, ſhe came down by the covert of the hill] i. e. She doth not ride on in the common rode, leſt ſhe might be ſtopped and hindred in her paſſage by ſome occurrent, but maketh choyce of a covert and ſecret way under the hollow of a hill, that being not ſeen, ſhe might not be interrupted in her journey: And David alſo (as it ſeemeth) coming againſt her, upon the ſame ground, that he and his company might not be diſcovered, they met together as ſoon almoſt as the one could ſee the other; God ſo ordering it by a ſpecial and gracious providence for the good of them both.

V. 21. Now David had ſaid] To wit, when his ſervants returning from Nabal, had reported unto him his churliſh anſwer. Others think that he now ſpake, or again repeated it, in Abigails hearing.

V. 22. So and more alſo do God to the enemies of David] i. e. So, and no otherwiſe; or, On no other condition do I deſire and imprecate Gods juſt judgements upon all other Davids enemies, that they being deſtroyed, he may be delivered from their malice and fury, then I purpoſe and reſolve utterly to root out this Nabal, my malicious enemy, and all that belong unto him. Or, God grant that all the enemies of David may ſo fare, and no better nor worſe, then I intend to do unto this wicked and ungrateful fellow. Concerning this form of imprecation ſee on Ruth 1. 17.

any that piſſeth againſt the wall] A proverbial ſpeech uſed by the Hebrews to ſignify a total extermination of an houſe, ſo as not ſo much as a dog ſhould eſcape unkilled. So 1 Kings 14. 10. and 21. 21. and 2 King. 9. 8. Some think that by this phraſe is implyed, that he onely intended to deſtroy all the males: But that he extended it to all males and females, it plainly appeareth v. 34. where he ſaith, that God had kept him back from hurting Abigail her ſelf, by her wiſe and ſeaſonable counſel.

V. 23. ſhe haſted, and lighted off the aſs, and fell before David on her face, &c.] By this humble deportment ſhe qualified his rage, and moved him patiently to give audience to what ſhe ſhould ſpeak. See on Ioſh. 15. 18. 2 Kings 4. 27.

V. 24. Upon me, my Lord, upon me, let this iniquity be] i. e. Let me be puniſhed in ſtead of my husband and his family, if I do not both clear my innocency, and alſo make it appear unto thee, that there is great reaſon why thou ſhouldeſt forbear to revenge thy ſelf on Nabal, and thoſe that belong unto him, for his folly and wickedneſſe, ſo that thou wilt vouchſafe to give me the hearing. Or, let me be reputed an offender, and ſuffer for it, rather then thou ſhouldſt deſtroy our whole family, and thereby make thy ſelf guilty of ſeeking private and cruel revenge. Thus doth ſhe wiſely divert Davids wrath from her husband, who had juſtly deſerved it, upon her ſelf, who was not onely innocent, but even exceeding commendable in Davids judgment for vertue, wiſdom and humility; knowing him to be ſo pious and juſt, that he would rather ſpare the wicked for the righteous ſake, then puniſh the innocent for the faulty, according to Gods own example, Gen. 18. 25, 26. So the woman of Tekoa, 2 Sam. 14. 9.

V. 25. Let not my Lord, I pray thee, regard this man of Belial] i. e. It is not for thy honour to take any great notice of his words and carriage, who is ſo far below thee, that he cannot be thought upon without great diſparagement; ſeeing, by contending with him thou wilt in ſome ſort make him thine equal, who in reſpect of thy piety and his wickedneſſe is not to be named with thee the ſame day. See Iudg. 10. 22.

even Nabal: for as his name is, ſo is he; Nabal is his name, and folly is with him] i. e. Seeing he is but a Fool and a Churl, nothing but fooliſh words and churliſh actions can be expected from him. In which reſpect thou ſhouldſt not lay them much to heart, ſeeing wiſe men do not much regard the words of fools. Thus doth ſhe deſcant on her husbands name, and diſgrace his perſon, not becauſe ſhe took any delight in thus ſpeaking, (though it were nothing elſe ſaving a known truth) but becauſe ſhe was neceſſitated to it, and had no other excuſe to keep him from utter ruine.

But I thine handmaid ſaw not the young men] And was therefore wholly innocent of all that paſſed. For had I ſeen them, I ſhould have laboured to prevent all this miſchief, either by perſwading my husband to more wiſe and ſober carriage; or, if I could not prevail with him, by uſing ſecretly ſome means, as I have now done, to give thee ſatisfaction, and avoid thy diſpleaſure.

V. 26. Now therefore, my Lord, as the Lord liveth, and as thy ſoul liveth] See on ch. 20. 3. She confirmeth her ſpeech by a ſolemn oath, being about matters of great importance, and needing confirmation; namely, that if David would not ſeek private revenge, but commend his cauſe unto God, unto whom vengeance belongeth, he would ſurely revenge his quarrel both upon Nabal and all other his enemies.

ſeeing the Lord hath withholden thee from coming to ſhed blood] i. e. ſeeing he hath ſo ordered it by his wiſe providence, that by my humble mediation and poor preſent thy wrath is appeaſed, and thy hand reſtrained from ſhedding blood in thy own private quarrel, therefore aſſuredly he will right thee himſelf, both upon Nabal, and all others that riſe againſt thee.

now let thy enemies, and they that ſeek evil to my Lord, be as Nabal] Or, now ſhall thy enemies &c. be as Nabal: Otherwiſe here would be nothing expreſſed that the oath hath reference unto. But being thus read and taken in this ſenſe, then ſhe ſweareth, that if he would leave vengeance to God, and not take it himſelf, then God would do it for him, and make all Davids enemies as Nabal, i. e. as odious for their wickedneſſe as he both to God and man, as impotent and weak to do him any hurt, and as ſure to be ſeverely puniſhed by the hand of God, as Nabal ſhall be, or ſhould have been, if David had done as he intended.

V. 27. And now this bleſſing, (Or, preſent——let it even be given to the young men] i. e. Though it be ſo mean that it deſerveth not the acceptance, nor the perſonal uſe of ſo great a Worthy, yet do not reject it, ſeeing it may be of ſome uſe for thy ſervants that follow thee. Thus doth ſhe in her modeſty and humility extenuate her preſent, though it were of good worth in it ſelf, and of great uſe, in reſpect of their preſent neceſſity to whom it was given. See on Gen. 33. 11.

V. 28. I pray thee, forgive the treſpaſs of thine hand-maid] Seeing I took all the blame upon my ſelf, that I might appeaſe thy wrath againſt my husband.

For the Lord will certainly make my lord a ſure houſe] i. e. Not fliting, as now, from place to place, but fixed and permanent; not for a ſhort time, like Sauls, but durable and perpetual: q. d. Thou ſhalt have a laſting Kingdom; and nothing better becometh a King then clemency and mercy.

Becauſe my Lord fighteth the battels of the Lord] i. e. Which are undertaken by Gods appointment, and fought for the defence of his cauſe and people.

and evil hath not been found in thee all thy dayes] i. e. Self-revenge and cruelty eſpecially. Therefore do not now loſe the honour of thy former innocency and clemency, by ſtaining and defiling thine hand with blood.

V. 29. Yet a man is riſen to purſue thee, and to ſeek thy ſoul] i. e. Saul, notwithſtanding thou art innocent, ſeeketh to take away thy life; but all in vain, ſeeing thou art ſafe under Gods protection.

but the ſoul of my lord ſhall be bound in the bundle of life with the Lord thy God] i. e. Being very precious and highly eſteemed in his ſight, he will carefully preſerve it, as men uſe to bind up in bundles things which they much value, that they may not be loſt nor taken from them, Pſal. 116. 15.

and the ſouls of thine enemies, them ſhall he ſling out] i. e. As men uſe to fling out ſtones which they value not; to wit, ſuddenly, ſwiftly, and afar off, Jer. 10. 18. She ſeemeth to foretell the death of Saul and of her husband.

V. 30. And it ſhall come to paſs, when the Lord ſhall have done to my lord according to all the good which he hath ſpoken] This is the concluſion of her ſuit, grounded on the condition of Gods promiſes made good unto him, and Davids enjoying them. q. d. When God hath ſetled thee in thy Kingdom, in all that proſperity which he hath promiſed thee.

V. 31. that this ſhall be no grief unto thee, nor offence of heart unto my lord, either that thou haſt ſhed blood cauſeleſſe, &c.] i. e. When thou enjoyeſt all thy proſperity, thou wilt never have cauſe to repent that thou haſt followed my counſel, in abſtaining from theſe things from which I have diſſwaded thee, that is, ſeeking private revenge, and ſhedding innocent blood. Whereas on the contrarie it would be a corroſive to thy conſcience and a grief to thy heart; which would deprive thee of all comfort, and marr all thy mirth, if the guilt of theſe ſins ſhould lye upon thee.

then remember thine handmaid] i. e. When thou findeſt the benefit of my counſel, do not forget thy ſervant that gave it. But when thou comeſt to thy Kingdom, let me find favour in thine eyes, according to that faithfulneſſe and love which I have ſhewed in this my advice; and deal with me as occaſion ſhall ſerve, and my neceſſity ſhall require.

V. 32. And David ſaid to Abigail] David having heard Abigails good counſel, was convinced by it, and doth not proudly reject it as coming from a woman, but having a meek, humble and tender ſpirit, imbraceth it with all thankfulneſſe both to God and her. And with the like modeſty and humility he hearkned afterwards to the admonitions and reproofs of Nathan and Gad, when they were ſent unto him, 2 Sam. 12. 12, 13. and 24. 13, 14.

Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael] i. e. Who, though he be God of the whole earth, is in a ſpecial manner the God of Iſrael, whom by covenant he hath made his own peculiar people, and received under his protection, to be governed by his laws. This God David acknowledgeth to be the fountain as of all goodneſſe: ſo of this ſingular bleſſing, in ſending Abigail to keep him from that great ſin of ſhedding innocent blood.

which ſent thee this day to meet me] i. e. By the good guidance of his al-ruling providence, and the inward motions of his Spirit.

V. 34. from hurting thee] And thy whole family, as in my rage I did raſhly ſwear, or ſay.

V. 35. So David received at her hand that which ſhe had brought him] And thereby he gave her aſſurance that his wrath was appeaſed, he fully ſatisfied, and ſhe received into grace and favour, ſeeing men will not receive gifts from enemies upon whom they intend to be revenged.

ſee, I have hearkned to thy ſuit] And therefore will not revenge the wrongs offered unto me by thy husband, either upon himſelf, or any of his family.

and have accepted thy perſon] i. e. Received thee into grace, and granted all which thou haſt deſired. Thus David altered his purpoſe, though he had ratified it with an oath; and did lawfully break it, becauſe it was unlawfully made: Whereas had he kept it, he ſhould have been guilty of a double ſin, firſt in making it, and then in keeping it. For the end of an oath being to bind us more firmly to that which is good and pleaſing unto God, if it falleth of this end, it is vain and ſinful, being the bond of iniquity, which muſt be broken, becauſe it tyeth us to that which God abhorreth. Notwithſtanding, he that maketh ſuch an oath as muſt be broken, ought to repent of his ſin, not for breaking it, but for his inconſiderate raſhneſſe in making it, as no doubt David did.

V. 36. He held a feaſt in his houſe like the feaſt of a King] That is, as we uſe to ſay, a [illegible], which ſeldome cometh; but when it doth, is full of luxury, gluttony and ſinfull exceſs. And herein Nabal ſhewed his wicked diſpoſition, who, though he had nothing to beſtow on charitable uſes, as the relieving of David and his followers in their neceſſity, yet had more then enough to waſte and conſume in riot and ſuperfluity.

and Nabals heart was merry within him, for he was very drunken] This is added to ſhew the wickedneſſe of Nabals diſpoſition, who, though he were of ſuch a ſour, ſullen and froward nature that no man might ſpeak to him when he was himſelf, yet could exceed in mirth in the midſt of his cups, and ſo add madneſſe to his folly, Eccleſ. [illegible] wherefore ſhe told him nothing, leſſe or more] It was in vain to admoniſh him when he had loſt the uſe of Reaſon; therefore ſhe wiſely deferred it till a better opportunity.

V. 37. in the morning, when the wine was gone out of Nabal] i. e. When he had ſlept out his drunkenneſſe.

and his wife had told him of theſe things] i. e. Having gotten an opportunity, that ſhe might ſpeak to ſome purpoſe, for which ſhe had waited till ſhe had found him ſober, ſhe layed hold on it, and wiſely admoniſhed him, both of his ſin, and the deſperate danger which thereby he had run himſelf into, if in the very nick of time ſhe had not prevented it.

that his heart dyed within him, and he became as a ſtone] i. e. He was ſo aſtoniſhed and ſtupified with the deep apprehenſion of the danger related to him in a pathetical manner by his wife, that he became as a ſtone falling into a dead trance, in which he continued, having no time or grace to repent of his ſin.

V. 38. And it came to paſſe about ten dayes after, that the Lord ſmote Nabal, that he died] i. e. The Lord took Davids quarrel into his own hand; and becauſe he had forborn to revenge it himſelf, he now doth it for him, and ſmiteth Nabal with ſome plague or ſickneſſe, whereof he died.

V. 39. And when David heard that Nabal was dead, he ſaid, Bleſſed be the Lord] Not ſimply rejoycing in Nabals ruine, Prov. 24. 17, 18. but becauſe it tended to the manifeſtation and magnifying the glory of Gods juſtice in puniſhing the wicked, according to Pſal. 58. 10, 11. and becauſe he had withheld him from falling into a great and bloody ſin revenging his own cauſe and quarrel; and having taken it into his own hand, had done it himſelf.

And David ſent and communed with Abigail, to take her to him to wife] i. e. Having obſerved that ſhe was every way fit for him, in reſpect not only of piety, prudence and perſon, but portion alſo, as being of great wealth, which his preſent condition might ſomewhat cauſe him to reſpect, he ſendeth his ſervants to commune with her about marriage; yet not preſently, it is likely, upon Nabals death, but ſome convenient time after, the mourning being over, which would beſt fit their credit and occaſions. And he choſe rather to ſend others then go himſelf, that Abigail might be the more free in her choice, not being overawed with his perſonal preſence, and that he alſo might come off with leſſe diſgrace and diſcontent, if he ſhould haply receive a repulſe.

V. 41. And ſhe aroſe, and bowed her ſelfe on her face to the earth] i. e. In honour of David, before his Commiſſioners, as repreſenting his perſon.

Behold, let thine handmaid be a ſervant to waſh the feet of the ſervants of my Lord] Here ſhe expreſſeth her lowly, ſweet and meek ſpirit by a moſt humble complement, wherein ſhe acknowledgeth her ſelf ſo far unfit for ſuch an high advancement, that ſhe was unworthy the place of one of the meaneſt ſervants of his ſervants, and that in the baſeſt ſervice, of waſhing their feet; and ſhe ſheweth not onely her humility but alſo her faith, not looking upon David as a poor fugitive and exile, but as he had Gods promiſe of the Crown and had at his appointment by Samuel been anointed King of Iſrael.

V. 42. with five damoſels of hers that went after her] Heb. at her feet. i. e. Who as her handmaids waited upon her.

V. 43. Jezreel] A City of Judah, Joſh. 15. 56.

V. 44. But [Or, For] Saul had given Michal, Davids wiſe, to Phalti the ſon of Laiſh] He is alſo called Phaltiel, 2 Sam. 3. 15. This is rendered as a reaſon why David now took theſe wives, becauſe Saul had given his wife Michal to another. It is a ſingular act of injuſtice in any to take away a mans wife from him againſt his will, he not having given her a bill of divorce; how much more then for Saul to take his daughter from David: who had a double right unto her, not onely by a general edict and promiſe for killing Goliath, but alſo by purchaſe, he having ventured his life to obtain her in a dangerous ſervice, killing two hundred Philiſtims, and giving their fore-skins in ſtead of a dowry. And this act of injuſtice Saul added to all his other wickedneſſe, not onely out of deſperate malice to David, but alſo (as it is likely) out of policy, leſt by his alliance he ſhould have the leaſt colour to commend his title to the Crown, or gain any of his wives kindred and friends to further his claim, eſpecially if Sauls male-iſſue ſhould be cut off by the ſword, as it hapned afterwards, ch. 31. 2.

CHAP. XXVI.

Verſ. 1. AND the Ziphites] See on ch. 23. 14. Into their coaſts David came again, though once before they had ſought to betray him, ch. 23. 19. either hoping that he ſhould now find there more ſafety, becauſe they having experience of Gods favour towards him in his former deliverance would not eaſily again attempt to betray him; or that Saul would not now purſue him, having bound himſelf to deſiſt from ſuch practiſes, when he had ſpared his life, ch. 24. 16, 17. Or becauſe (as ſome think) this place was more convenient for him, upon his marriage with Abigail, becauſe her goods and poſſeſſions adjoyned unto it.

came unto Saul to Gibeah] Having before plaid the traitors, and fearing that David, if he ſhould come to the Crown, would call them to account for it, they uſe all their endeavours to cut him off for their own indemnity. And ſeeing that Saul for a while had deſiſted, and David had lived in quiet, and was lately married, they come of their own accord to betray him the ſecond time.

Doth not David hide himſelf in the Hill of Hachilah] i. e. Know for certainty, O King, that he hideth himſelf there, in the very ſame place where thou didſt before find him, and hadſt ſurely ſurprized him, if the coming-in of the Philiſtims had not prevented thee.

V. 2. having three thouſand choſen men of Iſrael with him] i. e. Such as were the moſt ſkilful and valiant.

V. 3. he ſaw that Saul came after him] i. e. He had ſome intelligence of it given him by ſome of his friends.

V. 4. David therefore ſent out ſpies] i. e. Having ſome notice of Sauls coming, he ſent out ſcouts to diſcover the certainty, whether that which was reported were ſo or no; who brought him word that it was ſo indeed.

V. 5. And David aroſe, and came to the place where Saul had pitched] i. e. he went firſt thither ſecretly himſelf alone, and (as ſome think) diſguiſed.

and to Abiſhai the ſon of Zeruiah] To wit, Davids ſiſter, who had three ſons, Joab, Abiſhai, and Aſahel, 1 Chr. 2. 16. Who are ſtill mentioned under her name, and not their fathers, as chiefly taking their honour from her, being Davids ſiſter, & not from her husband, who was of ſome meaner family, and ſo as unknown, being no where ſpoken of in the Scripture.

Who will go down with me to Saul to the camp?] David himſelf no doubt, was moved by Gods Spirit to undertake this dangerous enterpriſe, as Gideon, when he went to the camp of the Midianites, Judg. 7. 11.

for the confirmation of his faith and to aſſure him of Gods protection, and that he might have another occaſion to convince Saul of his innocency and fidelity. Now that this came of God, it appeareth by that deep ſleep which came upon Saul and the whole army, to ſecure David from danger. But this not appearing to others, he enquireth who had the heart to accompany him, deſiring to have ſome with him both for his comfort, and that they might be witneſſes of all that hapned.

And Abiſhai ſaid, I will go down with thee] David had made the motion both to Abimeloch and him; but it ſeemeth that Abiſhai accepted of it alone, and not the other, or rather, David would have no more but one to accompany him, that he might act what he intended with the more ſecrecy.

V. 7. came to the people by night] i.e. Entered into Sauls camp through the midſt of his army.

V. 8. Then ſaid Abiſhai to David, God hath delivered thine enemy into thine hand] Though ch. 24. 4. ſome of Davids followers had in vain provoked him to kill Saul, amongſt whom perhaps Abiſhai was one of the hotteſt, yet, notwithſtanding the repulſe then, Abiſhai here perſwades him again unto it, and is very earneſt himſelf might be the executioner, thinking that, whatſoever reaſon David had to diſlike the motion then, he now had great reaſon to hearken to it, ſeeing he had found by much experience that *S*auls malice was ſo inveterate and his rage ſo implacable that there was no hope he would ever be reconciled by any offices of love, or any other means that could be uſed: And therefore he conceived it would be but a tempting of God, if he ſhould let ſlip ſuch an opportunity of providing for his own ſafety, when God ſo apparently and even miraculouſly had offered it unto him.

let me ſmite him, I pray thee, with the ſpear] To wit, which ſticketh in the ground at his bolſter.

and I will not ſmite him the ſecond time] i. e. I will ſtrike him ſo ſurely that I will kill him at one blow, ſo as there ſhall not need to give him a ſecond.

V: 9. who can ſtretch forth his hand againſt the Lords anointed, and be guiltleſſe] Though David was the Lords anointed in reverſion, yet *S*aul in poſſeſſion; and therefore he thought it unlawful for any to remove him, but he alone who had thus called him to this Kingly function.

V. 10. David ſaid furthermore, As the Lord liveth] q. d. I will not hearken to thine advice: I will neither ſmite him, nor ſuffer him to be ſmitten, but leave vengeance unto God, to whom only it belongeth, Rom. 12. 19. and him alſo to do with him what he pleaſeth, and when he pleaſeth; but as for my ſelf, I will have no hand in his death.

or he ſhall deſcend into battel, and periſh] And this was that way that God was pleaſed to uſe, to bring *S*aul to his death, and David to his Kingdom.

V. 11. Take thou now the ſpear that is at his bolſter] To wit, that I may uſe it as a token to convince him once again of my fidelity and innocency, ſeeing it will appear to him and to all men, that I might, if I had been ill-minded towards him, have taken away from him as eaſily his life as his ſpear.

and the cruiſe of water] Which he might uſe in thoſe hot countries to quench his thirſt in the night, or to waſh himſelf, as he ſhould have occaſion.

V. 12. becauſe a deep ſleep from the Lord was fallen upon them] To wit, That David might have an opportunity to clear his innocency, and come and go ſafely about it. *S*ee Gen. 2. 21.

V. 13. ſtood on the top of an hill afar off] On an hill, that his voice might be the better heard; and in a good diſtance from the camp, that after his ſpeech to *S*aul he might more eaſily eſcape by flight, if he were purſued.

V. 14. And David cryed unto the People, and to Abner] i. e. Unto him eſpecially, who being Captain-general of the Army, had the chief charge lying upon him for to provide the Kings ſafety.

Anſwereſt thou not, Abner?] It ſeemeth that he cryed and called often before he could awaken him, becauſe they were in a deep ſleep.

Who art thou that crieſt unto the King?] i e. Who cryeth ſo loud that the King ſhall hear, and be diſturbed of his reſt, Or it may be, Abner not hearing at the firſt, he might indefinitely cry out, Who is there about the King? and ſo naming him, Abner might take notice of it.

V. 15. Art not thou a valiant man? And who is like to thee in Iſrael?] He ingenuouſly giveth Abner his due praiſe, that he might not embitter his ſpirit, but ſpeaking unto him with this honourable reſpect might make the better paſſage for his reproofe.

Wherefore then haſt thou not kept thy lord the King] Or, not kept a vigilant watch about him for his ſafety, that no enemy might approach to hurt him.

For there came one of the people in to deſtroy the King thy lord] Or, when there came in one of the people. i. e. either Abiſhai, who made that motion v. 8. or he meaneth indefinitely that any one might have come in (for any care they took) to ſlay the King.

V. 16. And now ſee where the Kings ſpear is] i. e. Take notice of the truth of my words, ſeeing I have the Kings ſpear and cruſe of water here in my hands, which ſtood at his beds ſide when he was aſleep, that I may not ſeem to accuſe thee wrongfully.

V. 17. Is this thy voice, my ſon David?] Here again, being convinced of Davids innocency, and even in an extaſie of admiration in the apprehenſion of his humanity and clemency, Saul acknowledgeth him for his ſon, and thereby profeſſeth his love and reconciliation. And hence it appeareth that the hypocrite perſecuted David againſt his conſcience, and contrary to his promiſe and oath, ch. 19. 6. and 24. 20.

V. 19. If the Lord hath ſtirred thee up againſt me, let him accept an offering] Heb. ſmel. So Gen. 8. 21. To wit, that his anger may be appeaſed, and he made propitious by ſacrifices for ſin offered unto him. Now this may either have reference to Saul, thus, That if the Lord for his ſins had ſtirred him up, by the miniſtery of that evil ſpirit whom he had ſent to inrage him, to perſecute David without any juſt cauſe, 2 Sam. 24. 1. then it was his beſt courſe to reconcile himſelf unto God by ſacrifice, that he might be freed from thoſe frantick fits, and not be hurried on by Satan, as his inſtrument, in thoſe malicious courſes and perſecutions. Or if it were for Davids ſin as well as his that God had done all this, it were fit they ſhould both of them, the one as well as the other, labor to pacifie Gods juſt diſpleaſure by oblations, joined with repentance and confeſſion of their ſins, and fervent prayer for mercy and forgiveneſſe. Or elſe it may (in the conceit of others) be referred unto David himſelf, thus, That if it might appear he had offended, and juſtly provoked Sauls diſpleaſure againſt him, he was willing that the law ſhould proceed, and that being juſtly condemned he might be offered as a ſacrifice, even to the death, if he had deſerved it, that Gods diſpleaſure might be appeaſed, juſtice being ſatisfied.

But if they be the children of men, curſed be they before the Lord] i. e. If they be court-Sycophants, or any other malicious enemies, that by their lyes and ſlanders have incenſed thee againſt me, I leave them, as curſed creatures, to Gods juſt revenge, who will plead my cauſe againſt them. *S*ee Gal. 5. 12.

for they have driven me out this day from abiding in the inheritance of the Lord] i. e. The land of promiſe, which God above all other places and Kingdoms hath choſen for his peculiar inheritance, and there placed his Tabernacle, Ark, and holy ordinance, the viſible ſigns of his preſence and protection: From all theſe by their malice exciting thee to purſue and perſecute me I am now driven, ſo as I cannot be preſent in the Tabernacle to worſhip God, and enjoy thoſe holy priviledges, but am forced to wander from place to place. And this is that which moſt affected David with grief, and went neerer his heart then the loſſe of houſe, lands, friends and all other his worldly enjoyments, Pſal. 42. 2. and 84. 1, 2.

ſaying, Go ſerve other Gods] i. e. Though not verbally yet really they have done it. As much as in them lyeth they have compelled me to Idolatry, by forcing me, as an exile, to flee into Idolatrous countries, and ſo endanger myſelf to run into a total apoſtaſie, Pſal. 120. 5. *S*ee Rom. 14. 15.

V. 20. Now therefore Let not my blood fall to the earth before the face of the Lord] i. e. Seeing thou ſeeſt my innocency, do not thus purſue me even to the ſhedding of my guiltleſſe blood. For God is a preſent witneſſe of all our actions, and as a juſt Judge will ſeverely puniſh blood cauſeleſly ſpilt, when from the earth it cryeth unto him for vengeance. Gen. 4. 10. Others take it as a profeſſion of Davids confidence in God: q. d. The Lord who is preſent; and ſeeth mine innocency, will not permit thee to ſhed mine innocent blood, and therefore do not attempt it, ſeeing it will be in vain. Others take it as a prayer, thus I beſeech the Lord, in whoſe ſight I am, that he will not permit thee, O King, to ſhed my blood.

the King of Iſrael is come out to ſeek a flea] See on ch. 24. 14.

V. 21. becauſe my ſoul was precious in thine eyes this day] i. e: Becauſe having my life in high eſteem, thou haſt ſpared me when it was in thy power to have killed me, and preſerved my life, as precious in thy ſight:

Behold, I have played the fool, and have erred exceedingly] Seeming to aggravate his ſin, he doth much extenuate it, imputing it to his folly, which made him do he knew not what, and miſtake wrong for right, whereas it was an act of malice, and contrary to his knowledg and conſcience; and to his errour proceeding from the ignorance of his mind, which cauſed him unknowingly to go out of the right into a wrong way againſt his wil; whereas it was the envy & hatred of his heart which made him perſecute David, though he knew his innocency, onely for this cauſe, becauſe he was the man whom God had choſen to be King in his room.

V. 22. And David anſwered and ſaid, Behold the Kings ſpear] Having taken it from the King onely to clear his innocency, when it had ſerved for that uſe, he maketh conſcience of retaining it (as before he did of cutting the skirt of his robe) and therefore taketh care to return it to the right owner, yet he durſt not truſt him ſo far as to go himſelf to carry it, becauſe he had ſo often after ſhew of reconciliation returned preſently to his old practiſes, when the evil ſpirit which was upon him excited him thereunto.

V. 23. The Lord render unto every man his righteouſneſſe and his faithfulneſſe] Or, and the Lord ſhall render. i. e. Recompenſe every man according to his works, or the equity or iniquity of his cauſe, with rewards or puniſhmens; rewarding thoſe for his gracious promiſe ſake who are righteous and faithful, and ſo me among the reſt, who now and heretofore have approved my ſelf to be one of that number; and puniſhing thoſe who are faithleſſe and unrighteous, and me among them, if ever I be found to be ſuch an one to thee or others. *S*ee Pſal. 7. 8.

V. 24. So let my life be much ſet by in the eyes of the Lord] Who is able to preſerve it though thou ſhouldſt fail of thy promiſe, and ſeek again to take it away, as not eſteeming it a thing of any value.

V. 25. Thou ſhalt both do great things, and alſo ſhalt ſtill prevail] To wit, againſt thine and Gods enemies. Or, all things ſhall proſper in thine hand according to thine own heart, and thou ſhalt be crowned with Real dignity maugre the malice of all thine enemies.

So David went on his way] i. e. That he might retire himſelf to ſome place of ſafety; not truſting to *S*aul, for all his goodly words and fair ſpeeches, having alwayes found him malicious and faithleſſe, as appeareth ch. 27. 1.

and Saul returned to his place] i. e. To Gibeah Benjamin of Saul, where he kept his Court.

CHAP. XXVII.

Verſ. 1. AND David ſaid in his heart, I ſhall now periſh one day by the hand of Saul] To wit, if I do not uſe means to eſcape the danger, by getting me out of his reach. David here ſeemeth to doubt of the goodneſſe of God and the truth of his promiſes. See Pſal. 116. 10.

there is nothing better for me then that I ſhould ſpeedily eſcape into the land of the Philiſtims] Becauſe being profeſſed enemies to Saul, his power could not extend thither. But as they were enemies to *S*aul, ſo likewiſe they were enemies to God and his people: and therefore David could do nothing worſe than to fly unto him for protection. Beſides, he had former experience what deſperate danger he had run himſelf into by going to them, and what baſe ſhifts he was fain to uſe that he might eſcape out of it: And yet now he would needs go thither again, truſting in his own carnal wiſdom, and hoping by his own policy and providence to be there in ſafety; becauſe he went not now covertly and ſecretly, but openly and profeſſedly, making himſelf known to the King, and it may be contracting with him by his agents before he went, that he might have the publicke faith for the Kings protection and his own ſafety, in regard that he came now with conſiderable forces to do him ſervice. But herein David bewrayed his weakneſſe of faith, and his humane frailty. He had Gods promiſes of protection, and that he ſhould live and come to be King, maugre the malice of all his enemies; and he had had alſo much experience of Gods providence watching over him, and delivering him out of many great and imminent dangers in a marvellous manner, when there appeared little cauſe of hope; yet now upon leſſe cauſe apprehending danger, and relying on his own policy, for ſecuring himſelf, he fleeth to the Philiſtims; a courſe unlawful in it ſelf, and alſo of evil and dangerous conſequence. Firſt, it was expreſly forbidden Gods people to make any covenants or have any familiar converſation with them: And God before by his Prophet had checked David for living with the Moabites, (which yet was more tolerable then to live with the Philiſtims, who were in the number of thoſe nations which were devoted utterly to be rooted out) and had commmanded him to come from among them, ch. 22. 3, 5. Again, David was enjoyned by God to return into Judea, in obedience to which command he might be ſure of protection; and now not conſulting with God by the Prieſt, as his manner was, he leaveth this place which God had aſſigned him, and fleeth to the Philiſtims. Moreover, having been ſuch a profeſſed enemy to them, and done them ſo much miſchief, ſlaying their Goliath, ſlaughtering two hundred of them, and diſhonouring the whole nation by circumciſing their dead bodies, beſides all other his victories, he could have no hope of reconciliation with them or ſafety amongſt them, unleſſe he would now leave his party, the people of God, and turning wholly to them, would be ready to joyn with them againſt their enemies, and fight their battels; as afterwards he profeſſeth, though feignedly, he was ready to do, ch. 29. 8. Finally, hereby he gave a grievous ſcandal, both to his friends, in deſerting the cauſe of God, which he was bound to defend and maintain, and leaving them alſo to the malice of their enemies, whom, as much as in him lay, he was bound to protect; and alſo to his enemies, who through his ſides would take advantage to wound religion, and tax the profeſſors of it as men who would be ready, notwithſtanding their goodly ſhews, for the ſecuring of themſelves, to betray the cauſe of God and his people, and fight under the ſtandard of their enemies for the baſe pay of earthly advantage. The evil conſequents alſo of Davids fleeing to the Philiſtims were many and dangerous. For hereby he was drawn to lye and diſſemble, v. 11; to deny his profeſſion, and to declare himſelf a friend to the uncircumciſed Philiſtims, and an enemy to Gods people. Upon this occaſion Ziklag was burned, their wives and children carried captives, and himſelf in danger to be ſtoned in a mutiny by his own *S*ouldiers. By his abſence from Judea the power of Iſrael was much weakned, a multitude of the beſt *S*ouldiers and greateſt Worthies in the land reſorting unto him at Ziklag, until they grew to ſuch a number that they deſerved to be entituled the army of God, that is a great and mighty army, 1 Chr. 12. 1, 22. And this ſome think was the cauſe of *S*auls overthrow: but it ſeemeth to me, that that reſort unto David was after Sauls death, ſeeing they came to him to make him King, 1 Chr. 12. 38. And yet it muſt be granted that though he had not that great army when the battel of Gilboa was fought, yet the abſence of himſelf and his ſix hundred valiant men that followed him was a great weakning to the army of Iſrael. Finally, hereby he expoſed himſelf to the diſhonour of ingratitude, and breaking the bonds of civility and humanity, by making himſelf beholding to them for his protection and proviſions for his ſuſtenance whom he muſt afterwards when he came to be King, fight againſt as mortal enemies.

V. 2. And David aroſe, and he paſſed over with the ſix hundred men] Having firſt, it is likely, by his agents contracted with the King, on conditions agreed upon between them; and ſo having obtained from him ſafe-conduct and protection for himſelf and his followers.

unto Achiſh the ſon of Maoch King of Gath] Some think that this was not the ſame Achiſh that David was with before, and that he is ſaid to be the ſon of Maoch to difference him from the other, becauſe it is not likely he would go to him again from whom he had lately eſcaped with ſo much danger. But it ſeemeth to me, becauſe it was ſo lately, and he of the ſame name, that this was the ſame King; unto whom David went again, but upon other conditions, and in another manner; before, ſecretly and diſguiſedly, as a private man; but now openly and profeſſedly, as the captain of ſix hundred men, with all his company following him, to do the King ſervice, and upon cautions and conditions agreed upon between them.

V. 4. And it was told Saul——and he ſought no more again for him] To wit, becauſe it was both bootleſſe, he being in the land of his enemies and out of his reach, and alſo (as he hoped) needleſſe, becauſe the Philiſtims were likely to revenge themſelves upon him, being now in their hands, who had done them ſo many miſchiefs, and was likely to do them more, if they did not make uſe of this opportunity to cut him off. But by this reaſon which is rendred for *S*auls not purſuing David, it is implyed, that notwithſtanding their late reconciliation he would again have perſecuted him, if he had continued in the land.

V. 5. And David ſaid to Achiſh——Let them give me a place in ſome town. i. e. Let ſome of thy officers by thy command deſign ſome place fitting for me and my followers to dwell in.

for why ſhould thy ſervant dwell in the royal city with thee?] David in his prudence maketh modeſty and humility the ground of his ſuit, though he had other ends and ayms in it; as, 1. that his followers might not be corrupted with the vices, eſpecially the idolatry, exerciſed in the royal city. 2. That they might have the free exerciſe of Gods pure worſhip, which would have been offenſive to the idolatrous inhabitants. 3. That being abſent, he might not ſo eaſily be drawn in to joyn with them in their wars againſt Gods people. 4. That wanting other means to maintain his followers, he might more unknown and unſuſpected make in-roads into the bordering countries, and live upon their ſpoyl who were by God devoted to deſtruction.

V. 6. Achiſh gave him Ziklag that day] This city by Gods donation did belong to the tribe of Judah, Joſh. 15. 31. but was poſſeſſed till now by the Philiſtims.

wherefore Ziklag pertaineth to the Kings of Judah to this day] Not only by right of inheritance from God, but alſo by the Kings free gift. Now this was ſo ordered by Gods providence, that David might have a fit place not only for preſent habitation for himſelf and his followers, but alſo for raiſing and forming a great army, all thoſe having hereby opportunity to reſort unto him who favoured his cauſe, and deſired to advance him to the Kingdome, 1 Chr. 12. 1. 22.

V. 7. And the time that David dwelt in the countrey of the Philiſtims was a full year and four moneths] Heb. a year of dayes (or, dayes) and four moneths. Some would have it that he was there but four moneths and certain dayes: But becauſe dayes is put before moneths, as the greater time uſeth to be before the leſſer, and becauſe dayes is put for a year of dayes, and a ſacrifice of dayes for a yearly ſacrifice, ch. 1. 21. and becauſe Achiſh ſaith that he had had long experience of Davids fidelity, ch. 29. 3. which cannot be limited to a few moneths, and all the things done in the time of his reſiding among the Philiſtines cannot be reaſonably thought to have been done in ſo ſhort a ſpace; therefore I conceive we have the time rightly expreſſed in our tranſlation.

V. 8. invaded the Geſhurites, and the Gezrites] Theſe were ſome reliques of the Canaanites, whom God appointed to be deſtroyed; but at the coming of the Iſraelites they left their places in Gilead and the tribe of Ephraim, and went to the Amalekites, Joſh. 12. 5. and 16. 3.

and the Amalekites] Theſe Saul was commanded to root out, ch. 15. 1, 2. but he left ſome alive, which David now deſtroyed. See on ch. 15. 7, 8.

For thoſe nations] i. e. The Geſhurites and the Gezrites and the Amalekites.

were the inhabitants of the land] i. e. Of Canaan, on both ſides Jordan.

as thou goeſt to Shur] i. e. The entrance of the Wilderneſſe to Shur towards Egypt.

V. 9. And David ſmote the land] To wit, the inhabitants of that Country, that is, the Amalekites, which were to be deſtroyed by Gods command, ch. 15. 3. Exod. 17. 14.

and left neither man nor woman alive] Both becauſe he knew that God had devoted them to deſtruction, and alſo becauſe none ſhould carry tidings to Achiſh, who would have been offended, if he had heard that theſe nations, who were his confederates and it may be alſo his tributaries, were deſtroyed by David, v. 11.

V. 10. And Achiſh ſaid, whether have ye made a rode to day?] Or, Did not you make a rode to day?

And David ſaid againſt the South of Judah, &c.] Hereby is not meant either that he invaded many Countries in one day, but one at one time, and another at another time, according as Achiſh ſeveral dayes did ask him the ſame queſtion; Or that he invaded the land of Judah at all, and theſe other places, as he would have Achiſh underſtand him, but onely thoſe countries that bordered upon them, that is, the Amalekites, Geſhurites, and Gezrites. Now herein David, to avoid Achiſh his diſpleaſure, and ſecure himſelf from danger, telleth many premeditated lyes, and deludes the King with equivocations. Divers Expoſitors, though they do not wholly acquit him, but ſay he did not uſe that plainneſſe in his anſwer which became ſuch an holy and good man, yet think he did not at all tell a direct lye, becauſe his ſpeech being ing ambiguous, he underſtood it right of the nations that dwelt on the South of Judah, and not of Judah it ſelf; though his deſire was that Achiſh ſhould underſtand him otherwiſe, and contrary to the truth. But the end of queſtions is to be reſolved in the truth of things demanded, in a plain ſenſe; and not to be deluded by ambiguous anſwers; therefore if a man ſpeak in one ſenſe and would be underſtood in another, and accordinly ſpeak the truth with a purpoſe to delude and deceive, it is no better then a lye in that ſenſe wherein he is & would be underſtood: yea, in this reſpect worſe, becauſe it is joyned with more crafty guile and ſubtile deceit. And therefore, though I will not contend about words, nor oppoſe them that ſay Davids anſwer was no direct lye, yet ſure I am it was a fraudulent equivocation, which is no leſſe ſinful, or contrary to direct and plain truth, then a lye is. But with theſe ambiguous ſpeeches Achiſh was eaſily deceived, becauſe he had a good opinion of Davids truth and integrity; and alſo becauſe he deſired it ſhould be ſo as he ſaid; for we are the more apt to believe thoſe things we deſire, though they be falſe, becauſe, for the time whileſt we believe them, they bring as much delight and content as if they were true.

the Jerahmeelites] The inhabitants of a region in Judah, which the poſterity of Jerahmeel the firſt-born of Hezron inhabited, 1 Chr. 2. 9, 25.

the Kenites] Theſe were of the poſterity of Jethro. See on Judg. 1. 16. and 1 Sam. 15. 6.

V. 11. And David ſaved neither man nor woman alive, to bring tidings to Gath] Gath was a good diſtance from Ziklag and thoſe ſpoyled countries that were ſcattered and ſolitary; in which reſpect their ruine and deſolation was more eaſily concealed. Yet for all this it muſt needs be confeſſed a great wonder, that ſuch a ſlaughter of men and women in no greater diſtance of places ſhould ſo long time be concealed, and that there was a ſpecial hand of God ſo diſpoſing of it, that David might be preſerved from thoſe dangers and evils which would have befallen him if it had been diſcovered.

ſaying, Leſt they ſhould tell of us] i. e. Thus thinking with himſelf.

V. 12. And Achiſh believed David] Heb. believed in David. i. e. Not only gave credit to his words, but alſo repoſed truſt in him. So Exod. 14. 31.

he hath made his people utterly to abhor him] Heb. to ſtink. Or, to abhor him as a thing ſtinking and odious, Gen. 34. 30.

therefore he ſhall be my ſervant for ever] i. e. Seeing he can never have any hope of being reconciled to his people, he will never leave me to go to them, but will remain ſtill with me, to do me ſervice as long as he liveth.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Ver. 1. THe Philiſtims gathered their armies together to fight againſt Iſrael] i. e. Not only Achiſh King of Gath, but with him all the other four Princes of the Philiſtims; See ch. 6. 17. Now this came to paſs by Gods ſpecial providence, that *S*aul, whoſe ſin was now come to its full meaſure, might be cut off with all his wicked followers, and ſo a way made for bringing David to the Kingdom; though it may be the Philiſtines were encouraged to undertake this war by Sauls ill government and the diſtractions that followed thereupon in the Kingdome of Iſrael.

Know thou aſſuredly, that thou ſhalt go out with me to battel] He thus reſolveth out of the greater confidence he had in Davids valour and fidelity, whom he ſuppoſed he had made ſure unto him by his benefits conferred on him.

V. 2. And David ſaid to Achiſh, Surely thou ſhalt know what thy ſervant can do] Here again David through humane frailty equivocateth, becauſe he would not diſpleaſe Achiſh by a refuſal, or the diſcovery of his irreſolution to do him ſervice. By this doubtful ſpeech it appeareth he meant nothing leſſe then to fight for Gods enemies againſt his people, howſoever he deſireth that Achiſh ſhould ſo underſtand him. Neither can we reaſonably think that David intended that Achiſh ſhould experimentally know what he was able to do in fighting againſt him, who in his great extremity had entertained him and his followers with ſo much humanity and love; ſeeing this would have branded him, with baſe ingratitude and treachery: But being reſolved to do nothing either for him or againſt him, he ſpeaketh thus ambiguouſly; becauſe not knowing by what means he might avoid doing either the one or the other, as a man unreſolved he dependeth upon God, and no doubt earneſtly prayed unto him, to find out ſome way for him to come out of this labyrinth. And he was accordingly heard, by being caſhiered out of the Philiſtims army, through the princes miſlike of his going with them to battel.

And Achiſh ſaid to David, Therefore will I make thee keeper of my head for ever] Being deluded with Davids ambiguous anſwer, and underſtanding thereby that he would give him his faithful aſſiſtance, he promiſeth chiefly to rely upon him for his ſafety, and to prefer him to the office of being Captain of his Lifeguard, as long as they both lived; an high advancement, no doubt, for the King of Iſrael to be made chief Captain to the petty King of Gath, and a groſſe idolater.

V. 3. Now Samuel was dead, and all Iſrael lamented him] This was related ch. 25. 1. but is here again repeated; to make way unto the following ſtory of Sauls going to the witch. For Samuel being dead, he could not reſort unto him for councel in his great extremity; and he was now quite forſaken of God, and utterly deſtitute of all means to adviſe him what to do: therefore he could think of no other way, but by the help of witches & wizards to raiſe up Samuel from the dead, that he might confer with him; ſeeing he thought he would moſt pity his caſe, and be moſt able and ready to give him advice, whom he had alwayes found ſo faithful unto him. Thus this hypocrite is driven to ſeek and ſue unto *S*amuel after his death, whoſe counſel he had neglected all his life-time.

and Saul had put away thoſe that had familiar ſpirits, and the wizards out of the land] This is brought in as a difficulty that croſſed Sauls deſire. He knew not how to reſort to any witches for his purpoſe, becauſe he had rooted them all out of the land. This he had done, not with an upright and true heart out of zeal to Gods glory, or obedience to his commandments, or hatred of their ſin, but that, like an hypocrite, he might make ſhew of zeal and love to religion, and ſo raiſe up an high opinion of himſelf in the minds of the people. For otherwiſe, if he had done it in hatred to their ſin, he would not now ſeek unto them, as he doth, againſt the light of his knowledge and the teſtimony and conviction of his conſcience.

V. 4. in Shunem] A city in the borders of Iſſachar, Joſh. 19. 18. where Eliſha was harboured, 2 King. 4. 8, 10, and where Abiſhag Davids virgin-wife and nurſe was born, 1 King. 1. 3.

And Saul gathered all Iſrael together] i. e. An army out of all the tribes of Iſrael.

and they pitched in Gilboa] A mountainous place on the South-limits of the tribe of Iſſachar, neer Jezreel, where Saul and his ſons were ſlain in battel, ch. 31. 1. and 2 Sam. 1. 21.

V. 5. And when Saul ſaw the hoſt of the Philiſtims, he was afraid] Out of guilt of conſcience thinking the time of his cutting off was now come.

V. 6. And when Saul enquired of the Lord, the Lord anſwered him not] i. e. By ſuch means as were at hand: Which is rendred as a cauſe why *S*aul deſired to reſort to a witch.

nor by Urim] Abiathar the Prieſt, to avoid Sauls cruel rage and ſave his life, was fled to David, carrying the Ephod & breſt-plate with him, ch. 23. 6. and 30. 7. So Saul could not enquire by Urim, which was in the breſt-plate; yet it is here inſerted among the reſt, to ſhew that he was utterly forſaken of God, who either had deprived him of the means of enquiry, or would not anſwer him in thoſe he had. This was a ſign of Gods extream anger. See ch. 14. 37. Lam. 2. 9.

nor by Prophets] i. e. By no means, ordinary, or extraordinary, Num. 27. 21. And the reaſon is, becauſe his enquiry was out of baſe fear, and not out of faith: for then he would have been conſtant in it, waiting upon God in the uſe of lawful means, and not have run after witches, as a man deſperately reſolved to ſeek help of the devil, if in his own limited time God would not anſwer him. Such faithleſſe enquiring was no better then nothing; and therefore it is ſaid 1 Chr. 10. 14. he enquired not of the Lord, becauſe he left the Lord, and enquired of one that had a familiar ſpirit; and for this the Lord ſlew him.

V. 7. Seek me a woman that hath a familiar ſpirit] Heb. A Pythoniſſe, or a dame of a familiar ſpirit. So familiar ſpirits call witches their dames unto this day. Such an one was that Divining maid mentioned Act. 16. 16. For this ſervice the Devil maketh choice of women more frequently then of men, as being the weaker ſex, and more apt to be abuſed and deluded. *S*uch a woman *S*aul commandeth his ſervants to ſeek out, that he might go and enquire of her. Like an impious wretch, when he had no hope in heaven, rather then he would fail of his purpoſe, he went to hell for help; herein going againſt not only Gods expreſſe commandment, Deut. 18. 11. but his own conſcience and practiſe alſo, who had before deſervedly deſtroyed witches. See on Iſa. 8. 19.

there is a woman that hath a familiar ſpirit at Endor] A town in the tribe of Manaſſeh, on this ſide Jordan, Joſh. 17. 11. Here many of *S*iſera's fleeing ſouldiers periſhed, Pſal. 83. 10. And here this witch lurked, as no doubt divers others did in other places, notwithſtanding that Saul had endeavoured to root them all out.

V. 8. And Saul diſguiſed himſelf, and put on other raiment] Both that the witch might not know him, ſeeing it was likely, that if ſhe knew him to be Saul, who had deſtroyed ſo many of her conſorts, ſhe would hide her deviliſh art, and deny his requeſt, for fear of death; and alſo becauſe he would not have any other diſcover him, leſt they ſhould take notice of his groſs hypocriſie and impiety, in reſorting now unto witches for counſel and comfort, who had lately perſecuted them even to the death.

and bring him me up whom I ſhall name unto thee] i. e. Raiſe him from the dead, and bring him up out of the ground and grave.

V. 9. Wherefore then layeſt thou a ſnare for my life, to cauſe me to dye?] i. e. Why doſt thou expoſe me to the danger of death by the hand of Saul for exerciſing theſe inhibited arts? Here the woman, though unknowingly, convinceth *S*auls conſcience of a grieveous ſin, in ſeeking to have his purpoſe by ſuch diabolical means as he himſelf had, formerly condemned and puniſhed.

V. 10. And ſware to her by the Lord] Impiouſly abuſing Gods holy name, in ſwearing that he would ſin againſt him by tranſgreſſing his law which commanded that witches and Sorcerers ſhould be put to death, Exod. 22. 18. Deut. 18. 10. and to this end that he might encourage her to wickedneſſe.

there ſhall no puniſhment happen unto thee for this thing] i. e. By my diſcovery, and making it known.

V. 11. And he ſaid, Bring me up Samuel] Though Saul rejected him and his counſel in his life time, and would not be adviſed by him, yet, being now in ſtraits, none but he will ſerve his turn.

V. 12. And

V. 12. And when the woman ſaw Samuel, ſhe cryed with a loud voice] The *S*pirit having diſcovered to her that it was Saul, and ſhe ſuſpecting he had laid this train to circumvent her and take away her life, cryeth out for fear. Now this was not the true Samuel whom the witch raiſed up, but a wicked ſpirit in his ſhape, perſonating and acting his part, as if it had been Samuel himſelf; as may appear by theſe reaſons. I. Becauſe there is none but an infinite power, which is peculiar unto God, that can raiſe the dead to life again. And this he communicateth ſometimes unto his *S*aints and ſervants, that they may confirm the truth by miracles, as he did to Elijah, Eliſha, Peter, Paul, and Chriſt himſelf; but never to the devil, to countenance lyes, and his diabolical acts. II. They that dye in the Lord, are under his protection, and their ſouls out of *S*atans reach, in heaven; without which the body can act nothing; yea the body it ſelf is deſigned to the grave, as a repoſitory and place of reſt, whence it cannot be raiſed to life again untill the day of the general reſurrection. And as the devil had no power to bring Samuel: ſo it is not probable that the Lord did ſend him. For if he refuſed to anſwer Saul in an ordinary way, by dreams, Urim, and Prophets, it is very unlikely that he would do it in an extraordinary and miraculous way, by raiſing the Prophet Samuel from the dead; ſeeing this courſe is diſclaimed by Abraham, in his ſpeech to the rich glutton, Luk. 16. 31. Neither would *S*amuel have ſaid to Saul, Why haſt thou diſquieted me? and aſcribed his coming to the power of the witches charms. III. His appearing in a mantle doth make it manifeſt that it was only a repreſentative ſhew, and not a real truth, ſeeing he had no mantle to bring with him from the place of the dead but it was only a garment of the devils making, and by him put on, that he might more ſpeciouſly act his part. But againſt this two things are objected: Firſt, that in the ſtory he is divers times called Samuel, and therefore was ſo indeed. To which I anſwer, that the wicked ſpirit perſonating *S*amuel, hath alſo his name fitly given him as a Player acting the part of a King, and repreſenting his perſon, is alſo called by his name. *S*econdly it is objected, that he foretold things to come which accordingly came to paſſe; and future contingents are not within the compaſſe of the devils cognizance, ſeeing they are wholly at Gods diſpoſing. To this I anſwer, I. That Satan in ſome caſes and at ſome times can foretell things to come, as being a great Naturaliſt, and able to dive into the hidden cauſes and deep ſecrets of nature, and ſo accordingly to frame his predictions, which ſeem wonderful and ſupernatural unto us, who are unable to dive into thoſe unknown myſteries. II Being acquainted with the cauſes of things, natural, moral, political, from theſe premiſes he is able to deduce ſuch conſequentes as in all probability will follow, if God be not pleaſed to interrupt the ſeries and chain of cauſes, as he ſometimes doth. And then in ſuch a caſe, that his predictions may ſeem true, whatſoever hapneth, he delivereth them in ſuch ambiguous, equivocal and doubtful ſpeeches, that they may be underſtood either in this or that ſenſe, though they be diverſe, yea even contrary to one another. God ſometimes uſeth *S*atan as an inſtrument to execute his judgements, as in the caſe of Job, and the four hundred falſe Prohpets deluded by him 1 Kings 22. 22. and then it is eaſie for him to foretell thoſe things which belong to the execution of Gods commands. IV. God may reveal things future and contingent unto *S*atan, and ſo he may diſcover them to witches and ſorcerers before they come to paſſe, to encourage and harden both their hearts in their diabolical practiſes, and others alſo that reſort unto them. V. The devil might very probably foretell *S*auls approaching ruine, by comparing one thing with another; as his rejection by God, and Davids election and anointing to be King; *S*auls heinous and raging ſins againſt God and his ſervants, the meaſure whereof now ſeemeth to be full; the great preparations of the Philiſtims, joined with much confidence and courage, compared with Sauls diffidence in God and the fear and fainting of his heart, who had formerly been couragious and full of valour.

V. 13. And the King ſaid, Be not afraid] To wit, that thou ſhalt ſuſtain any hurt or danger by my preſence, ſeeing I have not ſet thee on work to this end, but only to be ſatisfied in my demands.

For what ſaweſt thou?] Hereby is implyed that Saul was not by at the firſt whileſt the witch exerciſed her charms and ſpels to raiſe the ſpirit; which witches uſe to do ſecretly by themſelves, that their diabolical arts may not be diſcovered: For if Saul had been preſent at his firſt raiſing and anppearing, he ſhonld not have needed to have asked this queſtion, being an eye-witneſſe of all himſelf.

And the woman ſaid unto Saul, I ſaw Gods aſcending out of the earth] Like an heathen ſhe ſpeaketh in the plural number, Gods, though ſhe ſaw but one. *S*o Exod. 32. 4. And ſhe calleth him a God, either becauſe he appeared in the habit of a Judge or ſupream Magiſtrate, as he formerly had been; who are called Gods, Pſal. 82. 1, 6. Or rather becauſe he appeared as a glorious and Divine perſon, like unto God, and with ſuch majeſty and brightneſſe as did diſanimate and aſtoniſh her: For the Devil can transform himſelf into an angel of light, 2 Cor. 11. 14. Or elſe her meaning is to denote an excellent perſon: for ſo the word Elohim, though of the plural number, doth ſometimes ſignifie.

V. 14. covered with a mantle] A garment uſed by *S*amuel and other of the Prophets, ch. 15. 27. 2 Kin. 2. 8, 13.

And Saul perceived that it was Samuel] i. e. Both by the witches deſcription, and preſently by his own ſight, he knew him to be Samuel; though it were not the true Samuel himſelf, but the devil in his likeneſſe. For ſoon after ſhe had raiſed him by her deviliſh ſpells, ſhe calleth Saul himſelf to ſee and talke with him; which was the cauſe of his coming: and ſhe going out, leaveth them to themſelves to debate together of their ſecrets, as thinking it no manners to prie into them, as appeareth, v. 21.

and he ſtooped with his face to the ground, and bowed himſelf] Being deluded by the devil, he doth him this honour in ſtead of Samuel. Thus he who in his proſperity neglected *S*amuel, now, in the ſtraits of trouble adoreth him as his *S*uperior.

V. 15. Why haſt thou diſquieted me, to bring me up?] It was neither in the Witches nor devils power to raiſe up *S*amuel. But God permitteth the devil to delude thoſe to their perdition, that believe him, and put their truſt in diabolical arts.

that thou mayeſt make known unto me what I ſhall do] i. e. What is beſt to be done by me, that am in ſuch a diſtreſſed condition.

V. 16. Wherefore then doſt thou ask of me, ſeeing the Lord is departed from thee] As the devil counterfeited Samuels perſon and habit, ſo did he alſo his words and ſpeeches, in all his conference with Saul. q. d. Why doſt thou ſeek to me for counſel, ſeeing I can do thee no favour, being Gods enemy?

V. 17. And the Lord hath done to him] i. e. To David. According to his promiſe. By rejecting and bringing thee to ruine he hath made way for him to come to the Kingdom. Others read it thus, The Lord hath done for himſelf; i. e. hath diſpoſed his counſels to his own ends, as he ſpake by Samuel, ch. 15. 27, 28.

For the Lord hath rent the Kingdome out of thine hand] *S*ome ſay the phraſe of renting is uſed, becauſe the whole Kingdom was not taken at once from Sauls poſterity, but part of it for a time was held by Iſhboſheth, one of his ſons; as it is ſaid of *S*olomons Kingdome in like caſe, 1 Kings 11. 31.

V. 18. Becauſe thou obeyedſt not the voice of the Lord, nor executedſt his fierce wrath upon Amalek] Saul had committed many other heinous ſins, for which he deſerved to be dethroned, as his murdering of the Lords Prieſts, and perſecuting the Lords Prieſts, and perſecuting David, being innocent, againſt his knowledg and conſcience. But the devil nameth this ſin onely, becauſe upon commiſſion thereof the ſentence of rejection was denounced, ch. 15. 28. Here obſerve the devils method in dealing with his vaſſals: Firſt he tempteth them to ſin under the notion of a good deed or work of mercy; and when he hath drawn them to commit it, he preſſeth it upon their conſciences, eſpecially in the day of their calamity, as horrible and heinous, that he may bring them to deſpair.

V. 19. And to morrow ſhalt thou and thy ſons be with me] Hereby is not meant either heaven or hell, but the ſtate of the dead, to wit that they all ſhould be dead, as he was. So 2 Sam. 12. 13. Now whereas he telleth him that he ſhould to morow be with him in this ſtate of death, he ſpeaketh ambiguouſly, and might be underſtood either of the next day following, or indifinitely of ſome other time neer approaching. For ſo to morrow is often taken, as Exod. 13. 14. and Matth. 6. 34. And ſo in this place it is to be underſtood. For it was not the next day that Saul and his ſons were ſlain, in which the Philiſtims were but preparing for the battel, and ſent away David from amongſt them, ch. 29. but, as it ſeemeth, a day or two after. And uſing the ſame ambiguity he alſo ſaith that *S*aul and his ſons ſhould be with him; which, whether underſtood of *S*amuel or *S*atan, heaven or hell, could not be true of them all without diſtinction.

V. 20. Then Saul fell ſtraightway all along on the earth] i. e. Being frighted with this dreadful news, his vital ſpirits ſo failed him that he fell into a deadly trance.

for he had eaten no bread all the day] i. e. His fright accompanied with faſting did, both working together, bring him to this fainting and deadly ſwoon. And the cauſe of this his faſting, as ſome think, was, that coming to enquire of a witch, he might thus prepare himſelf to receive her anſwers, the devil imitating God as his ape, who will be ſought unto by faſting and prayer.

V. 21. And the woman came unto Saul] Namely after their conference being ended, the counterfeit Samuel was departed from him. Whereby is implyed that, whileſt it continued, ſhe had abſented her ſelf from them.

and I have put my life in mine hand] i. e. I have expoſed it to extream danger to ſatisfie thy deſire, if thou ſhouldeſt be pleaſed to deal with me as thou haſt formerly done with others of my condition, *S*ee on Judg. 12. 3.

V. 22. let me ſet a morſel of bread before thee] i. e. Make ſome poor proviſion, as I am able, for thy comfort and refreſhing in this thy faintneſſe and diſconſolate condition.

V. 24. And the woman had a fat calfe in the houſe, and ſhe haſted and killed it] For this Joſephus much commendeth her, as having herein done a noble act of humanity, and that to *S*aul, who had deſtroyed all he could find of her profeſſion; and when alſo he was in that dejected and deſperate condition, and never likely to make any recompenſe for her coſt and kindeneſſe. But others think it was an act of ſelfe-love, in which ſhe only reſpected her own ſafety; and fearing that if he dyed in her houſe, ſhe ſhould be called to account for his death, as having ſome hand in it by way of revenge, becauſe he had ſlain ſo many of her conſorts, ſhe uſed the beſt meanes ſhe could to comfort and ſtrengthen him, that he might depart ſafe out of her hands.

CHAP. XXIX.

Verſ. 1. N*Ow the Philiſtims gathered together all their armies to Aphek*] There were divers Cities of this name in Canaan; one in Iudah, Joſh. 15. 53. where the *I*ſraelites were defeated, and Eli's ſonnes ſlain, ch.4. 1. and where Benhadad was overthrown, 1. King. 20.26. another in Aſher, Joſh. 19.30. Judg. 1. 31. and this in Iſſachar, neer Gilboa, by the great field Megiddo, Joſh. 19. 18. Before, ch. 28. 4. the Philiſtims are ſaid to have pitched in Shunem, and the Iſraelites in Gilboa, and now the one in Aphek, and the other in Jezreel; not becauſe they had changed the place of their encamping; but thoſe places being very neer one another, and their camps overſpreading both alike, they are ſaid promiſcuouſly to have pitched ſometimes in the one, and ſometimes in the other place.

in Jezreel] Neer unto mount Gilboa, where the battel was fought Joſh. 19. 18.

V. 2. And the Lords of the Philiſtims paſſed on by hundreds] i. e. They came to take a view of their armies, as they were divided into hundreds and thouſands, before they were to lead them out to battell.

But David and his men paſſed on in the rereward with Achiſh] Who, though he were but one of the five Kings or Lords of the Philiſtims, yet it ſeemeth was choſen General in this expedition; and having choſen David and his followers to be his Life-guard, he placed them in the rereward of the battel, together with himſelf, as repoſing moſt truſt in them, eſpecially David, whom he had ſaid he would make keeper of his head for ever, ch. 28. 2.

V. 3. the Princes of the Philiſtims] i. e. The other Lords of their chief Cities, who had aſſociated themſelves with Achiſh in this war.

What do theſe Hebrews here?] So they call them in contempt and deſpite, as being their mortal enemies. q. d. Their room were much better then their company, ſeeing they are likely to do us more hurt then good.

Is not this David the ſervant of Saul?] i. e. A man greatly renowned amongſt his people for wiſdom and fortitude, and therefore able to do us ſpecial ſervice, being now fallen to our party.

which hath been with me theſe dayes, or years] i. e. As there is no doubt to be made of his abilities, ſo there is no reaſon to queſtion his faithfulneſſe, ſeeing I have had good experience thereof many dayes, or I may rather ſay years, he having now dwelt among us a whole yeer and four moneths, ch. 27. 7.

and I have found no fault in him] An high commendation. He was a man not only adorned with many vertues, but thoſe alſo not blemiſhed with any fault.

ſince he fell unto me] i. e. Since he left his maſters ſervice, being much wronged by him, and came unto me for protection. And though it cannot be denied but that by reaſon of his valor and prudence he did as much miſchief whileſt he was our enemy, yet we ſhall now thereby receive the more benefit, he being become our friend, and having left his former intereſt.

V. 4. And the Princes of the Philiſtims were wroth with him] Becauſe they thought Achiſh was much deluded upon ſlight and weak grounds, and by his error would greatly indanger the whole army.

Make this fellow return——to his place which thou haſt appointed him] i. e. To Ziklag, which thou haſt given him, though he be a fellow (howſoever high in thy eſteem, yet) unworthy of it, being at the beſt but a reconciled enemy, and as yet unknown to us how he will prove.

Leſt in the battel he be an adverſary to us] i. e. Turn from our ſide to help our enemies, as others of his nation have ſerved us in former times to our great hurt and prejudice, ch. 14. 21.

For wherewith ſhould he reconcile himſelf to his maſter? ſhould it not be with the heads of theſe men?] i. e. By betraying the lives of this whole army into Sauls hands. q. d. It cannot be but that it much diſcontents him to loſe all the comforts of his native country, and to live as an exile in a ſtrange nation: yet thus he muſt do, unleſſe he be reconciled to the King his Maſter. And what more likely means of bringing that to paſſe, then by a ſervice of ſo high an nature as this, to make him victorious over his enemies?

V. 5. Is not this David, of whom they ſang one to another?] i. e. As he is a man likely to betray us in reſpect of his own intereſt: ſo is he a moſt dangerous man in reſpect of his great abilities to effect it, being ſo much renowned for valour and military prudence, ch. 18. 7. and 21. 11.

V. 6. Surely as the Lord liveth] He ſweareth by the true God Jehovah, though he were an idolater; either becauſe he had learned ſo to do of David, or becauſe, ſwearing by his God, he ſhould the rather believe him.

thou haſt been upright] i. e. Approved thy ſelfe to me as a faithful ſervant: and all thy dealings, ſince thou cameſt into the army, I approve as juſt and good. Num. 27. 17.

Neverthelesſe the lords favour thee not] Heb. thou art not good in the eyes of the Lords. He qualifieth their hard and harſh cenſures and ſuſpicions with fair terms, that he might not too much grieve David, nor incenſe and raiſe up his ſpirit againſt them.

V. 7. That thou diſpleaſe not the Lords of the Philiſtims] Heb. do not evil in the eyes of the lords. i. e. In this follow my directions: For though thy actions may be good in themſelves, yet if they ſeem evil to them, they will diſpleaſe them, which would not be ſafe for thee ſeeing thou art now in their power.

V. 8. And David ſaid unto Achiſh, But what have I done?——that I may not go fight againſt the enemies of my lord the King?] Here David bewrayeth his great frailty, in uſing this deep diſſimulation to pleaſe the King: For he had not the leaſt deſire to fight in the quarrel of the idolatrous and uncircumciſed Philiſtims againſt Gods people; and no doubt he had earneſtly prayed unto God to give him ſome means whereby he might prevent it without running into extream danger; and now that God had heard his prayer, and found out a way for him above the reach of humane reaſon, he maketh ſhew of great willingneſſe to decline it, and of much diſcontent becauſe he was put off from doing the King ſervice.

V. 9. Thou art good in my ſight, as an Angel of God] i. e. A man of ſuch excellencies in mine eyes that thou ſeemeſt, as an Angel, to be ſent from heaven. Which phraſe he had either learned from David, or had it from the Hebrews, who were a neighbour nation, or from ſome reliques of the light of nature, which ſtill remain even among heathen idolaters.

V. 10. And aſſoon as ye be up early in the morning, and have light, depart] This advice he giveth him, to make all haſte to get away, leſt the lords of the Philiſtims ſhould be incenſed by his ſtay, and ſo either fall upon him and his followers in the camp, or lay ſecret ambuſhes to intrap him in his return. But God by his ſecret hand of providence ſo diſpoſed of it, both that he might not by ſtaying among them be drawn into the battel to fight, either againſt Gods people contrary to his conſcience and faith, or againſt Achiſh and his people, and ſo brand his name with infamy, for his perfidiouſneſſe and ungratefull inhumanity, having been ſo much ingaged unto him for his courteous entertainment, and alſo that he might by his ſpeedy return come ſeaſonably to recover his captives and the ſpoils of Ziklag out of the hands of the Amalekites; who had carried them away.

V. 11. to return into the land of the Philiſtims] i. e. Ziklag, which lay in the confines of the Philiſtims country. And the army of the Philiſtims marched on to Jezreel to give battel to Saul and the army of Iſrael.

CHAP. XXX.

Verſ. 1. When David and his men were come to Ziklag on the third day] To wit, after they had departed from the Philiſtims Camp.

the Amalekites had invaded the South and Ziklag] i. e. Part of the Philiſtims Country, and part of Judah, which lay on the South, as the Egyptian expounded it, v. 14.

and ſmitten Ziklag, and burnt it with fire] i. e. Slain the men and burnt the City. Theſe Amalekites were either the remainder of Sauls ſword in former times, and David of late, or elſe ſome others of that Nation that inhabited ſome remote corner of the Land, who taking the opportunity of Davids abſence in the Philiſtims country revenged themſelves on him, by forraging his tribe of Judah, burning Ziklag, which belonged unto him, ſlaying the men which he had there left behind him, and carrying the women and children away captive, to make them ſlaves, becauſe he had invaded and ſpoiled their Country, ch. 27. 8, 9. This was their aym, but God by his providence diſpoſed of it for other ends. David out of diffidence and diſtruſt in Gods promiſes and protection had fled out of Judah, where God had appointed him to abide, ch. 22. 5. into the land of the uncircumciſed Philiſtims, hoping there to find more ſafety then in that place which God had aſſigned him; and that out of his own policy, never conſulting with God about it. And to ſtrengthen this tottering hope, when it was ready to faint and fail, he had baſely ſhifted and ſhuffled for himſelf, telling many untruths, and uſing groſs diſſimulation, counterfeiting himſelf to be a friend to Gods enemies, and an enemie to his friends, and all to pleaſe the heathen King in whoſe protection he put his confidence. Now God made uſe of this action of the Amalekites and their ſacking of Ziklag to bring David to the ſight of his ſinnes, and to teach him for the future, to make God his refuge. Again, God hereby tried and exerciſed his faith, bringing him into ſuch ſtraits and dangers as no humane wiſdom could teach him how to evade. Further, he made way for David to obtain a glorious victory over Gods enemies, which might raiſe his fame, and make him be held in high honour and eſteem among his own nation; whilſt they admired his valour, and taſted of the fruits of his victory which he ſent among them: whereby he knit their hearts unto him, when he had moſt need of their aſſiſtance for obtaining the Kingdom. And finally hereby a way was laid open for the ruine of the remainder of the Amalekites, that curſed Nation, which God had devoted to deſtruction.

V. 2. And had taken the women captives——they ſlew not any, either great or ſmall] They ſpared not theſe out of any love or pity, ſeeing they were alwaies moſt malicious to Gods people, and now of late extreamly exaſperated by that ſharp execution of Davids, putting all of theirs to the ſword he could meet with, men, women and children. No doubt they would have rendred like for like unto Davids people, now fallen into their hands, and have revenged themſelves with all rigour, if they had been left to their own rage. But God inclined their hearts thus to ſpare them, that David might reſcue and recover them. And perhaps they did it out of a covetous deſire, to make moſt gain and advantage to themſelves, either by keeping or ſelling them for ſlaves, or receiving from David and his company round ſums for their ranſom.

V. 4. Then David and the people that were with him lift up their voice and wept] They did not ſtoically ſlight this heavy judgement, but laid it ſadly to heart. And their hearts being over-burthened with ſorrow both for their great loſs and their ſins the cauſe of it, ſought to eaſe themſelves by the paſſages of the eyes, and ſent forth an abundant ſhower of tears, which are called the Blood of the ſoul.

V. 5. And Davids two wives were taken captives] This is ſpecially added to ſhew, that beſides his grief for the common calamity, and the danger he was in by reaſon of his peoples high diſcontent, David had cauſe enough to grieve for his own particular loſs.

V. 6. And David was greatly diſtreſſed] He was driven by *S*auls rage from his own home, and lived as an exile in an heatheniſh country: And having had a ſhort time of breathing by dwelling at Ziklag, now that alſo is taken from him; and the place of his habitation being burnt, he knoweth not whether to flee for comfort. Not to his own country; for then *S*aul purſues and perſecutes him: Not back to the Philiſtims; for they having jealous and hard thoughts of him, had lately packed him away with diſhonour and diſgrace. The Amalekites his malicious enemies were become owners of his beloved wives, and had a ſtrong Army to hold their poſſeſſions. And his friends and followers, from whom alone he could expect comfort, are vehemently incenſed againſt him.

for the people ſpake of ſtoning him] They now looked upon him as the chief cauſe of all their loſſe and miſery; partly becauſe he had inraged the Amalekites by invading their country and ſlaughtering their people; and, partly becauſe having thus provoked them to revenge, he had improvidently left the City naked to their malice, and drawn out all his forces, which ſhould have defended it, to be imployed in aſſiſting the Philiſtims in an unneceſſary, yea, pernicious war againſt Gods people. But they entertained theſe thoughts of ſtoning David, not ſo much out of any ground of reaſon, as becauſe they were wholly tranſported with paſſion, having their hearts embittered with grief for the loſs of their wives and children. See Exod. 17. 4. Joh. 8. 59.

But David encouraged himſelf in the Lord his God] Him, being Lord in general of heaven and earth, and all creatures contained in them, he had by faith made his own in a peculiar manner; like the Spouſe, Cant. 6. 3. I am my beloveds, and my beloved is mine; and the Apoſtle, Rom. 1. 8. Gal. 2. 20. And in him he encouraged himſelf when all other comforts forſook him; like Habakkuk, who reſolveth, that though all other means failed, yet he would rejoyce in the Lord, and joy in the God of his ſalvation, Hab. 3. 17, 18. And he ſtrengthened his faith in this great tentation, both by remembring Gods former promiſes of Protection in difficulties, of which he had had often experience, and of bringing him to the Kingdom; and alſo by comforting himſelf with future hopes, and among the reſt, that he ſhould by Gods aſſiſtance recover all theſe loſſes, and be avenged on his enemies. And in this hope he called for the Ephod, that he might conſult with God.

V. 7. I pray thee bring me hither the Ephod] i. e. Go fetch the Ephod, and put it on, that thou mayeſt enquire for me by Urim what is to be done in this diſtreſſe. *S*o ch: 23. 9. Num. 27. 21. Exod. 28. 30. This David divers times had neglected to do upon weighty occaſions, as, before he fled out of Judea into the land of the Philiſtims, when he invaded the Amalekites and Geſhurites, and when he followed Achiſh in the war againſt his own people; but having ſmarted for it, and repenting of his neglect, now that he was brought into theſe great ſtraits, he calleth for the Ephod, being unwilling to do any thing without Gods direction.

V. 8. And David enquired at the Lord] To wit, by Abiathar the high Prieſt: and he was graciouſly heard, and encouraged to go on in this expedition, with promiſe of good ſucceſſe.

V. 9. And came to the brook Beſor] In the borders of *S*imeon, derived and deſcending from the mountains of Iudah, and running to the Weſt-*S*ea.

where thoſe that were left behind ſtayed] Being ſo wearied and faint, that they were unable to go any further, v. 10.

V. 10. For two hundred abode behind] To wit, to guard and ſecure the Carriages, that David with the four hundred, which were more freſh and able, might with more ſpeed purſue the Amalekites. Here God was pleaſed again to try and exerciſe Davids faith, in that after he had incouraged him to purſue his enemies, he thus croſſed him in his courſe, by diſabling a third part of his company from going on with the reſt againſt a great army. And this he did alſo that the glory of the victory might be aſcribed unto him, and not to their own ſtrength.

V. 11. And they found an Egyptian in the field, and brought him to David] This hapned by Gods ſpecial providence, who by this means provided both a guide to bring them to their enemies, and alſo reliefe for this diſtreſſed Egyptian, who was ready to periſh with ſickneſſe and hunger.

and gave him bread, and he did eat] This was a laudable act of humanity and charity, in that when they were in ſuch haſte, and the hot purſuit of their enemies, they would take notice of a poor wretch, and take ſuch care to relieve him in his miſerable condition. Yea, this work of mercy they did in the firſt place, before they had made any enquiry whether he were willing or able to do them any ſervice in requital of their kindneſſe. This compaſſion of theirs to this Egyptian God richly rewarded, by making him the inſtrument of their enſuing victory.

V. 12. when he had eaten, his ſpirit came again to him] i. e. By this refreſhment his ſpirits being revived, his ſoul which was ready to depart, returned to execute its former functions and operations. *S*o chap. 14. 27. Iudg. 15. 19.

V. 13. my Maſter left me, becauſe three dayes agon I fell ſick] Heb. this the third day, to wit, from which I fell ſick. This is noted to condemn this barbarous and inhumane Amalekite, who left his ſervant in his greateſt diſtreſſe, either to dye of his ſickneſſe, without uſing any means for his recovery, or to periſh with hunger, if the diſeaſe were not mortal, or to be torn in pieces with wild beaſts, when as it was eaſie for him, (being at good leiſure, and no enemies purſuing) to have carried him away with him in a waggon, or upon ſome beaſt. Now this his mercileſs cruelty God puniſhed with all ſeverity, both in the ruine of himſelf and the whole army.

V. 14. of the Cherethites] i. e. The Philiſtims, as appeareth v. 16. They were ſo called (it ſeemeth) from ſome part of their country, which had this name, Ezek. 21. 16. Zeph. 2. 5.

and upon the South of Caleb] i. e. The South of the Land inhabited by Calebs poſterity, Joſh. 14. 13. where Davids poſſeſſion lay, which he had by his marriage with Abigail Nabals widow.

V. 15. And he ſaid, Swear unto me by God] Though he had good experience of Davids humanity, yet in a matter that ſo neerly concerned him, he requireth his oath for better ſecurity.

that thou wilt neither kill me] i. e. Thy ſelf or by thy command. Of this he had ſome fear and ſuſpition, becauſe it is the manner of men to hate the traytor, though they love the treaſon; and when they have ſerved their own turn by diſcoveries of ſecrets, to cut them off by whom they have diſcovered them.

Nor deliver me into the hands of my maſter] Who, though thou doſt ſpare me, would ſurely revenge himſelf upon me for betraying his ſecrets. Unto this motion it ſeemeth David condeſcended, though it be not plainly expreſſed: And he might lawfully do it, ſeeing the Amalekite was not now his Maſter, having barbarouſly caſt him off, and expoſed him to death; nor the Egyptian any longer his ſervant, but Davids, who had not onely taken him captive, but alſo cheriſhed him, and ſaved his life.

and I will bring thee down to this company] Having learned by ſome of them, at their departure from him, where they purpoſed to encamp, that if he recovered his health he might come unto them.

V. 16. and out of the land of Judah] Unto which Ziklag and the land of Caleb belonged.

V. 17. And David ſmote them from the twilight (To wit, of the fore-going evening) to the evening of the next day] He found them eating and drinking, dancing and revelling; which uſually are the actions of the evening, and not the twilight of the morning. And having ſo ſmall a number againſt a great multitude, the night was fitteſt for ſuch an attempt. Yet ſome take it for the morning twilight, becauſe without ſome reſt, Davids men would have been unfit for this enterpriſe after their long march.

And there eſcaped not a man of them] This great and general ſlaughter may ſeem cruel, eſpecially ſeeing the Amalekites had ſpared their wives and children; yet it cannot be counted ſo, if we conſider they were not left to Davids mercy, being a nation whom God had deſigned to utter deſtruction; and for ſparing of whom, *S*aul was ſeverely puniſhed, when, God having put them into his hands, he did not to the full execute his righteous judgements. Neither were they to be favoured for ſparing the women and children, ſeeing they did it not out of any love or pity, but out of ſelf-reſpects, God over-ruling them by his powerful providence, and blunting the edg of their malice and fury.

V. 20. and David took] To wit, Davids men.

all the flocks and the herds] i. e. All the reſidue of the cattel, which the Amalekites had taken from others, i. e. the Philiſtims, the Calebites, and men of Judah.

which they drave before thoſe other cattel] i. e. Thoſe which they had taken from Ziklag, and which belonged to David and his followers.

and ſaid, This is Davids ſpoil] i. e. It belongeth to David by his ſouldiers free conſent and gift: And therefore afterwards he beſtowed it on whom he pleaſed, v. 26. And thus Davids followers made him ſome amends for the wrong they had done him in their former muttering, by aſcribing unto him the whole honour of the victory, as Gods inſtrument, ſeeing he had, when the caſe ſeemed deſperate, conſulted with God, encouraged them to the purſuit, and, as their General, conducted them in the expedition, (and unto the Generall, the praiſe of the victory is uſually aſcribed) and by enabling him by this rich gift to gratifie his friends, and make them firm unto him when he ſhould have occaſion to uſe them.

V. 21. And when David came neer to the people, he ſaluted them] Or, asked them how they did, i. e. *S*pake courteouſly unto them, that they might not be dejected by their abſence in the fight, unto which they were neceſſitated by their wearineſs.

V. 22. Then anſwered all the wicked men] i. e. When the two hundred men had ſpoken to have their part of the ſpoil.

and men of Belial] See on Judg. 19. 22.

Becauſe they went not with us, we will not give them ought of the ſpoil] i. e. There is no reaſon they ſhould have any part of the wages, ſeeing they have done no part of the work, nor run any danger in the battel. Now in this they ſpake impiouſly againſt God, robbing him of the glory of the victory, and arrogating it to themſelves; and unjuſtly and uncharitably againſt their brethren, ſeeing it was not their fault that they were not in the ſervice: from which they were detained by meer neceſſity, through faintneſs and wearineſſe. Neither were they in the mean time altogether unſerviceable, ſeeing they kept the carriages and ſtuff, which might have been plundered and ſpoiled if they had not guarded it.

V. 23. Ye ſhall not do ſo my brethren] He calleth them brethren, becauſe they were of the ſame Nation, and profeſſed the ſame religion, though they were men of Belial, and did not walk according to their profeſſion; that by that ſweet compellation he might inſinuate into their affections, and make them more pliable to hearken to his admonition. *S*o Lot, Gen. 19. 7. and the old Hoſte, Iudg. 19. 23.

with that which the Lord hath given us] i.e. With the ſpoil which we have gotten not by our own valour and ſtrength, but by Gods gracious favour and free gift, and in which theſe our brethren have a part and intereſt as well as we.

who hath preſerved us, and delivered the company that came againſt us, into our hand] And therefore we ſhould be very ungrateful unto him, if we ſhould be injurious to our brethren, ſeeing he is Lord of us all, and reſpecteth not one more then another.

V. 24. For who will hearken unto you in this matter] i.e. The thing you propoſe is ſo unreaſonable and unjuſt, that no man of judgement or indifferency, and not wholly over-byaſſed by ſelf-love, will think it worthy the hearing.

But as his part is that goeth down to the battel, ſo ſhall his part be that tarrieth by the ſtuff] They both alike ſhall have their ſhares, Joſh. 22.8. Not equal ſhares, in an Arithmetical, but in a Geometrical proportion. For thoſe that went to war, Numb. 31. 27. were by Gods appointment to have half the ſpoil, though they were but twelve thouſand men; and the other half was to be divided among the reſt of the people, which were ſix hundred thouſand. And out of the ſouldiers part there was to be taken but one of five hundred, of the captives and cattel, and to be given to the Prieſts; but out of the peoples part there was to be taken one of fifty: Whereby it appeareth, that the men of war had a great part above the reſt in the diviſion of the ſpoil. Whether that proportion was ratably obſerved in this diviſion, or afterwards, we cannot infallibly determine. But of this we may be ſure, that theſe two hundred had not an equal ſhare with the four hundred that went to war: for then they ſhould have had twice as much as they in the perſonal diviſion, ſeeing they were but half ſo many as they in number.

V. 25. And it was ſo from that day forward, that he made it a ſtatute] i.e. Did revive and ratifie this ſtatute firſt made by God, namely, That thoſe which guard the camp ſhould according to their proportion and number ſhare with them that go out to war. See 2 Macc. 8. 28.

V. 26. He ſent of the ſpoil to the elders of Judah, even to his friends] This he did both in way of Juſtice, reſtoring unto them that which had been their own; much of theſe ſpoils having been taken from them by the Amalekites, v. 16. and alſo in way of gratitude for the many favours and courteſies he had received when he lived among them; and laſtly in way of Prudence, to make them hereby more firm unto him, and more willing to give him their aſſiſtance: The time now approaching neer of accompliſhing Gods promiſes in bringing him to the Crown, Saul and his ſons about this time being ſlain and taken out of his way.

Behold a preſent for you of the ſpoil of the enemies of the Lord] He intimateth unto them, that he had gotten theſe ſpoils, not in purſuance of his own intereſt, or by taking private revenge, but by fighting againſt them who were Gods enemies, and the profeſſed enemies of the whole Common-wealth, whom God had devoted to utter deſtruction.

V. 27. To them which were in Bethel] Or, the houſe of God: which at this time was at Kirjath-jearim with the ark, ch. 6. 21. and 7. 1. Hither he ſent as it were the firſt fruits of the ſpoil, and by way of thankfulneſſe devoted them unto God, who had given him this great victory. Some underſtand it of the City Bethel properly ſo called: But this was not in the tribe of Judah, whither David for the moſt part ſent his Preſent, but in Ephraim, Joſh. 16. 2. Judg. 1. 22. unto which tribe he was not bound by any ſpecial favours that we read of. Beſides the word Bethel is taken appellatively for the houſe of God twice before, ch. 7. 16. and 10. 3. And it was now in Kirjath-jearim a City of Judah, Joſh. 15. 60. as moſt of the Cities were which are here mentioned. Finally, it is moſt likely that David would chiefly remember to ſend a Preſent to that place where was the ark of God, to teſtifie his thankfulneſſe for his victory.

in South Ra-moth] A City in Simeon, Ioſh. 19. 8. called here South-Ramoth to diſtinguiſh it from Ramoth in Gilead, 1 Kings 22. 13.

in Jattir] A City on a mountain in the tribe of Iudah, Ioſh. 15. 48.

in Siphmoth] The ſame (as ſome think) with Shepham, Num. 34. 10. one of the land-limits of Canaan.

in Eſhtemoa] A city in Iudah, called alſo Aſhtemoh, Ioſh. 15. 50. given to the ſons of Aaron, 1 Chron. 6. 57.

V. 29. in Rachal] This town is not mentioned any where elſe in Scripture. Some think it was in the tribe of Iudah, though not named in that Catalogue, Ioſh. 15. 37.

in the cities of the Jerahmeelites] See ch. 27. 10.

Kenites] See Iudg. 1. 16.

Chor-Aſhan] The ſame (as ſome think) with that which is called Aſhan, in the tribe of Simeon; who had their inheritance out of Iudah, Ioſh. 19. 7.

in Athach] This S. Hierom in his Book De locis Hebraicis placeth in Iudah. We read not of it but here onely.

V. 31. in Hebron] A famous City in the mountains of Iudah, given to Caleb, Ioſh. 14. 13, 14.

and to all the places where David himſelf and his men were wont to haunt] i.e. Where he had found entertainment in his diſtreſſe when he fled from Saul. He ſent them preſents to teſtifie his thankfulneſſe for their love towards him.

CHAP. XXXI.

Verſ. 1. Now the Philiſtims fought againſt Iſrael] Here the writer returneth to the Hiſtory from which he had digreſſed in the former Chapter; 1 Chron. 10. 1.

And the men of Iſrael fled from before the Philiſtims] An evidence of Gods wrath for their ſins, threatned Deut. 28. 25. Lev. 26. 36. Beſides their other wickedneſſe, many of them had conſpired with Saul to perſecute David, and not ſhewed any diſlike of his horrible cruelty in ſlaughtering the Lords Prieſts; and therefore partaking with him in his ſins, no marvel if they alſo did partake with him in his puniſhment.

and fell down ſlain in mount Gilboa] See ch. 28. 4. This hapned, as Ioſephus relateth, at the very ſame time when David was victorious over the Amalekites: So that God gave contrary ſucceſſe to David and Saul; victory and triumph to the one, who truſted in him in the uſe of lawful means, and ruine and deſtruction to the other, who out of diffidence in God conſulted with a witch.

V. 2. And the Philiſtims ſlew Jonathan, and Abinadab, (who is alſo called Iſhui, ch. 14. 49.) and Malchiſhua, Sauls ſons] Of all Sauls legitimate ſons, onely Iſhboſheth remained: Who was not at the battel, either becauſe he was no martial man, and unfit for ſervice, or becauſe he was left at home to look to his fathers affairs, either domeſtick or publick, in the time of his abſence. But Jonathan is ſlain with the other two, though a moſt pious, noble, valiant and vertuous Prince, and no doubt very dear unto God; verifying by his example the wiſe mans ſaying, Eccleſ. 9. 1, 2. No man knoweth either love or hatred by all that is before them. All things come alike to all: there is one event to the righteous and the wicked. Onely we may gueſſe he was by Gods good pleaſure taken out of the way, that David might have the more free and eaſie acceſſe to the Kingdom, and ſo Gods former promiſes made unto him might be verified, and Iacobs prophetical bleſſing fulfilled, That the Scepter ſhould be eſtabliſhed in Judah, and not depart till Shiloh, that is, the Meſſiah, ſhould come, Gen. 49. 10. Now had Ionathan lived, though out of ſubmiſſion to Gods will, and love to David, he would not much have affected Soveraignty, yet when the Crown ſhould have been preſſed upon him with the importunity of Abner and the reſt of his kindred, and the peoples readineſſe to ſettle him in his hereditarie right by the utmoſt of their ſervice, it would have proved a ſore and ſhrewd tentation, and above humane ſtrength to reſiſt it. For if the people were ſo ready to ſettle Iſhboſheth upon the throne, that ten tribes adhered to him, though a worthleſſe man and of no value, how much more forward would they have been to advance Jonathans title, who was ſo excellent a perſon, and had done ſo much good ſervice to the whole Common-wealth? Neither are we to think that Jonathan had any hard meaſure here offered him by God, ſeeing he was pleaſed, in ſtead of an earthly Kingdome, full of care and trouble, to enter him into the preſent poſſeſſion of an heavenly Kingdom, immortal, glorious, and full of unconceivable joyes, without the mixture of any ſorrow. The which alſo was Moſes his caſe, whom though the Lord would not permit to enter into the land of Promiſe, yet he took him into heaven, of which the other was but a type and ſhadow, Deut. 32. 49, 52.

V. 3. And the battel went ſore againſt Saul] For a little while he outlived his ſons; which was an aggravation of his puniſhment: For it could not be but a great grief to his very ſoul, to ſee his army routed, his friends and followers ſlaughtered, and his dear ſons killed before his face, and himſelf alſo wounded, and ſo environed with his enemies, that there was no hope of eſcaping.

V. 4. Draw thy ſword, and thruſt me through therewith] Thus after a wicked life, he maketh choice of a ſinful and deſperate death; and he that commandeth Doeg to ſlay the Lords Prieſts, now requireth his armour-bearer to do the like execution upon himſelf. Who this armour-bearer was, it is not certainly known. But the Hebrews, as Hierome and many expoſitors witneſſe, think him to have been Doeg the Edomite.

Leſt theſe uncircumciſed come and thruſt me through] He acteth the hypocrites part even to the very death, diſdaining the Philiſtims for their uncircumciſion in the fleſh, though himſelf were of an uncircumciſed heart, making no ſcruple of committing any wickedneſſe.

and abuſe me] Or, mock me. i.e. put me to ſome diſgraceful death, unworthy my place and calling, if they ſhould take me priſoner. So v. 9, 10.

But his armour-bearer would not; for he was ſore afraid] To wit, out of reverence towards the perſon of his King.

therefore Saul took a ſword, and fell upon it] He that could not be ſatisfied with ſhedding the blood of others, but ſlaughtered the Lords Prieſts, and thirſted after Davids blood, though an innocent, becometh now a butcher to himſelf, and ſo concludeth a wicked life with a deſperate death. The which befalling him by Gods righteous judgement, rendring like for like, and giving him up to a reprobate mind, to act this horrid murder, for the puniſhment of his former wickedneſſe, the Lord taketh it upon himſelf, and ſaith that he ſlew him, 1 Chron. 10. 14. See Iudg. 9. 54.

V. 5. he fell likewiſe upon his ſword, and died with him] So ſtrong a motive it was to draw him to the committing this bloody ſin, to have his Prince to be his precedent, leading him on by his example. And if this armour-bearer were that wicked Doeg, we muſt needs acknowledg that God juſtly revenged upon him the blood of his innocent Prieſts, by giving him up to be his own executioner, and with his own hands to open the door that would lead him into hell.

V. 6. So Saul dyed,——and all his men that ſame day together] i. e. Moſt of his family and kindred, Courtiers and Commanders, with a great part of his army. So 1 Chron. 10. 6.

V. 7. And when the men of Iſrael that were on the other ſide of the valley] i. e. of Iezreel in the tribe of Iſſachar, ch. 29. 1. And not onely they who dwelt on either ſide of this valley, but they alſo who dwelt in it, 1 Chron. 10. 7. quitted their habitations, and fled for their lives.

they forſook the cities, and fled, and the Philiſtims came and dwelt in them] i. e. Purſuing their victory, they made the inhabitants for fear forſake their cities and habitations, and placed garriſons in them, that they might retain them for their own uſe.

V. 8 on the morrow] To wit, after the battel was fought.

The Philiſtims came to ſtrip the ſlain] Therein they wiſely obſerved martial order and diſcipline, not falling upon the plunder and ſpoil untill the victory was compleat.

V. 9. And they cut off his head, and ſtripped off his armour] This they did, partly by way revenge, becauſe their Goliath was ſo uſed, and partly that they might carry his head about as a trophey, and ſhew it in all parts of their country, and afterwards ſet it up in the houſe of Dagon their God, and ſo thereby aſcribe unto him the glory of their victory, as appeareth 1 Chron. 10. 10. Such uſe David had before made of the head of Goliath, which he carried to Jeruſalem, ch. 17. 54. and 21. 9.

and ſent into the land of the Philiſtims round about, to publiſh it] i. e. Their great victory, and the death of Saul and his ſons, by way of joy and triumph. Thus God was pleaſed to diſpenſe with his own honour for a time, and to ſuffer theſe idolatrous heathens to proſper, as though their Idols were ſtronger then he, that thereby he might bring Saul and his followers to deſerved puniſhment.

in the houſe of their idols] Heb. terrours. So called, becauſe they poſſeſſe the minds and hearts of their ſuperſtitious worſhippers with terrours and fears, and do neither teach nor comfort them.

V. 10. And they put his armour in the houſe of Aſhtaroth] See Judg. 2. 13. Auguſtine thinketh this idol to have been Juno, worſhipped in the form of an Ewe, as Jupiter Hammon was in the form of a Ram. And it is written in the plural number, becauſe there were many ſorts of this idol.

And they faſtned his body to the wall of Bethſhan] i. e. To a wall at the end of the ſtreet in Bethſhan, 2 Sam. 21. 12. called alſo Bethſhean, Ioſh. 17. 11. which was in the lot of Manaſſeh, but not recovered from the Philiſtims in the firſt conqueſt, Iudg. 1. 27. nor to this day; as it was ſaid before of Ziklag, ch. 27. 6.

V. 11. And when the inhabitants of Jabeſh-Gilead heard of that &c.] In token of thankfulneſs to Saul, who had reſcued them from Nahaſh, ch. 11. 11. they make this attempt to free his dead body and the bodies of his three ſons from the ignominy and reproach that was by the Philiſtims caſt upon them. For though Sauls body only be named v. 10. as being the chief, yet the bodies of his ſons were uſed in the ſame manner, as appeareth, v. 12. 2 Sam. 21. 12, 13 and 1 Chron. 10. 12.

V. 12. And took the body of Saul, and the bodies of his ſons] Not by open force and aſſault, as ſome expoſitors would have it, but by ſtealth, ſecretly in the night, as appeareth 2 Sam. 21. 12.

And came to Jabeſh, and burnt them there] i. e. As it is very likely, in an honourable manner, with odours and aromatical ſpices, as being perſons whom they much honoured. So they beſtowed great coſt upon Aſa, not only embalming his body with ſweet odours, and ſo laying it in his ſepulchre, but alſo making a great burning for him, 2 Chron. 16 14. Now though this was not the uſual manner of funeral ſolemnities among the Hebrews, yet the men of Iabeſh now uſed it to the dead bodies of Saul and his ſons, both becauſe their fleſh, having been divers dayes expoſed to the ſun and air, was ſo putrified that they could not be embalmed with ſpices and odours, and alſo becauſe they would hereby prevent further abuſe, which might have been offered to their bodies, if the Philiſtims ſhould have got them again into their power. Others take it thus, that they burnt by their bodies odours and ſpices, as was uſed to Kings, 2 Chron. 16. 14. Jer. 34. 5. But this agreeth not ſo well with the words of the Text, which ſaith that they burnt them there. See on Gen. 50. 5.

V. 13. And they took their bones, and buried them under a tree at Jabeſh] Becauſe in thoſe times they had no ſolemn places of burial, therefore they made choice of a tree, as the laſting Oak, or Teberinth, to bury them under it, that it might ſerve as a mark or monument to ſhew men in after ages where they were interred. So Gen. 35. 8.

and faſted ſeven dayes] i. e. Till the evening of every day. And this they did, not out of any preſcript of law, but voluntarily, to expreſs their heavineſs, not onely for the loſſe of their King and his ſons, from whom they had received their lives and liberty, but alſo for the great calamities which now lay upon the land by reaſon of that great defeat they had received from the Philiſtims, and the miſerable effects which were like to follow it. This moved them to humble themſelves by faſting and mourning: And no doubt they joyned prayer therewith, for the averting of Gods judgements, both preſent and imminent; without which, faſting and ſimple abſtinence had been to little purpoſe. Some add, that in theſe ſeven dayes of faſting they had reſpect to thoſe ſeven dayes of truce with the Ammonites, wherein if they had not been reſcued by Saul, they ſhould have come forth to them, and having their right eyes put out, have ſubmitted themſelves to perpetual ſlavery, ch. 11. 2, 3.

On the ſecond BOOK of

SAMUEL,

Otherwiſe called

The ſecond Book of the KINGS.

The ARGUMENT.

THE Hiſtory concerning the ſtate of the Church and Common-wealth of Iſrael is continued in this Book from the death of Saul to the end of Davids Reign, and is the ſtory of fourty yeers. In it is declared the infallible truth of Gods promiſes made and accompliſhed unto David concerning the Kingdom; Who having paſſed thorow many difficulties and dangers, at laſt, after thoſe ſtorms of trouble and afflictions, arriveth at the wiſhed haven, and quietly enjoyeth the Crown and Scepter: Yet not all at once, but by degrees. For at firſt he is oppoſed by Iſhboſheth Sauls ſon, counſelled and aſſiſted by Abner the Captain-general of his hoſt, and hath onely Judah his own Tribe adhering to him; over which alone he reigned in Hebron for the ſpace of ſeven years, till, he growing, and they daily decreaſing, at laſt by the treacherous death of both his chief enemies (of which he was innocent) the War was finiſhed, and by the general choice of all the Tribes he was with applauſe crowned and ſtabliſhed in his Royal Throne. In him is ſet forth unto all poſterity the lively picture and pattern of a truly Royal King, every way qualified with ſuch rich graces, Piety, Juſtice and Heroicall endowments, as approved him to be a man according to Gods own heart. His Piety towards God was ſingular, and not to be paralleld with any that either went before, or ſucceeded him. For he chiefly devoteth himſelf to Gods ſervice, and the performance of all religious duties, continually meditating on Gods Law, compoſing and ſinging of Pſalms, which breathe nothing but piety and holineſſe; praying, and praiſing of God; excellently ſettling the Eccleſiaſtical Government, and promoting Gods publick ſervice to an high degree of perfection in all the parts of it; ordring the Tabernacle, and making and pitching a Tent for the Ark of the Covenant neer unto his own dwelling, that he might more readily upon all occaſions reſort unto it for comfort, counſel and direction. And thinking this too mean to be the place of Gods glorious preſence, his whole care and ſtudy is taken up about the building him a Temple. Which his pious zeal being accepted, and yet the work it ſelf interdicted by God, he uſeth all his endeavours in preparing for it ; and doth not only leave to his ſon Solomon a modell and pattern of the building ; being inſpired by Gods Spirit ; but provideth before-hand a vaſt maſſe of gold, ſilver, and all other materials, for perfecting the work in moſt ſumptuous and magnificent manner. His juſtice alſo towards men appeareth in many paſſages, but eſpecially in the puniſhment of the Amalekite who brought tidings of Sauls death, and of Iſhboſheths ſervants, who had treacherouſly murdered him. For when they expected from him ſome Royall reward for ſlaying his enemies, and ſo preparing a way for his preſent and ſecure enjoying of the Crown and Scepter, he abhorring their treaſon, though attended with a Kingdom, cauſed them inſtantly to be put to death. He was alſo excellently endowed by the Spirit of God with Heroical virtues and graces fit for a General and great Commander ; as Wiſdom, Courage, Strength and Magnanimity ; whereby he was enabled to fight the Lords battels againſt all his and the Churches enemies, as the Philiſtims, Ammonites, Moabites, and Syrians ; All which he vanquiſhed, and either wholly deſtroyed, or brought them under tribute ; whereby the Kingdome of Iſrael was extended to the utmoſt limits which God had promiſed. Yet as he was endowed with all theſe excellencies, he had alſo his failings, yea, ſtrong corruptions, as exorbitant Luſts, Uncleanneſſe, Crueltie, which diſcovered themſelves in the matter of Uriah ; Pride, in numbring of the people ; partial Injuſtice, in paſſing an unrighteous ſentence againſt innocent Mephiboſheth ; Lying, Diſſembling : Which the Holy Ghoſt hath alſo recorded, not to encourage any to do the like, but as Sea-marks, that we may avoid thoſe rocks againſt which ſo choice a Veſſel daſhed, and had ſurely ſplitted and periſhed, had not Gods Grace and holy Spirit, as a timely gale of wind, blown him off, and reduced him into his right courſe by unfeigned repentance. Upon which though his ſinne was pardoned, yet to ſhew how horrible it was in it ſelf, and how odious and diſpleaſing unto God ; and that alſo the enemies of the Church might not by his impunity take occaſion to blaſpheme, God ſeverely corrected his ſins, as it were, by the law of Taliation, like for like, ſo as he might plainly read his ſins in his puniſhment.

Thus ſinning by Adultery, his own Daughter was inceſtuouſly raviſhed by his own Son, and his Concubines defiled by his ſon Abſalom, in the ſight of the ſun. And cauſing Uriah to be murdered by the ſword of the children of Ammon, the ſword departed not from his houſe ; but Abſalom murdereth his brother Amnon, and after riſeth in rebellion againſt himſelf, and unnaturally ſeeketh his death that preferred his life before his own ; in which ambitious treaſon himſelf periſhed, to the intolerable grief of his over-loving Father : Beſides all other wars, both forreign and inteſtine, with which he was continually vexed to the end of his Reign.

And finally, his Pride and Confidence in the number of his people and the arm of fleſh, was puniſhed with a grievous plague, that conſumed threeſcore and ten thouſand of them in the ſpace of three dayes. Yet for all this the Lord did not, as his ſins merited, utterly forſake him, but loving him with a love unchangeable, he doth by theſe fatherly, though ſevere, chaſtiſements, throughly humbly him in the ſight and ſenſe of his ſins ; and ſo raiſing him from theſe grievous falls by unfeigned repentance, he forgiveth his ſins, and receiveth him into former favour, (to encourage all that have ſo ſinned, to follow his example ;) reneweth his Covenant with him, and ratifieth and (as it were) ſealeth unto him all his gracious promiſes, eſpecially that which was chief of all, concerning the perpetuity of his Kingdom, which laſted long in a numerous poſterity, but was accompliſhed in the eternity of Chriſts Kingdom, who came, according to the fleſh, out of his loyns ; of which, David and his Kingdom were a type and figure.

CHAP. I.

Verſ.1. N*Ow it came to paſſe after the death of Saul, when David was returned from the ſlaughter of the Amalekites*] i.e. When he had vanquiſhed his many and malicious enemies, and was come back in triumph, laden with ſpoils, and the joyful trophies of a glorious victory, within two dayes after his return he is encountred with the ſad news of that great defeat given by the Philiſtims to Gods people, which ſeemed to hazard the ruine of the whole land. Thus the wiſe providence of God mixeth and tempereth proſperity with afflictions, and the joyes of his Saints and ſervants with their griefs, that they may neither be too much exalted with the one, nor dejected with the other.

V. 2. on the third day] After Davids victory, and Sauls defeat and death.

with his clothes rent, and earth upon his head] Hereby in their mourning they teſtified their great grief and contrition of heart, their ſhame, unworthineſſe, and deep humiliation; acknowledging they were unworthy to be above ground, and deſerved to be under it among the dead. See on Gen.37.29. Joſh.7.6. 1 Sam.4.12. Job.2.12.

V. 4. And David ſaid unto him, How went the matter ?) i.e. Relate unto me the news of the chief things that hapned in that battel. By which earneſt enquiry David ſhewed how careful he was of the welfare of Gods people, and how forward and willing to uſe all good means to repair any loſſe they had ſuſtained.

and he anſwered, That the people are fled from the battel] In this relation he ſpeaketh divers truths, but mixeth and interlaceth with them many lyes, intending them for his own advantage, though they brought him to ruine : which will appear if we compare his words with the former relation of Sauls defeat and death, 1 Sam.31.

V. 5. How knoweſt thou that Saul and Jonathan his ſon are dead ?] He doth in a more eſpecial manner enquire after this, becauſe above all other paſſages in the battel, this chiefly concerned him and the whole Common-wealth.

V. 6. on mount Gilboa] See on 1 Sam.28.4.

Saul leaned upon his ſpear] Being ſore wounded by the archers, and ſo unable to get away, though hotly purſued by the chariots and horſemen. Others underſtand it, that Saul was fallen upon his ſpear, which he had aſſayed to thruſt into his body ; but it being hindred that it could not enter and do the deed, he called to this Amalekite, and willed him to kill him. But in the true ſtory it is plainly ſaid, that he took a ſword and fell upon it, and immediately dyed; which his armour-bearer ſeeing, fel likewiſe upon his ſword, & died with him, 1 Sam.31.4,5.

V. 7. He ſaw me, and called unto me] It is not likely that being ſo ſore wounded both by the archers, and alſo (as he would imply) with a wound which he had given himſelf with his own ſword or ſpear, whereof he was ready to die, that he ſhould call unto this Amalekite, and ſpend ſo many words with him.

V. 8. I am an Amalekite] i.e. Of a nation no leſſe accurſed and devoted to deſtruction then the uncircumciſed Philiſtims; and therefore, if upon this ground Saul abhorred to be ſlain by the one, what reaſon had he to make choice to be killed by the other ?

V. 9. For anguiſh is come upon me, becauſe my life is yet whole in me] That is, (as the Amalekite would be underſtood) I am much grieved, that, being in this deſperate condition, I cannot die as I deſire, to prevent the diſgrace that may befal me, if I come alive into my enemies hands. Others read it thus, My coat of mail, or embroydred upper garment, hath hindred me, that though I have attempted to kill my ſelf by falling upon my lance, or ſword, yet, to my grief, I cannot do it, and therefore do thou do it, and rid me out of my pain, and from my fear of being diſgraced.

V. 10. So I ſtood upon him] To wit, that I might with my ſtrength force the ſpear into his body, and ſo kill him outright.

becauſe I was ſure that he could not live after that he was fallen] i.e. My intention in this act was not to kill him, if there had been any hope of his recovery ; but his caſe being deſperate by reaſon of his mortal wounds, given both by the archers and himſelf, I did what I did out of meer pity, and at his earneſt requeſt, to rid him out of pain, and prevent his diſgrace. This his relation is for the moſt part feigned, to find grace with David, and to get ſome great reward, as may plainly appear, if we compare his ſpeeches with the true ſtory, 1 Sam.31.

And I took the Crown that was upon his head] This was true, ſeeing he now brought it with him: But it is not likely that he wore it upon his head in the battel, becauſe it would have made him the fairer mark for his enemies, at whom they chiefly aimed, (a thing which wiſe Generals avoid, 1 King.22.30.) and have cumbred him in the fight ; but we may rather think it was carried before him as an enſign of honour, by his armour-bearer, or ſome other.

V. 11. took hold on his clothes, and rent them] See on ver.2.

V. 12. And they mourned and wept, and faſted until even] David had good cauſe thus to mourn ; not only for Jonathan, who was a vertuous Prince, his dear and faithful friend, and a valiant Captain and chief Pillar of the Common-wealth, both in peace and war, but alſo becauſe the enemies of God had given his people ſo great a defeat, and ſlaughtered ſo many of them ; yea even for Saul himſelf in divers reſpects: For though he were his deſperate and implacable enemy, who continually perſecuted him and ſought his life, yet he was the Lords anointed (under which notion he had twice ſpared him) and a valiant General, who had fought Gods battels againſt the enemies of his people with continual good ſucceſſe; over whom they would now inſult and triumph, and take occaſion to blaſpheme Gods holy Name, and prefer their idols before him, who had given them this great victory. Beſides, in him he had cauſe to bewail the common miſery and mutability of all humane conditions; in that he, who lately was a great and potent King, now was made a ſpectacle of miſery, in his fearful and ignominious death. And finally, there was great cauſe of mourning and lamentation, in that this grievous overthrow was an evidence of Gods wrath againſt his people for their many and grievous ſins.

V. 13. And David ſaid to the young man that told him, whence art thou?] Though he had ſaid before that he had told Saul, asking the ſame queſtion, that he was an Amalekite, yet it ſeemeth Davids minde was ſo diſturbed and diſtracted with paſſion and grief that he took no notice of it, and therefore he asketh him again of what nation he was: or if he did remember it, then like a wiſe Judge he maketh this diligent enquiry, doubting of the truth of his relation, to ſee if he would agree with himſelf in the ſame tale.

V. 15. And David called one of the young men, and ſaid, Go neer, and fall upon him] Though there were no witneſſes of his fact, yet having his own teſtimony againſt himſelf, he might juſtly proceed to execution; ſeeing there is no other uſe of witneſſes but to convince the offender, if he deny the fault, and plead not guilty; but if the party voluntarily confeſſe the fact, it is inſtead of many witneſſes. And David might lawfully thus proceed againſt him, becauſe he was anointed King, and now, Saul being dead, was come into actual poſſeſſion of the Royal rights. Beſides, this malefactor was apprehended at Ziklag, where he had the ſole juriſdiction.

V. 16. Thy blood be upon thy head] See on Joſh. 2.19.

V. 17. And David lamented with this lamentation over Saul,&c.] To wit, in his own name, and in the name of all the people; not only becauſe he was fitteſt to do it in reſpect of his abilities, having a prophetical ſpirit and gift of poeſie, but alſo becauſe he had the greateſt intereſt and right to perform it, ſeeing neer allied unto Saul, his ſon in law, and Succeſſor in the Kingdom, and alſo a deer and faithful friend unto Jonathan, who was an actor and patient alſo in this woful tradegy, and a chief ſubject of this lamentable Elegy.

V. 18. Alſo he bade them teach the children of Judah the uſe of the bow] i.e. That he might put courage into the hearts of Gods people, which by this great overthrow were much dejected, he gave order to have them inſtructed in the right uſe of their arms and weapons, eſpecially in the skill of ſhooting, becauſe thereby the Philiſtims had moſt prevailed againſt them. And this in a parentheſis is prefixed before this mournful funeral ſong, that by ſinging it in all parts of the land they might be put in mind of their duty, and practiſe it with more diligence. See on Pſal. 60. tit.

Behold, it is written in the book of Jaſher] See on Joſh. 10. 13. It ſeemeth to have been a book of annals, or chronicle, containing a relation of the civil affairs of the Common-Wealth. In it this ſong was inſerted, that it might be preſerved. And to this book reference is made as being commonly known and uſually read. But it is now loſt, as many other of the Jewiſh hiſtories concerning the affairs of that State.

V. 19. The beauty of Iſrael is ſlain] i. e. Saul, Jonathan, and all the flower of Chivalry, and valiant men of Iſrael. See on ch.7.23.

upon thy high places] i. e. The mountains of Gilboa, where the battel was fought, v.21.& 1 Sam.31.8. Though the Iſraelites had made choice of theſe as places of great advantage, yet there they ſuffered this great defeat: which was an evidence of Gods high diſpleaſure againſt them.

how are the mighty fallen?] i. e. What a wonderful thing is this, that ſo many great Worthies, of ſuch incomparable ſtrength and valour, ſhould thus fall before thoſe uncircumciſed Philiſtims, whom they had formerly ſo oftentimes vanquiſhed! And this is thrice repeated, as the foot of this ſad ſong or Epitaph, here, v.25, & 27.

V. 20. Tell it not in Gath, publiſh it not in the ſtreets of Askelon] Theſe were two of the five chief Cities of the Philiſtims, in which they were moſt likely to triumph upon the hearing of this news. Now this is not ſpoken as though David thought it poſſible that this great overthrow ſhould be concealed from them; for their people were chief actors in this war, and Sauls head was carried through the land, and ſet up in the Temple of Dagon, and his arms kept in the houſe of Aſhtaroth: but this is only an emphatical expreſſion of Davids deſire in a rhetorical and poetical manner, what he would have done, had it been poſſible, namely, that this matter might be concealed from the enemies of God and his people, leſt they ſhould triumph and inſult over them, Judg. 16.23. See Mic.1.10.

leſt the daughters of the Philiſtims rejoyce] Becauſe the women uſed to celebrate victories with ſongs and dances, Exod.15.Judg.11.34. 1 Sam. 18. 6.

V. 21. Ye mountaines of Gilboa, let there be no dew ——— upon you] He curſeth theſe mountains in a Poeticall manner, that hee might pathetically and hyperbolically expreſſe his grief for the great loſſe which the whole land ſuſtained in the death of Saul and Jonathan, with all the gallant Worthies that died with them; wiſhing that thoſe mountains by their barrenneſſe might be a perpetual monument of this great calamity. So Job 3. 3, 4, 5. Jer. 20. 14.

nor fields of offerings] Heb. of elevations, or high lands. i. e. Fertile fields, bringing forth fruits fit for offerings in the Tabernacle.

For there the ſhield of the mighty is vilely caſt away] Here he expreſſeth the diſhonourable manner of the overthrow of Saul, Jonathan, and the reſt; ſeeing it is a great diſgrace to Souldiers, when they caſt away their ſhields. And hereby he ſignifieth, either that their ſhields were as good as nothing, ſerving for no uſe, or that indeed, when they were routed in the field, they caſt away their arms, that they might the faſter fly away, and ſave themſelves by flight.

as though he had not been anointed with oil] i. e. As though he had been a common ordinary man, and not a King.

V. 22. From the blood of the ſlain, from the fat of the mighty the bow of Jonathan turned not back &c.] i. e. Saul and Jonathan never attempted their enemies in vain with their arms, but were alwayes victorious, piercing and killing the beſt and valianteſt of them, and ſatiating their weapons with blood and ſlaughter, even as a hungry man glutteth himſelf by greedy devouring his food.

V. 23. Saul and Jonathan were lovely and pleaſant in their lives] i. e. Both in reſpect of others, in reſpect of their perſons and parts, 1 Sam.9.2. and alſo mutually between themſelves. For though Saul was enraged againſt Jonathan in his frantick fits, yet no doubt he loved ſo worthy a ſon when his fit was over; yea, even his wrath and rage againſt him proceeded from his love, becauſe having made a league with David, he would not joyn with him in ſeeking his ruine, who would put him from the Kingdom, if he were ſuffered to live.

and in their death they were not divided] This he addeth to clear Jonathan of that ſuſpicion, that he conſpired with David againſt his father; ſeeing he approved his love and faithfulneſſe by adhering unto him both in life and death.

they were ſwifter then eagles, they were ſtronger then lions] i. e. They were nimble and active in purſuing their enemies, and ſtrong and valorous in ſubduing them. And hereby he ſignifieth in a rhetorical and hyperbolical manner that they were compleat Souldiers and Commanders, in whom nothing was wanting that could be deſired.

V. 24. Ye daughters of Iſrael, weep over Saul, who clothed you in ſcarlet] Partly by the peace you enjoyed through his government, (and Peace uſually is accompanied with plenty and abundance of all things both for neceſſity and delight) and partly by inriching the land with the ſpoil of the enemy: And here ſpeaking of bravery in apparrel, he addreſſeth himſelf to the daughters of Iſrael rather then the ſonnes, becauſe that ſex more then the other are delighted with coſtly attire, and ſo mourn more when they are deprived of it.

V. 25. How are the mighty fallen in the midſt of the battle] i. e. Not like cowards ſlain in their flight, but as valiant Souldiers, who forſake not their colours, but keep their ground and fight it out to the death even in the very face of the enemy.

O Jonathan, thou waſt ſlaine in thy high places] i. e. Upon the Mountaines and places of advantage in thine own country.

V. 26. I am diſtreſſed for thee, my brother Jonathan] He termeth him brother, either in reſpect of alliance, being his brother in law by marriage, or rather in regard of that nearer bond of moſt intimate love and friendſhip contracted between them.

Thy love towards me was wonderful, paſſing the love of women] i. e. The love either of one woman to another, or which the tender mother beareth to her only ſon, or the moſt loving wife to her deareſt husband. Now womens affections being uſually much ſtronger then mens, by this expreſſion David ſheweth that Jonathans love towards him far exceeded the deareſt love or neareſt friendſhip.

V. 27. How are the mighty fallen, and the weapons of war periſhed!] i. e. Either Saul and Jonathan, who were the ſwords and ſhields of the Common-wealth, its choiceſt and chiefeſt ſtrength; in which ſenſe Eliſha calleth Elijah, and Joaſh Eliſha, the chariots and horſemen of Iſrael, 2 King.2.12. & 13,14. Or he meaneth ſimply the arms and munition that were loſt in the battel, and become a ſpoil to the Philiſtims, to the diſhonour and weakning of Gods people.

CHAP. II.

Verſe 1. AND it came to paſſe after this, that David enquired of the Lord] i. e. By the Prieſt putting on the breaſt-plate with Urim and Thummim, Num.25.21. Having from God a promiſe of the Kingdom, he would do nothing of himſelf for the obtaining of it, but addreſſeth himſelf to God for direction, what courſe he ſhould take, and what means he ſhould uſe for the accompliſhment of his promiſe. For though he knew he ſhould be King, yet he was ignorant of many circumſtances which belonged to the managing of the buſineſſe, as when he ſhould ſet upon the work, and what place he ſhould firſt attempt for the promoting of his cauſe.

ſaying, Shall I go up into any of the Cities of Judah?] He was weary of continuing in the Philiſtims Country, or in that City which he had by Achiſh his donation, as lying upon the uttermoſt borders of the Kingdome, and ſo unfit to ſettle in, being in too great a diſtance from the place where he was to reign; and therefore he deſireth (if it would ſtand with Gods good pleaſure) to go up to ſome of the cities of Judah, his own tribe, where he was born and bred, and where his kindred, allies and friends living, he was likely to find beſt acceptance and moſt aſſiſtance.

And he ſaid, Unto Hebron] A chief and ancient city in the tribe of Judah, built ſeven years before Zoan in Egypt, Num.13.22. Hither Joſhua and Caleb came when they were ſent by Moſes to ſearch out the land, and it was afterwards given to Caleb and his poſterity, Joſh.14.13. It was one of the Cities of refuge given to the Prieſts, Joſh.20.7. & 21.11. and chiefly renowned, becauſe the Patriarchs Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob were there buried, unto whom the land of Canaan by promiſe belonged, eſpecially to Jacob, to whom it was revealed that the Kingdom ſhould be eſtabliſhed in Judah, Gen.49.10. In all theſe reſpects it was the fitteſt place for David to go unto firſt when he was to enter upon the poſſeſſion of the Kingdom.

V. 2. So David went up thither, and his two wives alſo] That as they had been comforts to him in his troubles, and partakers in all his afflictions, ſo they might be conſorts with him in his proſperity, and communicate in his high honour and preferment. And herein they were types of Chriſts Church, which when it hath ſuffered with him, ſhall alſo reign with him, 2 Tim.2.12. Luke 22.28,29.

V. 3. And his men that were with him did David bring up] i. e. His ſervants and Souldiers that had accompanied him in his afflictions and perſecutions.

and they dwelt in the Cities of Hebron] i. e. Such as belonged to Hebron, which was the Metropolis or chief City, Joſh.21.11,12.

V. 4. And the men of Judah came, and there they anointed David King over the houſe of Judah] David was thrice anointed: firſt by Samuel, when God elected and deſigned him to be King, 1 Sam.16.13. ſecondly, by the tribe of Judah, whereby they teſtified their approbation and conſent unto the election, actually receiving him to be their King; and laſtly, by the whole body of the people, ch.5.3. to teſtifie likewiſe their aſſent and approbation. By which anointing was ſignified not only Gods calling him to the Royal dignity, but alſo the inward unction of the Spirit, whereby he was qualified with heroick gifts and graces neceſſary for that calling. Now it pleaſed God thus to reiterate Davids anoynting for the further confirmation of his faith in this aſſurance, that God, who had called him to the Kingdom, would eſtabliſh him in it, and bleſſe and proſper him in his government. And of ſuch ſupports our weak faith ſtandeth in need, in reſpect of the many tentations unto which we are ſubject, and our frailty and inability to make any reſiſtance. Now though it is not to be doubted but that many of other tribes did joyn in this action, even all thoſe who being convinced of Davids juſt title from God, came unto him in Ziklag, and offered their ſervice to bring him to the Crown, 1 Chr.12. yet Judah is only named, becauſe that whole tribe unanimouſly joyned in this action, whereas there were but ſome alone out of the other tribes that favoured his title; and the reſt, which were the greateſt part, adhered ſtill to the houſe of Saul, and deſired to ſettle the Crown and Kingdom upon his poſterity. Thus David through many tribulations at laſt cometh to the Crown, and was herein a lively type of our Saviour Chriſt, who was firſt crowned with thorns before he was crowned with glory, and after many perſecutions and afflictions was exalted to his Throne and Kingdom.

And they told David ſaying, That the men of Jabeſh were they that buried Saul] To wit, either upon his enquiry what was done with the bodies of Saul and Jonathan, as being willing to have them buried in an honourable manner, 1 Sam.31.13. or elſe they reported it of their own acccord, thinking it would be ill taken at their hands that they beſtowed ſo much care and coſt in the burial of Saul, who was Davids profeſſed enemy; or at leaſt they gave him this warning, that taking notice of their affection to Saul and his family, he ſhould take heed of them, if they proved his enemies, or uſe the beſt means he could to make them his friends, who were worthy the having, ſeeing they were ſo faithful to their former lord and king.

V. 5. And ſaid unto them] To wit, by theſe meſſengers which he ſent.

Bleſſed be ye of the Lord] i. e. The Lord multiply upon you all his bleſſings, as a reward of your faithful ſervice.

that ye have ſhewed this kindneſſe unto your lord, even unto Saul] Who as Lord and King over the whole land, was generally to be reſpected and honoured, but in a more peculiar manner by you, who received from him deliverance out of deſperate danger, 1 Sam.11.

V. 6. And now the Lord ſhew mercy and truth unto you] i. e. Mercy, in making gracious promiſes of rewarding your faithful ſervice; and Truth, in his conſtant performance of them unto you, who have in this action approved your ſelves ſuch loyal and grateful ſubjects to your Lord and Soveraign.

And I alſo will requite you this kindneſſe] i. e. Seeing your Lord, who is dead, cannot do it, I, as his ſucceſſour will pay his debt, and recompenſe the love and thankfulneſſe which ye have ſhewed unto him.

V. 7. Therefore now let your hands be ſtrengthened, and be ye valiant] Heb: be ye ſons of valour, i. e. Be not diſmayed, though ye have loſt your Lord: For I, whom the houſe of Judah by Gods appointment have anointed K. will ſupply unto you all the good things ye have loſt by his death. And this he ſpeaketh both to take off from them all jealouſies and fears, that he would deal the worſe with them for their expreſſions of love to their deceaſed Lord; and withal that he might uſe all lawful policy and good means to gain the peoples love, though he had aſſurance from God that he ſhould be King. He would not uſe any hoſtile meanes to obtain the Kingdom (though he were certain he ſhould have prevailed) untill he was compelled thereunto by Abner and Iſhboſheth. And this he did, partly, as a gracious King, who abhorreth to ſhed the blood of his ſubjects; and partly, in reſpect of his oath to Saul, that he would not deſtroy his poſterity, and aboliſh his name, 1 Sam. 24. 21, 22.

V. 8. But Abner the ſon of Ner, Captain of Sauls hoſt, took Iſhboſheth] Called alſo Eſhbaal, 1 Chron. 8. 33. See on ch. 11.21. God being pleaſed yet more to exerciſe Davids faith and patience, before he came to the full poſſeſſion of the Crown, leaveth Abner to the ambition and pride of his heart, to croſſe him in his proceedings, by ſetting up one of Sauls ſons to be King for his own ends. For being himſelf of Sauls family, and neer of kin unto him, and by him advanced to be General of the Army, (an high place of honor and command) he deſireth that the Soveraignty might remain in the houſe of Saul, that ſo he might ſtill retain his dignity, which he had no hope to do if David came to be King, ſeeing he had many worthy friends and neer kindred of his own to advance. And he maketh choice of Iſhboſheth, who was no martial man, but of a weak ſpirit and ſmall parts; knowing he could rule him at his pleaſure, who was chief Ruler of the Kingdome, and ſo in effect make himſelf King, the other ſerving only for State, or ſhadow, to colour his actions: Of which power and regency he had no hope, if David, a prudent and valiant Prince, ſhould weild the Scepter. And becauſe Mephiboſheth was but a childe, and lame of his feet, and ſo not fit to colour his ends and aims, though the right heir by lineal deſcent, and maketh choice of his uncle, to make him King. And all this he did out of pride and ambition, againſt the light of his conſcience: For he knew well enough that by Gods appointment Samuel had anointed David to be King over Iſrael, and to ſucceed Saul, whom God had rejected; and he plainlyly acknowledgeth it in his rage, ch. 3. 9, 10, 18.

And brought him over to Mahanaim] A City in Gilead, in the tribe of Gad, beyond Jordan, on the river Iabbock, neer Iabeſh-Gilead; which had its name, ſignifying two hoſts or camps, from the viſion of Angels that there appeared unto Jacob, Gen. 32. 1, 2. Of this place Abner made choice, either becauſe being a remote part of the Kingdom, and far diſtant from Iudah, where Davids chief ſtrength lay, it was fitteſt for the raiſing and forming of an army; or it may be he was jealous of thoſe parts, eſpecially of Iabeſh-Gilead, leſt they ſhould fall to Davids party, being won by his kind meſſage, and therefore he meant to reſide there with his ſtrength about him, to keep them from defection.

V. 9. And he made him king over Gilead] i. e. All the Country beyond Iordan.

And over the Aſhurites] i. e. The tribe of Aſher, on the North of Canaan.

and over Iezreel] Situate almoſt in the midſt of Canaan, on the borders of Zebulun, Manaſſeh, and Iſſachar, in which tribe it was, Ioſh. 19. 18.

And over all Iſrael] The tribe of Iudah only excepted, and thoſe that reſorted unto David out of the other tribes; though it ſeemeth that the whole people were well-affected to David, and inclined to chooſe him for their King, had they not been over-awed by Abner, who was General of the Army, and had a great ſtrength under his command.

V. 10. Iſhboſheth, Sauls ſon, was fourty years old when he began to reign] And therefore was old enough to have accompanied his father with the reſt of his brethren in the battel, had he been a martial man, and of parts fit for ſuch a ſervice.

and reigned two years] To wit, before the wars between him and David began, and chiefly that by the pool of Gideon. For he reigned over Iſrael all the time that David reigned over Iudah in Hebron, before theſe wars; though it is not like that they lived in peace all the time before; howſoever this was the chief war that was between them in theſe two years. For otherwiſe it could not have been ſaid that there was long war between the houſe of Saul and the houſe of David, if Iſhboſheth reigned but two years in all, ch. 3. 1.

followed David] i. e. Took his part, and followed him as their King and General. And herein they could not be condemned for making a ſchiſm in the Common-wealth, and being the cauſe of a civil war by ſeparating from their brethren, becauſe they did it in obedience to God, knowing that he had appointed David to be their King. Yea they deſerved great praiſe, in that they were ſo ready to expoſe themſelves to all the dangers and miſeries of ſuch a war rather then they would tranſgreſſe Gods known Will.

V. 12. And Abner——went out from Mahanaim to Gibeon] To wit, his army attending him, to wage war againſt David and Judah.

V. 13 And Joab the ſon of Zeruiah] i. e. Davids ſiſter. Ioab was entruſted in this expedition, to lead the armie, though he was not not yet choſen chief General, 1 Chron. 11. 6.

by the pool of Gibeon] This pool was on the South-ſide without Gibeon, a City of Benjamin. See on Hoſ. 9. 9. Some think it was the ſame that was called Gibeah Saul, where he kept his Court and reſidence, 1 Sam. 11. 4.

V. 14. And Abner ſaid to Joab, Let the young men ariſe, and play before us] i. e. Try their valour and skill in arms, to make us ſome ſport by acting their bloody tragedy. This challenge he maketh, in hope that by the good ſucceſſe of his gallant Souldiers he ſhould diſmay and daunt the courage of Davids men, and ſo obtain a more eaſie victory. And this challenge is no ſooner made by Abner then accepted by Ioab, they both delighting and conſpiring in cruelty and ſhedding of blood, as men often fleſhed with theſe horrid acts and aſpects, and accounting it but a play and ſport to ſee their followers maſſacre and murder one another. But how abominable this is in the ſight of God, appeareth as many other wayes, ſo by the fearful iſſue of this barbarous and bloody challenge.

V. 16. every one his fellow] i. e. His antagoniſt or adverſary.

V. 17. And there was a very ſore battel that day] For either party being enraged againſt the other by the death of their Champions, joyned their main battels, and furiouſly fought together as mortal enemies, till at laſt Abner and his party were beaten by Davids ſervants, and being routed were put to flight.

V. 18. And Aſahel was as light of foot as a wilde roe] An hyperbolical expreſſion of his ſwiftneſſe in running: as Saul and Jonathan are ſaid to be ſwifter then Egles, ch. 1. 23. Joſephus ſaith of Aſahel, that he not only exceeded other men in running, but alſo contended with horſes in ſwiftneſſe. Unto which he truſting too much, it became the occaſion of his death, by his example verifying the ſaying of Solomon, Eccleſ. 9. 11. That the race is not to the ſwift, nor the battel to the ſtrong.

V. 19. And Aſahel purſued after Abner] Ambitiouſly affecting the glory of taking priſoner the General of the field. For as he was ſwift of foot, ſo he was valiant, and a man of his hands; and therefore reckoned among Davids Worthies, 1 Chr. 11. 26.

V. 21. Lay thee hold on one of the young men, and take thee his armour] or his ſpoil q. d. If thou doſt affect the glory of the victory, I will not be againſt it; but then thou muſt chooſe ſuch an Antagoniſt as is thine equal, and a young man like thy ſelf, and not provoke an old experienced Souldier, to thy extream danger and diſhonour.

V. 22. And Abner ſaid again to Aſahel——wherefore ſhould I ſmite thee to the ground?] q. d. I am very loth to kill thee, if thou doſt not too much preſs and provoke me, for thy brothers ſake.

how then ſhould I hold up my face to Joab thy brother?] i. e. With what confidence can I look for any peace and reconciliation with him having killed his brother. And of this, Abner was careful even in the very heat of war, being guilty to himſelf that he fought in a bad cauſe, and doubting that David in the end would prevail: and when that came to paſſe, he well knew that Joab who was ſo potent and in ſo great favour with David, would either be an heavy adverſary, if incenſed againſt him; or a good friend, to make his peace.

V. 23. Wherefore Abner with the hinder end of the ſpear] i. e. With the pike of the ſpear in the lower end: for their ſpears were double pointed.

ſmote him under the fifth rib] i. e. Under the loweſt of the ſhort ribs, (which are five in number) neer the belly; out of which wound his guts came forth. So ch. 3. 27. and 4. 6. and 20. 10. And in that place he ſmote him, becauſe in all likelihood it was below his armour, and ſo a ſure killing place, if his ſpear hit upon it.

As many as came to the place where Aſahel fell down and died, ſtood ſtill] And ſo were hindred in the purſuit, by gazing upon this ſad ſpectacle, and lamenting his death.

V. 24. Joab alſo and Abiſhai purſued after Abner] Like wiſe and brave Commanders, not regarding ſo much their private intereſt and loſſe, as the common good of the people.

and the ſun went down when they were come to the hill of Ammah] Hither Abner retreated, that his men being rallyed into a body, and having the advantage of the upper ground, might the better ſtand upon their defence

V. 25. And the children of Benjamin gathered themſelves together after Abner] To wit, into one main body of battalia, on the top of an hill.

V. 26. Shall the ſword devour for ever?] i. e. Wilt thou put no end to ſlaughter? He ſeemeth to allude to a metaphor uſuall in the Scriptures, calling the edge the mouth of the ſword, which deſtroyeth men, as wild beaſts devour their prey. q. d. There ought to be ſome mean and meaſure in theſe acts of hoſtility, ſeeing war is not a thing good in it ſelf, (for in ſuch things there are no bounds, but the more the better, and never enough) but good only as it is referred to its end, i. e. the ſetling of a firm and juſt peace.

Knoweſt thou not that it will be bitterneſſe in the latter end?] i. e. It will prove like ſuch meats, as are ſweet in the mouth, and breeding choler, are bitter in the ſtomach. For though in the fury of war revenge ſeemeth ſweet, yet the effects and fruits of it are bitter and diſtaſtful, as rapines, ſpoil, effuſion of blood, and innumerable other miſeries, eſpecially in a civil war, wherein not only men of the ſame country, but alſo of the ſame family, kindred and allies, yea even neereſt friends, and deareſt brethren, ſpoil and murder one another. And that being the condition and nature of this preſent war, Abner uſeth it as a reaſon to perſwade Joab to deſiſt from it. Otherwiſe it might prove bitter in an another reſpect, namely, if by too eager and mercileſſe purſuance they cut off all hope, and brought their enemies into a deſparate condition, and ſo made them reſolute to ſell their lives at the deareſt rate, and to turn again upon them, and renew the fight. This in the chance of war ſometimes proveth fatal to them who a little before ſeemed to have gotten the victory.

bid the people return from following their brethren] He uſeth this word brethren as a ſtrong argument to make him deſiſt from the purſuit; ſeeing they were not aliens, heathens and idolaters whom they purſued, but all of the ſame nation with themſelves, even the Iſrael of God, children of the ſame Father, and profeſſors of the ſame religion.

V. 27. unleſſe thou hadſt ſpoken] i. e. Sent us a challenge, and provoked us to a combat between our young men, we had never engaged our ſelves in this fight, but were rather reſolved to have marched away, and returned quietly to our own homes, that ſo it might have been prevented.

V. 28. So Joab blew a trumpet, and all the people ſtood ſtill] i. e. Cauſed his trumpeter to ſound a retreat; upon the hearing whereof, his army deſiſted from purſuing their victory. And herein Joab ſhewed much wiſdom and moderation in his affections and paſſions. For though he could not chooſe but be much moved and grieved for the death of his brother, yet he reſpecteth not his own private revenge, but ſheweth how unwilling he was to ſhed the blood of his brethren; thinking that it would be a good means to make Abner deſire peace, and for the ſettlement thereof, to apply himſelf to David as his lawful King. So ch. 18. 19 neither fought they any more] Namely, at that time; for otherwiſe the war continued between the houſe of David and the houſe of Saul for ſome time after this, ch. 3. 1.

V. 29. Bithron] Called the mountains of Bether, Cant. 2. 17. i. e. of ſeparation, becauſe lying in Gilead they were by Iordan ſeparated from Canaan.

V. 31. had ſmitten of Benjamin and Abners men] i. e. Had ſlain of his party, both of Benjamin, and all the other tribes that adhered to the houſe of Saul.

V. 32. And they took up Aſahel, and buried him in the ſepulchre of his father, which was in Bethlehem] Here we have a tranſpoſition of the words in this verſe. For they did not bury Aſahel that night after the battel was fought, but travelled all that night to Hebron, to bring unto David with as much ſpeed as could be the good ſucceſſe of the battel, and carrying the corps of Aſahel along with them; they afterwards ſolemnized his funeral when they were at better leiſure. Others, not willing to admit of ſuch a tranſpoſition, hold that they did not go to David the night after their victory, but ſtayed a while to bury their dead ſlain upon the place, & then carried the body of Aſahel to Bethlehem, and there buried it, and the night following went unto Hebron to carry the news of their victory to the King. But by that time it was like to be ſtale news, if they ſtaid till Aſahels funeral was ſolemnized. And I ſee no reaſon why a great Worthy ſlain in field in the Kings cauſe and quarrel, ſhould be ſo ſuddenly and obſcurely buried in the night. Beſides, it ſeemeth unto me, that as Abner and his men went all the night after the battel to their King at Mahanaim, v. 29. ſo Joab and his men are here likewiſe ſaid to have gone the ſame night to their King at Hebron.

CHAP. III.

Verſ. 1. N*Ow there was long war between the houſe of Saul and the houſe of David*] For it laſted five years and odd moneths, from the firſt fight, ch. 2. 12. to the death of Iſhboſheth. For Davids reign over Iudah in Hebron was ſeven years and ſix moneths, two of which were ſpent before that fight, ch. 2. 11.

But David waxed ſtronger and ſtronger, and the houſe of Saul waxed weaker and weaker] Davids Kingdom had a ſure foundation, Gods never-failing promiſes, upon which he grounded his faith, waiting with patience for the accompliſhment of his word; But Iſhboſheths Kingdom was founded upon the arm of fleſh, humane policy and power, and had no word of God for the continuance of it, but rather on the contrary for its ruine and abolition. Here we have a lively type of the kingdom of Satan and the Kingdom of Chriſt. That is ſtrong and ample in its firſt beginnings, but groweth leſſer and weaker by degrees; This, though ſmall and weak at the firſt, is daily enlarged, and groweth in ſtrength, untill at laſt Satans kingdom be wholly ruined and aboliſhed, and Chriſts ſet up and enlarged over the whole world. And this appeareth in Chriſts Kingdom, both generally conſidered in the whole Church, againſt which Satan raiſeth daily war by his chief General Antichriſt, as Iſhboſheth by his Abner, yet ſhall never prevail, but continually grow weaker and weaker, being daily conſumed by the Spirit of his mouth, the preaching of the word, untill he be at laſt wholly deſtroyed and aboliſhed by the brightneſſe of his coming, 2 Theſſ. 2. 8. And alſo particularly conſidered in every Chriſtian, in that fight which is between the fleſh and the Spirit; The one, as Satans Lieutenant-general, attended with innumerable Luſts, ſeeming invincibly ſtrong in the firſt beginnings of the Chriſtian warfare, groweth daily weaker, till it be wholly aboliſhed; But the other, as Chriſts Lieutenant, accompanied with his ſpiritual Graces, waxeth ſtronger continually, till at laſt getting a full and final victory, the Kingdom of Chriſt is erected and eſtabliſhed both in grace and glory.

V. 2. And unto David were ſons born in Hebron] Whilſt he was exiled and perſecuted by Saul, God gave him no children, though he had two wives with him, becauſe in his wiſe providence he ſaw that children then would have been burdenſom and troubleſom unto him; but no ſooner is he choſen King over Judah, and ſetled in Hebron, then he is made the Father of ſix ſons. Yet God did not multiply his poſterity as he multiplied his wives, but of his ſix wives gave him only ſix ſons, to teach him and us, that Polygamy, howſoever it was tolerated in thoſe times, yet was not allowed as his ordinance to make a fruitful Progeny. And experience alſo teacheth us, that one man joyned with one wife, according to Gods firſt inſtitution, have been bleſſed with a more numerous poſterity then they who have had many. But eſpecially this is evident in Solomon, who of his thouſand wives and concubines had onely one ſon, and he none of the beſt; even as his father before him, though he had divers ſons, yet was not much bleſſed in them, ſeeing they were many of them, rather corroſives, to eat out his heart with grief and vexation, then comforts and cauſes of joy, as Amnon, Abſalom, and Adonijah, 1 Chro. 3. 1, 2. See on 1 Kin. 1. 5.

V. 3. And his ſecond, Chileab] Called alſo Daniel, 1 Chro. 3. 1:

the third, Abſalom the ſon of Maacah, the daughter of Talmai King of Geſhur] A city ſituate in the North, on the frontier of Gilead, at the entrance of the vallies of Syria Trachonitis, Deut. 3. 14. Ioſh. 12. 5. and 13. 8. Hence ſome think David had this wife, when being at Ziklag he invaded and forraged the country of the Geſhurites and Amalekites, and taking her captive, did marry her, becoming firſt a Proſelite to the Jews Religion. Which after ſome ceremonial obſervations performed, it was lawful for him to do, Deut. 21.12,13. (though not very expedient, ſeeing he had choice enough among his own people) becauſe ſhe was not of any of thoſe ſeven curſed Nations with whom marriage was interdicted. But it is more probably thought that David married her after his departure frnm Z klag, for there he had only two wives, Ahinoam and Abigail, 1 *S*am.30.5. and that with her fathers likeing and conſent, when he was choſen King of Judah, and dwelt at Hebron; that he might by this alliance ſecure his Kingdom from the like invaſion. And if David and Talmai had not been in league and friendſhip, it is not like that Abſalom would have fled to him for protection, when for murdering his brother Amnon he was in his fathers diſpleaſure, ch.13. 37,38.

V. 5. And the ſixth, Ithream, by Eglah Davids wife] All the reſt were his wives, yet ſhe only is ſo called; either becauſe her parentage being obſcure, ſhe was no otherwiſe known then by her title of being Davids wife, as all the reſt were; or to diſtinguiſh her from ſome other that then lived of the ſame name; or, being the laſt that is named, ſhe in particular is called his wife, to imply that all the reſt were his wives likewiſe, by whom he had theſe children, beſides thoſe which he had by his concubines, 1 Chr.3 9.

V. 6. Abner made himſelf ſtrong for the houſe of Saul] i. e. He furniſhed himſelf with arms, munition and riches, and increaſed his army, to ſettle the Crown upon Iſhboſheth.

V. 7. And Iſhboſheth ſaid to Abner, Wherefore haſt thou gone in unto my fathers concubine?] i. e. Haſt lien with and defiled her? With this fault he chargeth him, either becauſe it was ſo reported unto him by others, or out of his own groundleſs ſuſpicion and jealouſie, ſeeing it appeareth not whether it was ſo or not. Abner in his anſwer neither confeſſing nor denying it. But whether it were true or falſe, it ſeemeth Iſhboſheths diſcontent did ariſe, not only from this, that Abner had diſhonoured his father, who had been his King and Sovereign, in lying with his concubine; but chiefly becauſe, obſerving unto what great ſtrength he was grown, being General of the Army, and in high favour with the people, he ſuſpected that he aſpired to the Kingdom, and made way thereunto by making uſe of the Kings concubine, who having two ſons might give ſome colour to his claim, when Iſhboſheth was taken out of the way. For it ſeemeth in thoſe dayes the having of the Kings wives and concubines after his deceaſe was thought not only a ſign of ambition and aſpiring to the Crown, but ſome help alſo to further ſuch a deſign; as appeareth in the example of Adonijah, with whom Solomon was implacably diſpleaſed for deſiring to marry Abiſhag Davids wife, as ſuppoſing that thereby he intended to get the Kingdom, 1 Kin.2. 22. See ch.12.8. & 16.21.

V. 8. Then Abner——ſaid, Am I a dogs head] Or, a dog-keeper. i. e. Am I ſo baſe and contemptible in thine eyes that thou ſhouldſt ſuſpect me guilty of ſo foul a fault? Or ſuppoſe I were guilty of it, am I in thy eſteem of ſuch a low and poor condition, even no better then a dog, or dog-keeper, that thou holdeſt it ſo great a diſparagement unto thee for me to lie with this woman, who was not thy fathers wife, but only his concubine? whereas by my place I am next unto the King, and have done therein ſuch faithful and profitable ſervice both to thy father, thy ſelf, and your whole Family? *S*ee chap.9.8. & 16.9. 1 Sam.24.14. Deut.23,18.

which againſt Judah do ſhew kindneſs this day to the houſe of Saul] q. d. Haſt thou any reaſon to ſlight and viliſie me as ſome mean groom or ſcoundrel, from whoſe ſupport both thy ſelf and all thy fathers houſe have your whole ſubſiſtance, and who have power, when I pleaſe, to deliver thee into thine enemies hands, who would depoſe thee and ſeek thy ruine?

V. 9. So do God to Abner, and more alſo] See on Ruth 1.17.

except, as the Lord hath ſworn to David, even ſo I do to him] i. e. Tranſlate the Kingdom from the houſe of Saul, and make him King. Hereby it appeareth that he knew that God had choſen and appointed David to be King, and that all this whiſe he had oppoſed him againſt his knowledg and conſcience, for his own worldly and carnal ends.

V. 10. from Dan even to Beerſheba] See on Judg.20.1.

V. 11. And he could not anſwer Abner a word, for he feared him] Being over-awed with the greatneſſe of his power which he had with the people, eſpecially with the Army. This was Davids caſe, ver.39.

V. 12. And Abner ſent meſſengers to David on his behalf] Heb. in ſtead of himſelf. Or, in his own name. Not daring as yet to go unto him in his own perſon, till he had from him a ſafe conduct, and might be entertained with acceptance, and upon good conditions. Others read it, Becauſe of this, i. e. being enraged by this affront.

ſaying, Whoſe is the land?] This may be either meant thus, Whoſe is it to beſtow? Or in whoſe power is it to confer upon whom he pleaſeth, but in mine, who am ready to give it thee? Or thus, Unto whom by right doth it appertain but unto thee only, whom God, who alone hath the right to diſpoſe of Kingdoms, hath choſen and appointed unto it? And here, like an hypocrite, he pretendeth it was Gods deſignation that moved him to tender his ſervice unto David, whereas indeed it was his indignation towards Iſhboſheth, and his ſelf-ends, to ſecure him from danger of puniſhment for his former demerits, and his hopes by this means either to be advanced by Davids favour, or to retain his preſent power and dignity, at leaſt that he might not be rejected and caſt out with diſhonour and diſgrace.

Make thy league with me] i. e. Enter into covenant with me, that thou wilt remit all that is paſt, receive me into favour, and give me ſuch place and preferment as befitteth my perſon and parts.

to bring about all Iſrael unto thee] i. e. Cauſe them to leave Iſhboſheth, and become thy ſubjects.

V. 13. And he ſaid, Well, I will make a league with thee] i. e. David returned Abner this anſwer, I like and accept of thy propoſitions.

Thou ſhalt not ſee my face, except thou firſt bring Michal Sauls daughter] There were two principal cauſes which made David ſo deſirous to have Michal brought back unto him, that he might enjoy her as his wife, though ſhe had been ſo long detained from him, and married to another. I. Becauſe ſhe was his firſt wife, and had formerly loved him dearly, and approved her love by uſing means to ſave his life when he was in extream danger, though thereby ſhe incurred the diſpleaſure of the King her father. And howſoever he might make ſome doubt of the continuance of her affection, ſeeing ſhe had given her conſent to marry another man, yet he imputed that, not to her want of love to him, but to her fathers authority and importunity, by which ſhe was over-ruled. II. He might have therein a politick end, namely to ſettle peace, and ſecure the poſſeſſion of his Kingdom, by ingratiating himſelf, and gaining the love of all Sauls kindred and allies, having his daughter to live with him as his wife, freely remitting that great wrong offered unto him in marrying her to another man.

V. 14. And David ſent meſſengers to Iſhboſheth Sauls ſon, ſaying, Deliver me my wife Michal] He deſireth no favour but only that he would do him right, by uſing his authority for reſtoring unto him his lawful wife. And he himſelf ſendeth this meſſage, and doth not only uſe the mediation of Abner, becauſe Abner being lately but upon ill terms with him, he might ſuſpect he made the motion for ſome ſiniſter ends, and ſelf-intereſt, and alſo that it might be the more eaſily effected, having Iſhboſheths authority to countenance it, and Abners power to back and execute it. And it is apparent, that Abner, as he did help it on with his perſwaſion, ſo he was the Kings agent to effect it. For he went to Phaltiel her husband to demand her in the Kings name; and having obtained her, he brought her away, and accompanied her to Bahurim, Phaltiel following her weeping, till Abner cauſed him to return, ver.16.

which I eſpouſed to me for an hundred foreskins of the Philiſtims] He pleadeth his right unto her, not by Sauls free gift, but in a way of juſtice, becauſe he had purchaſed her at a dear and dangerous rate, ventring his life for the procuring of the Philiſtims foreskins. And here he nameth an hundred only, though he brought two hundred unto Saul, becauſe the covenant between them was only for an hundred, 1 Sam. 18.25.27.

V. 15. even from Phaltiel] He is called Phalti, 1 Sam.25.44.

V. 16. And her husband went with her along weeping] Heb. going and weeping. i. e. Expreſſing his great grief with tears, becauſe a wife ſo noble and beautiful was taken away from him.

to Bahurim] A city of Benjamin, on the frontiers of Judah, ch.19. 16. See on Joſh.21.18.

V. 17. And Abner had communication with the Elders of Iſrael] According to his covenant made with David.

Ye ſought for David in times paſt to be King over you] Hereby it appeareth that many or moſt of the people of Iſrael did ſo much honour David, that they much deſired long ago to have had him to be their King, had not Abner, having the militia in his hands, over-powred them, and compelled them to take part with Iſhboſheth.

V. 18. Now then do it; for the Lord hath ſpoken of David, ſaying, &c.] We do not read in the ſacred Story where this is expreſly ſpoken; but Joſephus ſaith it was ſpoken by Samuel, and commonly known amongſt the people. Here Abner like a politick hypocrite, pretendeth he endeavoured to ſet up David King, in obedience to God, and for the good and ſalvation of the people, whereas he did it meerly out of ſelf-love, and to advance his private intereſt.

V. 19. Abner alſo ſpake in the ears of Benjamin] i. e. Having received a ſatisfactorie anſwer from the reſt of the tribes, condeſcending to his motion, that they would receive David for their King, he addreſſeth himſelf to the tribe of Benjamin, ſpeaking unto them to the ſame purpoſe he had ſpoken to the Elders. And this he doth in an eſpecial manner to them, becauſe Saul being of their Tribe, was chiefly in their favour; and therefore, if they gave way to Davids title, and ſubmitted to his government, little doubt was to be made of the other tribes.

And Abner went alſo to ſpeak in the ears of David in Hebron] i. e. Having received ſuch an anſwer from the Elders of Iſrael and Benjamin as ſatisfied him, he himſelf, to ſhew his induſtrious diligence and faithfulneſſe in agitating Davids buſineſſe which he had undertaken, went to carry the news of his good ſucceſſe to him at Hebron. And this he did either ſecretly, that it might not come to Iſhboſheths ear, having all about him as his creatures at his command; or rather (becauſe this could hardly be done, he having twenty men in his company to attend him, ver. 20) it is probable that he carried Michal with him to colour his action, he having acquainted Iſhboſheth with it, and obtained his conſent.

V. 20. And David made Abner and the men that were with him, a feaſt] As it was uſual in thoſe dayes to do when they made ſolemn contracts and covenants, Gen.26. 30. & 31.44, 46. Herein David is thought to have failed: But not, as I conceive, becauſe he feaſted Abner, though, (as they ſay) he was wicked in himſelf, and now acted treachery againſt his King; ſeeing it may be lawful to eat with wicked men, when as we do it not out of free choice and love of their company, but for civil ends, and the better tranſacting and compoſing of our worldly buſineſſe and important affairs. Neither could this be counted treachery in Abner, ſeeing he had openly profeſſed that he would thus do, even to Iſhboſheths own face. And if it were unlawful to ſet up Iſhboſheth, being contrary to Gods expreſſe Will, then it was lawful to put him down, although he might fail in his ends, and manner of doing it. But here was David faulty, that he thus far proceeded in his own politick plots, and never conſulted with God for his direction: And that might well be the cauſe of the ill ſucceſſe of this tranſaction, and that it had ſuch a tragical concluſion.

V. 21. And Abner ſaid unto David——I will gather all Iſrael unto my lord the King] i. e. All the tribes, or the greateſt part of all, or all the chief of all eſtates and conditions. So Mat. 3.5. Phil. 2.21.

V. 22. Joab came from purſuing a troop] It is moſt likely of the Philiſtims, who were ſent out to ſpoil the country.

V. 24. Then Joab came to the king, and ſaid, What haſt thou done?] In a proud and inſolent manner he taxeth the King of imprudence and indiſcretion, for ſending away a dangerous enemy, when he had him in his hands.

V. 25. Thou knoweſt Abner the ſon of Ner, that he came to deceive thee] i. e. Thou mighteſt well have known, if thou hadſt been ſo conſiderate, that Abner, being ſo ſubtile and politick a man, came not for any good that he intended towards thee, but only to deceive thee, and like a crafty ſpie to diſcover all thy counſels and courſes, thy actions and proceedings. And thus he ſweetneth his ſaucy reproof, by pretending nothing but love and care of Davids good; whereas in truth he did all out of ſelf-love, pride and envy. He feared leſt Abner by this important ſervice ſhould creep into the Kings favour, and be corrival with him in honours and preferments; and was therefore vexed becauſe he had eſcaped out of his hand, when ſuch a fit opportunity was offered of revenging himſelf on him for the death of Aſahel his brother.

V. 26. And when Joab was come out from David] From whom he flung in a fury and diſcontent, not waiting for his reply, as he would have David conceive it, but indeed making all haſte to put his deſign in execution.

he ſent meſſengers after Abner] Uſing, it is likely, Davids name to countenance his action, and pretending that he had ſome weighty and important buſineſſe to treat further with him about. And this perhaps made David afterwards the more earneſt and careful in clearing himſelf, and wiping away the ſuſpicion that he had ſome hand in Abners murder.

which brought him again from the well of Sirah] Situate on the North of Hebron.

V. 27. Joab took him aſide in the gate to ſpeak with him quietly] 1 King. 2.5. Heb. peaceably. i. e. To treat with him about the Kings affairs in ſecret, and as it were in his ear, that no man might hear him. And becauſe he would be the leſſe ſuſpected, he made choice of the gate of the city to conſult in, which was the place of judicature, and of their publick and ſolemn meetings.

and ſmote him there under the fiſt rib, that he died] As he had done before to his brother Aſahel. See on ch. 2.23.

for the blood of Aſahel his brother] This was one cauſe which made Joab take this revenge, though he had little reaſon to do it, ſeeing Abner ſhed Aſahels blood, in a ſort unwillingly, and not before he was much provoked to do it by his importunity. But God herein had his ends, as well as Joab his. I. He thus juſtly puniſhed Abner, as for all other ſins, ſo for his rebellion againſt David his lawful King, contrary to his own knowledg and conſcience, to compaſs his worldly and wicked ends; and for being the cauſe of ſhedding ſo much blood in this unlawful war, at which he ſo little ſcrupled, that he counted it but a ſport or play, ch. 2.14. II. By this means he took Abner out of the way, that David might not be beholding to him for bringing Iſrael under his government, whom he would have come to the kingdom by a better way.

V. 28. I and my Kingdom are guiltleſs before the Lord for ever] i. e. I am wholly innocent of having any hand in this heinous crime of ſhedding Abners blood; and therefore the Lord, who knoweth it, will never lay it to my charge, to puniſh me for it, nor my Kingdom for my ſake, ſeeing it is alike guiltleſs.

V. 29. Let it reſt on the head of Ioab, and on all his fathers houſe] Though we are bound by Gods law to abſtain from all private revenge, to overcome evil with goodneſs, and to pray for our enemies that hurt and perſecute us, yet in this publick cauſe, that concerned not David alone, but the welfare of the whole Kingdom, he is fain to uſe theſe fearful imprecations both againſt Joab and his whole family, that ſo he might the better cleer himſelf from having any hand in this horrid murder, of which otherwiſe he was likely to be ſuſpected, by Abners friends at leaſt, that he was conſenting to it. Which would have been a cauſe of raiſing all his party againſt him, and the occaſion of a bloody war, which would have diſturbed the peace of the Common-wealth, cauſed much effuſion of blood, and quite unſetled him in the Kingdom, in which now by general conſent they were about to eſtabliſh him.

And let there not fail from the houſe of Ioab] i. e. As long as his family or any of it continueth, let all or ſome of theſe evils befal them. So 2 King. 5.27.

one that hath an iſſue] i. e. Some incurable running ſore, or flux of ſeed: for which they were ceremonially excommunicated, and debarred from entring into the Congregation, and partaking of the publick ordinances, Lev. 15.21.

or that leaneth on a ſtaffe] By reaſon of feebleneſſe and lameneſſe.

V. 30. So Ioab and Abiſhai his brother ſlew Abner] i. e. Both the brothers conſpired together and plotted this murder, though Joab alone did act it.

at Gibeon in the battel] This is added as an aggravation of this foul fact: Abner ſlew Aſahel like a brave Souldier, though unwillingly, in the open field; but Joab ſlew Abner deſperately and willingly, and that in a baſe, cowardly and treacherous manner, when he pretended peace and amity.

V. 31. And David ſaid to Ioab and all the people that were with him] He proclaimed a ſolemn and publick funeral-mourning for the death of Abner, and for that heinous ſin that was committed in his murder, that hereby he might ſhew he was innocent, and had no hand in it. And he would have Joab to joyn with all the reſt, becauſe he was the chief actor, that (if it were poſſible) he might come to a ſight and ſenſe of his ſin, and to unfeigned repentance for it, when he was convinced of the heinouſneſſe thereof, by this publick lamentation of the King and all the people, though they had no hand in the fact.

rent your clothes and gird you with ſackcloth] That, to teſtifie the renting of their hearts with grief; and this, to afflict their bodies, and to intimate they thought themſelves unworthy to put on better clothing. See on ch. 1.2. & Gen. 37.29.

And King David himſelf followed the bier] i. e. that he might the more honour Abners funeral, he laid aſide his kingly dignity, and attended upon the corps. For among all nations Kings have been ever exempted from ſuch expreſſions of their mourning.

V. 32. The King lift up his voice, and wept] i. e. Did not only expreſs his grief by ſhedding of tears, but alſo did teſtifie it to the people by vocal lamentations.

V. 33. Died Abner as a fool dieth?] i. e. As a baſe coward, that fooliſhly yieldeth himſelf to be ſlaughtered by his enemy, making no reſiſtance? q. d. No ſurely, he did not die ſo, but was ſuddenly and treacherouſly ſurpriſed, having no opportunity to ſhew his valour, as the moſt couragious man on earth might have been in the like caſe.

V. 34. Thy hands were not bound, nor thy feet put into fetters] i. e. Thou didſt not die like a baſe weak captive taken in war, having neither courage nor ſtrength to make reſiſtance, nor as a malefactor bound in chains and fetters, and ſo led out to execution: No, thou waſt truly valiant in all thy enterpriſes, as Joab ſhould have found it, if he had fought with thee on equal terms; but thou waſt ſuddenly ſlain, when thou didſt leaſt ſuſpect it, by one that pretended peace and friendſhip.

as a man falleth before wicked men, ſo felleſt thou] i. e. As it might be the caſe of the moſt wiſe and valiant man in the world, that hath to do with falſe, faithleſſe and graceleſſe men, who have no reſpect to true valour, honour or honeſty, and of whom he hath no ſuſpicion, becauſe they make ſhew of love and friendſhip; ſo was it with thee. And this David publiſheth before Joabs face, and brandeth him with this diſhonour and reproach, in the audience of all the people, as a part of his puniſhment for his wicked fact.

V. 35. And when all the people came to cauſe David to eat meat] i. e. The Tribunes, Colonels and chief Commanders of the people and army hearing that David refuſed to eat, came and intreated him not to lay the matter ſo much to heart as to forbear his food, eſpecially there being a feaſt provided to refreſh and cheer them in the time of their mourning, as the manner was then, and is to this day, in ſolemn funerals. See Jer. 16.7, 8. Ezek. 24.17.

So do God to me, and more alſo] See on Ruth 1.17.

If I taſte bread, or ought elſe, till the Sun be down] He joyned faſting with his mourning, to expreſs his grief for Abner, and to cleer himſelf of being any way guilty of his death, that hereby he might give ſatisfaction to the people ſeeing his innocency.

V. 36. And all the people took notice of it, and it pleaſed them] Heb. was good in their eyes. This is ſaid, to intimate that David attained unto the end at which he prudently aimed in the carriage of this buſineſſe, that is, to cleer himſelf, and pleaſe the people.

As whatſoever the King did, pleaſed all the people] i. e. He was ſo well accepted, and ſo gracious in the eyes of the people, through his wiſe, fair and juſt demeanour in all his courſes, that not only his carriage of all this buſineſs concerning Abner, but generally of all things elſe, was exceeding pleaſing unto them.

V. 37. that it was not of the King] i. e. Not by his will, counſel or inſtigation, directly or indirectly, that Abner was ſlain.

V. 38. Know ye not that there is a Prince and a great man fallen this day in Iſrael?] i. e. ye cannot chooſe but take notice of it, that there is a great Peer and Pillar of the land fallen, and that therefore they that killed him ſhould be puniſhed as murderers, were there power to do it.

V. 39. And I am this day weak, though anointed King] i. e. Unſetled in my Kingdom, like a tender plant that hath not taken root, and therefore of ſmall power to ſee juſtice executed, eſpecially on theſe murderers who are in ſuch favour with the people, and command the army. This excuſe was below pious and valiant David, and two much ſavoureth of carnal policy and ungrounded fear. For he had Gods infallible promiſe, that he would not only bring him to the Kingdom, but alſo eſtabliſh him on his Throne, and his poſterity after him: And this promiſe could not have been fruſtrated and made void by all the power and plots of all wicked traytors combining together and conſpiring againſt him; and therefore he needed not to have feared to have executed juſtice upon ſuch an hainous malefactor, maugre the might and malice of him and all his allies and adherents. Again, where there is from God an abſolute command, there is no reaſoning with fleſh and blood. He that ſheddeth mans blood, muſt by man have his blood ſhed, Gen. 9. 6. And the wilful murderer muſt be taken from the altar, if he flee to it for ſhelter and ſanctuary, and be put to death, Exod. 21. 14. And though there were never ſo much danger in it, yet let juſtice be done, though heaven fall. Neither was there ſo much peril in the execution as there was in the neglecting of it. For at this time David was highly in the peoples favour: and Joabs abominable fact muſt needs render him odious to all men who were not as wicked as himſelf: And if now Juſtice had been duly executed, Amaſa his death had been prevented, whom Joab, being fleſhed with cruelty and impunity, did in like manner take away. Nor is it ſufficient to ſay, that his puniſhment was only reſpited, not remitted, ſeeing all that while the guilt of blood lay upon the King and the whole land, and cried for vengeance, till it was expiated by the blood of the murderer, 1 Kings 2. 31, 33. Yea, but the command of executing the murderer is an affirmative precept, alwaies binding to obedience, but not to all times for the acting of it. I anſwer, Though ſome delay were allowed for puniſhing wilful murderers, (for which we have no warrant in the Scriptures) yet this would not excuſe David for his not executing juſtice upon Joab, when he was eſtabiſhed in his Kingdom, even to the very end of his reign, ſeeing it was more then probable that in ſo long time Joab might have died a natural death, or being a martial man and in continual wars, have been ſlain by his enemies, and ſo juſtice ſhould never have been executed upon him.

the Lord ſhall reward the evil doer] i. e. Though I be unable to inflict condign puniſhment on theſe potent offenders, yet the Lord in his due time will do it himſelf; and I refer it unto him, and deſire him to do it: 1 Kings 2. 5, 6, 34.

CHAP. IV.

Verſ. 1. A*Nd when Sauls ſon heard that Abner was dead in Hebron, his hands were feeble*] i. e. When Iſhboſheth heard that Abner was taken away, upon whom he wholly relied, he was ſo daunted and diſanimated that he became weak both in courage and councel, and was utterly diſabled for action, and managing the great affairs of the Common-wealth. So ch. 17. 2. Ezra. 4. 4. Neh. 6. 9. Iſai. 13. 7.

And all the Iſraelites were troubled] i. e. All the tribes that adhered to his partie were in great fear, and perplexed with the ſuddenneſſe of this news, becauſe they knew not what would become of the Treaty of peace and reconciliation, Abner being dead, who did negotiate it: and if it ſhould now break off for want of his proſecution, and the Kingdom be imbroiled in a new war, they ſhould be at a great loſs, upon whoſe counſel and conduct they chiefly relied.

V. 2. Captains of bands] Which were uſed to come and ſpoil, ch. 3. 22.

a Beerothite] i. e. Born in Beeroth, a city of Benjamin, Joſh. 18. 25. and 9. 17.

Beeroth was reckoned to Benjamin] Though now the Philiſtims poſſeſſed it, the Benjamites after Sauls diſcomfiture being fled out of it, 1 Sam. 31. 7.

V. 3. And the Beerothites fled to Gittaim] A town of Benjamin Neh. 11. 33. whither they fled for fear of the Philiſtims. Of which flight mention is here made, that theſe Captains might be known to be Beerothites, though they now ſojourned in Gittaim, and their city at this time was inhabited by the Philiſtims. Others think there were two cities of this name, one in Benjamin, the other in the South-frontiers of Judah, whither theſe Beerothites fled, and there inhabited, liking it ſo well that they returned not to their own city to the time that this ſtory was written.

V. 4. And Jonathan Sauls ſon had a ſon that was lame] The drift of this narration concerning Mephiboſheth is to ſhew what induced theſe two Captains to murder Iſhboſheth, that they might thereby ingratiate themſelves with David; to wit, becauſe there was none remaining of Sauls houſe likely to vindicate his death. For Mephiboſheth only was left, and he but a child, and lame of his feet: and therefore as he was unlikely to revenge his uncles death, being young and impotent, eſpecially when as he could not look otherwiſe upon him then as an uſurper, who had put him by the Crown to which he had title by lineal ſucceſſion; ſo he was as far unable to hinder David from quiet poſſeſſion of the Kingdom, being a lame childe, whom no man much reſpected. Hereupon they conclude that the taking away of Iſhboſheth would be ſo advantageous to David, that he could not chooſe, in common humanity, but richly reward the contrivers and actors of it; Whereas on the other ſide, now that Abner was dead, Iſhboſheths Kingdom was in ſuch a declining and tottering condition, that there was no hope of advancement by him, though they ſhould be never ſo faithful in his ſervice.

V. 5. And the ſons of Rimmon——went] i. e. Seeing that David was likely to be King of all Iſrael, that all things grew worſe and worſe with Iſhboſheth, they reſolved to ſlay him, and to this end now came, thinking hereby to gratifie David, and to endear their ſervice, perſuming of indemnity, becauſe there was none but a lame childe to revenge his death.

and came about the heat of the day to the houſe of Iſhboſheth, who lay on his bed at noon] Though there were a common cuſtom in thoſe hot countries to take their eaſe in the heat of the day, which made them unfit for action and imployment, yet it ſeemeth to be ſpoken here in a ſpecial manner of Iſhboſheth, becauſe he was a dull unactive man, who having put off all buſineſs to Abner, gave himſelf over to ſloth and eaſe: A thing unſuitable for a King at any time, eſpecially for him in his preſent condition, full of deſperate danger, Abner his chief ſtrength being taken away. And therefore it was juſt that he ſhould dye in his ſloth who had lived ſlothfully all his dayes.

V. 6. And they came thither into the midſt of the houſe, as though they would have fetched wheat] Having diſguiſed themſelves in the habit of ſuch as came to buy corn, whereof Iſhboſheths lands (it ſemeth) yeelded great ſtore, or of porters, that came to carry away ſome that had been bought: Or elſe, as it is more probable, being Commanders in Iſhboſheths army, and well acquainted in his houſe, they came thither under pretence of fetching corn for proviſion of the camp, or for themſelves and the Soldiers under their command; and by this colour having free acceſſe into the chamber where he lay, and finding him aſleep upon his bed, they murdered him, and cutting off his head, took it away with them, and carried it to David, expecting ſome great reward.

under the fifth rib] See on ch. 2. 23.

V. 7. and gate them away through the plain all night] Making all poſſible haſte for fear of being purſued and overtaken, they travelled all night from Mahanaim, where they did commit this bloody act, unto Hebron, through the Plain between Jericho and Hebron, chap. 2. 29.

V. 8. Behold the head of Iſhboſheth the ſon of Saul thine enemy which ſought thy life] This ſpeech is cunningly compoſed. To commend their ſervice in killing Iſhboſheth, they put David in mind of Sauls enmity and bloody perſecution, which they in this fact had revenged upon his ſon.

and the Lord hath avenged my Lord the King] Though this were true in reſpect of the ſecret workings of Gods providence, uſing this as a means of ſetling David in the quiet and peaceable poſſeſſion of the whole Kingdom, and though it were juſt with the Lord to bring Iſhboſheth to ſuch an end, having uſurped the Kingdom contrary to Gods revealed Will, yet it excuſed not at all theſe murderers of their Lord, ſeeing they had no reſpect to accompliſh Gods Will, which expreſly forbiddeth all treachery and murder, but only aimed at their own private profit and advancement.

V. 9. As the Lord liveth, who hath redeemed my ſoul out of all adverſity] i. e. As ſure as the Lord liveth, who hath alwaies hitherto delivered me out of all my troubles by juſt and lawful means, without the help of any baſe villany or wicked treachery, I will inflict upon you, according to your demerits, ſevere puniſhment; The which latter part he abruptly ſuppoſeth, as it is uſual in oaths.

V. 10. When one told me] i. e. The Amalekite, chap. 1. 2, &c.

ſaying, Behold, Saul is dead] Saying withal that upon his requeſt he did help to kill him, and rid him out of his pain, chap. 1. 10.

V. 11. How much more when wicked men have ſlain a righteous perſon] i. e. How much better reaſon have I to execute ſevere juſtice on ſuch bloody and treacherous aſſaſſines as you, who have murdered one that was juſt and innocent, though not ſimply in himſelf, yet in reference to you, having done you no wrong to provoke you to this horrid act, but contrariwiſe well deſerved at your hands, by advancing you to places of command in his army?

in his own houſe, upon his bed] i. e. In a place where he had reaſon to think himſelf moſt ſecure and free from danger. By all theſe circumſtances David aggravateth their horrible crime, as being in many reſpects far more hainous then that of the Amalekite, which he had puniſhed with death. He was an Amalekite, and in reſpect of nation and birth an enemy to Gods people, from whom no better was to be expected, eſpecially by Saul, who not long before had ſlain almoſt all their nation; but theſe were Iſraelites, and of the ſame religion with Iſhboſheth, and thereby obliged to perform all good duties to their brother, yea, they were of the ſame tribe with Iſhboſheth, and his ſervants, and therefore bound to be loyal to their maſter. He did but haſten Sauls death, being deadly wounded, and out of all hope of recovery, to eaſe his pain and prevent his ſhame and diſhonor; but theſe took away Iſhboſheths life when he was in perfect health and ſuſpected no danger. He did it (as he pretended) at Sauls earneſt requeſt, out of meer pity, to free him from torment; But theſe murdered Iſhboſheth in a violent manner againſt his will, when he was taking his repoſe, and was at eaſe. He ſlew Saul, when he was purſued of his enemies in the field, and had no hope to eſcape their fury but theſe killed Iſhboſheth in his own houſe, ſleeping on his bed, and in no danger to be ſurprized by any other enemies but ſuch treacherous villains as they, who ought to have been his guard to ſecure his perſon againſt the attempts of any other.

ſhall I not therefore now require his blood of your hands] i. e. Ought I not much more in juſtice to puniſh you for this horrid crime with all ſeverity, ſeeing neither the example of him that ſlew Saul, nor the innocency of the perſon, nor duty to your maſter, nor reverence of the place, nor time, could deterr you from committing ſuch a treacherous and bloody fact?

V. 12. And they ſlew them, and cut off their hands and their feet, and hanged them over the pool in Hebron] They were diſmembred of their hands and feet, becauſe theſe were the ſpecial inſtruments in acting this villany, their feet in carrying them to it, which were ſwift to ſhed blood, and their hands in ſtabbing him and cutting off his head. The murderer by the letter of the Law was appointed onely to be put to death; but when the crime was more hainous and horrible, it was in the Magiſtrates power to aggravate and increaſe the puniſhment, and make the malefactour exemplary, to deterr others from the like wickedneſſe. And though as the Jewiſh writers obſerve, it was not lawful to leſſen the puniſhment which the Law had appointed, as to adjudge one to impriſonment, whipping, loſs of goods, in ſtead of death, yet they might adde unto it according to the nature of the ſin; becauſe God in mercy had appointed the leaſt degrees of puniſhment which in juſtice could be required. Now theſe hands and feet David cauſed to be hanged over the pool of Hebron, (their bodies, it is likely, after ſun-ſetting being taken down according to the Law, Deut. 21. 23.) both to be a publick ſpectacle and example to others, and to ſhew his deteſtation of ſuch treacherous villany; that ſo it might appear to all the world that he was clear of having any hand in this bloody fact, either by contriving it, or giving any incouragement to the actors of it.

but they took the head of Iſhboſheth, and buried it in the ſepulchre of Abner in Hebron] Honouring him, though an enemy, with an honourable burial in that City where the great Patriarchs did lie interred; and making them partners in the ſame ſepulchre who had been partakers in the ſame cauſe, and had both alike fallen by treacherous hands.

CHAP. V.

Verſ. 1 THen came all the tribes of Iſrael to David unto Hebron] i.e. Not only the Elders & chief of the tribes, as v. 3. but with them their Tribunes, Captains & Commanders, with a great army gathered together out of all Iſrael, armed & wel appointed for the war, as it is ſpecially expreſſed 1 Chr. 12. 23. where the number of the ſeveral tribes that came to David at Hebron, being ſummed up together, amounteth to above three hundred and fourty thouſand. All which continued three dayes with him, feaſting and rejoycing at his inauguration and coronation, their brethren of the tribe of Judah dwelling at Hebron, and all the country adjoyning, having made liberal proviſion for their entertainment, with the help alſo of the tribes of Iſſachar, Zebulun and Naphtali, who were neer unto them, and brought in likewiſe their proviſions, 1 Chr. 12. 39, 40. This feaſt being ended, David taketh the opportunity of this great aſſembly, before he diſmiſſed them, to aſſault the Jebuſites ſtrong Fort, which was thought impregnable, and therefore was never attempted hitherto by any of the Judges, Samuel, or Saul. Now this free coming in of all the tribes, after their long reluctancy and oppoſition, and their peaceable ſubmiſſion of all nations, Jews and Gentiles, called and gathered by the preaching of the Goſpel to the Kingdom of Chriſt, and his gracious acceptance of them as his ſubjects, notwithſtanding all their former reluctancy in the times of their ignorance, according to Pſal. 110. 3.

Behold, we are thy bone, and thy fleſh] i. e. All of us Iſraelites, both thou and we, deſcended from the ſame father, Iacob, and therefore all brethren. This they alledge, not only as an argument to move David to receive them graciouſly, as his ſubjects, notwithſtanding their former oppoſitions, ſeeing they were all brethren; but alſo and chiefly, to ſhew upon what ground they choſe him to be their King, namely, becauſe he was an Iſraelite, and ſo one of their brethren, from amongſt whom they were bound by Gods law to chooſe their King, Deut. 17. 15. And herein alſo David did typifie Chriſt our King, who is Head of that body, whereof we are members, bone of our bone, and fleſh of our fleſh, Epheſ. 5. 30. 1 Cor. 12. 12. Heb. 2. 14—18. See Gen. 29. 14.

V. 2. Alſo in time paſt, when Saul was King over us, thou waſt he that leddeſt out and broughteſt in Iſrael] i. e. Thou then waſt our chief Captain, that didſt lead out our armies againſt our enemies, and didſt bring them back, crowned with victory and laden with ſpoyl: Therefore as by the former benefits received by thy prudent and valiant conduct we are much obliged unto thee, ſo having had ſo much experience of thy parts, prowes and proſperous ſucceſſe in all thy enterpriſes, we cannot think any ſo fit to be our King, who art not only prudent to govern in time of peace, but alſo expert in war, and every way able to lead an army, Num. 27. 17.

and the Lord ſaid to thee, Thou ſhalt feed my people Iſrael] i. e. Hath already anointed thee by Samuel to be King over all Iſrael, and to be both as a good Shepherd to provide food for them, and to guide and govern them in time of peace, and as a good Captain, to go out and in before them in time of war, 1 Sam. 16. 11, 12. Pſal. 78. 71. In both which reſpects alſo he was a type of Chriſt, Pſal. 2. 6. Joh. 10. 3, 4, 10, 11.

V. 3. made a league with them in Hebron before the Lord] Namely, that he would, as a good King, govern them according to the preſcript rule of Gods Law, and that they would obey him, as his loyal and liege people. Hereunto both parties bound themſelves by ſolemn Covenant, confirmed by a ſacred oath, calling God to witneſſe, and invocating his Name for a bleſſing on their proceedings: In which reſpect it is ſaid that they made this league before the Lord. See on Judg. 11. 11.

And they anointed David King over Iſrael] This was his third anointing; See on ch. 2. 4. And herein alſo David was a type of Chriſt, who began to execute his Kingly office, like David, at the age of thirty years, and was thrice anointed by God, and, as it were, proclamed King over his Church: Firſt by the ſecret unction of his holy Spirit, Pſal. 45. 7. and 2. 6, 7. Secondly, at his baptiſme, by a voice from heaven, Matth. 3. 16, 17. And thirdly, at his transfiguration, Matth. 17. 5.

V. 5. In Hebron he reigned over Judah ſeven years and ſix moneths] See ch. 2. 11.

and in Jeruſalem he reigned thirty and three years over all Iſrael and Judah [The laſt year being begun, but not finiſhed. But he reigned preciſely but thirty and two years and ſix moneths; but the laſt yeer, though not compleat but current, is added, to make up the number round and full, as is uſual in the Scriptures, Judg. 20. 46. See 1 Kings 2. 11.

V. 6. And the King and his men] Having ſuch a great number of the choice and chief men of his Kingdom aſſembled, he took this opportunity to aſſault and vanquiſh the Jebuſites in their ſtrong Fort.

went to Jeruſalem unto the Jebuſites] Ieruſalem was before called Jebus, Iudg. 19. 10 and Salem, Gen. 14. 18. Pſal. 76. 2. It was ſituate on the uttermoſt borders of two tribes, Judah and Benjamin. One part of it fell to the lot of Judah, called Shalem; which they conquered and inhabited, Judg. 1. 8. The other, ſtanding on the North-ſide, afterwards called the Fort of Sion, and exceeding ſtrong, fell to Benjamins portion; but they not being able to vanquiſh it, though aſſiſted by Judah, Joſh. 15. 53. the Jebuſites did ſtill inhabit it, Iudg. 1. 23. and 19. 10, 11. even to this preſent, till David aſſaulted and took it. In this part was the hill Moriah, where Abraham being appointed to ſacrifice his ſon, was afterwards inhibited, the Lord having provided him another offring: And from thence it ſeemeth this City had its name, being divided from Jireh, God will be ſeen in the mount, and Shalem ſignifying peace, both conjoyned in Jeruſalem, The viſion of peace. This Fort David at the very entrance into the rule of the whole people firſt attempted, intending to make it the Metropolis of the Kingdom where the temple was afterwards to be built, on the hill Moriah: And the rather becauſe Melchizedek the Prieſt of the moſt high God had dwelt and reigned there, Heb. 7. 1. And it was alſo the moſt commodious place to be the chief ſeat of the Kingdome, being ſituate in the midſt of the Land, and in his tribe whom they had choſen to be their King.

which ſpake unto David, ſaying, Except thou take away the blind and the lame, thou ſhalt not come in hither] Theſe words, and the verſes next following, being obſcure, intricate and very perplexed, are diverſly underſtood by Expoſitors. But letting paſſe the moſt of them, I will only produce thoſe which ſeem moſt probable. Some underſtand them as a proud and ſcornful brag of the Jebuſites, who preſumed their Fort was ſo ſtrong and impregnable that though they had none to defend it but impotent men, and ſuch as were blind and lame, yet it would be in vain, and but meer loſt labour, For David and his army to attempt the aſſaulting of it, and out of this confidence by way of contempt and deriſion, they ſet only ſuch to guard it. Others think that by the blind and lame they meant their idols and images, in which they put their truſt, as their tutelary gods, and whom they thought ſufficient, being placed there, to make good the place againſt all the power of Iſrael without any other help. Now theſe they called the blind and lame, not out of that opinion which themſelves had of them, who highly eſteemed them as their Patrons and protectors, but as they were upbraided by the Iſraelites, who thus conceived of them; q. d. Though you have ſuch a baſe opinion of our gods, and account them blind and lame idols, yet they being placed on this impregnable Fort, you ſhall find, that if you dare attempt the ſurprizing of it, you ſhall never be able to do it, though you found no other reſiſtance.

V. 7, Neverthelſſe David took the ſtrong hold of Zion. The ſame is the City of David] i. e. Notwithſtanding all their confidence, expreſſed in their proud brags and ſcorns, David cauſed this their ſtrong hold, in which they put their truſt, to be aſſaulted and taken, and called it the city of David. The manner of the ſurprize is expreſſed in the next verſe.

V. 8. and David ſaid on that day, Whaſoever getteth up to the gutter] Or thus, For David ſaid. Here the manner how, and the means whereby, are expreſſed, of taking the ſtrong hold: namely Davids plotting and contriving the beſt and readieſt way, which was to ſcale the walls, and get into the gutter, and kill the Jebuſites, with the lame and blind, who were placed there by way of ſcorn to man and defend it; and II. Joabs executing of his deſign, by firſt entring into the Fort, and ſlaying all there: Which he undertook, partly moved thereunto by his deſire of recovering Davids favour, which he had loſt by his killing of Abner, and partly encouraged by the reward promiſed, of being made, for this ſervice, General of the army; which is here only intimated in general terms, but plainly and particularly expreſſed 1 Chron. 11. 6.

and the lame and the blind, that are hated of Davids ſoul] If we underſtand this literally, it is not ſimply meant that David hated the lame and blind becauſe of their imperfections, who ought rather to be pitied & relieved, but reſpectively, as they were by the Jebuſites in way of ſcorn and deriſion preſented unto him to diſgrace and diſhonour him and his whole army. But if we take it in a ſymbolical ſenſe, to be meant of the idols and images, which have eyes, and ſee not, and feet, and walk not, then it is to be underſtood abſolutely, that they were hated of Davids ſoul.

Wherefore they ſaid, The blind and the lame ſhall not come into the houſe]

Or, Becauſe they had ſaid, Even the blind and the lame, He ſhall not come into the houſe. On this occaſion they took it up as a common proverb, ſaying, The blind and the lame ſhall not come into the houſe. q. d. The blind and lame were but bad guardians of this place in the time of the Jebuſites, therefore ſuch ſhall be entruſted no more, but abler men employed to defend it. By houſe, ſome underſtand, and moſt probably, the royal houſe or palace of David, from entring whereof the blind and lame were interdicted; not for pride and ſtate, as the Perſian Kings would have none enter their Courts in ſackcloth, becauſe they would not offend their eyes with beholding mournful objects, Eſth. 4. 2. but that it might be a perpetual memorial of this victory, to have the blind and lame ſecluded from entring the Kings houſe, becauſe they were uſed by the Jebuſites as inſtruments to put ſuch a foul ſcorn upon him. Neither can it hinder us from taking the words in this ſenſe, that Mephiboſheth, though lame, was admitted to ſit at the Kings table, ſeeing no rule is ſo general, as that it may not have ſome one exception. And the preſence of Mephiboſheth had another uſe, namely, to put David in mind of his dearly loving Jonathan, and to be unto him a cauſe of joy and content, when by ſhewing kindneſſe to the ſon, he expreſſed his love and thankfulneſſe to his deceaſed father. But they who would have the blind and lame idols to be here underſtood, think that hereby is meant that idols and images ſhould be wholly excluded both out of the Kings houſe, and Gods. But I ſee no reaſon why that ſhould need a new interdiction in remembrance of this victory, ſeeing alwayes before they were forbidden to be received into either of theſe places, on any other. Now as this proverb was taken up among the people for a memorial of this great victory, for which they had alwaies cauſe to praiſe God, ſo it was applied according to ſpecial occaſions; as when they would intimate that a thing ſeeming impoſſible might come to paſſe, as was the taking of this impregnable tower: Or, to reprove ſuch as were proud and preſumptuous of their own ſtrength, either in reſpect of place and fortifications, or of the arm of fleſh, by telling them they might be deceived as well as the Jebuſites: Or, to give men warning that they commit not the like error with them, preſuming too much of their own ſtrength, leſt they fail in their hopes as they did, ſeeing oftentimes what begins in confidence ends in ſhame; and that they take heed leſt that befall themſelves which they intend to others; as the Jebuſites thinking to make ſure that David ſhould never enter their Fort, were themſelves expelled, and never re-entred. Others read theſe words, as we have them in our margin, becauſe they had ſaid, &c. i. e. David promiſeth this reward to him that ſhould take away the blind and lame, becauſe they had put this ſcorn upon him.

V. 9. And David built round about, from Millo and inward] Millo was a deep and broad valley or ditch, dividing Sion from the lower city; from whence David raiſed his wall of defence about Sion. See 1 King. 9. 15. Others think it was the town-houſe in the City of David, where the people had their ſolemn aſſemblies, ſo called from filling, repleniſhing. Others, and very probably, think it was ſome tower and place of munition belonging to the city, becauſe it is ſaid that Hezekiah repaired Millo in the City of David, and made darts and ſhields in abundance, 2 Chr. 32. 5. A place of the ſame name and for the like uſe we read of Iudg. 9. 6, 20, 49. From this tower or fortreſſe David is ſaid to have built the City round about, even from Millo and inward; and Ioab repaired the reſt of the city that was without. Compare this place with 1 Chron. 11. 8.

V. 10. went on and grew great] Heb. went going and growing. i. e. Proſpered in all his attempts, becauſe the Lord by his ſpecial favour was with him, and aſſiſted him.

V. 11. And Hiram King of Tyre] Tyre was a royal, potent and famous city of Merchandize, ſituate on and in the ſea, by the Weſt-limits of Aſher, Ioſh. 19. 29. It was built by the Phœnicians, who had formerly dwelt by the Red-ſea, but being driven thence by earthquakes, frequent in thoſe Countries, and other calamities, they tranſplanted themſelves into this Iſland, and built a City there at firſt on a low ground which was of little note, for fiſhermen to dwell in; but afterwards on a promontory, which became ſtately and famous, ſending out of it divers much ennobled Colonies, to Carthage Leptis, Utica, and the Iſlands of Gades. See on Iſa. 23. 1. and Amos 1. 9.

ſent meſſengers to David] Hearing of his fame and vertues, and his growth and greatneſſe in glory, and being much taken therewithall, he ſent ambaſſadors unto him, to congratulate his happy ſettlement in his Kingdom, thereby ſhewing his great reſpect and kindneſſe towards him.

and cedar-trees, and Carpenters, and Maſons] i. e. After Hirams meſſengers had been with David, and were returned to their maſter, and had acquainted him with Davids ſuit unto him, that he would accommodate him with men and materials for the building of him an houſe; ſeeing there was the greateſt plenty of the choyceſt Cedars in Lebanon, which for the moſt part was ſituate in Hirams country, and moſt excellent artizans both in wood and ſtone at Tyre above any other place; according to his requeſt Hiram ſent unto him.

V. 12. And David perceived that the Lord had eſtabliſhed him] i. e. By Gods bleſſing and proſpering him in all his affairs, he experimentally found the truth of his promiſes concerning his ſettlement in the Kingdom.

V. 13. And David took him mo Concubines and wives] This it ſeemeth he did to multiply his friends and allies, for the ſtrengthening of him in his Kingdom. But herein he ſhewed much humane frailty and infirmity, in uſing that as a means to eſtabliſh him, which God had expreſly forbidden, Deut. 17. 7. Concerning Concubines, ſee on Iudg. 19. 1, 2. 1 Chron. 3. 5.

V. 14. Shammua] Called alſo Shimea, 1 Chr. 3. 5.

V. 15. Eliſhua] Or, Eliſhama, 1 Chron. 3. 6.

V. 16. And Eliada] Called Beeliada, 1 Chr. 14. 7.

V. 17. But when the Philiſtims heard that they had anointed David King over Iſrael] 1 Chron. 11. 16. and 14. 8. i. e. When they underſtood that there was a ceſſation of the civil war between the houſes of Saul and David, and that the whole Kingdom was now ſetled upon David, and he peaceably enjoyed it; and it may be hearing alſo that he had vanquiſhed the Jebuſites, and taken their ſtrong Fort; and that Hiram, a rich King of a neighbour nation, was in league and friendſhip with him: they became jealous of his greatneſſe, and thought it high time to look unto him, and keep him down, ſeeing they were now out of that hope in which they lately were whileſt the civil wars laſted, that the Iſraelites would deſtroy one another, and ſo ſave them a labour, and not put them to the coſt and hazard of war. And perhaps they did all that while forbear to take up armes againſt them, leſt a forraign enemy invading their Country, they ſhould make peace one with another, and joyn together with united forces to keep off a common danger, which otherwiſe would involve both parties in an univerſal ruine.

All the Philiſtims] This came to paſſe by Gods good providence, ſo diſpoſing of it for preſerving Davids honour, and to keep his name from the brand and blemiſh of inhumanity and ingratitude. For the Philiſtims having in the time of his trouble and exile given him kind and courteous entertainment, aſperſions of that nature would have been caſt upon him, if he had raiſed war againſt them before they had firſt preſſed and provoked him unto it.

all the Philiſtims came up to ſeek David] To wit, that they might fight with him, before he were throughly ſettled in his Kingdom, leſt he ſhould grow too ſtrong for them, if they let him alone.

and David heard of it, and went down to the hold] Not to the fort of Zion, as ſome conceive: For that ſtanding on an high hill, he ſhould not have been ſaid to have gone down, but rather to have gone up, or aſcend, unto it. But either it was the ſtrong hold of Adullam, or ſome other neer unto it; unto which he reſorted, that he and his camp might be ſafe and free from the attempts of his enemies, till he had direction from God what to do.

V. 18. in the valley of Rephaim] i. e. Of Giants, Gen. 14. 5. ſituate on the North-limits of Judah, in Benjamin, not far from Jeruſalem, and lying Weſtward from it, Joſh. 15. 8. See on Iſa. 17. 5.

V. 19. And David enquired of the Lord] Namely, by Urim and Thummim, Num. 27. 21. See ch. 2. 1. 1 Sam. 23. 9. Though he had a great army, and had been always victorious, yet he relied not on his own ſtrength, but ſeeks to God for direction, and without it would do nothing.

V. 20. And David came to Baal-Perazim] So called by anticipation, on this occaſion.

The Lord hath broken forth upon my enemies before me, as the breach of waters] This may either be referred to his enemies, which were diſperſed like weak waters, that are eaſily divided with the foot or finger, or being ſhed on the ground are not eaſily recollected; or to Gods powerful ſcattering them, like waters ſuddenly breaking their banks and bounds, which violently ſweep all away that lieth in their paſſage.

Therefore he called the name of that place Baal-Perazim] Or, The plain of breaches, Iſa. 28. 21.

V. 21. And there they left their images] They had brought them with them, as their chief Patrons and Protectors, in whom they hoped for victory: But failing thereof, and being put to flight, they left them there, either out of fear, flying for their lives; or out of neglect, becauſe they had given them no better ſucceſſe.

burnt them] According to Gods law, Deut. 7. 25. and by Davids commandment, 1 Chr. 14. 12.

V. 22. And the Philiſtims came up yet again] Though a little before they had been beaten, put to flight, and ſlaughtered, yet ſuch was their inveterate malice againſt the Iſraelites, that they recruited their ſcattered army, and came again to provoke them to fight in the very ſame place where they had received their former defeat, though David had not incenſed them by purſuing his victory.

V. 23. And when David enquired of the Lord] Though David had lately gotten a famous victory over his enemies, yet he is not thereby lifted up into an opinion of his own ſtrength, but ſtill relyeth wholly upon the Lord, and now again ſeeketh unto him for direction.

Thou ſhalt not go up] i. e. In an open manner, as before, but fetch a compaſs behind them ſecretly; that coming upon them ſuddenly and unexpected, their hearts might be ſmitten with the greater fear and amazement.

V. 24. And let it be when thou heareſt the ſound of a going in the tops of the mulberry-trees] Not an ordinary ſound cauſed by the winds, but as if it were of an army marching or going on the tops of the trees, and, as it is probable, a noiſe of chariots and horſemen, like that 2 King. 7. 6. which was no other then the Lords hoſt of Angels ſent to deſtroy the Philiſtims. And this ſigne was given unto David to encourage him to the fight, and aſſure him of victory, ſeeing God and his Angels were preſent to aſſiſt him. The ſame noiſe perpaps was alſo heard of the Philiſtims, as that other by the Syrians, whereby being terrified they were put to flight.

for then ſhall the Lord go out] Or, then is the Lord gone out.

V. 25. from Geba] Called alſo Gibeah in Benjamin, Judg. 19. 13. and 20. 10. and Gibeon 1 Chr. 14. 16.

untill thou come to Gazer] Situate in the Weſt of Ephraim, Joſh. 16. 10. but then poſſeſſed by the Philiſtims.

CHAP. VI.

Verſ. 1. AGain David gathered together all the choſen men of Iſrael] In the firſt Book of the Chronicles, firſt the fetching of the Ark is ſet down ch. 13. and the victories over the Philiſtims ch. 14. Wherefore ſome have thought that here is ſome diſorder and tranſpoſition in the ſtory. But if we underſtand it aright, the juſt order is here obſerved: David having firſt vanquiſhed his enemies, and ſetled peace, and doth in the next place take order for promoting and ſetting up of religion; and firſt of all, for the fetching of the Ark from the houſe of Abinadab to the tent he had prepared for it. And for the reconciling of that in the Chronicles with this place, in reſpect of the order of things there related differing from this here, we are to know that David did twice aſſemble the chief of Iſrael that he might conſult with them about fetching home the Ark: Firſt, when he had taken the Jebuſites Fort; which conſultation was interrupted by the Philiſtms invaſion: And they being overthrown and put to flight, he called them the ſecond time to conſult about the ſame buſineſſe; and therefore it is plainly ſaid in this verſe, that again he gathered Iſrael. And both theſe gatherings of Iſrael are expreſſed 1 Chron. 13. 1, 5. The firſt was of choſen men, Officers, Colonells and Captains; the other, of all Iſrael, from Shibor in Egypt, even to the entring of Hamath, that is the whole land from South to North, Joſh. 13. 3. Now if it be further objected that the doubt is not quite cleered, becauſe all that is ſaid to be done here, to v. 10. is in the Chronicles ſet down, as done before the battel with the Philiſtims; to this it is anſwered. That mention being made there of that conſultation which David had before the battel, that narration is finiſhed together, notwithſtanding other things intervened, as it is uſual in the Scripture, which more reſpecteth the coherence of the matter related then the order of times.

V. 2. with all the people that were with him] Not onely the Elders and Magiſtrates, but alſo the Colonells, Captains and Souldiers, which he ſummoned to appear and joyn with him in ſo great a number from all parts of the land, both that the action might be done with general conſent and more ſolemnity, and alſo that they might have ſufficient ſtrength at hand to bear them out, if there ſhould happen any attempt to diſturb and hinder their proceedings.

from Baal of Judah] i. e. Kirjath-jearim, 1. Chr. 13: 6. called alſo Kirjath-baal, Ioſh. 15. 9. and Baalah of Judah. Here the Ark was placed after it was brought from Beth-ſhemeſh, in the houſe of Abinadab, 1. Sam. 7. 1. and had there ever ſince continued, above fourty yeares. And from hence David now fetched it, becauſe perhaps it was not ſo much reſpected, being in a private houſe, as it ought to be; and brought it to Ieruſalem, becauſe it was the chief City in the Kingdome, and alſo ſituate in the heart of the land, and ſo more convenient for the people to reſort unto from all parts for divine worſhip, and to conſult with God in all difficult and important caſes; and becauſe alſo, it being the regal ſeat where himſelf reſided, he might frequently and with more eaſe enjoy the benefit of the Ark upon all occaſions.

whoſe name is called by the name of the Lord of hoſts] Or, at which the Name, even the name of the Lord of hoſts, was called upon. i. e. Whoſe name is called on it, 1 Chr. 13. 6. Or, at which the name of the Lord was called upon; to wit, when by the high Prieſt they conſulted with him, 1 King. 8. 29.

that dwelleth between the cherubims] He is ſaid to ſit between the Cherubims, though he be every-where preſent, becauſe he was there in a ſpecial manner by the preſence of his grace, from thence delivering his Oracles when he was conſulted with, as Num. 7. 89. Exod. 25. 22.

V. 3. And they ſet the Ark of God upon a new cart] To wit, that they might ſave themſelves a labour in carrying it ſo far upon their ſhoulders as from Kirjath-jearim to Ieruſalem; propounding the example of the Philiſtims as their precedent, who had done it before without any damage. But herein they tranſgreſſed the expreſſe Law of God, which enjoyned the Kohathites to carry it upon their ſhoulders, though they might not touch it, upon pain of death, Num. 4. 15. And though the act of the Philiſtines was not puniſhed, they being heathens, and ignorant of Gods Law, which was not given to them; yet being done by the Levites, to whom the Law was given, and who knew, or ought to have known, and alſo have taught others all that was contained in it, it was a great ſin in them, and very diſpleaſing to God, and accordingly ſeverely puniſhed. And this David himſelf, being taught better by lamentable experience, acknowledgeth to have been the cauſe of that ſevere judgement executed upon Uzzah, though there were another cauſe concurring with it, to wit, his touching it with his hand, being only a Levite, and no Prieſt. Compare 1 Chr. 15. 12, 13. with v. 6, 7. of this chapter.

that was in Gibeah] Or, the hill not in Gibeah the city ſo called properly; but appellatively, upon an high place, which was in or by Kirjath-jearim. See 1 Sam. 7. 1.

V. 4. And Ahio went before the Ark] Namely, to drive the oxen, while Uzzah came behind, or by the ſide of the Ark; as appeareth by his putting forth his hand to ſtay it when it was ſhaken.

V. 5. And David, and all the houſe of Iſrael played] As they uſed to do at Divine ſervices and ſolemnities in the time of the Law, that thereby they might expreſſe their joy and cheerfulneſſe in holy duties, or ſtirr up their hearts if dull and drooping, to more alacrity 2 Kings 3. 15.

before the Lord] i. e. The Ark, the viſible ſigne of Gods preſence.

V. 6. to Nachons threſhing-floor] Called Chidon 1 Chr. 13. 9.

and took hold of it: for the oxen ſhook it] Or, ſtumbled, 1 Chr. 13. 9. i. e. By their ſtumbling they ſo ſhook the Ark that it was in danger of falling, as Uzzah thought, and therefore he put forth his hand to ſtay it. So the word is taken 2 King. 9. 33. Thus God was pleaſed by the ſtumbling of theſe dumb beaſts to convince the Levites of their error, as he did by an aſſe reprove Balaam for his ſin.

V. 7. And the anger of the Lord was kindled againſt Uzzah, &c.] Becauſe he cauſed his holy Ark to be carried in a cart, which they ſhould have born on their ſhoulders; and for touching it with his hand, being but a Levite, and no Prieſt. See on Deut. 31. 9.

and God ſmote him there] To wit, by a violent death; and that (as ſome think) by a rent or rupture in his body, which gave the name to the place, Perez Uzzah, v. 8 for his errour] Or, raſhneſſe. i. e. His ſin in touching holy things, Num. 4. 15. Now this was his own ſin, peculiar to himſelf; but that of carrying the Ark in a cart was common to all the reſt, v. 3. And here it pleaſed God to make Uzzah an example of his ſevere juſtice againſt all that ſwerve aſide from the rule of his word in the leaſt things that concern his worſhip, and follow their own wills and inventions, though they have never ſo good a pretence for it. The like we ſee in the example of Nadab and Abihu, ſtruck with preſent death for offering ſtrange fire before the Lord, which he commanded them not, Lev. 10, 1.

V. 8. And David was diſpleaſed] i. e. Much grieved and diſquieted in his mind both in reſpect of Uzzahs ſin and puniſhment. Yea, conſidering humane frailty, which is apt to ſlight and extenuate ſin, and to amplifie and aggravate the judgements of God inflicted for it, it may be probably thought that with Davids ſorrow there was mixed ſome peeviſhneſs and peeviſhneſs, impatience and diſcontent, as though this puniſhment were not onely too ſevere for a ſmal errour and over-ſight committed out of a good intention, but now alſo unſeaſonable, when they were acting ſuch a pious work; ſeeing thereby it was diſcountenanced and wholly interrupted, and ſo all the joy of the people turned into grief and lamentation.

Perez-Uzzah] That is, The breach of Uzzah.

to this day] To wit, when this ſtory was written; or, for a long time.

V. 9. And David was afraid of the Lord that day] Becauſe of this ſevere judgement he feared to proceed any further in the action, leſt himſelf through ſome errour might miſcarry and periſh in it.

How ſhall the Ark of the Lord come to me?] i. e. How ſhall I with any ſafety go on in this action, ſeeing the Lord is not pleaſed (as it ſeemeth) that I ſhould carry the Ark to the tent I have prepared for it? Therefore it were better for me to deſiſt, then proceed with ſo much danger.

V. 10: So David would not remove the Ark of the Lord unto him] Herein David diſcovered great infirmity. For either he had thus far proceeded of his own head, (as afterwards he did in reſolving to build the Temple) having no warrant from God; and then, though his zeal and good intention were commendable, yet the action it ſelf was not, being not done in faith, but without ground: or elſe he had command from God at this time to remove the Ark to Jeruſalem; and then it was his fault thus to deſiſt upon this diſcouragement. He ſhould rather have conſidered, that though the action were good, there had been ſome failing in the manner of doing it; and ſo finding out and reforming what was amiſſe, he ſhould have proceeded, having Gods word and warrant for what he did.

But David carried it aſide into the houſe of Obed-Edom] Not forcing the Ark upon him againſt his will, that he might ſo put off the danger from himſelf, but having, no doubt, his conſent and approbation. For though Obed-edom knew what had befallen the Philiſtims and Bethſhemites whileſt the Ark was among them, and what had hapned to Uzzah alſo at this time, yet, being a wiſe and holy man, he did not impute theſe diſaſters to the having of the Ark, which was a gracious ſigne of Gods preſence, but to their miſcarriages and abuſes, their want of due reverence, and other faultineſſe. And being reſolved that there could come no ill, but much good, by entertaining it, if abuſes and irreverence were avoided, as he purpoſed they ſhould be, he doth willingly and cheerfully give it entertainment.

the Gittite] Not by nation, (for he was an Iſraelite, of the tribe of Levi, and one of the porters and ſingers, 1 Chr. 15. 18, 21.) but he is ſo called becauſe he was of Gath-Rimmon, a City of the Philiſtims neer Gath, appropriated to the Levites, Joſh. 21. 24, 25. Here it ſeemeth he was born. Some think he was a Proſelyte, and by nation a Philiſtine; as ch. 15. 18, 19.

V. 11. bleſſed Obed-Edom and all his houſhold] i. e. Cauſed him and all that he had to proſper; thereby ſhewing that they ſhall be no loſers, but great gainers, that give him, or any that belong unto him, due entertainment: as we ſee alſo in the examples of Potiphar, and the Jaylor, entertaining Joſeph; Laban, *I*acob; the Widow-woman, Elijah; the Shunamite, Eliſha; and Zaccheus, Chriſt.

V. 12. So David went and brought up the Ark of God] To wit, by the miniſtery of the Prieſts and Levites. Having found by experience that there was no danger in removing and entertaining the Ark, but only in the miſcarriages about it, which he now purpoſed to reform, he ſetteth afreſh upon the action, and taketh order to have it brought from Obed-Edoms houſe to Jeruſalem with all ſolemnity, appointing the Prieſts and Levites to their ſeveral charges, and how they ſhould demean themſelves in them, as is more fully expreſſed, 1 Chron.15, & 16.

V. 13. When they that bare the Ark of the Lord had gone ſix paces, he ſacrificed oxen and fatlings] i. e. He took order to have them ſacrificed by the Prieſts upon an altar erected for this ſervice. See 1 Chr.15.26. And this he did to teſtifie his thankfulneſſe unto God for bleſſing their beginning and proceeding hitherto, and to move him to continue his favour. See on 1 Sam.9.12.

V. 14. And David danced before the Lord with all his might] Not vainly and carnally; but being excited with inward joy, he expreſſed it by outward geſtures and motions in a grave and ſober manner and meaſure. And it was uſual with Gods ſervants in thoſe times ſo to expreſſe their ſpiritual raviſhments of rejoycing for ſome ſpecial favour received. So Miriam, Exod. 15. 20. and Jepthahs daughter, Judg. 11.34.

And David was girded with a linen Ephod] i. e. An upper garment of linen in faſhion like that of the Prieſts, which he uſed at this time, not only as being more light and fit for motion, but alſo to ſhew his devotion in this religious ſervice. See on 1 *S*am.2.18.

V. 16. ſhe deſpiſed him in her heart] Looking upon David with carnal eyes and a carnal heart, ſhe judged alſo carnally of his holy actions and intentions, and ſo vilified his perſon and deportment.

V. 17 And they brought in the Ark of the Lord and ſet it in his place] To wit, which David had prepared for it before he went to fetch it, 1 Chron.15.1. All which was done by Gods ſpecial inſpiration and direction, that it might continue there till a Temple were built for it; Which being ſhortly to be done, David had now prepared for it, not a permanent building, but a tabernacle or tent. As for the Tabernacle which Moſes made, after their coming into Canaan, it was firſt erected at *S*hiloh, Joſh. 18.1. and there it long continued, 1 *S*am.1.3. & 14.3. After, it was ſeated at Nob, 1 *S*am.21.1. At this time it was at Gibeon, 1 Chron.16.39. where it remained till *S*olomons reign, 2 Chron.1.3.4. & 1 Chro. 21. 29. and then all the holy things were brought from thence, and placed in the Temple, 1 Kin.8.4. *S*ee the Notes there.

V. 18. he bleſſed the people] 1 Chro.16.2. i. e. as a godly King and holy Prophet, he prayed for their peace and proſperity, both ſpiritual and temporal.

V. 19. And he dealt among all the people——to every one a cake of bread, &c.] He doth not only give them his benediction, but bountifully feaſteth them. This he is not ſaid to have done at his Coronation, but now, when he had brought home the Ark; to ſhew that he more rejoyced in Gods coming to him, then in his own coming to the Crown and Kingdom.

V. 20. Then David returned to bleſs his houſhold] i. e. To pray with and for his family, as he had done for the people; as thinking it not enough as a King, to care for the Common-wealth, unleſſe alſo he performed the duty of a good governour in his own houſe.

And Michal the daughter of Saul came out to meet David] Being no longer able to contain the proud ſwelling thoughts of her heart, ſhe haſteth out to eaſe and empty her mind by venting bitter and ſcornful reproaches againſt him. *S*he is called here, the daughter of Saul, becauſe ſhe reſembled her fathers diſpoſition, who was a proud hypocrite, neglecting Gods ſervice when it did not promote his own greatneſſe and glory; contrary to Davids practiſe in this place.

How glorious was the King of Iſrael to day] *S*he ſpeaketh this ironically, by way of deriſion and contempt, implying the contrary, that his carriage was looſe and unbeſeeming ſuch a King as the King of Iſrael. q. d. Thou didſt this day behave thy ſelf as one of the vain and light common people, and not as did become the ſtate and gravity of a King. And it may be ſhe had reſpect not only to his dancing, but alſo to his habit, being clothed like one of the Levites (of whom ſhe had but a mean opinion) in a linen Ephod. *S*ee on Gen.9.21.

who uncovered himſelf in the eyes of the hand-maids] Her meaning may be, either that he laid open his nakedneſſe in his dancing, without any reſpect to his Regal Majeſty, or modeſty, his garments, which hung looſe upon him flying open, and diſcovering ſome bare parts of his legs or thighs. And this is not unlikely to have been her intention, ſeeing ſhe ſetteth it forth as ſpitefully and reproachfully as ſhe could, ſaying, He uncovered himſelf ſhameleſly, as one of the vain fellows, and that in the eyes of the handmaids of his ſervants, who jeered and ſcorned him for it. Or elſe, though no part of his body in truth appeared bare, yet ſhe conceived he expoſed himſelf to be derided as a naked man, whilſt he diſcovered his vanity and lightneſſe to all the beholders, like a fool, that putteth off his clothes, and ſheweth his nakedneſſe, to make others ſport.

V. 21. And David ſaid to Michal, It was before the Lord] i. e. I did thus demean my ſelf in Gods preſence, and to his glory, that by this abaſement to my ſelf, I might ſhew my thankfulneſſe unto him, and the joy of mine heart in doing him ſervice.

which choſe me before thy father, and before all his houſe] Here David ſheweth great ſharpneſſe in his reply, upbraiding Michal with her fathers rejection for his ſins, and the miſeries of the whole family that did follow upon it: but her inſolent reproaches extorted it from him, contrary to his ſweet nature; and the rather, becauſe ſhe caſt upon him theſe diſgraces and ſcorns for ſhewing his zeal for Gods glory, and faithfulneſſe in his ſervice; which in ſome ſort trenched upon God himſelf.

V. 22. And I will yet be more vile then thus] i. e. I am ſo far from repenting of that I have done, that I will be ready ſtill to abaſe my ſelf, when as I may thereby glorifie God.

of them ſhall I be had in honour] i. e. They can loſe no honour that become vile in their own eyes to glorifie God, ſeeing he hath in his hand the hearts of all men, and hath promiſed that he will honour them that honour him, 1 Sam.2.30.

V. 23. Therefore Michal——had no childe] Though ſhe hitherto had no children that we read of, yet ſhe might by Gods bleſſing obtained by Davids prayrs have afterwards become fruitful, Gen.20.17. & 25.21. whereas now ſhe is puniſhed with perpetual barrenneſs for deriding her husband: for ſhe had no child to the day of her death, i. e. ſhe never had any; as this phraſe is taken 1 Sam.15.35. Mat.1.25. Gen.8.7.

CHAP. VII.

Verſe 1. A*Nd it came to paſſe*] Compare this whole Chapter with 1 Chron.17.

when the King ſate in his houſe] To wit, in peace and ſafety.

and the Lord had given him reſt round about from all his enemies] This may be underſtood either of the time preſent, that he then lived in peace when he ſpake and did that which followeth, being not moleſted by any bordering enemies; or, that now he lived in ſuch a peace as was not interrupted by the invaſions of neighbouring nations, as formerly. And from the time of his ſecond victory over the Philiſtims, both they, and all other people round about, were ſo over-awed by his proſperous ſucceſſe that they durſt not make war againſt him; though contrariwiſe he after this fought many battels againſt the Ammonites, Syrians, Moabites and other nations, and obtained many victories. Or it may be underſtood of his quiet poſſeſſion and ſetling of his Kingdom without any oppoſition.

V. 2. That the King ſaid to Nathan the Prophet] No ſooner is he peaceably ſetled in his Kingdom then he taketh care for promoting true Religion; and to this end he ſendeth for Nathan an holy Prophet, to adviſe with him about ſome ſpecial means tending thereunto, as the building of the Temple, and ſetling the Ark in it.

See now, I dwell in an houſe of Cedar, but the Ark of God] q. d. It is a moſt unfitting thing that I ſhould dwel in a more fair, coſtly and ſetled habitation then the Ark of God, the viſible ſign of his glorious preſence. See Hag.1.4. Whileſt the Iſraelites were in the wilderneſſe in a flitting condition, it was fit the publick place of Gods ſervice ſhould not be fixed and permanent, but a Tent or Tabernacle, which might be removed with them: but now they were ſetled in Canaan, David thought it more ſuitable to their preſent eſtate, that the houſe allotted to Gods ſervice ſhould no longer be a moveable Tabernacle, but a ſtanding Temple; eſpecially conſidering that the Lord had promiſed, that when they were come into the land of their inheritance, he would chooſe out a place for them to cauſe his name to dwell there, &c. Deut.12.10,11, 14. And therefore in zeal to Gods glory, he deſireth to build a Temple for his publick worſhip. Yet though he were a wiſe King, yea, and a pious Prophet, he did not in this weighty matter wholly rely upon his own counſel, but before he would attempt any thing, he conſulted with Nathan the Prophet of the Lord about it; by his example teaching Kings and Princes what they ought to do in the like caſe.

dwelleth in curtains] i. e. In a Tabernacle covered with skins and curtains.

V. 3. And Nathan ſaid to the King, Go] This he ſpake as a friend and counſellor, out of his private opinion, and not by revelation from God; which he ſhould have waited for in a matter of ſuch importance, before he gave his ſentence. Hereby it appeareth that the Prophets did not alwayes ſpeak as Prophets, having upon them the ſpirit of prophecy, but ſometimes as private men; as we ſee alſo in the example of Samuel, 1 Sam.16.6. and Eliſha, 2 King.4.27. Yea, ſometimes they ſpake like frail men, unadviſedly and ſinfully, as Moſes Pſal.106.33. and Jeremiah, Jer.20.14. See on Gen.37.9.

Do all that is in thy heart: for the Lord is with thee] i. e. Build an houſe to the Lord, as thou deſireſt: and he that hath moved thee to do it, will proſper thy work.

V. 4. And it came to paſs, that night, that the word of the Lord came to Nathan] God delayed not to bring David out of his errour, both becauſe it proceeded from ſimple ignorance, and out of a good intention; and alſo becauſe, having encourgement from Nathan, he was ſo zealous and ſerious to have his deſire preſently acted; that as ſome probably conjecture, he bound himſelf by a ſolemn vow that he would never be at reſt till he had ſet himſelf upon the accompliſhment of it, Pſal. 132.2,3,4. But others expound that place of his bringing the Ark into that tent which he had pitched for it. Howſoever, God was able to diſpenſe with ſuch an oath as was not agreeable to his will, much more then the father or husband had power to diſannul the vow of his daughter, or wife, Num.30.5,8.

V. 5. Go, and tell my ſervant David,——ſhalt thou build me an houſe for me to dwell in?] i. e. Aſſuredly thou ſhalt not do it. Becauſe God had promiſed he would have ſuch an houſe built when the people were ſetled in the land of Promiſe, Deut.12.10,11. David thought that now the time was come, and that he was the man deſigned to the work: But God by his Prophet telleth him, that though he rightly gueſſed at the thing, yet he was miſtaken in the man who muſt effect it. It was not he, but his ſon, that was appointed to do it. And though his pious intention was very commendable, and God would not only graciouſly accept it, 1 King.8.18. but alſo bountifully reward it, as if he had done it, ver.10,11,&c. yet it was not his pleaſure to uſe him for the effecting of this great and glorious work, for divers reaſons; ſome whereof are here expreſſed, and others to be gathered out of the Books of the Kings and Chronicles. As firſt, Becauſe, being a martial man, he had ſhed much blood. This reaſon God renders unto him, why he would not uſe him in this ſervice, 1 Chro.28.3. not becauſe it was unlawful for him to fight the battels of the Lord, and to ſhed the blood of his enemies; or becauſe, having ſhed it, he was thereby defiled; for this was acceptable and pleaſing to God, as a ſacrifice in which he delighted, Iſa.34.6. Jer.46.10. but the building of the Temple being a type of the ſpiritual building of the Church by Chriſt the Prince of peace, Iſa.9.6. it was fit it ſhould be built by peaceable Solomon, that the ſhadow might be ſuitable to the ſubſtance, 1 Chro.22.9. The ſecond reaſon is rendred by Solomon, 1 King.5.3. Becauſe alſo for the time to come his father David was to have war with the nations about him, not yet ſubdued, and ſo could have no leiſure to go through with ſo great a work as the building of the Temple. The other reaſons given, why God would not have him build it, do follow in the Text.

V. 6. Whereas I have not dwelt in any houſe, ſince the time that I brought up the children of Iſrael out of Egypt] i. e. I have not made choice of any ſtanding permanent houſe, wherein to ſhew my gracious preſence, to this day; but have manifeſted my ſelf in a tabernacle flitting and removing from place to place. Here another reaſon is given why God would not have David build the Temple, taken from himſelf; Becauſe there was yet no need of it: He had dwelt in no houſe ſince their coming out of Egypt, yet all that while he had been preſent with them, as their God, All-ſufficient in himſelf. q. d. There is no preſent haſte or neceſſity of building an houſe for me, who have all this while been content with a tent; and ſo will be ſtill, till my own time be come; and who alſo have been as efficacious by my preſence in a Tabernacle, as in a Temple; and ſo will be ſtill, as long as I pleaſe to make uſe of it.

V. 7. Spake I a word with any of the tribes of Iſrael] Or, any of the Judges, 1 Chron.17.6. i. e. Did I ever complain in the time of the Judges that my houſe was not built? I had a purpoſe it ſhould be done in due time, yet I required not any of them to go about it. Here, though he accepted of Davids zeal and care, yet he ſecretly taxeth him for not waiting his leiſure, and for thinking of undertaking the work, having had no ſpecial command for it, no more then the Judges had in their time.

to feed my people Iſrael] i. e. As faithful ſhepherds, to govern and provide for my people.

V. 8. I took thee from the ſheep-cote, from following the ſheep] 1 Sam. 16.11. Pſal.78.70,71. Here God recounteth his former and future benefits, not to upbraid David with them, or to tax him for ingratitude, and not walking worthy of ſuch high favours; as he afterwards did in the caſe of Uriah, ch.12.7. but that he might not be diſcouraged and doubt of Gods love, as though for want of it his ſervice was rejected in building him a Temple, he telleth him, that as already he had multiplyed many bleſſings upon him, ſo he was ſtill ready to do for the time to come.

V. 9. And I was with thee whitherſoever thou wenteſt] i. e. Proſpered thee by my gracious aſſiſtance in all thy enterpriſes, as in the combat with Goliath, and many battels againſt the Philiſtims. So ch. 8.6.14.

and have cut off all thine enemies] Saul, Doeg, the Philiſtims, and all the reſt.

and have made thee a great name] i. e I have made thee famous and formidable among all the nations round about thee.

like unto the name of the great men which are in the earth] i. e. The great Princes and Potentates of other nations.

V. 10. Moreover, I will appoint a place for my people Iſrael,&c.] He breaketh off from recounting the bleſſings he had conferred upon David, and inſerteth a promiſe of what good things he was purpoſed to do to the whole Nation under his government, for his greater comfort and encouragement; becauſe the happineſſe of a King doth much conſiſt in the happineſs and proſperity of his people.

and will plant them] i. e. Eſtabliſh and ſettle them in their own land allotted unto them. Theſe promiſes, though in part fulfilled in Davids and Solomons reign, yet were to have their full accompliſhment in the ſpiritual Kingdom of the Meſſiah. Neither muſt this promiſe be underſtood of their bare habitation in the land of Canaan, ſeeing they had dwelt in it ever ſince the time of Joſhua; but of their peaceable and quiet poſſeſſion thereof, which had been often interrupted and diſturbed, not only of old in the time of the Judges, when their enemies prevailed againſt them, but of late alſo in Sauls time, by the incurſions and invaſions of the Philiſtims.

and move no more] i. e. They ſhall no more as in former times, be tumbled and toſſed up and down, and be compelled to fly out of their Cities and habitations, and leave them for their enemies to dwell in: 1 Sam.31.7.

Neither ſhall the children of wickedneſs afflict them any more, as before time] i. e. Howſoever their malicious enemies may make ſome attempts againſt them, yet they ſhall not ſo far prevail as to lay upon them ſuch grievous preſſures as they have formerly endured. Now all this is to be underſtood, not abſolutely, but upon condition of their continuing in obedience, and in the pure ſervice of God, Jer.18.9. 2 King. 8.12. 1 Chron.22.12,13. For when afterwards they fell to idolatry, God gave them over to be afflicted by the Aſſyrians, Egyptians and Caldeans, by which laſt they were conquered and led into captivity.

V. 11. And as ſince the time that I commanded Judges to be over my people Iſrael, and have cauſed thee to reſt from all thine enemies] i e. As they have been often afflicted in the dayes of the Judges, and even unto the time of thy reign: But now I have given thee and them full victory over all your enemies.

Alſo the Lord telleth thee that he will make thee an houſe] i. e. Eſtabliſh thy Kingdom in thy poſterity from one generation to another, until it be fully and perfectly eſtabliſhed in the Meſſiah that ſhall come out of thy loyns; hereby graciouſly rewarding thy pious intention to build him an houſe. See Exod.1.21. & 1 King.2.24.

V. 12. I will ſet up thy ſeed after thee that ſhall proceed out of thy bowels] i. e. Solomon, and the Meſſiah prefigured by him: both which be reſpected in the following promiſes, ſome whereof are peculiar to Solomon, others peculiar to Chriſt, and ſome belonging to them both, as the type and antitype.

V. 13. He ſhall build an houſe for my name] i e. For the advancement of my glory in the means of my publick worſhip and ſervice to be performed in the Temple, according to Deut.12.11. This is literally to be underſtood of Solomon: For he it was who was appointed to build the Temple. David only prepared materials, and left the pattern to his ſon which he had received from God, but had no hand in the building, 1 Chron.22.14. & 28.11. It was Solomon only that did both begin and finiſh it, 1 King.5.1,5. & 6.14. But this is to be underſtood ſpiritually of Chriſt, who was to build, to the glory of Gods name, a ſpiritual and everlaſting houſe, that is, his Church, of which the Temple was but a type, Luk.1.32,33. 1 Pet.2.5.

And I will eſtabliſh the throne of his Kingdome for ever] This is proper and peculiar to Chriſts Kingdom alone, and cannot be underſtood of Solomons, ſeeing the Kingdom was only continued to Zedekiah in Solomons poſterity.

V. 14. I will be his father, and he ſhall be my ſon] This belonged both to Solomon and Chriſt, Solomon was Gods ſon by grace and adoption, Chriſt, by nature and eternal generation, and ſo his only begotten ſonne, John 1. 18. Pſalm 2. 7. Acts 13. 33. 1 John 4. 9. Heb. 1. 5.

If I commit iniquity] This is to be underſtood of Solomon, not of Chriſt. For though our ſins were imputed unto him, and he ſuffered and ſatisfied for them; in which regard the Prophet ſaith, He was wounded for our tranſgreſſions, Iſa.53.5. and the Apoſtle, He was made ſin for us, 2 Cor.5.21. yet he himſelf did not commit any iniquity or ſin, neither was there any guilt found in his mouth, Iſa. 53. 9. 1 Pet. 2. 22. & 1. 19.

I will chaſten him with the rod of men] So Pſal.89.30,31,32. i. e. Either by temporal corrections, uſing men as rods and inſtruments: ſo he corrected Solomon in the latter end of his reign, when he fell to idolatry, 1 King.11.9,14,23,26. and the people of Iſrael, Iſa.10.5. Or elſe the meaning is, that he would correct him for his ſins as a loving father his beloved ſon, with fatherly chaſtiſements for his amendment, and not in wrath to his perdition. For as when he ſpeaketh of his deſtroying puniſhments inflicted on his enemies, he ſaith, he will not meet them as a man, but as a God, who is a conſuming fire, Hebr 12. 29. Iſa. 33.14. ſo when he ſaith he will correct them as a loving father, he thus expreſſeth it, that he will draw them unto him with the cords of men, and with the ſtripes of the children of men, i. e. not in rigour, but with a gentle and fatherly hand, with much pity and moderation, Jer. 30.11.

V. 15. But my mercy ſhall not depart away from him, as I took it from Saul] i. e. I will not quite caſt him out of my favour, and deprive him of his Kingdom, as I did Saul. Neither can this be underſtood of Gods eternal love, wherewith he loveth his elect; Seeing Saul had never any intereſt therein: for thoſe whom God loveth, he loveth to the end, Joh.13.1.

V. 16. And thine houſe, and thy Kingdom ſhall be eſtabliſhed for ever before thee] i. e. I will begin thy Kingdom in thine own dayes, in thy ſelf, and in Solomon thy ſon in thine own ſight, 1 King.1.48. to aſſure thee it ſhall be continued in thy poſterity for a long time, and be eſtabliſhed for ever, and compleatly accompliſhed in Chriſt, who ſhall deſcend of thee. If this be applyed to Solomon, then we are to underſtand the words for ever, of a long time; namely, that David ſhould enjoy the Kingdom himſelf to his death, and before his departure ſee it ſetled upon Solomon in reſpect of title and right, and that it ſhould ſo continue in his poſterity, till the Scepter departed from Judah, Gen.49.10. before the coming of Shiloh, or Chriſt, in whom it was to be eſtabliſhed for ever. But how can Chriſts Kingdom be ſaid to be eſtabliſhed for ever, ſeeing the Apoſtle ſaith, that at the end of the world, after the laſt judgement, Chriſt ſhall deliver up his Kingdom to his Father, 1 Cor.15.24. I anſwer, that is to be underſtood of his Oeconomical Kingdom committed unto him as Meſſiah and Mediator, which he exerciſeth in ſubduing his and the Churches enemies, in making interceſſion for his choſen ones, given him out of the world, and perfecting his members and myſtical body. For when all things are done and finiſhed, there ſhall be no uſe of that Kingdom in reſpect of this adminiſtration, and therefore it ſhall ceaſe, though the effect and fruit of it ſhall never have end: But then Chriſt, as he is God and Man, ſhall reign for ever with his Father, and even in his humane nature everlaſtingly enjoy that glory and Majeſty which by virtue of the hypoſtatical union of the two Natures belongeth unto it; though that outward adminiſtration of the Mediatorſhip ſhall ceaſe.

V. 17. According to all theſe words, and according to all this viſion, ſo did Nathan ſpeak to David] i.e. He made a true and faithful relation of all God commanded him to ſpeak, though it were to his own diſparagement, being contrary to the advice he had before privatly given. And herein he carried himſelf piouſly and prudently. For as it is the firſt point of wiſdom ſo to ſpeak as to have no cauſe to repent afterwards of what we have ſpoken, ſo it is the ſecond point, when we have ſpoken amiſs to retract and revoke it; As Auſtine excellently ſaith in excuſe of his own practiſe. Neither doth David upbraid Nathan, as though he had not carried himſelf as the Lords Prophet herein, ſaying, and unſaying what he had formerly ſaid. Thus Iſaiah, having denounced the ſentence of death upon Hezekiah, afterwards, being appointed by God, revoketh it, and promiſeth that his life ſhould be prolonged fifteen years. But Jonah, who out of Pride and ſelf-ſeeking neglected to deliver the meſſage which God had put in his mouth, is juſtly taxed and condemned for it. But ſeeing David himſelf was a Prophet, why did not God immediately inform him what he was to do in this great buſineſſe, but uſeth the Miniſtery of Nathan to teach and inſtruct him? I anſwer, Though there were no reaſon hereof to be given but his own good pleaſure, that alone were ſufficient: But beſides, we muſt conſider that God looketh upon us as members of the ſame myſtical body, who are linked together in love and ſervice, and need mutual help: And as every member hath its imployment, ſo it tendeth to the increaſing of love and affection, and to the common good of the whole. So it is in the body natural; All its members, as the eye, ear, hand, foot, perform mutual ſervice to one another; and hereby the whole body is preſerved, 1 Cor. 12.16,21.

V. 18. Then went King David in, and ſate before the Lord] To wit, in the tent before the Ark, that he might poure forth his ſoul in holy ſoliloquies and meditations. Here it is ſaid that he ſate, not in reſpect of the poſture of his body, but becauſe he there remained and continued to perform this devout ſervice. So the word is often taken, as Gen 27. 44. Lev.14 8. 1 Sam.1.22. & 20.19. Yet is it not ſimply unlawful to uſe this poſture of Sitting in prayer and meditation. For the Lord having no where tyed us to any geſture of body, but only requiring a fit diſpoſition of ſoul, and that we ſhould call upon him with humble hearts, with contrite and broken ſpirits, and in ſincerity and truth, the Saints have taken liberty, and prayed unto God in all poſtures, as Lying in bed, Walking, Standing, and Sitting, as we ſee in the example of Moſes, Exod.17.12. and Elijah, 1 King.19.4. Notwithſtanding the geſture of Kneeling, and Proſtrating of the body in time of deeper humiliation, being fitteſt to expreſſe the diſpoſition of an humble ſoul, are ſometimes required, and moſt commonly practiſed by Gods Saints and ſervants, Pſal.95.6. 1 King.8.54. And ſo it is probably thought David did in this place; firſt ſat, whileſt he meditated on Gods grace and goodneſs towards him, and afterwards kneeled, when he addreſſed himſelf to God by prayer.

Who am I, O Lord God, and what is my houſe, that thou haſt brought me hitherto?] i.e. How baſe and unworthy am I, and all my parentage and family, that I ſhould be ſo highly advanced as I am already out of thy meer grace and undeſerved favour?

V. 19. Thou haſt ſpoken alſo of thy ſervants houſe for a great while to come] i.e. Thou haſt promiſed alſo to continue thy favour, not only to me, but alſo to my poſterity after me for many generations.

and is this the manner of man, O Lord God?] q. d. How admirable is this grace and goodneſſe which thou extendeſt towards me, and how far above not only the practiſe of men to act, but even their underſtanding to conceive, that thou ſhouldſt ſhew ſuch favour above all deſert! And therefore, ſeeing this is peculiar to thy ſelf alone, to thee only be the praiſe. Or thus; Do men deal ſo freely and familiarly with their mean inferiours as thou haſt done to me? Surely no: ſuch incomprehenſible love is not to be found among mortal men. So Pſal.8.3. Into this extaſie of admiration David is chiefly brought by Gods promiſe of perpetuating his Kingdom in Chriſt, which ſhould come out of his loins, as the Apoſtle applieth it, Heb.2.5.

V. 20. And what can David ſay more unto thee? for thou, Lord God, knoweſt thy ſervant] i.e. Either, What can I ask more of thee then thou of thy free grace haſt already promiſed? at which ſenſe that place 1 Chro.17.18. ſeemeth to aim, What can David ſpeak more to thee for the honour of thy ſervant? Or thus, What need have I to uſe many words to amplifie thy goodneſs, and expreſs my thankfulneſs, ſeeing thou knoweſt my heart, how real I am in this duty?

V. 21. For thy words ſake, and according to thine own heart, haſt thou done all theſe great things] i.e. Not for any deſert of mine, but for thy truth and promiſe ſake, and of thy meer grace and love, haſt thou conferred all theſe benefits upon me. Or, as ſome take it, for thy Chriſts ſake, who is thy eternal Word, and thy meer grace, and free good will.

to make thy ſervant know them] i.e. To acknowledge thy benefits with all thankfulneſs, both which thou haſt conferred and wilt confer upon thy ſervant in time to come.

V. 22. according to all that we have heard with our ears] i.e. According to all that by thy Word thou haſte made known unto us.

V. 23. And what one nation in the earth is like thy people] i.e. So advanced in high and holy priviledges, Deut. 4. 7,34.

whom God went to redeem for a people to himſelf] i.e Came as it were down from heaven to manifeſt his power in redeeming them, Exod. 3. 7, 8. This was the work of the whole Trinity in the unity of the Godhead; and therefore the word God Elohim and the verb went are both in the plural number; yet Davids ſpeech is directed to one God alone, before thy people which thou redeemedſt, and, Thou, Lord, art become their God. Here God, who is omni-preſent, is ſaid to have come to redeem his people, God went to redeem. This is uſually ſpoken of God when he applyeth himſelf to do any great or ſtrong action, though he is preſent in all places at all times.

and to make him a name] i.e. Either to make his people renowned and famous among all Nations, as it is expounded, 1 Chro.17.21. Or, to magnifie his own glory by his great works, according to Num.14.21. All the earth ſhall be filled with the glory of the Lord. Iſa.63.14. So didſt thou lead thy people to make thy ſelf a glorious name.

and to do for you great things and terrible] Not only in their deliverance out of Egypt, but alſo in ſubduing their enemies in the land of Canaan; which are therefore joyned together, 1 Chro.17.21. Here David uſeth an apoſtrophe, converting his ſpeech abruptly from God to the people of Iſrael, and to do for you. And in the next words again he converteth his ſpeech to God, for thy land, before thy people. So in his mourning ſong for Saul and Jonathan by the like apoſtrophe he turneth his ſpeech to the people, O noble Iſrael, he is ſlain upon thy high places, as ſome read it ch.1.19.

from the nations, and their gods] From all nations that fought againſt them, and from their idols in whom they truſted.

V. 24. For thou haſt confirmed to thy ſelf thy people Iſrael, to be a people unto thee for ever] i.e. The natural Iſrael for a long time, even to the coming of Chriſt; but the ſpiritual Iſrael, conſiſting both of Jews and Gentiles for ever. And hereof he aſſigneth no other cauſe but Gods free election, Gen.17.7.

V. 25. And now, O Lord God, the word that thou haſt ſpoken,—— eſtabliſh it for ever] Though David having Gods infallible promiſe; was aſſured he would be as good as his word, yet he earneſtly prayeth he would fulfil it. Gods promiſes muſt not make us neglect the means, but be the more diligent in the uſe of them, having a good ground to make our prayers with more firm confidence to be heard. This our Saviour alſo hath taught us by his example, praying that the Father would glorifie his Son, though he were moſt aſſured of his glorification, John 17.5.

V.26. And let the houſe of thy ſervant David be eſtabliſhed before thee] Here David repeateth in his prayer what he had ſaid before, yet not in that vain manner which Chriſt condemneth Matth.6.7. but being raviſh'd with joy by the ſweet apprehenſion of Gods gracious promiſes made unto him and his poſterity, he thought he could not ſufficiently expreſſe his affection, and ſo in the fervency of his devotion repeateth the ſame things again and again. So our Saviour Chriſt himſelf in his bitter agony is ſaid to have prayed the third time, ſaying the ſame words, to ſhew his earneſtneſſe, Matthew 26. 44. and Luke 22.44.

V. 27. haſt revealed to thy ſervant] Heb. opened the ear, i.e. Haſt made him clearly know: See 1 Sam.9.15.

I will build thee an houſe] i.e. Continue the Kingdom to thee and thy poſterity after thee.

hath thy ſervant found in his heart] i.e. Hath found his heart thus diſpoſed to call upon thee, having thy promiſe as a ſure ground of his faith and prayer. So Pſalme 116. 10. See on Eccleſ. 5. 2.

V. 28. Thy words be true] Joh.17.17. i.e. There can be no doubt of obtaining my ſuit, ſeeing I have thy promiſe, who art true of thy word, and powerful to perform it.

V. 29. For thou, O Lord God, haſt ſpoken it] Therefore I firmly believe it ſhall come to paſſe.

let the houſe of thy ſervant be bleſſed for ever] i.e. Both now in my temporal Kingdom, and to all eternity in the ſpiritual Kingdom of the Meſſiah, which thou haſt promiſed ſhall deſcend of me.

CHAP. VIII.

Verſ. 1. AND after this it came to paſs that David ſmote the Philiſtims, and ſubdued them] Compare this whole Chapter with 1 Chron. 18. In this and the following Chapters a reaſon is rendred why God would not ſuffer David to build his Temple, namely, becauſe he had no leiſure, being by the Lords will imployed in Wars. And withal in the following ſtory is ſhewen how God accompliſhed his gracious promiſe made in the former Chapter concerning the eſtabliſhment of Davids Kingdom in all proſperity, and the confluence of all bleſſings, to the joy of himſelf and all his people.

And David took Metheg-Ammah out of the hands of the Philiſtims] This was the third war againſt the Philiſtims after he was anointed King over all Iſrael: In which, having vanquiſhed them, he took from them this Metheg-Ammah, i.e. Gath, a chief city of theirs, as appeareth 1 Chron. 18.1. and all the ſmall towns under its juriſdiction. Now Gath was called Metheg Ammah becauſe it was ſituate on a hill or mountainous tract of ground, & as a Bridle by its great ſtrength reſtrained enemies from invading the country adjoyning, & alſo gave laws to al the leſſer towns about it, whereby they were governed and kept in aw and order. It was afterwads called Dio-Cæſarea. And it was ſeated on the frontiers of Paleſtine, at the entrance into the tribes of Judah and Ephraim. This city of ſtrength David ſurprizeth and holdeth, that thenceforth it might as a Bridle reſtrain the Philiſtims from invading the land of Canaan.

V. 2. And he ſmote Moab] At the coming of the Iſraelites out of the wilderneſs they were forbidden by God to invade the Moabites land, or do them any hurt, becauſe he had given it to the children of Lot for a poſſeſſion, Deut. 2. 9. But now David maketh war againſt them; for what cauſe, and upon what occaſion, it doth not clearly appear. The Hebrews think it was becauſe David having, in the time of Sauls perſecution, left his father and mother under their Kings protection, they treacherouſly murdered them after he was departed from them. But for this we have no good ground in Scripture, why we ſhould believe it. It is rather thought that God at firſt reſtrained his people from diſtreſſing them, becauſe they had then done them no wrong. But afterwards they proved malicious enemies, and thereupon were interdicted from coming into the congregation unto the tenth generation, Deut. 23. 3. They ſhewed their malice, in hireing Balaam to curſe Iſrael; and when that would not take, in following his curſed counſel, tempting them by their women to commit both corporal and ſpiritual whoredom, whereby a great plague was brought upon them; alſo in not relieving them with bread in their neceſſity; and in cruel tyrannizing and oppreſſing them by Eglon their King, in the time of the Judges: For all which wrongs David had juſt cauſe to make war againſt them, they ſtill continuing in their former enmity; though the end of his war was not to diſpoſſeſſe them of their country, but onely to make them tributaries, and thereby to revenge the injuries they had offered Gods people.

and meaſured them with a line, caſting them down to the ground] i. e. He vanquiſhed them, and brought them into abſolute ſubjection and ſervitude, uſing them at his own pleaſure, to kill and keep alive whom he would, and, as conquerors uſe to do, dividing their land as he thought good. This is metaphorically expreſſed by a ſimilitude taken from thoſe who meaſured land by line, or from a Carpenter, that ſtrikes with a line, the timber he intendeth to uſe in his building, and then cutteth off what he thinks unneceſſary and ſuperfluous. So David having ſubdued the Moabites by an abſolute conqueſt, uſed them at his pleaſure, levelling their cities and towns with the ground, and laying all open and flat before him, to be meaſured as it were with a line, and ſo to be divided and diſpoſed of like a new plantation; as Joſhua did the land of Canaan, which he divided by lot among the Iſraelites. Others thinking the hiſtoricall and plain ſenſe beſt when there is no need of metaphors and allegories, do take the words here literally, that David did indeed meaſure the Moabites country with a line, allotting two thirds of the lands and cities, with all the inhabitants to ruine, ſlaughter and deſtruction; and reſerving one third part of the land for a new plantation, and a third part alſo of the people alive, to inhabit it, as his tributaries. For though God at firſt appointed his people to ſpare them, yet they becoming malicious enemies, David exerciſeth upon them this hoſtile ſeverity.

V. 3. David ſmote alſo Hadadezer] Called Hadarezer 1 Chr. 18. 3. See on 1 Kings 15. 18.

the ſon of Rehob] Who reigned in that part of Syria called Beth-Rehob after his name, ch. 10. 6.

King of Zobah] A large country in Syria beyond Taurus, between the two Armenians, inhabited by a people called Sopheny, as Joſephus reporteth. Againſt theſe Saul formerly had made war with good ſucceſſe, 1 Sam. 14. 47. But now they being grown again to great ſtrength, David taketh notice of it, and maketh war againſt them, knowing how dangerous it was that the Syrians and their King, who were profeſſed enemies to the Iſraelites, and dwelled ſo near them, ſhould grow powerfull and puiſſant.

as he went to recover his border at the river Euphrates] i. e. As ſome underſtand it, when David went to enlarge and ſettle his dominion in thoſe utmoſt limits which God had ſet his people, even at the river Euphrates, Joſh. 1. 4. Deut. 1. 7. & 11. 24. Others very probably underſtand it of Hadad-ezer, that when he went to eſtabliſh his dominion towards Euphrates, and muſt needs paſſe through part of Davids country, or neer it, which could not be without danger, in reſpect of the enmity between the nations, David raiſed forces, and ſent them under the conduct of Joab and Abiſhai, to fight with him and hinder his paſſage; as appeareth in the title of the 60. Pſalm. This is the more likely, becauſe it is ſaid 1 Chr. 18. 3. that the end of this expedition was to eſtabliſh his dominions; which may well be underſtood of Hadadezer, that had reigned there; but not ſo well of David, the bounds of whoſe kingdom did not as yet extend ſo far.

V. 4. ſeven hundred horſemen] i. e. Seven hundred decuries or ranks of horſemen, ten going to a rank; which make up that full number of ſeven thouſand mentioned 1 Chr. 18. 4. See the like expreſſion ch. 10. 18.

and David haughed all the chariots-horſes] And ſo made them uncerviceable for war, though they might be of uſe for other employments. He reſerved only enough for an hundred chariots, four horſes going to one chariot, 1 Kings 10. 29. And herein he had reſpect to Gods commandments Deut. 17. 16. forbidding the Kings of Iſrael to multiply horſes to themſelves, leſt leaving their truſt in God they ſhould place confidence in their own ſtrength and warlike preparations. This alſo was put in execution by Joſhua at Gods command, Joſh. 11. 6. David here reſerved out of a thouſand an hundred only for his own uſe, a number not exceeding the neceſſary occaſions of a King.

V. 5. of Damaſcus] The metropolis and chief city of Syria.

V. 6. brought gifts] i. e. Paid him tribute, by way of homage.

preſerved David] i. e. Proſpered his attempts, and gave him victory over his enemies.

V. 7. and brought them to Jeruſalem] Conſecrating them unto God, v. 12. Which ſheweth that he did not make theſe wars out of covetouſneſſe, to enrich himſelf, but that chiefly therein he aimed at Gods glory, ſeeing he devoted his ſpoils to the building and beautifying of his Temple.

V. 8. And from Betah, and from Berothai] Called Tibhath and Chun 1 Chr. 18. 8. Either they had double names, or their old names were changed upon ſome occaſion when that hiſtory was written. Ptolemie calleth them Tanba and Barathena.

V. 9. when Toi King of Hamath] Called Tou 1 Chron. 18. 9. See Num. 13. 21. Hamath was a City of Syria, as ſome think, Antioch. See on Iſa. 10. 9. and on Amos 6. 2.

V. 10. Then Toi ſent Joram] Named Adoram 1 Chr. 18. 10.

to ſalute him] Heb. to ask him of peace. i. e. To underſtand of his welfare, and congratulate his victory, Gen. 43. 27.

V. 11. Which alſo King David did dedicate unto the Lord] i. e. Having received this congratulatory Preſent from Toi, he conſecrated it alſo unto God for the building of his Temple. And herein he was a type of Chriſt, who having vanquiſhed Satan and the world, conſecrated the ſpoils of his conqueſts to Gods glory and the building and adorning of the Church, converting and making ſome who had been ſlaves of Satan veſſels of grace and his faithful Apoſtles and teachers, and cauſing thoſe precious arts which had been abuſed formerly to the advancing of Satans Kingdom, to be of ſpecial uſe for his Church.

V. 13. And David gat him a name when he returned] i. e. By his many victories he became renowned for a great warriour and famous conqueror, having all his expeditions and enterprizes crowned with proſperous ſucceſſe; but eſpecially he grew famous by this his ſubduing the Syrians: In which ſervice Abiſhai was his chief Commander under Joab. Compare 1 Chron. 18. 12. with the title of the 60 Pſalm.

From ſmiting the Syrians in the valley of Salt] Situate on the Eaſt-end of Mount Seir, without Syria, on the South of the Dead Sea, 2 King. 14. 7. Here David, in the return of his army, did by his Commanders Abiſhai and Joab obtain another famous victory, in which were ſlain eighteen thouſand of his enemies. Now whereas it is ſaid that he ſmote of Edom in the valley of Salt twelve thouſand, in the title of the 60 Pſalm, and 1 Chr. 18. 12 and here they are ſaid to be eighteen thouſand, and called Syrians, it is to be conceived that theſe two nations of Edom and Syria joyned together in this expedition. And whereas it is ſaid 1 Chr. 18. 12. that Abiſhai ſlew theſe enemies, and in the 60 Pſalm this victory is aſcribed to Joab; and whereas in the Pſalm it is ſaid that Joab ſlew but twelve thouſand, and here and 1 Chr. 18. 11. alſo are mentioned eighteen thouſand, it is thus to be underſtood; That Joab got this victory by Abiſhai, who was under his command, and in the beginning of the fight ſlew ſix thouſand and then Joab coming in with the whole body of the army ſlew twelve thouſand more, in all eighteen thouſand; which full number in the Chronicles are ſaid to have been ſlain by Abiſhai, becauſe he with that part of the army under his command began the battel and made way for a full victory by routing the ranks of the enemy. Now the victory is aſcribed to David, becauſe both Joab and Abiſhai were but his agents and inſtruments, and he their King and ſupream Lord. Thus three ſeeming differences concerning the perſons that got this victory, the people ſlain, and the number of them may be reconciled. See on the title of Pſal. 60.

V. 14. And he put garriſons in Edom] i. e. Having conquered them, he placed garriſons in all their ſtrong holds, to keep them ſtill under ſubjection and tribute, placing over them a Viceroy, to govern them as his Deputy; which continued unto Jorams time, 1 Kings 22. 47. and 2 King. 8. 22. And thus that prophecy Gen. 25. 23. that the elder ſhould ſerve the younger, was fulfilled; even as that other, Gen. 47. 40. that Eſaus poſterity ſhould break the yoke from off his neck, was accompliſhed in the dayes of Joram.

V. 15. And David executed judgement and juſtice] By which his throne was eſtabliſhed, Jer. 22. 15. Prov. 14. 34.

V. 16. was over the hoſt] i. e. General of the army. To this honour he was preferred for his taking from the Jebuſites the ſtrong Fort of Zion, 1 Chr. 11. 6.

V. 16. Recorder] Or, remembrancer; or writer of Chronicles and records; or, as it is with us, Maſter of the Court of requeſts, to take notice of and prefer the ſuits of the ſubjects.

V. 17. And Zadok the ſon of Ahitub, and Abimelech the ſon of Abiathar, were the Prieſts] i. e. Zadok, who deſcended of Eleazar, 1 Chr. 6. 4, 8. and Ahimelech who was of Ithamar, were chief Prieſts in Davids time. Not that there were then two high Prieſts; for that would have been contrary to Gods law, (which appointed only one, that he might be a type of Chriſt our alone high Prieſt) and therefore would not have been permitted by holy David, as it was afterwards under the corrupt government of Pilate and Herode, when there were two at once, Annas and Caiaphas; but theſe were two chief Prieſts of ſeveral families, having command over the reſt of the Prieſts of thoſe families, according to that diviſion which David made 1 Chron. 14. 3, 4. to compound a controverſie between them contending about the Prieſthood. But now Abiathar only was the high Prieſt, who fled from Saul to

David

1 Sam. 22. 20. and ſo continued till Solomons time; when for his ſiding with Adonijah he was depoſed, and Zadok put in his place, 1 King. 26. 27, 35. Some think that the father and the ſon had double names, and the one and the other were called both Abimelech and Abiathar; and ſo promiſcuouſly Ahimelech is ſaid to be the father of Abiathar, 1 Sam. 22. 20. and 23. 6. and Abiathar the father of Ahimelech, as here. See Mark. 2. 26.

and Seraiah] He is called Shevа, ch. 20. 25. and Shavſha, 1 chron. 18. 19.

the Scribe] Or, Secretary.

V. 18. And Benajah the ſon of Jehojada was over both the Cherthites and the Pelethites] Theſe were old, expert, ſtrong and valiant men, like the Pretorian Souldiers among the Romanes: And theſe David choſe for his guard, and made Benajah captain over them. See 1 King. 1. 38. This plainly appeareth ch. 15. 18. and 20. 7. 1 King. 1. 38, 44. But why they were thus called, and whence they were, is not ſo eaſie to determine. Some think the Cherethites had their name from the Hebrew word Charath ſignifying to be cut off, becauſe at the Kings command they executed offenders; and the Pelethites theirs, from the word Palat, which ſignifieth either to defend; or ſuch as were excellent becauſe they were excellent men that defended the Kings perſon. But others more probably think they had theſe names rather from their countries then from their office; and that the Cherethites were ſuch ſouldiers of the Iſraelites as were put in garriſon into the towns and Cities of the Cherethims in the country of the Philiſtims, after David had ſubdued them, when dwelling at Ziklag he made inroads into their country, 1 Sam. 30. 14. Ezek. 25. 16. Zeph. 2. 4, 5. and that the Pelethites were alſo garriſon-Souldiers living among the Japhlethites in the lot of Joſeph, Joſh. 16. 3. and that from theſe being valiant and expert Souldiers, the King choſe his guard to attend his perſon. Yet did not all o them, and at all times, live at Court, but only gave their attendance by courſe upon the King, as may be gathered, ch. 15. 18. and were alſo uſed as garriſon-Souldiers in warlike expeditions and emploiments for the defence of the land.

And Davids ſons were chief rulers] Or, Princes; or, as it is 1 Chr. 18. 17. were chief about the King. The which policy or paternal affection in David was not crowned with good ſucceſſe, two of his ſons at leaſt, Abſalom and Adonijah, having their ſpirits ſo raiſed by theſe preferments that they ambitiouſly affected Sovereignty, and one of them ſo ang'ed the hearts of the people by caſting before them the baits of his favours, that being impatient of any delay, he would needs preſently uſurp the Kingdom, though he could no otherwiſe ſtep into the throne then by making his father his footſtool, nor obtain his deſire by any other means then by his fathers utter ruine.

CHAP. IX.

V. 1. AND David ſaid] i. e. Enquired of his ſervants.

Is there yet any that is left of the houſe of Saul] i. e. Is there any remaining of that family which are fit objects of my love and kindneſs, for otherwiſe he could not but know that divers of them were ſtill alive.

that I may ſhew him kindneſſe for Jonathans ſake] Now David calleth to mind the great love which had been between him and Jonathan, and the covenant of the Lord, contracted in his preſence, and confirmed by ſolemn oath, that he would ſhew kindneſſe to him and his poſterity after him, 1 Sam. 18. 3. and 20 14, 15. And indeed a great wonder it is to me that being a man of ſuch piety and morality, he had thought all this while of that incomparable love which his dear Jonathan had alwaies ſhewed him, and the manifold fruits of his favour received, which had concerned him as much as the preſervation of his life; all which he was bound to requite not only by Covenant, but even common humanity. But David is not only excuſed, becauſe till this time, being buſied in ſetling his Kingdome at home, and ſubduing his enemies abroad, he had had no leiſure to think of private affaires, but he is alſo highly commended, in that being ſetled in his Kingdom, he doth now at laſt think of recompenſing Jonathans love. But, ſaving other mens better judgements, and alwaies reſerving a moſt honourable and deſerved reſpect to holy David for his true worth and incomparable goodneſſe, piety and juſtice, I do impute it unto him as one of the chief errors of his life, that he did not onely not anſwer Jonathan in his love before this time; but afterwards failed not only in friendſhip but alſo in juſtice in his carriage towards poor Mephiboſheth the only ſon of his deareſt Jonathan. And the beſt I can ſay in excuſe of his fault, is, that he was a King and ſo ſubject to Kingly errours, that is, jealouſies and ſuſpicions in things concerning the Crown and Kingdom. For Iſhboſheth Sauls Son; and it is very likely, with him, all that family ſiding in that cauſe, had raiſed war againſt David, pretending a right to the Crown by lineal deſcent, and impleading his title to it, which God himſelf had given him: And in that reſpect David might think all Jonathans favours ſufficiently recompenſed if this rebellion were pardoned. And beſides, ſome old reliques of former jealouſies ſtill remained, of their plotting to revive their title to the Crown, as appeareth by his eaſineſſe and readineſſe to hearken to the falſe and fooliſh calumnies of treacherous Ziba, and by his being ſo forward in paſſing that unjuſt ſentence of dividing the land between him and his maſter, leſt poor Mephiboſheth, holding the intire intereſt to Sauls lands, might in time grow too great in wealth and in the favour of the common people, who are apt to miſlike the preſent government though never ſo good and juſt, and ſo aſpire to the Crown. Theſe I conceive were the chief cauſes why David ſo long delayed to think efficaciouſly of Jonathans poſterity, to do them good, and in them to requite his kindneſſe towards him. For Mephiboſheth was but five years old when his father was ſlain, ch. 4. 4. and at this time he was married, and had a ſon, v. 12. Whereby it appeareth that this kindneſſe was long deferred, and it is likely had not yet been thought on, had not David now been ſecurely ſetled in his Kingdom, and ſo wholly freed from fears and jealouſies.

V. 2. And there was of the houſe of Saul a ſervant, whoſe name was Ziba] Hence ſome probably gather that Ziba was a Canaanite, or a ſtranger of ſome other nation, ſeeing the Iſraelites were to ſerve only for ſeven years, unleſſe they would ſerve longer; and then, if they preferred bondage before liberty, their eares were to be nailed to the door-poſt, and they to remain ſervants for ever, Exod. 21. 6. Now Ziba had been ſervant to Saul, and ſo ſtill continued in that condition; although it ſeemeth he was not an ordinary ſervant, but in ſome ſpecial place of credit and employment, ſeeing he himſelf had twenty ſervants belonging to him, v. 10.

V. 3. That I may ſhew the kindneſſe of God unto him] i. e. Either great kindneſſe, as the phraſe is uſed; or, ſuch kindneſſe as I am bound to ſhew by virtue of that covenant which I contracted in the preſence of God with Jonathan; or, ſuch kindneſſe as the Lord uſeth to ſhew to the fatherleſſe and diſtreſſed, whoſe example we ought to imitate. And thus he expreſſeth himſelf that he might not conceal it, if he knew any ſuch, as fearing that he thus earneſtly enquired after them out of ſome intention to do them hurt.

V. 4. Behold, he is in the houſe of Machir the ſon of Ammiel, in Lodebar] This Machir, as it ſeemeth was a potent man of the tribe of Manaſſeh, Num. 26. 29, and 32. 39. Lodebar was a town in Gilead, on the other ſide Jordan, not far from Mahanaim, ch. 17. 27. where Iſhboſheth had reigned. Hither Mephiboſheth was brought, and had committed himſelf to the care and truſt of Machir for his better ſafety and ſecurity; and here he lived, as it ſeemeth, privately and ſecretly, as thinking perhaps there was ſome danger, in reſpect of the preſent time and ſtate, to be known to be one of Sauls poſterity.

V. 5. Then King David ſent, and fet him] i. e. Cauſed him to be brought unto him by his meſſengers whom he employed.

V. 6. Now when Mephiboſheth] He is called Meribbaal 1 Chr. 8. 34 which ſome think was his proper name, and Mephiboſheth his ſirname, given him becauſe of ſome deformity in his face or body.

was come unto David, he fell on his face] Uſing it is likely, this adoration and awful reverence out of fear that David, who had power in his hand to uſe him as he pleaſed, had ſent for him, intending him ſome evil. Which David perceiving, ſpeaketh comfortably unto him, and promiſeth to ſhew him kindneſſe.

V. 7. and will reſtore thee all the land of Saul thy father] Or grandfather. For grandfathers uſually in Scripture are called fathers, Dan. 5. 13. Herein David ſhewed kindneſſe to Mephiboſheth, becauſe Sauls land was confiſcate by reaſon of that war raiſed againſt him by Sauls family, and in that alſo he gave him not only the land due to him by inheritance from his father Jonathan, but alſo the whole lands that belonged to the houſe of Saul. And hereunto he added a further great kindneſſe, that he would repute him as one of his own ſons, and entertain him as his daily gueſt at his own table.

V. 8. What is thy ſervant, that thou ſhouldſt look upon ſuch a dead dog as I am?] An hyperbolical expreſſion, whereby Mephiboſheth humbly acknowledged his baſe condition in reſpect of Davids Royal eminency, and how far unworthy he was of his high favours; both becauſe his family was rejected of God, and David choſen in their room; and alſo becauſe they were all dead in law for rebelling againſt their Sovereign King whom God had ſet over them: and beſides, in reſpect of his own perſon, he was a lame, contemptible and forlorn man, and ſo, though a fit object of pity and mercy, yet not of honourable reſpect and Kingly munificence. Thus David had humbled himſelf formerly to Saul, acknowledging that in compariſon of his Royal dignity he was but as a flea, or a patrige on the mountains, or, (as Mephiboſheth here calleth himſelf) a dead dog, 1 Sam. 24. 14. and 26. 20. See ch. 3. 8.

V. 9. Ziba Sauls ſervant] i. e. Who in former times had been ſervant to Saul, but now belonged to Mephiboſheth, chap. 19. 26.

I have given to thy maſters ſon] i. e. Mephiboſheth, the Nephew or grandſon of Saul.

V. 10. That thy maſters ſons may have food to eat] Either he meaneth Micha Mephiboſheths ſon, and thoſe that belonged to him; or elſe, Mephiboſheth himſelf, of whom he ſpeaketh under this name, v. 7, 9. He would that Ziba ſhould till Mephiboſheths land and husband his eſtate for his uſe, and for the proviſion of his family; though in reſpect of his own perſon he had taken order that he ſhould continually eat at his own table.

V. 11. As for Mephiboſheth, ſaid the King, he ſhall eat at my table] This ſome Expoſitors underſtand as the ſpeech of Ziba ſtill continued, becauſe theſe words ſaid the King are not in the text; and becauſe he was lame, he had the Kings proviſions ſent from his own table to him. But it is plain that it was the Kings ſpeech, and ſo well expreſſed in our tranſlation, by adding ſaid the King unto the Original, ſeeing it is added in the text, he ſhall eat at my table, as one of the Kings ſons. For the Kings ſons did not ſit at Ziba's table, but at the Court with the King himſelf.

V. 12. And Mephiboſheth had a young ſon, whoſe name was Micha] Mentioned, 1 Chr. 8. 35. and 9. 40, 41. He had four ſons; and thoſe many others, in whom the family of noble Jonathan was continued.

V. 13. So Mephiboſheth dwelt in Jeruſalem] Though his lands and inheritance were at Gibeah-Saul; both becauſe he lived a ſedentary life, being unfit to travel to and fro by reaſon of his lameneſſe, and alſo was to be Davids daily gueſt at his table.

and was lame on both his feet] This is added to ſhew what an honourable favour David did him, in that, though he were lame, and ſo unfit to ſit at the Kings table, yet out of his love to Jonathan he gave him this priviledge. See on ch. 5. 8.

CHAP. X.

Verſ. 1. And it came to paſſe after this] Compare this chapter with 1 Chr. 19. where the ſame ſtory is related.

the King of the children of Ammon died] i. e. Nahaſh, who had formerly beſieged Jabeſh-Gilead, 1 Chr. 19. 1. 1 Sam. 11. 1.

V. 2. Then ſaid David, I will ſhew kindneſſe unto Hanun] David being peaceably ſetled in his Kingdom, ſtudieth how to ſhew kindneſſe to his friends who had been kinde to him, and as firſt at home to Jonathan, in his ſon Mephiboſheth, ſo now abroad to Hanun, in ſending ambaſſadors to comfort him for the death of his father.

as his father ſhewed kindneſſe unto me] What his kindneſſe was the Scripture mentioneth not, nor when it was ſhewed unto him. Hierome thinketh that when he fled from Achiſh King of Gath, Nahaſh King of Ammon gave him courteous entertainment; though not ſo much out of love to David as hatred to Saul, who was a common enemy to them both; having given the one a great defeat before Jabeſh-Gilead, and driven the other to ſeek harbour in ſtrange countries for the ſafeguard of his life.

And David ſent to comfort him] It is queſtioned how David ſhould ſhew himſelf ſo officious to him, ſeeing ch. 8. 12. it is ſaid that among other nations he ſpoiled the children of Ammon. To which the anſwer is eaſie; That it is ſpoken by way of anticipation both of Ammon and ſome other nations, upon occaſion of Davids ſpoiling Hadadezer, whom he conquered there, that he might ſum up together the vanquiſhed nations, whoſe ſpoils he conſecrated for the building of the Temple. But the Ammonites were not conquered and ſpoiled before they put this foul affront upon David and his meſſengers; for till then the two nations had lived in peace and unity one with another, as appeareth by their mutual kindneſſe.

V. 3. And the Princes of the children of Ammon ſaid unto Hanun] i. e. Out of meer jealouſie, having no true ground, they miſinterpret Davids kindneſſe to be counterfeit, and not ſincere; and ſay, that though he pretended by his meſſengers to honour the father, in very deed he intended them as ſpies againſt the ſon, and had ſent them to ſearch their country, and diſcover ſome advantages for the conquering of them, as he had done other nations. Thus ſome politicians think they are then moſt wiſe when moſt ſupicious: But ſuch wiſdom oft proveth folly, and bringeth upon them thoſe evils which they fear, and would prevent; as appeareth in this place.

hath not David rather ſent his ſervants unto thee, to ſearch the City, and to ſpie it out, and to overthrow it?] Here they meaſure Davids foot by their own laſte. They had falſe perfidious hearts, full of rancor and malice towards him and his people; (Such their anceſtors had ever had; as we ſee in their carriage towards the Iſraelites in the Wilderneſs, for which they were interdicted the Congregation unto the tenth generation, Deut. 23. 3, 4. in the hiſtory of the Judges, ch. 10, and 11. and in the ſiege of Jabeſh-Gilead) therefore meaſuring them by themſelves, they judged that they were alike malicious towards them, and that therefore there could be no reality in their profeſſion of friendſhip: and the rather becauſe it may be they knew they were bound by their law not to ſeek their proſperity all their dayes for ever, Deut. 23. 6. And indeed, theſe things being true, it may ſeem ſtrange that David, an holy and ſtrict obſerver of the Law, ſhould ſhew ſo much reſpect to Hanun as to ſend meſſengers to comfort him: And herein the Hebrew writers think he did ill, and therefore had ſuch ill ſucceſſe in the action. But things muſt not be judged good or evil by their events, Eccleſ. 9. 1, 2. And though it were unlawful for David to contract with theſe nations any neer friendſhip and leagues, yet in common humanity and civility he might return one kindneſſe for another.

V. 4. Wherefore Hanun took Davids ſervants, and ſhaved off the one half of their beards] Like a fooliſh young King, he hearkned as Rehoboam afterwards, (1 Kings 12.) to the ill-counſel of his adviſed Princes, and raſhly took order to have it put in execution. Firſt he cauſed one half of their beards to be ſhaven off, partly to deform and diſgrace them, that all who ſaw them might deride and jeer them; and partly to put a ſcorn on their religion and profeſſion, ſeeing by the Law they were forbidden, even in the morning to round the corners of their heads, and to marr the corners of their beards, Lev. 19. 27. In reſpect of which law the Iſraelites forbare to ſhave their beards at all: For if this had been in uſe among them, theſe meſſengers ſhould not have needed to have ſtayed at Jericho till their beards were grown, ſeeing they might have cut off the other part which they had left, and ſo have preſently returned home. Secondly, whereas they uſed in thoſe countries to wear long looſe garments, both for eaſe and ornament, comelineſſe and modeſty, to hide their nakedneſſe and keep their uncomely parts from open view, Hanun cauſed them to be cut off in the middle, even to the buttocks, that thoſe parts which nature it ſelf teacheth men to hide, might lie open to their ſhame; herein alſo croſſing the law of God, which ſo carefully provided that ſuch nakedneſſe might not be diſcovered, that they were forbidden to aſcend unto the altar by ſteps, leſt ſlipping or falling, their nakedneſſe ſhould appear, Exod. 20. 26. and alſo commanded to put on linen breeches, when they miniſtred in the Prieſts office, from the loyns unto the thighs to cover their nakedneſſe, Exod. 28. 41, 42. So that in abuſing Davids Ambaſſadours in this malicious and deſpiteful manner, the Ammonites grievouſly offended againſt the law of God, of nature, and of nations; and thereby deſerved moſt ſevere puniſhment. The like deſpite and diſgrace the King of Aſſyria offered unto the Egyptians, though not in ſo high a nature, ſeeing they were his captives, but theſe Ambaſſadors, Iſa. 20. 4. And the like was inflicted by God on the Chaldeans, as an heavy, yet juſt puniſhment for their pride, cruelty and oppreſſion of Gods people, Iſa. 47. 2, 3.

V. 5. When they told it unto David, he ſent to meet them] i. e. When theſe poor diſgraced men had made their caſe known unto David by ſome meſſengers, he preſently diſpatched ſome to comfort and cloth them.

and the King ſaid] Namely by the meſſengers he ſent. Tarry at Jericho till your beards be grown] i. e. In ſome village or private houſe ſet up in or neer the place where Jericho ſtood before it was deſtroyed. For Jericho it ſelf was not rebuilt till the time of Ahab, 1 Kings 16. 34. But the more obſcure and private the place appointed for their reſiding was, the more ſuitable for men in their condition, who would not be ſeen without ſhame.

V. 6. they ſtank before David] i. e. Had made themſelves odious and abominable, as a loathſome carrion to the ſence of ſmelling, by their horrible fact, in abuſing his Ambaſſadors. So Gen. 34. 30.

hired the Syrians] And with them chariots and horſemen out of Meſopotamia, amounting to that vaſt number of thirty and two thouſand chariots, which they hired with a thouſand talents of ſilver, 1 Chron. 19. 6. All theſe nations were willing to joyn with the Ammonites in this war, being all enemies to David, he having lately ſubdued them and brought them under tribute. Now they hoped they had found an opportunity of revenging themſelves on him and his people for all the damages and harms received from them, and of freeing themſelves from that bondage in which they lived under them. See ch. 8. 9.

of Beth-Rehob] i. e. Out of that part of Syria whoſe metropolis was Rehob, ch. 8. 3. a city at the foot of Libanus, in the utmoſt bounds of Syria towards Paleſtine. Hereof mention is made Numb. 13. 21. See on Judg. 18. 28.

and the Syrians of Zoba] See ch. 8. 3. and of King Maacah] King of one part Syria, 1 Chron. 19. 6. neer Gilead Trachonitis. Deut. 3. 14.

and of Iſhtob twelve thouſand men] This was the country where Jephthah dwelt. See Judg. 11. 3. Beſides theſe, the Ammonites had ſome help from Aram-Naharaim, mentioned in the title of the 60. Pſalm.

V. 7. And when David heard of it, he ſent Joab, &c.] He did not ſtay till they invaded his land, but prudently ſent his army under the command of Joab to prevent them by invading their country, and ſo to make it the ſeat of the war.

V. 8. And the children of Ammon came out, and put the battel in array at the entring in of the gate] To wit, of Medeba, 1 Chr. 19. 7, 9. a city in the borders of Ammon, of which mention is made Numb. 21. 30. The Ammonites prudently put their batel in array before the gates of their own city, that if they were beaten and put to the worſe, they might ſecure themſelves by a ſafe retreat into it; and they cauſed the Syrians and their other auxiliaries to pitch their battel in the field, that ſo they might environ the Iſraelites, both in the front and in the rear, when they came to fight, as it is, v. 9. Another reaſon alſo is given why they were placed in the field in ſome diſtance from the city, becauſe they held it dangerous to have them, being mercenaries, too neer their city, eſpecially being ſuch a numerous multitude, leſt they ſhould ſurprize it if they got the better of the day.

V. 9. He choſe of all the men of Iſrael, and put them in array againſt the Syrians] Becauſe he thought the Syrians, being but mercenaries, would not ſtand to it, if hotly charged; and if they were beaten and routed, the Ammonites would quickly be put to flight, being diſcouraged and diſcomfited by their example.

V. 10. And the reſt of the people he delivered into the hand of Abiſhai] i. e. He appointed them to be under his command and conduct in this battel.

V. 11. And he ſaid, If the Syrians be too ſtrong for me] Becauſe the ſafety and proſperous ſucceſſe of an army doth much conſiſt in the concord of the Commanders, and their right underſtanding one of another, he prudently maketh this agreement, before the fight with his brother; and leſt he ſhould be diſcouraged or diſcontented becauſe he had culled out the chief men of valour in all the army to be under his conduct, he engageth both himſelf and him by a mutual promiſe that in the battel they ſhould relieve one another as occaſion ſhould require.

V. 12. Be of good courage, and let us play the men] Here (if ever) Joab ſhewed himſelf a valiant, prudent and pious General, putting life and vigour into the hearts of his army by a well-grounded encouragement; they were to fight in a good cauſe againſt the Ammonites and their King, for that they had been ſo injuriouſly abuſed and diſgraced by them in their Ambaſſadors, contrary to the law of nations; and for the preſervation of their people from the rage of malicious enemies, who would utterly deſtroy them, if they got the victory; and to keep their cities and native country, given them by God for an inheritance, and which he had alſo reſerved unto himſelf for his inheritance, from utter ruine and vaſtation; Not doubting, if they did their part, that God would be wanting on his, in giving them victory; but howſoever, quietly ſubmitting themſelves to be diſpoſed of at his good pleaſure. So David, ch. 15. 26.

V. 14. So Joab returned from the children of Ammon] Having by this famous victory brought them under, he did not for the preſent any further purſue them, the time of the year (as it ſeemeth) being paſt for keeping the field, ch. 11. 1.

V. 15. And when the Syrians ſaw that they were ſmitten before Iſrael, they gathered themſelves together] Having no hope that David would make peace with them, becauſe they had rebelled and joyned with the Ammonites to make war againſt him, they recruit their army, and recollecting their ſcattered forces prepare for a new expedition.

V. 16. Hadarezer ſent and brought out the Syrians that were beyond the river] He ſent his agents, and hired the Syrians that inhabited beyond Euphrates.

And they came to Helam] See on 1 Chr: 19. 16.

and Shobach] Called Shophach] 1 Chr. 19. 16.

V. 17. And when it was told David, he gathered all Iſrael together] Hearing what a puiſſant and numerous army the Syrians had raiſed againſt him, he alſo muſtered a great army out of all Iſrael, and in his own perſon led them forth for their better incouragement.

V. 18. And David ſlew the men of ſeven hundred chariots of the Syrians] Ten fighting men were in every chariot, which make up the number of ſeven thouſand mentioned 1 Chr. 19. 18. See ch. 8. 4. Or, ſeven hundred troops of horſemen in chariots, conſiſting of ten in a troop, as Junius would have it.

and fourty thouſand horſemen] Beſides fourty thouſand footmen mentioned 1 Chr. 19. 18. For with ſuch huge multitudes the Syrians and other nations in thoſe dayes uſed to go out to battel, 1 Kings 20. 10. And for this cauſe David is ſaid to have gathered all Iſrael to encounter them, v. 17. This great defeat of Hadarezers army is probably thought to have given occaſion to Rezon, one of his Commanders, to revolt from him: Who gathering unto him his ſcattered forces, and making himſelf their General, afterwards became their King, and reigned in Damaſcus in Solomons time, 1 Kings 11. 23, 24.

V. 19. Who were ſervants to Hadarezer] i. e. Who had been in his pay, and fought under him in his quarrel.

they made peace with Iſrael, and ſerved them] i. e. Came under their ſubjection, and payed them tribute.

CHAP. XI.

Verſ. 1. After the year was expired] Heb. after the return of the year To wit, after the former battel was fought with the Ammonites, and the winter of that yeer ended.

at the time when Kings go forth to battel. So 1 King. 20. 22. 2 Chro. 36. 10. The former yeer being expired, the yeer following is ſaid to begin or return, becauſe the Sun then returneth to the ſame place where it begun its courſe the former yeer. Now David having been hindred from proſecuting his victory by the approach of winter, when the ſpring came on, he ſent again Joab, with his chief commanders and the whole army of Iſrael, againſt the children of Ammon, to complete his conqueſt, becauſe in that ſeaſon they had all proviſions fit for an army, food and forage for man and horſe, and had time all the Summer long to beſiege cities, and exerciſe all warlike exploits for ſubduing of their enemies and they deſtroyed the children of Ammon, and beſieged Rabbah] 1 Chron. 20. 1. i. e. They waſted their country with fire and ſword, and ſo having removed all ſtops out of their way, they laid ſiege to Rabbah. This was afterwards called Philadelphia, and was now the chief city of the Ammonites, lying on the mountains of Gilead beyond Jordan, by the head of the river Jabbok, ch. 12. 26, 27.

But David tarried ſtill at Jeruſalem] This is added, as I conceive, to imply that David began now to grow ſlack in executing the duty of a King, and in going out and in before the people in time of war, whereby formerly he had purchaſed ſuch fame and honour both at home and abroad, and began to give himſelf to eaſe and pleaſure

V. 2. And it came to paſſe in an evening tide, that David aroſe from off his bed] He did not content himſelf to take a noons nap in the heat of the day, (which they uſually did to refreſh themſelves in thoſe hot countries, ch. 4. 5, 7.) but giving himſelf to ſloth and ſleep, he continued his lying and lazing on his bed till towards evening. Such eaſe and idleneſſe doth not beſeem a King at any time, upon whom lyeth the care of the Common wealth, and various emploiments for the good of the whole State; much leſs did it become David at this time, when the army of Iſrael was in the field, and daily expoſed to danger, to give himſelf to ſecurity and ſloth. And this is here related as a chief cauſe of Davids fearful fall into his ſin of Adultery. In his former dayes, while he was either perſecuted by Saul, or afterwards being King, imploied himſelf in the wars, and in ſetling the ſtate and government Eccleſiaſtical and Civil, he was never tainted with any ſcandalous ſin, but walked in Gods fear, having reſpect to his commandments, Pſal. 119 6. but now entertaining one of the ſins of Sodom, Idleneſſe, Ezek. 16. 49 he ſoon after falleth into their other ſin of Luſt and Uncleanneſs, which are ſeldome ſevered one from the other; even as the Heathen Poet, who was skilful in the very Art of loving and luſting, did obſerve, Otia ſi tollas &c.

And walked upon the roof of the Kings houſe] Houſes in thoſe countries were flat-roofed. See on Deut. 22. 8. Joſh. 2. 6. 1 Sam. 9. 25.

And from thereof he ſaw a woman waſhing her ſelf] To wit, that ſhe might be purified from her legal uncleanneſſe contracted by her monethly diſeaſe, according to the Law, Levit. 15. 19. and 18. 19. So v. 4. Now he ſaw her waſhing her ſelf, either in her garden neer adjoyning to his palace, (otherwiſe he could not have diſcerned her beauty, if ſhe had been at a further diſtance) and then ſhe was not free from faultineſſe, in taking no more care to hide thoſe beauties which being diſcovered were a bait for luſt; eſpecially being ſo neer the Kings Court, where uſually men are at moſt leiſure, and take moſt liberty to gaze after wanton objects, their eaſe and idleneſſe being accompanied with fulneſſe of bread, Ezek. 16. 49. Or, as others think, (judging her to be a vertuous, wiſe and modeſt woman, as the Scriptures report of her, Pro. 1. 8. and 6. 20. and 31. 1.) ſhe waſhed her ſelf in her chamber, and ſome caſement oppoſite to the Palace being accidentally open, David with the quick ſight of his luſtful eye gazed upon her, and was enſnared with her beauty, ſo forgetting his own prayer, Pſal. 119. 37. and Jobs practiſe, Job. 31. 1. Thus in the old world before the flood the ſons of God, which were of the poſterity of Sheth, giving their eyes liberty to gaze upon the beauties of the daughters of men, which were of Cains progeny, were enſnared with luſtful deſires, and took them to be their wives, though never ſo wicked, Gen. 6. 2.

V. 3. And David ſent and enquired after the woman] When his wanton eyes had betrayed his heart, and inflamed it with unlawful luſt, he ſhould preſently have quenched this wild-fire, or ſuddenly caſt it out by meditating on the greatneſſe of the ſin and the grievouſneſſe of the puniſhment, how diſpleaſing it would be to his good God, and how diſhonourable to himſelf; but contrariwiſe he revolveth it in his mind, and ſo giveth his conſent unto it with delight, He firſt committeth adultery with her in his heart, Matth. 5. 28. and never is at reſt, in plotting and contriving, till at laſt he produceth it into act.

And one ſaid, Is not this Bathſheba?] i. e. One of the ſervants, of whom he enquired, ſtrongly affirmed, and peremptorily told him, that it, was Bathſheba whom he had ſeen. 1 Chr. 3. 5. ſhe is called Bathſhua.

the daughter of Eliam] Called Ammiel 1 Chron. 3. 5. He is thought by Hierome to be that Worthy of David mentioned 2 Sam. 23. 34. who was the ſon of Ahithophel the Gilonite Davids great Counſellor.

the wife of Uriah the Hittite] So called, becauſe he was ſo by Nation, and now a Proſelyte to the Jewiſh Religion. See on 1 Sam. 26. 6. Others think he was born in a place called Heth, neer the place of Abrahams burial, and called a Hittite, though he were a natural Iſraelite, becauſe born in that country, Gen. 23. 3. He alſo was one of Davids Worthies, 2 Sam. 23. 39. So Bathſheba was an honourable woman both by parentage and alſo by marriage; and therefore David more faulty in abuſing her to ſatisfie his wanton luſt, eſpecially ſhe being another mans wife, and he having ſo many of his own, and being at liberty to have taken more, as Nathan afterwards, ſpeaking from God, doth aggravate his ſin, ch. 12. 3, 4, 8.

V. 4. And David ſent meſſengers, and took her] i. e. Cauſed her to be brought unto him; not ſignifying, it is like, to his meſſengers the end of his ſending for her; for this had been to proclaim his ſhame; but pretending ſome other buſineſs. But being come, he allured and perſwaded her to commit folly and filthineſs with him; and ſhe wanting grace and the fear of God, and that conjugal love and faithfulneſs which ſhe owed to her worthy husband, conſented unto him, being better pleaſed to be the harlot of a King then the loyal wife of an honeſt ſubject.

for ſhe was purified from her uncleanneſſe] Or, when ſhe had purified her ſelf. She cleanſed her ſelf from her menſtrual ſickneſs, (whereby ſhe was apter to conceive) but now defileth her ſelf with moral filthineſs of body and ſoul.

V. 5. And the woman conceived, and ſent and told David, and ſaid, I am with childe] Either ſhe wrot unto him, becauſe Letters bluſh not; or ſhe ſent before to ſignifie her coming, that ſhe might have the more free and private acceſs, and when ſhe came, ſhe told him ſecretly that ſhe was with childe. This ſhe did that they might adviſe together of the likelieſt means whereby they might hide their ſin and ſhame; and alſo that ſhe might avoid the rage of her husband at his coming home, and eſcape the puniſhment by law due unto her, which was no leſſe then death to be inflicted on the adultereſs.

V. 6. And David ſent to Joab, ſaying, ſend me Uriah the Hittite] Inſtead of repenting for his ſin, that obtaining pardon, he might have peace with God, he falleth, in the hardneſs of his heart, to plot and contrive means to conceal it from the knowledg of man in the mean time not regarding the al ſeeing of God, which beheld his cloſe-acted ſin, nor his juſtice and power ready to puniſh it. Therefore he ſendeth for Uriah, that coming home and lying with his wife he might father his baſtardly brood and ſo clear him from all diſgrace; not ſcrupling moſt unjuſtly to thruſt in his own ſon to be Uriah's heir, and to rob his children, if after he had any lawfully begotten, of their inheritance.

V. 7. David demanded of him how Joab did, and how the people did, and how the war proſpered] Which queſtions, though they had ſome weight and worth in themſelves, yet were too idle to be the occaſion for which he cauſed Uriah to be ſent unto him: For why ſhould he withdraw ſo great a Worthy from the ſervice of the war to anſwer ſuch queſtions as he might be (and no doubt was) daily reſolved in by Letters and Poſts that paſſed to and fro between him and the Camp? And theſe frivolous inquiries might juſtly make Uriah ſuſpect (and who knows but that they did?) that there was ſome other cauſe of his ſending for, beſides this which was pretended, and ſo to grow jealous of his beautiful wife, and that might be the true cauſe why he could not be perſwaded to go home and accompany her.

V. 8. And David ſaid to Uriah, Go down to thy houſe, and waſh thy feet] After he had anſwered his queſtions, he diſmiſſed him under this pretence, that it was fit for him after ſuch a journey to refreſh himſelf and take his eaſe; but intending indeed to have him go home and lye with his wife, that ſo his fault might be cloaked and covered. So that when he biddeth him go and waſh his feet, which after a journey they uſed to do in thoſe hot countries, it was as much as if he had ſaid, Go, recreate and refreſh thy ſelf after thy travel.

and there followed him a meſs of meat from the King] This he ſent after him in ſhew of kindneſſe, but with a purpoſe that being made frolick and jolly by receiving ſuch a favour from the King, and alſo by faring more plentifully on ſuch dainties, he might be the more apt to deſire his wives company.

V. 9. But Uriah ſlept at the door of the Kings houſe, with all the ſervants of his Lord] Which were appointed to ſit there to guard the Kings perſon. Now God by his ſecret and al-ruling providence inclined Uriahs heart to do thus that Davids ſin might come to light, notwithſtanding all his policies and perſwaſions to the contrary. And beſides, it may more then probably be thought that his fair but falſe wife came her ſelf, and uſed many intreaties and much importunity to draw him to his own houſe, ſeeing it did ſo much concern her to enjoy his company to cover her fault and hide her ſhame.

V. 10. And when they had told David] To wit, they who were appointed by him to obſerve his courſe and carriage, and ſo to make relation to him of what they ſaw.

Cameſt thou not from thy journey?] When his counſel took not, he further preſſeth him to hearken thereunto by this expoſtulation; q. d. It might well have beſeemed thee to have taken mine advice, ſeeing I not onely required thee as thy King, but as a friend perſwaded thee to do nothing but that which was for thine own eaſe and welfare, namely to refreſh thy ſelf after ſo long a journey. For Rabbah (as ſome of the Learned think) was ſo far diſtant from Jeruſalem that it was a journey for a footman of thirty houres.

V. 11. And Uriah ſaid unto David, The Ark, and Iſrael and Judah abide in tents] It is very probable that the Ark was at this time with Joab in the Camp, ſeeing they uſed in great and dangerous wars to carry it along with them, and that both for their better encouragement, it being a viſible ſign of Gods preſence, and alſo that they might conſult with God in their great doubts and difficulties; 1 Sam. 4. 4. and 14. 11. 8. Neither (as I conceive) doth he underſtand it of the Arks being in the tent which David had prepared for it; ſeeing it being fixed there, not only at this time, but alſo before and afterwards, he ſhould upon the ſame reaſon have forborn to lye at his own houſe when the war was ended: and ſaying joyntly, that the Ark and Iſrael and Judah did abide in tents, it ſeemeth to imply that they were all alike in tents, and in the ſame place; though it is not much material of what tent we underſtand it.

and my lord Joab] Some think he ſo calleth him in a more peculiar relation he had to him above others, as being his armour-bearer. But becauſe for this we have no Scripture-grounds, it may be underſtood that he calleth his Lord Joab in a common relation, as he was General of the army.

ſhall I then go into mine houſe, to eat and to drink, &c. q. d. How unfitting is it, when my Lord and General, ſo far my ſuperior, and the whole army of the God of Iſrael, yea the Ark of God it ſelf, doth abide in tents in the open fields, that I ſhould go home to my manſion and dwelling houſe, and there ſolace my ſelf with variety and delights? This ſpeech of Uriahs might have been a loud peal to awaken David out of his deep ſleep of ſin and ſecurity: He wallowed in unlawful luſt and pleaſure in the time of common danger, when as Uriah on this occaſion made conſcience of enjoying thoſe delights which otherwiſe in themſelves were honeſt and lawful. But it pleaſed God to leave David to himſelf, both that by his fearful fall he might be humbled, and alſo that by his example others might be admoniſhed not to truſt in their own ſtrength, (for if Cedars fall, what will become of ſhrubs?) or, being fallen, might be comforted, and encouraged to riſe with him by true repentance, and have hope and aſſurance that they alſo, as well as he, ſhould have their ſin pardoned, ſeeing God is no accepter of perſons, but alike gracious to all that are alike qualified to receive mercy and forgiveneſſe.

As thou liveſt, and as thy ſoul liveth, I will do this thing] This is not a double oath, but an earneſt aſſeveration, Or more pathetical expreſſion of the ſame thing; q. d. It is as certain as thou art alive, or as ſure as I deſire that thou maiſt ſtil live, that no perſwaſions ſhal ever move me to do this thing. All which pious and conſcionable care and carriage of Uriah did but tend to aggravate Davids ſin in practiſing againſt him; ſeeing he was nothing affected with it, nor moved at all to deſiſt from his purpoſe. See on 1 Sam. 20. 3.

V. 12. And David ſaid to Uriah, Tarry here to day alſo] Having his heart hardned through the deceitfulneſſe of his ſin, he obſerveth not the paſſages of Gods providence croſſing him in his deſign, but ſtill ſtriveth againſt the ſtream, and will not ſuffer Uriah to depart till he have tried another ſinful concluſion for the attaining to his end.

V. 13. And when David had called him, he did eat and drink before him, and made him drunk] Hereby intending both to make him forget his oath; That he would not go home to his houſe; And alſo more apt to deſire his wives company, being inflamed and intoxicated with wine, to which he could not perſwade him whileſt he was ſober. And here we have in Uriah an example of humane frailty, if Man be left to himſelf. No doubt, he who ſo reſolutely refuſed to enjoy his wives company, and to take his eaſe and lawful pleaſure in his own houſe, did much abhor to uſe exceſs, and drink himſelf drunk, in the preſence of the King; but now he is made ſo frolick and jovial by the apprehenſion of this ſpecial favour from his Sovereign, that forgetting his former auſtere reſolution, he falleth into the ſin of drunkenneſſe, David, as it ſeemeth, preſſing him to drink more then he deſired, ſeeing it is ſaid, not that he allowed him plenty of wine, but that he made him drunk, by cauſing him to be plyed with cup after cup. And we have in David an extream and horrid wickedneſſe which even Gods deareſt ſervants are apt to fall into, if he leave them in the time of temptation to their own ſtrength; who, though in the whole courſe of his life he was a man according to Gods own heart, and had reſpect to all his commandments, doth now, to avoid the deſerved ſhame of his ſin, and to hide it from the ſight of men, draw his faithful ſervant not onely into the beſtial ſin of drunkenneſſe, but alſo into the impious ſin of perjury, as much as in him did lye; but God by a ſtrange and ſtrong providence preſerved him from it. The like example alſo we have in Peter, who being left by God to his own ſtrength, or rather weakneſs, did for fear with curſing and ſwearing deny and abjure his Lord and Maſter, Which may teach the beſt to pray often and earneſtly that God will not lead them into temptation, Or at leaſt that he will deliver them from evil.

but went not down to his houſe] Notwithſtanding all Davids devices and practiſes he remained firm and conſtant in his reſolution.

V. 14. And it came to paſſe in the morning that David wrote a letter to Joab] When all his plots and policies failed for the effecting of his deſign, which was to hide his adultery, he did by a letter call in Joab to his aſſiſtance, that by his help he might take away Uriahs life by ſuch means as might not come to light, and ſo might have his ſin concealed. Obſerve here Davids fearful progreſs in ſin, from one degree to another, and from a leſſer to a greater. Having given way to ſloth and idleneſſe unbeſeeming a King, he falleth into wantonneſſe and luſt: And this fire being kindled, and he uſing no means to quench it, it flameth out to the act of adultery: And not repenting of it, he taketh care onely to hide his ſhame, not to be cleanſed from his ſin, and ſo ſeeketh by wicked policies to attain his end. For firſt he draweth Uriah his faithful ſervant to commit the ſin of drunkenneſſe, that he might forget and falſifie his oath, and by lying with his wife might palliate his adulterous filthineſſe. And when this would not take, rather then he would fail of his end, he contriveth his death, and that by ſuch means as tended to the heartning of the enemy, by the ruine of divers others of the Army in a treacherous way, their fellow ſouldiers and comrades deſerting them in the fight. And now having loſt his ſenſe and underſtanding by running on in this labyrinth and maze of wickedneſſe, and being grown ſtupid and hardned with the deceitfulneſſe of ſin, he lyeth ſleeping and ſnorting in this ſpiritual lethargie a long time together, till God was pleaſed to uſe the miniſtery of the Propet Nathan to waken him out of it, and bring him to repentance. Thus David, who had ſuch a tender conſcience that his heart ſmote him for cutting off the lap of Sauls garment, being left to himſelf, groweth ſo hard-hearted and ſenſeleſſe in ſinning that he ſcrupleth not to murder his faithful and innocent ſervant, (yea becauſe he was innocent and ſimple-hearted) and together with him divers others; and alſo draweth on Joab to partake with him in the ſame wickedneſſe, as though it were not enough to go alone in the way of death and deſtruction, unleſſe others by his perſwaſion did bear him company. So great cauſe we have to pray daily unto God, not to lead into, or at leaſt not to leave us in temptation, ſeeing holy David being thus left ſinned more fearfully then wicked Ahab: He coveted but the vineyard of his ſubject and neighbour, but David the wife, yea, even the life of his faithful and valiant ſervant and ſouldier, and that becauſe he could not draw him from his ſingleneſſe and ſimplicity to ſerve his own turn.

V. 16. And it came to paſs when Joab obſerved the city] To wit, that he might find out in what part of it the ſtouteſt ſouldiers manned the walls. No ſooner had he received commands from his King, but preſently he putteth them in execution, not caring whether they were right or wrong, nor how unpleaſing to God, ſo he might pleaſe his Sovereign, upon whoſe favour he wholly depended for worldly perferment. It may be David in his letter pretended that Uriah was guilty of ſome fault for which he deſerved death, though for ſome reaſons he was unwilling to have it known: But Joab knew well enough that no offender ought to dye upon the Kings bare command without a legal trial, nor unleſſe he were convicted by two or three witneſſes; and, if Uriah deſerved to dye, yet not in this manner, wherein others that were innocent muſt dye with him. And therefore it might well be thought that Joab herein had no other aym then to pleaſe the King, and (it may be) to recover his favour to the full height, which was leſſened and abated by his murder of Abner, when himſelf ſhould become as guilty as he of the like act.

V. 17. And the men of the city went out] Thoſe valiant men which Joab had obſerved ſallied out of the gate of the City where the aſſault was given, and fighting with that part of the army in which Uriah was placed in the front, they ſlew ſome of them, and Uriah with the reſt.

V. 18. Then

10 V. 18. Then Joab ſent and told David] i. e. He deviſed and put into the meſſengers mouth a form of ſpeech, ſetting a fair colour on a foul cauſe, and dawbing over a rotten ruinous building with untempered morter, to pleaſe David, if he found him to be diſpleaſed with the loſſe. But it ſeemeth that howſoever the meſſenger delivered the main ſubſtance of the matter, yet he left out the enlargements, as ſuperfluous and needleſs, ſeeing David made no ſuch objections againſt his ſervice, but was well enough pleaſed with the ſlaughter of others, when as he heard that Uriah was ſlain with them.

V. 21. Who ſmote Abimelech the ſon of Jerubbeſheth?] Judg. 9. 53. i. e. the ſon of Gideon, called Ierubbaal Judg 7. 1, but here Ierubbeſheth, becauſe the Hebrews in deteſtation of idols did expunge the word Baal out of their names, and put Boſheth or Beſheth in the place of it, ſignifying an infamous thing, as the idol was, Hoſ. 9. 10. Compare 1 Chr. 8. 33. with 2 Sam. 2. 8. and 1 Chr. 8. 34. with 2 Sam. 4. 4. where Eſhbaal and Meribbaal in the one place are called Iſhboſheth and Mephiboſheth in the other.

V. 23. Surely the men prevailed againſt us] i. e. The valiant Souldiers of Rabbah, that were beſieged, ſallied out upon us.

and we were upon them] i. e. Fought with them, and forced them to retire, purſuing them to the very gates, and ſo in heat of war came too neer the wall, and loſt ſome of our men.

V. 25. ſay to Ioab, Let not this thing diſpleaſe thee] Here he diſſembleth with the meſſenger, and ſlighteth the ſlaughter of his men, to the end that neither his bloody and cruel commandment, nor Joabs wicked obedience might be diſcovered.

the ſword devoureth one as well as another] i. e. The event of war is various, and men are ſlain ſometimes on the one ſide, and ſometimes on the other: therefore we muſt be content, and bear with patience ſuch accidents when they happen, ſeeing it is in vain to trouble our ſelves too much with ſuch things as cannot be prevented.

and encourage thou him] i. e. As my meſſenger, and in my name, encourage and comfort him, that he be not too much dejected with this loſſe.

V. 26. And when Uriahs wife heard that Uriah her husband was dead, ſhe mourned for her husband] So Gen. 50. 3. The time of mourning, as Joſephus writeth, laſted but ſeven dayes; ſo Gen. 50. 10. 1 Sam. 31. 13. Eccleſ. 12. 12. But their more ſolemn mournings laſted thirty dayes, Deut. 34. 8. This of Bath-ſheba was perhaps a merry mourning, onely in a formal, ceremonial and counterfeit ſhew, to bleer and blind the eyes of the people, becauſe by her husbands death ſhe was not onely freed from his wrath and rage, and the puniſhment which the law inflicted upon the adultereſs, but alſo was in hope to become a Queen: but ſhe had cauſe enough of grief, and even of heart-bleeding and heart-breaking mourning, when ſhe conſidered that by her ſin ſhe had cauſed his untimely death: Although Davids ſin was much more hainous, who, being a King and a Prophet, had allured her to uncleanneſs, and had alſo plotted and contrived Uriahs death by the ſword of Gods enemies.

V. 27. And when the time of mourning was paſt] Which no doubt was as ſhort as might be, that David taking her to wife the ſooner, ſhe might be thought to be with child by him after they were married.

But the thing that David had done diſpleaſed the Lord] i. e. His whole carriage in the matter of Uriah. For though David were a man after Gods own heart, and greatly in his love in reſpect of his perſon, yet he hated and abhorred his ſin as hainous and abominable, and did ſeverely correct him for it; Teaching us hereby to follow his example, and in our greateſt love of the perſon to hate the ſin, and in the greateſt hatred of ſin to love the perſon.

CHAP. XII.

Verſ. 1. AN*d the Lord ſent Nathan unto* David] Or, wherefore the Lord, &c. i. e. Becauſe David, who was beloved of God and belonged to his election, had committed hainous ſins which were diſpleaſing unto him, and had now long continued in them without repentance, even for the ſpace of ten moneths together, from the conception to the birth of his childe, notwithſtanding that all that time he did in a formal manner uſe and enjoy Gods ordinances and the means of his worſhip and ſervice; and ſo would have lived ſtill in his impenitency, to his perdition, if God had ſtill left him to himſelf and the hardneſſe of his own heart; for who fallen into a lethargy can awaken himſelf? therefore the Lord of his free grace, when ordinary means prevailed not, ſent his holy Prophet to rouze him out of this dead ſleep, and by convincing him of his ſin to bring him to repentance; ſeeing all the care that David took for himſelf, was onely to hide his ſin, and to avoid the ſhame, and not to be cleanſed and freed from the guilt of it; even as men ſick of a bodily lethargie, apprehending no danger, and being inſenſible of any pain, are willing to continue ſleeping ſtill, and are loth to be moleſted by being awakened.

and he came unto him, and ſaid unto him, There were two men in one city, the one rich, and the other poor] Nathans God put into Nathans mouth this parable, as the fitteſt means to deal with ſuch a perſon. For though in his abſolute power he be able by plain and direct terms to do what he pleaſeth, yet ordinarily he uſeth thoſe means which are moſt likely to take effect with the perſons to whom he applieth them. Now parables uſually ſtir men up to more attention, we being more apt to liſten after new things, or things propunded in a new manner, then when they are ſpoken in a common and ordinary way: and they make us alſo more equal and indifferent in hearkning to what is ſaid. Generally men are very partial judges in their own cauſes, being blinded with pride and ſelf-love: and though they can ſee motes in other mens eyes, yet they cannot diſcern beams in their own; or if haply they ſee them, yet they are hardly brought ingenuouſly to confeſs them, without mincing, excuſing and extenuating, unleſſe they be preſented unto them in the perſons of others. And this in a more ſpecial manner is the property of great men, Princes and Kings, who think it harſh and uncivil uſage to be reproved for their faults and failings by their ſubjects and inferiours. But when ſin is brought to the bar and arraigned before them in other mens perſons, they in a ſort retain the power and priviledg of judicature, belonging to their place, in their own hand; and when they have paſſed the ſentence of condemnation impartially againſt others, then either conſcience of it ſelf, or, if aſleep, being awakened by ſome Nathan, bringeth the matter home, and maketh it their own caſe, as in this place. Thus God dealeth with the Jews, Iſai. 5. 3. Jotham with the Iſraelites, Judg. 9. 8—16. and our Saviour with the Prieſts and Phariſees, Luke 7. 41, 43. Matth. 21. 33, 41. Now in expounding of a Parable we are chiefly to look at the main ſcope and drift intended in it, and not to every circumſtantial paſſage, which is as it were but the outward dreſs and ornament to deck and beautifie it. As here in this parable Nathans chief aym and ſcope is, to awaken David out of his deep ſleep of ſin and ſecurity, by cauſing him unknowingly to paſs an unpartial ſentence againſt himſelf in the perſon of another, that ſo he might be brought to the ſight of his ſin and to unfeigned repentance. See ch. 14. 6. 1 Kings 20. 35, 41.

V. 2. The rich man had exceeding many flocks and herds] By the rich man he underſtandeth David, whom God had inriched with abundance of bleſſings, and permitted him to enjoy many wives and concubines, which beſt pleaſed him, having power in his hand to make lawful choice where he would.

V. 3. But the poor man had nothing] By him is meant Uriah, who was but poor in compariſon of his King, and had but onely one wife. But ſome write he had another before, by whom he had divers children, with whom Bathſheba his young and tender wife, whom he had lately married, did live, together with him, as the words following ſeem to imply; though I think rather they are added to ſet forth and formalize the parable. And ſhe is here compared, to a little ewe lamb, or a young Cade, which wanting a dam to ſuckle it is brought up by hand. This lamb he is ſaid to have bought, becauſe in thoſe dayes they gave dowries to their wives, and had not (as our enemies) portions with them. The ſame alſo he is ſaid to have fed with his own meat, or, as it is in the Original, with his own morſel; whereby is meant, that he dearly and tenderly loved it, as if it had been his own and only daughter; ſo as though he had ſo little that it was ſcarce ſufficient to nouriſh himſelf, yet he would ſpare ſome of it, even as it were out of his own mouth and ſtomach, to nouriſh his dear-beloved lamb.

ſave one little ew lamb] This alſo did the more indear his love and affection, becauſe he had only one. For as a ſtream divided runs more weakly, ſo it is with the affections. An only ſon, or an only wife, having the whole and ſole intereſt in the love of the father or husband, are more dearly beloved then when many ſons or wives have the love divided amongſt them.

and lay in his boſom] i. e. It was as near and dear to him as his own young and tender child. By which is ſet forth that Bathſheba being Uriahs only jewel and chief delight, he made her partner and partaker with him in all the bleſſings he enjoyed

V. 4. And there came a traveller to the rich man] By the traveller ſome Expoſitors underſtand fleſhly luſt and concupiſcence, which David feaſted with this lamb; others, the devil, who was as well pleaſed by Davids entertaining his tentations, and committing adultery, as if he had made him a feaſt. But it is not much material whether of them is meant, ſeeing they are both alike pleaſed with ſinful entertainment: And beſides, it is but a complement and formality of the parable, tending to ſet forth the main end of it, which was to ſhew Davids mercileſſe cruelty and oppreſſion of Uriah his faithful ſervant, in taking and abuſing his dear wife, to feaſt the devil, and to feed and foment his own filthy luſt.

V. 5. And Davids anger was greatly kindled] To wit, becauſe with a juſt and unpartial eye he looked upon this ſin in another mans perſon as horrible and hateful, though himſelf had commited it, and hugged it in his boſome, with much delight.

As the Lord liveth, the man that hath done this thing ſhall ſurely die] Or, is worthy to die. So Eph. 2. 3. This ſentence ſome think David paſſed, being tranſported with ſome choler and indignation againſt ſuch a covetous and griping oppreſſor. For by Gods law the thief was to reſtore five oxen, and four ſheep, for one, Exo. 22. 1. and not to dye for the offence. Or he thus ſpeaketh only to aggravate the hainouſneſs of the fact, and not to determine the puniſhment; as if a Judg, to ſhew how greatly he abhorred the malefactors hainous came, ſhould ſay he deſerved to be twice hanged, or many deaths, though it be not in his power to inflict more then one. But in the execution of poſitive laws it is in the Judges power to alter the penalty and puniſhment; and though he may not (as ſome think) leſſen it, leſt he might ſeem to arrogate to himſelf more mercy than was in God that did appoint it, yet he may increaſe and heighten it according as the ſin is aggravated, either in reſpect of its extraordinary degree, or elſe in reſpect of circumſtances. And thus this rich mans theft, being not barely ſo, a ſinne againſt the eighth Commandment, but alſo joyned with tranſcendent cruelty and oppreſſion, which was a breach of the ſixth, might be juſtly puniſhed by the Magiſtrate even with death it ſelf.

V. 6. And he ſhall reſtore the lamb four-fold] This word being of the dual number, ſome underſtand twice four, i. e. eight-fold; doubling his penalty upon him, becauſe he had no pity. And it ſeems the penalty of theft varied, ſeeing in Solomons time there was required ſeven-fold reſtitution, Pro.6.31. unleſſe it may be meant there that the thief ſhall make full and perfect reſtitution; in which ſenſe the number ſeven is often taken. Now if it be here meant, that he ſhall both die and alſo reſtore, it was to ſhew Davids greater abhorrency of ſo foul a fact, ſeeing he adjudged him not only worthy of death, but alſo worthy to make reſtitution to the poor man, becauſe his death, though it might ſatisfie his mind, yet could not repair his eſtate which was damnified by him; therefore there muſt be alſo made ſome conſiderable reſtitution.

V. 7. And Nathan ſaid to David, Thou art the man] i. e. Who haſt committed this hainous offence, and on whom thou haſt paſſed this heavy ſentence of death.

thus ſaith the Lord——I anointed thee King over Iſrael] The Lord putteth David in mind of all his former benefits, to aggravate his diſobedience and unthankfulneſſe, and to bring him to unfeigned repentance. Neither doth this croſs that Jam.1.5. that God giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth no man: Seeing that may well be underſtood of Prayer, unto the frequent uſe of which the Apoſtle there exhorteth, ſaying, that God doth not challenge any for their often asking, nor deny their ſuits becauſe he hath already done much for them; as it is the manner of men to upbraid thoſe with former benefits who ſeem too bold in importuning them to grant new ſuits: thus God upbraideth none; but the oftner men come, the better welcome; and the more importunate they are, the more like to ſpeed. Or elſe, God doth not upbraid men with his benefits to ſhame and reproach them, but only putteth his ſervants in mind of them when they ungratefully forget them, that by this means he may bring them to repentance. And thus he dealeth with David in this place.

V. 8. And I gave thee thy maſters houſe] i. e. The Kingdom of Saul, who was thy Lord and maſter.

and thy maſters wives into thy boſome] Not to marry them: for that had been inceſt, Lev.18.8,15. Seeing David having marryed Michal Sauls daughter, his wives became his mothers in law. Neither do we read that David ever took any of Sauls wives and concubines to become his: Nor had it been wiſdome in him to take any that were ſo near his enemy into his boſome. Neither is it likely he ſhould deſire it, in reſpect of their age. Nor do I think that by this phraſe of giving them into his boſome is only meant that he had his choice of all the women that were under Sauls ſubjection; for all the women in the land had been his ſubjects whileſt he reigned; and ſo any other might in that ſenſe have taken Sauls wives as well as David, that is, ſuch as had been under his government. The Rabbins ſay that Eglah and Rizpah are here meant. But neither do we read that Eglah was Sauls, or Rizpah Davids wife. I conceive the meaning is, that God had exalted David to ſuch Regal power and dignity, that all generally that belonged to Saul were at his diſpoſing; yea, even his wives and concubines, which were moſt neer and dear unto him, were ſo in any lawful way; yea, in reſpect of his ſovereign power, he might have taken them into his own boſome and bed, ſeeing there was none that could hinder him, if he in his own conſcience could have diſpenſed with Gods law. Neither doth God herein approve of ſuch a fact as taking of Sauls wives, no nor yet of polygamy; for it was not a gift of allowance, but of providence, tolerating for a time the plurality of wives. So Shimei curſed David, not by Gods allowance, but by his ſufferance, ch.16. 10, 11. though it be there ſaid that God had bidden him.

And if that had been two little, I would moreover have given unto thee ſuch and ſuch things] i. e. As I am able, ſo I would have been willing to have ſatisfied thy hearts deſire to the full, by giving unto thee, in a lawful way and by lawful means, more and greater things then all theſe, Pſal.37 4.

V. 9. Wherefore haſt thou deſpiſed the Covenant of the Lord] By tranſgreſſing the ſecond table of the Law, the ſum whereof is, that we ſhould Love our neighbours as our ſelves, Give every one his own, and Do to others as we would have them do unto us. This law David had grievouſly tranſgreſſed by his ſins of adultery and murder, and hoped by policies and ſhifts to have concealed them, though God, who ſeeth all ſecrets, did behold him. And for this contempt he is here reproved.

thou haſt killed Uriah the Hittite with the ſword] i.e. Not an ordinary man, or one worthleſſe and wicked, but one of thy great Worthies, who feared God, and did thee faithful ſervice: Him, in ſtead of rewarding thou haſt ſhamefully murdered. David was the chief contriver of his death; he was ſlain by his command: Joab was an acceſſary and a willing actor in this fearful tragedy; and the Ammonites only, and that unknowingly, their inſtruments.

and haſt taken his wife to be thy wife] Making way to the marriage by the murder of her husband, to conceal your adultery and cover your ſhame.

and haſt ſlain him with the ſword of the children of Ammon] This is added as a great aggravation of Davids ſin, both becauſe Uriah was moſt treacherouſly betrayed into the Ammonites hands, and together with him divers others of the Army; and alſo becauſe hereby Gods people had ſome cauſe of diſcouragement, and their enemies being heartned with this victory, would the more ſtand on their ſtrength, and make the more deſperate reſiſtance; yea, would take occaſion hereby to inſult over Gods people and their religion, ſeeing he had given them no better ſucceſſe.

V. 10. Now therefore the ſword ſhall never depart from thine houſe] Here God threatneth to puniſh and correct David by retaliation or law of requital, like for like, that by the puniſhment he might be lead as it were by the hand to the ſight of his ſins; as a dog that is beaten before the ſheep which he hath worried. He had ſinned by killing Uriah with the ſword, and therefore thoſe of his family muſt with the ſword kill one another; yea, the ſword muſt never depart from his houſe; according to that of our Saviour, Mat.26.52. All that take the ſword, ſhall periſh with the ſword. So Gen.9.6. Rev.13.10. By never, ſome underſtand unto the coming of Chriſt the King of peace: And indeed that period of time is ſometimes ſignified by this phraſe. So this threatning ſhould relate, not only to that blood which was ſhed in Davids time, but alſo to the wars which followed his dayes, between his poſterity and the ten tribes, with many other enemies, as the Edomites, Moabites, Ammonites, Aſſyrians and Chaldeans. But I rather conceive that by never here is meant a long time, or as long as David lived, as the word is uſed Gen.43.9. 1 Sam.1.22. Deut.15.17. and that the threatning hath reference to the ſword ſheathed in Davids children, Amnon, Abſolom and Adonijah, and to thoſe civil and unnatural wars raiſed againſt him by trayterous Abſalom, who came out of his own loyns.

becauſe thou haſt deſpiſed me] To wit, by wilful violating of my law, not regarding my Omniſcience nor my juſtice, but only caring to hide thy wickedneſſe from the ſight of men.

V. 9. Behold, I will raiſe up evil againſt thee out of thine own houſe] e. For thy ſins I will afflict thee with many evils by means of thine own children, giving them over to commit rapes, murders and unnatural rebellions. This was verified in Amnon, Abſalom, Adonijah, and others of Davids poſterity, who periſhed by the ſword. For though God was not the Author of theſe evils as they were ſins, yet he had an hand in them as they were puniſhments, Amos 3.6. Iſa.45.7. And as they were ſins, the power of acting was from him; for in him we live, and move, and have our being, Act.17.28. though the malignity of the actions was from the agents; as the rider maketh his lame horſe go, but his halting is from himſelf. Yea, Gods providence hath an hand in the evil of ſin it ſelf, not in acting it, (for that is impoſſible, ſeeing he is the ſupream good, and the fountain of all goodneſs, from whom no evil can ſpring and flow) but in ordering and diſpoſing of it, ſo as that which is evil in it ſelfe may tend to that which is good; as appeareth in the ſin of Joſephs brethren ſelling him into Egypt, whereby Jacob and his family were preſerved in the time of famine; and in that grand ſin of Judas, the Prieſts, Pilate, and the Souldiers, in crucifying Chriſt, which God made to be the means of mans redemption. Yea, God ſometimes puniſheth one ſin with another, not by infuſing of ſinful corruption, but by an active permiſſion, leaving men to the corruption of their own hearts, and withdrawing his grace: and ſo the objects of ſin being preſented unto them, they lay hold on them; and being enſnared, they fall into ſin to their perdition. And this is the greateſt puniſhment that God inflicteth on wicked men in this life, and that which David wiſheth his deſperate enemies, Pſa.69.27.

And I will take thy wives] i. e. Thy concubines.

before thine eyes] i. e. In thy life-time. And thou ſhalt as certainly know it, as if thine eyes did ſee it, ch.16.22.

and give them to thy neighbour] i. e. To one that is moſt near unto thee, not only in habitation, but alſo in blood. Which did much aggravate Davids affliction, Pſal.55.12.

And he ſhall lie with thy wives in the ſight of this Sun] i. e. In the open day and light of the Sun, which ſhall diſcover his foul fact to the ſight of all Iſrael. For Abſolom did act this foul villany, not in a ſecret corner, but in the open view, a Tent being ſpread for him on the houſetop for this purpoſe, ch.16.22. and it is not improbable, on the top of that very Palace from whence David eſpying Bathſheba luſted after her, ch.11.2.

V. 12. For thou didſt it ſecretly] As fearing men more then me, and ſhame more then ſin.

But I will do this thing before all Iſrael, and before the Sun] i. e. Openly and at noon-day, in the publick view of all the people, that I may purpoſely bring upon thee that ſhame and diſgrace which thou didſt more carefully avoid then my diſpleaſure. And whereas he ſaith, I will do it, it is as if he had ſaid, I will juſtly give over thy ſon to his own ambition and baſe luſts, and not reſtrain him, as I could, Hoſ.4.14. and will by providence ſo order his ſins that they ſhall become a juſt chaſtiſement of thine; though he thereby ſhall be no whit excuſed, ſeeing he will act his own part freely, wickedly and rebelliouſly, and to his own wretched ends, without any reſpect at all to my ſecret counſel.

V. 13. And David ſaid unto Nathan, I have ſinned againſt the Lord] He had alſo ſinned againſt Uriah and Bathſheba, and, as the Prodigal ſpeaketh, againſt heaven; but here he ſaith he had ſinned againſt the Lord, and Pſal.51.4. Againſt thee, againſt thee only, have I ſinned; becauſe ſin, againſt whomſoever it be committed, is the tranſgreſſion of Gods law, which maketh it to be ſin; and alſo becauſe, being the ſupreme Magiſtrate, he had no ſuperiour Judge to call him to account or puniſh him for his ſin. This confeſſion, though very ſhort, yet was effectual and accepted of God, becauſe it was joyned with true contrition and unfeigned repentance in the ſincerity of his heart, which God reſpecteth more then verbal expreſſions. Yea, it may be, Davids confeſſion was therefore ſo ſhort and abrupt, becauſe his heart was ſo oppreſſed with grief that he could not utter more words: for ſmall griefs ſpeak and are talkative, when great ones are ſilent, or expreſſed in few words. But afterwards, when his heart was a little unburdened and eaſed, ſorrow having found a vent, he at large expreſſeth it, purpoſely penning the one and fiftieth Pſalme to lay open his ſin and ſorrow, yea and to proclaim his ſhame: which he had formerly ſo carefully covered; and not contenting himſelf to pen a Pſalm on this ſubject, he alſo prefixeth a title to ſhew the occaſion, A Pſam of David, when Nathan the Prophet came unto him, after he had gone in to Bathſheba. Neither doth he think this enough, unleſſe he commit it to the chief Muſician to be ſung publickly in the Congregation as one of the penitential Pſalms. On the contrary, Sauls confeſſion, though more full and large in words, 1 Sam.15.24. was not regarded, becauſe it proceeded not from a true penitent heart, but was in meer hypocriſie; and alſo becauſe he was a man rejected of God; whereas David was beloved, and in the ſtate of grace by free election.

And Nathan ſaid unto David, The Lord alſo hath put away thy ſin] To wit, out of his ſight; and hath ſo covered it that it ſhall never be imputed unto thee to hinder thine eternal bleſſedneſſe, Pſal.32.1. yet howſoever he hath fully pardoned it in reſpect of the guilt, he will notwithſtanding chaſtiſe thee for it as a loving father for thy ſpiritual and everlaſting good, Num.23.21. Mic.7.18. Rom.8.28.

thou ſhalt not die] i. e. Neither everlaſtingly, nor by any ſudden ſtroke of a temporal judgment, as thou mighteſt have cauſe to fear, becauſe the Lord hath threatned that the ſword ſhall not depart from thy houſe, v.10. and alſo becauſe thy ſin hath deſerved it according to thine own ſentence. And here we have a lively repreſentation of a flat oppoſition between the ſentence of the Law and the Goſpel, not in themſelves, but in reſpect of the ſubjects upon whom they are pronounced. The Law ſaith, to wit, to them that are under the Law, The Adulterer ſhall die the death: But the Goſpel ſaith, He ſhall not die; to wit, if by a lively faith he be under grace, and in Chriſt, who hath paid his debt, and ſatisfied for his ſin, by dying for him.

V. 14. Howbeit, becauſe by this deed thou haſt given great occaſion to the enemies of the Lord to Blaſpheme] i. e. Not only to the Ammonites, whom thou haſt made to triumph and inſult over Gods people, as though he was unable to defend them, Iſa.36.15. but alſo to other heathen nations, and even to all the wicked among thine own people, who, when they ſhall hear or ſee that one whom I have choſen King, and ſo much favoured, hath committed as foul and heynous ſins as the very heathens, or as Saul himſelf whom I rejected, thereupon will be ready to cenſure me as unjuſt and partial, conniving at thoſe ſins in mine own ſervants which I puniſh in others: yea, thereupon they will take occaſion to blaſpheme my true religion, and the profeſſors of it, as though either it taught or favoured ſuch wickedneſſe, or at leaſt the profeſſors are all hypocrites, making only a ſhew of godlineſſe and honeſty in their lives, but denying the power of it: This, ſay they, ſuch examples of their wickedneſſe manifeſt, they are all alike. So Rom.2.24. And therefore by my corrections inflicted on thee I will vindicate my juſtice and the truth of my religion, and firſt, by the death of thy child begotten in adultery.

the child alſo that is born unto thee, ſhall ſurely die] This is only to be underſtood of temporal death, ſeeing no child dyeth eternally for the ſin of his parents, according to Ezek.18.4. The ſoul that ſinneth it ſhall die. But God puniſheth children, to the third and fourth generation of them that hate him, with temporal puniſhments, and even death it ſelf; not only becauſe children are accounted parts of their parents, and their goods, which may juſtly ſuffer for the owners ſake; but chiefly becauſe parents are only the occaſion of their childrens puniſhments, but the cauſe is in themſelves, to wit their original ſin and corruption of nature in which they were conceived, and which in it ſelfe deſerving death, God may juſtly inflict it upon any occaſion, when, and how he will. But in the death of Davids child there was mercy mixt with judgment, ſeeing had it lived, it would have been unto the parents a continual grief, repreſenting daily unto them their ſin and ſhame.

V. 16. David therefore beſought God for the child] i. e. He prayed, faſted and humbled himſelf with inward contrition of heart and outward afflicting of his body, that he might obtain the life of the child, not only becauſe it was dear to him and his wife, but becauſe they looked upon its death as the puniſhment of their ſin. And herein he ſought not to oppoſe and croſſe Gods Will (for when by his work his will was clearly revealed unto him, he ſubmitted unto it with all meekneſſe and patience, v.20.) but not knowing whether Gods threatning was abſolute or conditional, if he did not uſe theſe means to avert the judgment, he thus humbled himſelf before God by unfeigned repentance. And that he did it with this mind, appeareth plainly by his own words, ver. 22. See Jer.18.8. Ezek.33.10,11. according to the example of Hezekiah, and the Ninevites, Iſa.38.1,5. Ionah 3. 9,10. And this David did, hoping for good ſucceſs, becauſe God in his rich mercy had pardoned his ſin, and comforted him with his promiſe that he ſhould not die.

and went in] To wit, into his inner chamber or cloſet.

V. 17. And the Elders of his houſe aroſe] i. e. Like faithful ſubjects and ſervants, they addreſſed themſelves to comfort him in his mourning; but he refuſed it.

V. 18. And it came to paſſe on the ſeventh day, that the child dyed] Some underſtand the ſeventh day from the ſickning of the child; others from the birth of it, and conſequently, the day before it was to have been circumciſed; From whence they gather, that ſince this child dyed without circumciſion, and yet David was cheared and comforted after its death, therefore he was not of their mind who think that children dying before they receive the Sacrament, the outward ſeal of the covenant, are in a dangerous and damnable condition, when as it is not neglected, but cannot, according to the inſtitution, be rightly adminiſtred, the child being taken away by ſudden or unexpected death. Indeed otherwiſe God is diſpleaſed when we neglect his ordinances, which we may enjoy in a right manner; as we ſee in the example of Moſes, whom the Lord threatned to kil becauſe he had neglected to circumciſe his ſon, Exod.4.24.

we ſpake unto him, and he would not hearken] i. e. If he were impatient of any comfort, when yet, the child being alive, there was ſome hope, how will he torment himſelf with griefe when the caſe by the death of the child is quite become deſperate?

V. 19. But when David ſaw that his ſervants whiſpered] To wit, ſecretly one with another, that he might not hear, he ſuſpected that the child was dead, and that they kept it ſecret for fear of grieving him.

V. 20. Then David aroſe from the earth, and waſhed] When he ſaw Gods Will by his work, he patiently ſubmitted unto it, and ceaſing to mourn and pray againſt that which God had revealed to be his good pleaſure, he changing his habit, and with it his heart, addreſſeth himſelf to do God that ſervice unto which he now called him.

and came into the houſe of the Lord, and worſhipped] i. e. The tent which he had erected for the Ark. By the Law it was provided, that when a man dyed in a tent, all that came into that tent, and all in it, ſhould be unclean ſeven dayes, Num.19.14. and whileſt he was unclean he might not come into the Sanctuary. But David, who was a careful obſerver of the Law, preſently upon the death of his child waſhed himſelf, and went into Gods houſe, and worſhipped. Whereby it appeared that either this uncleanneſſe was not contracted by being in the ſame houſe wherein one dyed, if they were not alſo in the ſame room; or that this child dyed in ſome other houſe near the Kings, into which it was put, that the King might not be further grieved by being an eye or ear-witneſſe of this poor infants pain and miſery, who was already too apprehenſive of it. And ſo being free from legal uncleanneſſe, he haſteth to Gods houſe, as being the fitteſt place for receiving comfort in his great affliction, and that he might there worſhip God, (whom we are bound to bleſſe with Job, for taking away his temporal bleſſings as well as for giving them, and receiving evil as well as good, Job 1.21. & 2.10.) and that for many cauſes, and in divers reſpects; as, to praiſe him for all his rich mercies which he ſtill enjoyed, for the pardon of his great ſins, and preſerving his life from death, which he had juſtly deſerved, for giving him patience to ſubmit unto his correcting hand, and for working in him the grace of repentance, when as he was ſo fearfully hardned in ſin and impenitency; and alſo to pray unto God, either that in his mercy he would lighten and leſſen thoſe puniſhmens he had threatned againſt his family, or at leaſt ſanctifie them to their uſe, and had given ſtrength and patience to him, that he might be able to bear them.

then he came to his own houſe, and when he required, they ſet bread before him, and he did eat] Though he had faſted ſeven dayes whileſt the child lay ſick, eating only ſome ſmall repaſt in the evening, yet ſo earneſt he was to perform theſe holy duties of Gods ſervice, and to ratifie his peace with him, that he would not taſte of any food before he had firſt been at Gods houſe.

V. 21. Then ſaid his ſervants unto him, What thing is this that thou haſt done?] Though David had done nothing but what was agreeable to reaſon and religion, yet being contrary to the corrupt cuſtome of thoſe times, (as it is alſo of ours) his ſervants queſtion him for it, as a thing ſtrange in their apprehenſion.

V. 22. While the child was yet alive, I faſted and wept] In hope that God would reverſe his ſentence of death, if conditional: as Iſa. 38. 1 John 3.4.

For I ſaid] i. e. I thought within my ſelf that it was not known to any man whether upon my repentance God would ſpare the child, or no; ſeeing it was doubtful whether the threatning were abſolute or conditional, till God had revealed his Will by his Work.

V. 23. Can I bring him back again?] i. e. Reſtore him to life.

I ſhall go to him] i. e. Into the ſtate of the dead; but he ſhall not return to me] into the ſtate of the living. But why, if he did not think it fit to mourn for the death of his child, did he ſo lament the death of of Saul, Jonathan, Abner, and Abſalom? I anſwer, Becauſe in ſome of them the Common-wealth had loſs by their death, and others of them died in their ſins. See on 1 Sam. 28. 19.

V. 24. And David comforted Bath-ſheba his wife] As he had been a means to draw her to ſin and uncleanneſſe, and ſo to bring upon them this judgement of loſing their ſon by death; ſo now, ſhe being troubled and grieved with this great affliction, like a good and faithful husband he endeavoureth to communicate unto her ſuch comfort as he himſelf had been comforted with; as, That God in mercy had pardoned their ſin and freed them from that death which by their fearful fall they had deſerved, and that their child was in a ſtate of bleſſedneſſe, and freed from ſin and ſorrow.

And ſhe bare a ſon, and he called his name Solomon] That is, Peaceable; becauſe he was to enjoy a peaceable reign, as a Type of Chriſt the Prince of peace, Iſa.9.6. This name David gave him by Gods own appointment, 1 Chr.22.9.

and the Lord loved him] Or, for the Lord loved him i.e. Of his free grace, before he had done either good or evil. Herein alſo Solomon was a Type of Chriſt, the ſon of Gods love, in whom alone he is well pleaſed; by whom all his elect being reconciled unto him in the body of his fleſh, through death, he hath made peace with them, given them in this life peace of conſcience, and will perfect their peace in his heavenly Kingdom, Col.1.21. Rom.5.1, 15, 16. Luke 2.14. Joh.14.27. & 16.33.

V. 25. And he ſent by the hand of Nathan] God uſed the Miniſtery of Nathan to comfort David, by bringing unto him this joyful tidings, whom he had formerly ſent to convince him of ſin, and to threaten againſt him and his family his heavy judgment; and ſo he cured and healed him with the ſame hand and lancer that had given the wound.

and he called his name Jedidiah] That is, Beloved of the Lord. And thus he called him, becauſe the Lord by Nathan appointed this name to be given him; and becauſe, alſo of the Lord Chriſt, Gods beſt beloved, in whom alone Solomon was, and all the elect are beloved of God, Mat.3.17.

V. 26. And Joab fought againſt Rabbah of the children of Ammon] i.e. Aſſaulted it fiercely that he might take it. He had now continued the ſiege the greateſt part of the year, having had more ſlow ſucceſſe then the Iſraelites uſually had in their expeditions: Of which the cauſe might well be Davids ſin; for how could his army proſper abroad, when he at home was guilty of ſo much wickedneſſe? But he having now by true repentance made his peace with God, God beginneth to give him and his army good ſucceſſe in their undertakings.

and took the royall City] i.e. That part of the City in which the royal Palace ſtood, invironed with waters both for ſafety and delight.

V. 27. And have taken the City of waters] Hence ſome gather that this Rabbah, the chief City of the Ammonites, conſiſted of two parts, which were like two Cities conjoyned, as Ramathaim-Zophim, 1 Sam. 1.1. And one of them (called the Royal City, becauſe the Kings palace ſtood in it, and the City of waters becauſe environed with the river Jabbok) Joab had now taken, and was alſo in good forwardneſſe to take the other; and therefore ſent unto David to come with an army, that he taking it might bear the name of it. Others (and upon good grounds) think that he had not taken already the royal City, but that he was in taking it, and near the taking of it, as the vulgar Latine readeth it, and as the words here uſed may ſignifie: For if he had already taken the royal City, how ſhould Davids coming prevent his having the name of that chief part which he had conquered? and if the royal City were taken before Davids coming, then it is very likely the King alſo was taken, and with him his Crown, ſeeing his royal Palace was there; whereas it is ſaid that David at his coming took the Kings crown from off his head, v.30.

V. 28. Now therefore gather the reſt of the people together, and encamp againſt the city] The ſtrength of Joabs army was able to have done it alone; for they had already taken the ſtrongeſt piece, or at leaſt were neer the taking of it; but becauſe he would have David to have the glory of the victory, he adviſeth him to bring new forces to colour his conqueſt. And this he did, becauſe Kings are jealous of their honour, and cannot with patience brook that their ſubjects ſhould dazzle their glory, as David before had found by experience in Saul, 1 Sam. 18.8. Hereby we alſo may learn, when we get victories over our ſpiritual enemies, not to arrogate the praiſe unto our ſelves, but to aſcribe the whole glory unto our King and Sovereign Jeſus Chriſt, in whoſe ſtrength alone we overcome in deed and truth, and not only in ſemblance and ſhew, as David in this place: for he is jealous of his honour, and will not give it to another, Iſa.42.8.

and take it] To wit, that thou maiſt have the honour of taking it, and not I, ſeeing the conqueror uſually hath the glory of the conqueſt.

V. 29. And David gathered all the people] Having made his peace with God, he thinketh himſelf fit to fight againſt his enemies; and having recovered his former courage and valour, which was weakned by the guilt and filth of ſin, he chearfully undertaketh this expedition, and acteth the part of a valiant General in ſacking of Rabbah.

V. 30. And he took their Kings crown from off his head] Which either he had put on purpoſely upon Davids approach, that he might maintain, as long as he could his Royal magnificence and ſtate, and that thus appearing like himſelf, as a King to a King, David might uſe him with more reſpect, or at leaſt leſſe diſgrace; or elſe it was put on his head by others, and at Davids coming taken off his, and put on Davids, to ſhew that he was now degraded of his Royal dignity, and David inveſted therewith; A juſt puniſhment inflicted on this wicked King for his diſhonouring Davids Ambaſſadours in that diſgraceful manner. It is very probable that his degrading was accompanied with his death, and that he being depoſed and ſlain, his brother Shobi the ſon of Nahaſh was by Davids appointment ſubſtituted in his place: Which was the cauſe why he afterwards ſhewed ſuch great kindneſſe to David when he was purſued by Abſolom, ch.17.27, 28.

the weight whereof was a talent of gold] If we reckon according to the weight of the Sanctuary, the Crown here weighed above an hundred pounds, and ſo was as heavy as the golden candleſtick, Exod.25.39. but if according to the ordinary talent, it weighed fifty four pounds, eight ounces and a quarter, of Troy weight: either of which, eſpecially the firſt, being too heavy to be worn ordinarily, we are to conceive that it was but a crown of State, or a royal Crown, which was held or hanged over their heads, as they ſate in their chair of State; or if at all it were ſet upon their heads as an enſign of State and Royalty, it was only at their Coronation, or ſome other great and extraordinary ſolemnity.

V. 31. And he brought forth the people that were therein] i.e. So many of them as he thought fit to be made exemplary, i.e. their Elders and Rulers, which had been the chief ring-leaders in all their wickedneſs. Joſephus affirmeth the whole people were expoſed to theſe ſevere puniſhments. But it is manifeſt that, though the moſt were thus uſed, yet many were exempted, as Shobi the ſon of Nahaſh, who was put in Hanuns place; And if he were made King, he muſt have a people of that nation over whom to rule.

and put them under ſaws, and under harrows of iron] Such examples of great ſeverity exerciſed on Gods enemies we read of elſewhere in the Scriptures, as on Adonibezek, Judg.1.6. and on the men of Succoth, Judg.8.16. And they are not to be condemned as cruel, becauſe either God commanded them, or their heinous crimes deſerved them. As for the Ammonites, they were bitter and malicious enemies, and extreamly cruel when they had the Iſraelites at advantage, as at Jabeſh-Gilead, and had put many of them to the like cruel deaths when they fell into their hands, Amos 1.3, 13. (So Heb.11.37.) and had now violated the law of nations in diſgracing Davids Ambaſſadours; and had ſtirred up and hired all the nations round about to make war againſt Gods people, with a purpoſe utterly to deſtroy them; and beſides, were abominable Idolaters, and ſacrificed their own children.

and made them paſſe through the brick-kiln] Some think this was the furnace of Molech or Milchom the Idol of the Ammonites, where they had made their children paſſe through the fire, 2 Kin.16.3. & 23.10. Lev.18.21. and if ſo, then was this a fit puniſhment for ſuch abominable wickedneſſe.

And thus did he to all the Cities of the children of Ammon] i.e. To almoſt all the Elders of every City, who were the chief offenders, and corrupted thoſe that were under them by their wicked example.

CHAP. XIII.

Ver.1. ABſolom the ſon of David had a fair ſiſter] Though ſhe was ſiſter to all Davids ſons, and ſo to Amnon among the reſt, they having all the ſame father, yet ſhe is ſaid to be Abſoloms ſiſter in a ſpecial manner, becauſe they were both born of Maacah, the daughter of Talmai King of Geſhur, ch.3.3. and David had the reſt by other wives. This Talmai being an idolatrous King, David did ill to match with his daughter, having choice of wives enough among his own people. And therefore it was no marvel he was ſo much croſſed in the poſterity which he had by her.

And Amnon the ſon of David] Which Ahinoam the Jezreeliteſs bare unto him.

loved her] i.e. Luſted after her, being inſnared with her beauty.

V. 2. And Amnon was ſo vexed, that he fell ſick for his ſiſter Tamar] i.e. His heart was diſtracted and diſtempered, being ſet upon the rack of his paſſions, the groſſeſt and moſt ſenſual parts of the ſoul; which being in their nature neareſt to the body, do affect and work upon it, and making the whole more reſtleſs, breaking the ſleep and taking away the appetite to meat, do ſo cauſe lingring and languiſhing diſeaſes.

For ſhe was a virgin, and Amnon thought it hard for him to do any thing unto her] i.e. He was out of hope of enjoying his love, and ſatisfying his luſt with her, not only becauſe, being a virgin, ſhe was according to the commendable cuſtom of thoſe times and countries kept from gadding abroad, and ſtrictly obſerved, (which Diſcipline Dinah taking liberty to diſpenſe with, was raviſhed by Shechem, Gen.34.) but alſo becauſe, being the Kings virgin-daughter, ſhe had ſome appointed to take care of her, and to wait upon her daily, whitherſoever ſhe went; eſpecially ſhe being (for ought we know) his only daughter among ſo many ſons, and withal very fair and beautiful, and therefore no doubt, moſt diligently attended, as a rare and precious jewel, and her fathers deareſt darling.

V. 3. But Amnon had a friend] i.e. A friend, in reſpect of neer relation of kindred and intimacy of counſels, but not in reſpect of true friendſhip, which adviſeth only to that which is good, and to compaſſe it by lawful means.

and Jonadab was a very ſubtil man] Politick and crafty, wiſe to do evil, but to do good having no knowledg, Jer.4.22.

V. 4. Why art thou, being the Kings ſon, lean from day to day?] i.e. Diſcerning by his carriage that he was rather ſick in mind then body, he asketh him what ſhould be the cauſe of it; or rather implyeth he could have no juſt cauſe at all thus to languiſh and pine away, ſeeing he being the Kings ſon, yea, his eldeſt ſon, and heir to the crown, his preſent condition and future hopes might make him eaſily diſpenſe with matters which might be grievous to others of a low condition ; and beſides, he was of that power and authority, that if he would make uſe of it, there was no ſtop or grievance in his way that he might not eaſily remove, when he pleaſed, wilt thou not tell me?] i. e. Wilt thou ſmother thy griefs in thy own breſt, till they eat out thine heart, and kill thee? and not impart them unto me, who will be faithful to keep thy ſecrets, and ready and willing to give thee advice?

And Amnon ſaid unto him, I love Tamar my brother Abſaloms ſiſter] q. d. Though it be a fault to love Tamar in a luſtful manner, that is ſo neer in blood to me, yet it is not ſo great as it may ſeem, ſeeing ſhe is only my half-ſiſter, by the fathers ſide, whereas ſhe is Abſaloms ſiſter both by father and mother. But afterwards, when he was upon another deſign, to perſwade his father to ſend her unto him, he calleth her his ſiſter Tamar, v. 6.

V. 5. Let my ſiſter Tamar come and give me meat, and dreſſe the meat in my ſight] He adviſeth him to call her ſiſter, the rather, to avoid all ſuſpicion of the foul fact intended by him ; but withal implying, that ſhe was ſuch a dear ſiſter unto him, that he conceived and fancied (as men are apt to do in a languiſhing diſeaſe) it would do him more good to have his meat of her cooking, and given unto him by her own hand, then if it ſhould be dreſt and brought unto him by any other.

V. 6. Amnon lay down, and made himſelf ſick] He was vexed before with a pining ſickneſſe, v. 2. but now he counterfeited that his ſickneſſe had ſo far prevailed that he was fain to keep his bed. Thus, like wax to the ſeal, no ſooner had Jonadab given his wicked councel but Amnon was ready to receive the impreſſion, and to imbrace and put it practice.

Let Tamar my ſiſter come and make me a couple of cakes] i. e. Some hearty cordial, or pleaſing diſh, fit for one in a languiſhing condition, as the word may ſignifie. Here we may obſerve the ſimplicity and humble plainneſſe of thoſe times, when the only daughter of a great King ſcorned not to put her hand to ſo mean an office as being a nurſe to dreſſe meat for her ſick brother ; which ſurely ſhe could not have done, if ſhe had not been taught and trained up, and ſometimes exerciſed in ſuch emploiments. See the like, Gen. 18. 6. A good precedent for great Ladies in our times, who ſhould not think themſelves too good or great to act that part for which they were created, i. e. to be helpers unto men in ſickneſſe and health, and to play the part of good huſwives, as is deſcribed by a great and glorious King, and (as he profeſſeth) taught him by his mother, who, her ſelf alſo was a Queen, Prov. 31. 1, 10, &c.

V. 7. Then David ſent home to Tamar] Being a moſt indulgent father to his ſons, and now ſeeing him ſick who was his eldeſt, he preſently ſeeketh to ſatisfie his longing deſire ; and not having the leaſt jealouſy (as there was juſt cauſe) that he had any ill intention in his ſuit, (for none are leſs ſuſpicious of ill in others then thoſe who are innocent, and have in their hearts no fraud or guile) he ſendeth Tamar unto him, as an ox to the ſhambles, or an innocent ſheep to a ravenous Wolf : Which doubtleſſe addeth much to his grief, when he ſaw what miſchief came of it, and that his dear daughter fell into this great miſery by obeying his commands.

V. 9. And ſhe took a pan, and poured them out before him] To wit, out of the baking or frying-pan, into a diſh.

And Amnon ſaid, Have all men out from me] being reſolved now to act that filthineſſe which he had before plotted, he would have no eye or ear-witneſſe of his villany. For every one that doth evil, hateth the light Joh. 3. 20.

V. 10. And Amnon ſaid unto Tamar, Bring the meat into the chamber] i. e. Out of that room where they were, into an inner chamber, that he might act his villany with more ſecrecy, and that none might hear and break in to ſuccour her, if when the rape was in acting ſhe cried out for help.

V. 12. Nay my brother] She uſeth divers arguments which might have diſſwaded him from his wickedneſſe, had not blind luſt been alſo deaf. Firſt ſhe calleth him Brother, both to convince him that the foul act he was going about was an inceſtuous rape, and ſuch an unnatural filthineſſe as might work abhorrency in the heart of a brother, who ſhould be ſo far from thus diſhonouring his ſiſter, that he ſhould be ready, even with the hazard of his life, to protect her againſt any who would offer her ſuch an indignity.

do not force me] Here ſhe uſeth another reaſon to deterr him ; q. d. It were a great ſin to intice me, being thy ſiſter, to commit this filthineſſe, but a tranſcendent villany to compell me againſt my will, ſeeing unto inceſt thou wilt add Rape, both which by Gods law are to be puniſhed with death, Gen. 34. 7. Levit. 18. 6, 9. Deut. 22. 29.

for no ſuch thing ought to be done in Iſrael] Who are by profeſſion Gods own peculiar inheritance, and an holy people ; in which reſpect ſuch an example of abominable wickedneſſe committed amongſt them, and that by one of ſuch eminency as thou art, would bring a great ſcandal upon the whole nation, and cauſe religion and even the name of God to be blaſphemed by all the heathen round about us.

do not thou this folly] Though thou haſt uſed all thy wit in the ſubtile contriving of it, yet as the greateſt ſin is the greateſt folly in it ſelf, as tranſgreſſing the law of a dreadful God, who is both able and willing to puniſh it with all ſeverity, it will in the iſſue prove extreme fooliſhneſs in thee, and make thee ridiculous to all who ſhall hear of it, that thou, who maiſt have choice of wives where thou pleaſeſt, with their love and liking,, ſhouldſt force me with violence to commit this loathed act, who am thy own ſiſter.

V. 13. And I, whether ſhall I cauſe my ſhame to go?] i. e. Which way, or by what means ſhall I cleer my ſelf of this diſhonour and reproach? or how ſhall I be ever able for ſhame, to ſhew my face in any place where I come?

and as for thee, thou ſhalt be as one of the fools in Iſrael] i. e. Eſteemed among all men notoriouſly infamous, a ſon of Belial, deſperately vicious, and ſo branded and ſtigmatized with folly and wickedneſſe that all men will think thee moſt unworthy to ſuceed ſuch a glorious and gracious father in the government of the Kingdom, who art ſo unable to govern thy ſelf. See on Joſh 7. 17.

I pray thee, ſpeak unto the King ; for he will not withhold me from thee] This ſhe ſaith, not becauſe there was any hope that the King who was a ſtrict obſerver of the Law, could ever be perſwaded to give his conſent to ſuch an inceſtuous marriage, Lev. 18. 6, 9, 11. but only to allay the rage of his luſt for the preſent, and to eſcape his violence, knowing that if this brunt were paſt, her father would take order to keep her from him.

V. 14. Howbeit he would not hearken to her voice] The louder cry of his luſt did ſo out-cry her wholſome counſel, and the divel ſo hardned his heart, that he was ſtark deaf to her perſwaſions, and ſo purſued his wicked purpoſe.

V. 15. Then Amnon hated her exceedingly] Thus it often hapneth to thoſe who have ſold themſelves to work wickedneſſe ; when one luſt is ſatisfied, they run into the contrary extreme. Now Amnons eyes being opened, which luſt had blinded, he is filled with horror of conſcience ; and ſeeing plainly what reproach he had brought upon himſelf by his abominable filthineſs, he hated his fair ſiſter, becauſe her beauty was the bait that had allured him to fall into the ſnare of ſhame and miſery. Yet this did not befall him as a neceſſary concomitant of the ſatisfying his luſt, (for we ſee the quite contrary effect in Shechem, after he had defloured Dinah, Gen. 34. 2, 3.) but it came to paſſe by a ſpecial providence of God, ſo diſpoſing of it, that his ſin hereby might be diſcovered, and a way made for the inflicting of thoſe heavy judgements which God had threatned to bring upon Davids family for his ſins of adultery and murder.

And Amnon ſaid unto her, Ariſe, be gone] Here the rage of luſt is turned into the fury of folly and deſperate madneſſe. He hath no reſpect to his credit, nor care to ſhun ſhame. For whereas if he, after he had abuſed his ſiſter, had uſed her civilly and kindly, keeping her ſtill in his chamber, till her grief had been ſomewhat digeſted, ſhe might have been perſwaded, both for his and her own credit, to have concealed the injury ſhe had received from him, now thruſting her out of doors into the open ſtreets and the view of all men, what doth he elſe but proclaim his own ſin and ſhame to all the world? And that indeed was the end at which God aimed in thus giving him over to his impetuous folly and wilde rage, that by the diſcovery of his filthineſs a way might be made unto his ſlaughter, and the puniſhment therein of Davids ſin.

V. 16. And ſhe ſaid unto him, There is no cauſe] To wit, that I ſhould be gone in this poſt haſte, being at the preſent in ſuch a woful condition, no courſe being yet taken to preſerve my reputation, or to keep me from falling into much miſchief and miſery.

this evil in ſending me away is greater then the other] i. e. This injury of thruſting me out of doors is much worſe then the other of deflouring me. So ſhe might truly ſay in divers reſpects: For that, though a foul fact, proceeded from natural luſt, unto which he was tempted by the alluring bait of beauty ; but this proceeded from more then barbarous inhumanity and ſavage cruelty, againſt all ſenſe and reaſon. That, being committed, might be concealed, and ſo the ſhame avoided ; but this proclaimed his ſin, and expoſed her to open reproach, ſeeing ſhe either might be ſuſpected to have willingly yeelded to his villany, or at leaſt, though ſhe were a meer patient, yet ſhe ſhould be ſo ſtained and blemiſhed in her reputation that none worthy of her would deſire her in marriage. Beſides, Gods name would be blaſphemed amongſt his enemies, when they ſhould hear of ſo foul a fact committed among his peculiar people, his true religion and the profeſſors of it ſcandalized, their fathers heart extremely grieved, Abſalom her brother enraged and excited to take revenge. All which miſchiefs might be avoyded by concealing his ſin, eſpecially if hating and forſaking it he did turn unto God by unfeigned repentance.

V. 17. Then he called his ſervants that miniſtred unto him] Who did preſently execute his command, v. 18. For evil maſters ſeldome want evil ſervants to humour them in their wicked courſes and deſigns.

V. 18. And ſhe had a garment of divers colours] i. e. Of wrought and imbroidered work. For as in all ages men and women have been by God differenced from one another in their eſtates and degrees, ſo alſo in the coſtlineſſe and meanneſſe of their habits and apparel. So Gen. 37. 3. Judg. 5. 30.

V. 19. And Tamar put aſhes on her head, and rent her garment] and laid her hand upon her head] To expreſſe her ſorrow and ſhame, as though ſhe deſired to hide her ſelf that none might ſee her. So Jer: 2. 37.

So they uſed to expreſſe their bitter mourning and heart-venting grief. See on ch. 1. 2.

and went on crying] i. e. She addreſſed her ſelf to Abſalom, who was her only brother both by father and mother, and complained as ſhe went along that ſhe had been ſhamefully wronged and abuſed, that when the matter came to be diſcovered, it might appear that ſhe had not willingly conſented unto it. But for the preſent it may be ſhe did not particularly expreſs the fact to thoſe ſhe paſſed by, but onely told it to Abſalom upon his enquiry.

V. 20. Hath Amnon thy brother been with thee] i. e. Abuſed thee in that foul manner thou relateſt?

But hold now thy peace, my ſiſter; he is thy brother] And therefore this fact of his were beſt to be concealed, ſeeing the publiſhing of it would redound both to the diſhonour of the King and the diſgrace of our whole family.

regard not this thing] i. e. Set not thine heart too much upon it, to be thereby vexed and tormented, ſeeing it was forced upon thee, and done againſt thy will; which will make all men excuſe thee. What is done, cannot be helped; and that which is paſt cure, ought to be paſt care. Thus he ſeeketh to pacify his ſiſter, though at the ſame time his heart were enraged, and breathed after revenge.

So Tamar remained deſolate] i. e. In a forlorn and mournful condition, none being able to give her comfort.

V. 21. But when King David heard of all theſe things, he was very wroth] Not only becauſe his eldeſt ſon had committed ſuch a ſin as expoſed him to ſhame and obloquy, but alſo becauſe it trenched upon his own honour, who had bred him no better. But this was not enough for David, to be angry. He was the ſupream Magiſtrate, and ought to have ſeen the law of God executed upon the offender without partiality or reſpect of perſons. And this he neglecting to do, ſhewed himſelf an indulgent father, like Eli, and moved God in juſt diſpleaſure to pull the ſword out of his hand, for neglecting his duty, being his Vicegerent, and himſelf to ſee juſtice executed upon him by ſuch an executioner as afflicted his ſoul with double grief. This his neglect of juſtice proceeded (as it ſeemeth to me) not only from fondneſſe towards his ſon, but alſo from inward guilt in himſelf. He was convinced in his own conſcience that not long ſince he was defiled with the filthineſſe of luſt, and with the blood of his innocent ſervant, and thereby had deſerved death in the rigour of juſtice, had not God in mercy forgiven the ſins and remitted the puniſhment; and this blunted the edge of his juſtice, that it was not ſo keen to cut off another in the like caſe with himſelf as otherwiſe it would have been. Neither will that ſerve for Davids excuſe which ſome alledge, that he ſaw that Amnon repented for his ſin; ſeeing there is no warrant for it in the text: and though it had been ſo, yet it ſhould not have exempted him from temporal puniſhment, though it might have been available for his everlaſting ſalvation. For in executing juſtice, reſpect muſt be had not only to the offender, but to the whole Common-wealth, to keep others from offending by exemplary puniſhments; unto which none would be brought, if it were ſufficient to make ſhew of repentance.

V. 22. And Abſalom ſpake to his brother Amnon neither good nor bad] i. e. Having out of inveterate hatred and unreconcileable grudge reſolved upon revenge, he ſmothered his malicious purpoſe, that he might get the fitter opportunity to execute it; and knowing that profeſſed hatred leaveth no place for revenge, ſeeing the party fore-warned is alſo fore-armed againſt any intended miſchief, he ſpake neither leſſe nor more unto him concerning the abuſe offered to his ſiſter, leſt he ſhould ſuſpect that he intended revenge, and ſo ſhould prevent it; neither was he ſullenly ſilent, leſt he ſhould thereby ſuſpect that he bare a grudge, but ſpake occaſionally unto him, as at other times, though not about this matter.

V. 23. And it came to paſs after two full years] This time is purpoſely noted to ſhew the inveterate rancor and malice, that was all that while lodged in Abſaloms heart, ſeeing ſo long time could not wear it out, or mitigate it.

Abſalom had ſheep-ſhearers] Upon this occaſion he made a feaſt, as the manner was in thoſe times, to entertain their friends, and to encourage their ſervants and workmen. So 1 Sam. 25. 36.

in Baal-hazor] Or, the plain of Hazor, ſituate on the borders of Ephraim and Benjamin, Joſh. 15. 25.

and Abſalom invited all the Kings ſons] Becauſe he had expected thus long, and ſaw that his father out of fondneſſe towards Amnon neglected to execute juſtice, and puniſh his heinous crime, he was ſo much incenſed that he would no longer wait, but reſolved himſelf to take revenge. And to this end he laied hold of this oportunity, none ſuſpecting after ſo long time paſt that he had any ſuch bloody deſign.

V. 24. Let the King, I beſeech thee, and his ſervants go with his ſervant] He invites the King and all his ſons, with their retinue, to avoid all ſuſpicion of any ill intention againſt Amnon. Neither can I think (as ſome expoſitors imagine) that he in truth deſired the Kings preſence, becauſe he would have him a ſpectator of his ſons murder, in regard that he himſelf had ſo long neglected to execute juſtice upon him; ſeeing he had little reaſon either to provoke him to wrath, who had power in his hand to puniſh the heinous crime, or to deſire his preſence, which would have been an hindrance to his intended flight after he had committed ſo foul a fact.

V. 25. Howbeit he would not go, but bleſſed him] i. e. Wiſhed he might have much joy in his feaſt, and gave him thanks for his kind invitation. So ch. 14. 22.

V. 26. If not, I pray thee, let my brother Amnon go with us] This he deſired under colour that being the Kings eldeſt ſon, and by lineal deſcent to ſucceed him as heir to the Crown, he might repreſent the Kings perſon, and ſo much grace and honour his feaſt; whereas otherwiſe his earneſt preſſing and importuning to have him in particular to bear them company might well have made both David and Amnon, in reſpect of former carriages, jealous and ſuſpicious that he intended ſome miſchief, had not God deprived them both of prudence and underſtanding, that ſo he might bring them both to puniſhment for their ſins.

V. 27. But Abſalom preſſed him] i. e. Was importunate, and would take no denial and ſo in the end prevail'd.

V. 28. Mark ye now, when Amnons heart is merry with wine] Of this time he maketh choice to perpetrate his bloody deſign and treacherous villany, that it might be the more ſecretly acted, when Amnon being intoxicated with exceſs of wine was deſtitute of counſel and ſtrength, to make any reſiſtance. And here Davids ſin is puniſhed by retaliation. For as he had made Uriah drunk, that he might work his deſign upon him: ſo doth Abſalom deal with Amnon to the ſame purpoſe;

and when I ſay unto you, Smite Amnon, then kill him] He maketh his will ſtand for law, yeelding no reaſon for his bloody command. Howſoever it might well be judged that he did it in revenge of his ſiſters wrong, whom Amnon had defiled and raviſhed, yet it may be he had a further end, being proud and ambitious, to make way to the Crown by taking his eldeſt brother out of the way.

fear not: have not I commanded you?] q. d. Is not my warrant ſufficient to bear you out and excuſe you, who am ſo potent in my ſelf, and ſo highly in the Kings favour, that he will never queſtion either me or you, ſeeing it is done in the juſt revenge of ſo foul a fact; and ſeeing alſo when he is removed out of thy way, I ſhall be Prince, and as heir to the Crown, ſucceed my father, and ſit upon his throne?

V. 29. And the ſervants of Abſalom did unto Amnon as Abſalom had commanded] i. e. Like wicked men, they obeyed the command of a wicked maſter, being more willing to pleaſe him then either God or their King.

then all the Kings ſons aroſe, and every man gat him up upon his mule, and fled] i. e. Not knowing how far Abſaloms bloody treachery might extend, they haſted away to ſecure their own lives. And it is ſaid that they gat them up upon their mules, which great men in that country uſed to ride upon, 1 Kings 1. 33. For though the Iſraelites might not breed them, by cauſing beaſts of divers kindes, as the horſe and the aſſe, to gender together, Lev. 19. 19 yet they were not forbidden to make uſe of mules ſo engendered. See Gen. 36. 24.

V. 30. And it came to paſs while they were in the way] i. e. Poſting from Abſaloms houſe to the Court.

tydings came to David, ſaying, Abſalom hath ſlain all the Kings ſons] Flying fame was increaſed in her flight, God ſo ordering it by his ſpecial providence, that David firſt might be the more throughly humbled by hearing the report of ſuch an heavy judgement, and afterwards might be made more capable of comfort, when the loſs proved far leſſe then he expected.

V. 31. Then the King aroſe, and tore his garments] See on ch. 1. 11. and 12. 16. And well might David thus expreſſe his great grief, being ſuch a tender loving father as that he placed much of his happineſs in his children, and now ſeeing one of them murdered by another, yea, (as it was related) all of them by one, and that in ſuch a baſe treacherous manner; and with all looking back to his own ſin as the fountain and cauſe of all this miſchief and miſery; and conſidering alſo that both by his ſin and puniſhment he had given occaſion to Gods enemies to blaſpheme, and lay on the earth] As one dejected with extream grief in the apprehenſion of Gods wrath upon his houſe, before threatned, and now inflicted, for his ſin, ch. 12. 10.

V. 32. And Jonadab the ſon of Shimeah——ſaid] This ſubtle man was able above all others rightly to judge of this accident, becauſe by his councel and contrivance Amnons rape was committed, which was Abſaloms motive to this murder. And it may be, he being Abſaloms boſom-friend, and of his ſecret counſels, he had expreſſed to him his hatred towards Amnon, and his purpoſe of revenge; and therefore Jonadab limited the murder here to Amnon alone. Here the impudence of this Court-favourite, and his impenitency for his ſin, notwithſtanding he ſaw what miſchiefs it had produced, appeareth, in that he could thus talk of Tamars rape, which himſelf had plotted, without any bluſhing, as if it had been a matter that nothing concerned him.

V. 33. Let not my lord the King take the thing to his heart] i. e. To mourn exceſſively above that for which there is juſt cauſe.

V. 34. But Abſalom fled] He that before the ſin committed was ſo couragious that he would have his ſervants act it without fear, now it is done, is ſo purſued with the guilt of an evil conſcience that himſelf fleeth to eſcape the ſword of juſtice ready to purſue him for his ſin.

the young man that kept the watch, lift up his eyes, and looked] And having diſcovered the people approaching, brought word of it to David.

there came much people by the way] To wit, which did lye between Baal-hazor and Jeruſalem.

V. 35. As thy ſervant ſaid, ſo it is] Heb. According to the word of thy ſervant. To wit, that all the Kings ſons are alive, and onely Amnon is dead.

V. 36. The Kings ſons came, and lifted up their voice and wept] Bewailing the great loſs that hapned in their family of two of their eldeſt brethren, the one being loſt by an horrid murder, and the other having forfeited his life to the hand of juſtice by his treacherous cruelty.

V. 37. But Abſalom fled, and went to Talmai] His mothers father, from whom he hoped for protection, or to get pardon from his own father by his mediation: ch. 3. 3.

the ſon of Ammihud] Or, Ammihur.

and David mourned for his ſon every day] i. e. For the death of his ſon Amnon, who was ſo treacherouſly murdered by his own brother, and who alſo was ſo deer unto him. His unnatural and untimely death he bewailed for the ſpace of three years every day, having no intermiſſion in his mourning, v. 38.

V. 38. went to Geſhur, and was there three years] He ſtayed ſo long there in hope that his fathers diſpleaſure would be worn out in proceſs of time; as it alſo hapned.

V. 39. And the ſoul of King David longed to go forth unto Abſalom] Or, was conſumed i. e. He ſo vehemently longed to ſee his beloved Abſalom that even he languiſhed in his deſire. Or, he ſo much deſired to have him return unto him that he could willingly have found in his heart to have gone for him himſelf, or to have met him in the way, or at leaſt to have ſent ſome other to fetch him home. But he could do none of theſe for fear and ſhame, ſeeing he was guilty of ſo foul a murder; for by ſhewing favour to ſuch a flagitious and wretched ſon he ſhould not only expoſe himſelf to Gods diſpleaſure but to the common obloquie of all the people.

for he was comforted concerning Amnon, ſeeing he was dead] i. e. Had ceaſed his mourning for Amnons death, becauſe mourning could not fetch him again, ch. 12. 23. and it may be becauſe now he conſidered that his foul offenſe had juſtly deſerved death, though Abſalom had failed in the manner of execution.

CHAP. XIV.

Verſe 1. NOw Joab——perceived that the Kings heart was towards Abſalom] i. e. Longed to have him fetched home. Hereby it appeareth that all Joabs following endeavours to reduce Abſalom into the Kings favour did not proceed from any true love or friendſhip towards Abſalom, but meerly out of ſelf-love, becauſe he looked upon him as heir to the Crown, who might do him either a pleaſure or diſpleaſure when he came to reign; and therefore perceiving he was now likely to recover the Kings favour, he thought it good policy to purchaſe his love by ſhewing himſelf forward and a chief means in working his reconciliation: and alſo he looked upon him as Davids jewel and chief favorite, after whom his heart now earned and longed, not being able any longer to endure his exile and abſence; therefore like a cunning Courtier he applieth himſelf to pleaſe the Kings humour, and to perſwade that he might be ſent for home, becauſe he ſaw that David much deſired it: Now this plainly appeareth by that which followeth: For when after his return the King ſeemed diſpleaſed, and would not ſuffer him to ſee his face, Joab likewiſe would not for a long time give him ſo much as a viſit, yea, would not come at him, though ſent for, till he was conſtrained by the injury he did him in burning his barley.

V. 2. And Joab ſent to Tekoah] A city eight miles from Jeruſalem, upon a hill on the North-borders of Judah, 2 Chro. 11. 6. where the Prophet Amos lived, Amos 1. 1.

and fetch thence a wiſe woman] He made choice of one at ſuch a diſtance, rather then of one dwelling at Jeruſalem, or near hand, becauſe coming with a fained tale, ſhe might not be ſo eaſily known and diſcovered. And for this woman, he knew her to be prudent and politick, witty, active, and of ready ſpeech, and thereby fit for ſuch an imploiment, being able to deliver her mind and meſſage, and to anſwer the King upon the ſudden, as any occaſion ſhould be offered. And he thought fitter to uſe a woman then a man, and a widow rather then a wife or maid, becauſe the parable was to ſuit with a woman, and with a woman of ſuch a condition. And that ſex being the more paſſionate, was the more apt to move compaſſion, and the more fit to act a mourners part, having tears and lamentations at command. And being a widow, ſhe might (being unable to help her ſelf) the better crave and implore Davids aſſiſtance, who being Gods vice-gerent ſhould adminiſter juſtice to all, eſpecily to the fatherleſſe and widows, with all lawful favour, ſeeing they had from God ſpecial promiſes of protection.

and anoint not thy ſelf with oil] In token of mourning. Otherwiſe the Jews uſed to anoint their faces with oil to make them ſeem more cheerful, Judg. 9. 9. Ruth. 3. 3. Pſal. 104. 15. Matth. 6. 17.

V. 3. So Joab put the words in her mouth] i. e. The whole form and frame of ſpeech which he would have her uſe to the King, and which he would have delivered, not plainly and directly, but darkly and by way of parable; which was uſual in thoſe times. This Joab thought fit for the preſent occaſion, both becauſe Parables move much, and leave behind them a ſtrong and deep impreſſion, and beſides, the cauſe being evil needed to be diſguiſed under oblique and indirect colours and ſhews: otherwiſe it would have appeared an unlawful and diſhoneſt ſuit, if ſhe had bluntly deſired that he who had murdered his brother ſhould be protected.

V. 4. and ſaid, Help, O King] Heb. Save. i. e. Succor and relieve me, that I may be delivered out of the diſtreſs and danger in which now I am, according to thy place, and that power which God hath been pleaſed to put in thine hand, and hath appointed thee to exerciſe for the relief of diſtreſſed and oppreſſed widows, Eſai. 1. 17, Deut. 27, 19.

V. 5. And ſhe anſwered, I am indeed a widow woman] And therefore more need to be pitied and relieved in my diſtreſſed condition, ſeeing I am not able to help my ſelf, and want an husband to aſſiſt me; which in it ſelf is miſery enough: But how much more intolerable would it be if I ſhould loſe alſo both my ſons, as I am now in danger to do, unleſs thou wilt be pleaſed to help me againſt thoſe that are againſt me?

V. 6. And thy hand-maid had two ſons, and they two ſtrove together in the field] i. e. They quarrelled with one another upon ſome ſudden occaſion accidentally offered, and not upon any pretended malice.

and there was none to part them] And conſequently no witneſs to prove the fact, as the law requireth, Deut. 17. 6.

but the one ſmote the other, and ſlew him] As the avengers ſay, but cannot prove.

V. 7. And behold, the whole family is riſen againſt thine handmaid] i. e. The kindred, who are appointed by the law to be the avengers of blood, are riſen to proſecute juſtice againſt the offender, Num. 35. 19. Deut. 19. 12. This they pretend, as hot zelots of the law; but it may well be thought they do all out of ſelf-love, knowing that my ſons inheritance by his death ſhall come unto them: yea this their own words import, for they ſay they will deſtroy the heir alſo.

and ſo ſhall quench my coal which is left] i. e. Kill mine onely remaining ſon, by whom my husbands name and family may be continued and preſerved: even as a fire ready almoſt to go out, may yet be revived by a coal that lieth hid under the aſhes, being kept alive and blown upon; but if that alſo be put out and quenched, then no hope remaineth, Deut. 25. 6, 10.

V. 8. I will give charge concerning thee] That thy cauſe may be heard and examined, and thy ſon preſerved, if that which thou ſayeſt appear true.

V. 9. The iniquity be on me and on my fathers houſe, and the King and his throne be guiltleſſe] i. e. I am ſo well perſwaded of my ſons innocency, that I am content, if there be any fault in protecting him, to take it wholly upon my ſelf and mine, that the King and his Kingdom may not lie under the guilt of blood, for preſerving my ſon that is alive. Or, If there be any iniquity in that which the King ſhall grant at my requeſt, let the guilt be upon me and mine. So Matth. 27. 25. This was not a ſound argument to move the King to grant her ſuit, becauſe, if unjuſt, God would puniſh both her for making it, and him for giving way unto it; yet it might be ſome kind of motive to make him think her requeſt good, ſeeing ſhe was ſo confident of the goodneſs of it that ſhe was willing to bear the whole burden and blame if it proved evil; and it might ſomewhat incline his heart to favour her ſuit, ſeeing out of her great care of his good ſhe would rather ſuffer in her ſelf and hers any evil, then that any harm ſhould redound to the King or his Kingdom. Thus Rebekah perſwaded Jacob to hearken unto her motion of getting his fathers bleſſing by deceit, Gen. 27. 13.

V. 10. He ſhall not touch thee any more] i. e. Not put thee to any more trouble.

V. 11. Then ſaid ſhe, I pray thee let the King remember the Lord thy God] i. e. How the Lord by his law hath provided that ſuch as have ſlain a man at unawares ſhould be preſerved from the avengers of blood, Numb. 35. 12. And ſeeing there were many that ſought her ſons life, ſhe deſireth the King would be pleaſed to take order that he might be preſerved againſt the perſecutions of them all. Others take it, and that very probably; that ſhe in theſe words deſireth that he would remember his promiſe now made in the preſence of God, which he might haply forget through the multitude of his weighty occaſions, and ſecretly moved him to ratifie what he had ſaid by an oath; unto which he condeſcended in the words following.

And he ſaid, As the Lord liveth, there ſhall not one hair of thy ſon fall to the earth] i. e. I will take order that thy ſon ſhall not be hurt in the leaſt degree or manner. This oath was very unlawfull, ſeeing by the Law her ſon, who had ſlain his brother wittingly and willingly, though in heat of blood, ought to have died, Num. 35. 16, 17, 21. But it was now Davids own caſe in reſpect of Abſalom; and that maketh him ſo favourable in paſſing this ſentence, and ſo ready to ratifie it by a ſolemn oath. See 1 Sam. 14. 45. Acts. 23. 27.

V. 13. Wherefore then haſt thou thought ſuch a thing againſt the people] Here ſhe ſubtilly applieth the parable to the Kings particular caſe, taking ſo much as ſerved her turn, and leaving out all that made againſt her. For there were divers great differences between the caſe of her ſon and his brother (as ſhe propounded it) and that of Abſalom and Amnon. For, he ſlew his brother ſuddenly in the heat of blood; but Abſalom killed Amnon after a long meditation, and in a treacherous manner: One of them aſſaulted the other in a duell or equal fight; but Amnon was ſlain at a feaſt, where love was pretended, and for the preſent no offence given. There, no witneſſes were preſent; but here, all the Kings children and their retinue. She pretended this was her onely ſon, and that if he were cut off, there would remain no heir, nor any remembrance of her deceaſed husband, to preſerve his houſe from being utterly extinguiſhed; but Abſalom had many brethren, and much better then he; and therefore, if he were taken away, there would have been no loſſe. But herein they agreed, that both the one and the other were wilful murderers, and therefore could have no benefit or protection by the cities of refuge, which were appointed only for thoſe that killed any at unawares.

for the King doth ſpeak this thing as one that is faulty, in that the King doth not fetch home again his baniſhed] i. e. As one who having given a juſt ſentence in the caſe of another, doth fail in the execution of the ſame when it is his own. For David, who (as ſhe chargeth him) would have no rigour uſed againſt her ſon for killing his brother, becauſe it would extend to her great grief and loſs, could be contented that rigour ſhould be exerciſed towards his own ſon Abſalom, though it redounded much to the grief and detriment of the whole Common-wealth, which looked upon him as heir to the King, and as a light that ſhould ſhine unto them, when as he, who was now their Sun, ſhould ſet; and all this for killing Amnon, who had deſerved death, and highly provoked Abſalom to inflict it, by raviſhing his ſiſter, and thereby diſhonouring him and the whole family.

V. 14. For we muſt needs dye, and are as water ſpilt on the ground] i. e. We take his abſence ſo much to heart that we can no longer ſubſiſt without him, ſeeing we ſhall be deſperately loſt (even as water ſpilt upon the ground, which cannot be recovered) if ſuch an hopeful ſucceſſor be cut off.

neither doth God reſpect any perſon] To wit, to exempt him from death, of what degree ſoever he be.

yet doth he deviſe means that his baniſhed be not expelled from him] Or, becauſe God hath not taken away his life, he hath alſo deviſed means, &c. i. e.] It is a ſign that it is Gods will he ſhould ſucceed thee, in that he hath preſerved him all this time of his baniſhment, and now uſeth means to perſwade thee that he may be reſtored. Others underſtand it of our ſtate of mortality, and the neceſſity of death; Seeing ſuch is our condition as that we muſt all needs die, firſt or laſt, and when we are dead, there is no returning, as water ſpilt cannot be gathered up again, therefore it is in vain to take Abſalom away before his time for killing Amnon, ſeeing by his death the other could not be revived and brought back into the world. Or it may thus be meant, That ſeeing all men are mortal it muſt needs be the caſe alſo both of David and Abſalom; and if David ſhould die, who was now whileſt he lived, the light and life o Iſrael, yet if Abſalom ſurvived him, he would, as a living coal, again kindle the fire ready to go out; whereas if David ſhould happen to dye, (as there is no certainty in mans mortal condition) and Abſalom alſo ſhould miſcarry through grief, before his time, by living in exile, then this coal being quenched, all their hope and happineſs would be quite extinguiſhed.

V. 15. It is becauſe the people have made me afraid] Either that thou art ſo much incenſed againſt him that thou art fully reſolved to continue him in his baniſhment, or that they will be ſo enraged to have their hope cut off of enjoying ſuch a ſucceſſor when thou art gone, that they will riſe up in rebellion, and bring him back againſt thy will. Or it may be it is thus paſſively to be underſtood, that ſhe was afraid for the peoples ſake, that there might ſome attempts be made againſt them, in the way of invaſion, by Abſolom, aſſiſted by his father in law the King of Geſhur, and his allies; or elſe, leaſt Abſolom living long among idolaters ſhould be corrupted, and ſo corrupt the people in their religion, when he came to reign over them.

And thy handmaid ſaid, I will not ſpeak unto the King] i. e. Fearing ſome miſchief would enſue if the Kings ſon continued in baniſhment, I reſolved with my ſelf to uſe the beſt means I could to prevent it, and to ſpeak in his behalf to the King, that he would cauſe him to return; hoping that when he heareth what dangers will ariſe both to him and the Common-wealth, by his ſtill remaining in exile, he will hearken unto me, and grant my ſuit.

V. 16. For the King will hear, to deliver his handmaid, &c.] i. e. Knowing the King ſo juſt that he will be alwayes ready to hear the cauſe of the oppreſſed, and to right their wrongs, I thought it beſt in a parabolical way to propound it, and to make his caſe my own, hoping that when he ſaw the equity of the cauſe in my perſon, and had judged right concerning me and my ſon, that we ought to be delivered from thoſe that purſue us, he would be no leſſe equal and juſt to himſelf and his own ſon, when he ſhould ſee the parable brought home and applyed unto them, conſidering how dear he is to that people which are Gods inheritance.

V. 17. Then thine handmaid ſaid, The word of my lord the King ſhall now be comfortable] i. e. Upon this ground ſhe concluded with her ſelf that ſhe ſhould receive from the King a gracious anſwer to her ſuit concerning his ſons return.

For as an Angel of God, ſo is my lord the King] Here ſhe inſinuates her ſelf into his favour for the obtaining of her ſuit, by commending and extolling him. And becauſe there was none on earth to match him, ſhe compareth him to an Angel of heaven, both for wiſdom in diſcerning between right and wrong, good and evil, for dexterity in judging, and uprightneſſe in judgement; perſwading her ſelf that, like an Angel, he would judge without paſſion or partiality of her ſuit which ſhe made unto him, and conſtantly obſerve his promiſe which he had made unto her under the name of her ſon, for the reducing of his own Abſalom.

therefore the Lord thy God ſhall be with thee] i. e. Cauſe thy Kingdom to flouriſh, and proſper thee in thy goverment, and give good ſucceſſe to all thy undertakings, becauſe thou art wiſe and upright in judgement, and wilt now approve thy ſelf ſo to be in this particular caſe between thee and thy ſon.

V. 19. Is not the hand of Joab with thee in all this?] i. e: Haſt thou not ſpoken and done all this by Joabs councel and direction?

none can turn to the right hand or to the left from ought that my lord the king hath ſpoken] i. e. Thou haſt judged ſo right that none can decline from that which thou haſt ſpoken and not ſpeak an untruth.

he put all theſe words in the mouth of thine handmaid] i. e. He gave me ſpecial directions for all that I have ſpoken.

V. 20. To fetch about this form of ſpeech] i. e. To ſpeak thus unto thee in a parabolical manner, propounding the matter in my own caſe, that thou mighteſt the more unpartially judge of it being applied unto thy ſelf.

and my lord is wiſe, according to the wiſdom of an Angel of God] By theſe tranſcendent and ſuperlative praiſes ſhe inſinuateth her ſelf into Davids favour, that he might the more eaſily condeſcend unto her ſuit. q. d. Thou art of ſo deep a reach to dive into the ſecrets of all our counſels that thou excelleſt others in wiſdom as far as Angels excell men. See 1 Sam. 29. 9.

V. 21. And the King ſaid unto Joab, Behold now, I have done this thing] i. e. I have granted thy ſuit, which by the woman of Tekoah thou haſt moved me in.

V. 22. And Joab——thanked the King] Heb. bleſſed. i. e. with all lowly reverence he gave him thanks for granting his ſuit, and wiſhed him all happineſs and proſperity.

To day thy ſervant knoweth that I have found grace in thy ſight] i. e. I know it experimentally, and am further confirmed and aſſured of thy favour by thy granting my ſuit.

in that the King hath fulfilled the requeſt of his ſervant] Joab well knew it was Davids deſire to have Abſalom brought home; and that was the chief motive inducing him to make it his requeſt: He knew it would be very pleaſing to the King to have it preſſed upon him by the importunate ſuit of the General of the Army, who was in high place, and favour of the people; eſpecially when he knew not how that which he ſo much deſired could be better done for his own credit: Yet taking no knowledg of this, he maketh it his own ſuit, and ſheweth his thankfulneſſe for having it granted, that he might gain the Kings affection by expreſſing his love towards his children and ſhewing himſelf careful of their welfare.

V. 23. So Joab aroſe] i. e. Addreſſed himſelf with all ſpeed to ſet upon his journey, that he might fetch Abſalom home.

V. 24. And the King ſaid, Let him turn to his own houſe, and let him not ſee my face] i. e. Not be admitted into my preſence, as though he were reconciled and in my favour. For it is more then probable that in the ſpace of two whole years Abſalom ſaw his fathers face: elſe he could not all that while have come at the place of Gods publick worſhip, from which it was not Davids purpoſe to have him baniſhed. Now David did this partly to bring him to the ſight of his ſin, and to keep him for the time to come from falling into the like, as in the pride of his ſpirit he would have been too apt to do, had he found his fathers favour eaſily recovered) and to deterre others alſo by his example; and partly to avoid the ſcandal of too eaſie remitting ſo foul a fact. And it may be alſo that he had reſpect unto Amnons friends, and avoided to give them juſt offence by his eaſie admittance of him that had murdered him, leſt they ſhould hereby be provoked to ſeek revenge.

V. 25. But in all Iſrael there was none to be ſo much praiſed as Abſalom, for his beauty] This is here brought in to commend Davids gravity and power over his affections, that could moderate and reſtrain himſelf from ſhewing any countenance or love to ſo lovely a ſon. Or it is prefixed before the ſtory of Abſaloms rebellion, as being one ſpecial cauſe of it. His beauty made him inſolent, proud and ambitious; and being admired of the people, he became thereby popular, and highly in their favour. In this reſpect one compareth beauty to a goodly Oak, which bringeth forth no other fruit but maſt and akorns fit to feed and fatten hogs.

V. 26. at two hundred ſhekels after the Kings weight] To wit, common and civil ſhekels, which weighed a quarter of an ounce, or two drams.

V. 27. And unto Abſalom there were born three ſons, and one daughter] All which died before him: ch. 18. 18.

V. 28. And ſaw not the Kings face] See on v. 24.

V. 29. Abſalom ſent for Joab, to have ſent him to the King] Namely to mediate on his behalf, that he might be admitted into his grace and favour.

And when he ſent again the ſecond time, he would not come] Thereby ſhewing himſelf a right Courtier, whoſe love carried him no further on to act in his buſineſſe then ſtood with the favour of the King. Therefore fearing (as it may be thought) that the King might ſuſpect ſome ſecret counſels and practiſes between them, he ſhunned to come neer him, that he might avoid ſuch jealouſies.

V. 30. Go and ſet it on fire] To the end that he that would not come at his requeſt, out of love, might be forced to do it for his own ſake, to expoſtulate the injury.

V. 31. Then Joab aroſe] i. e. Made all the haſte he could to come unto Abſalom.

V. 32. Wherefore am I come from Geſhur?] Thus he would have him with all earneſtneſſe expoſtulate with the King concerning his withdrawing from him his face and favour, as though he were ſo full of love towards him that he was now grown impatient of furtherr delay; whereas contrariwiſe, being diſcontented at his reſtraint, he grew ill-affected towards his father, and entertained thoughts of rebellion againſt him, and aſpiring to the Crown; and not ſeeing any means of compaſſing his deſign whileſt he was baniſhed from the Court, he vehemently deſireth that he might be reſtored thither, to raiſe a party, and make friends by his popular carriage.

It

It had been good for me to have been there ſtill] Or, It had been better for me to have remained there ſtill, then come home to be baniſhed out of the Kings ſight, and live out of his favour, which is the life of my life, and the want of it a living death. For the nearer I am to my father, the more ſenſible I am of my miſery that I cannot enjoy him: And it more tendeth to my diſgrace and reproach, when the people by my being here take notice of his diſfavour in debarring me to come into his ſight, which they would not have been ſo apt to do, had I ſtill lived from him in a further diſtance. At Geſhur alſo I had liberty to come to Court, or go whither I pleaſed, whereas now I am confined by the Kings command to mine own houſe, or at leaſt baniſhed from the Court. And indeed it is not likely that the King reſtrained him from the place of Gods publick worſhip, though he in his profaneneſs maketh no account of enjoying ſuch a priviledge, which he was wholly deprived of whileſt he lived at Geſhur.

And if there be any iniquity in me let him kill me] Here he juſtifieth himſelf, as though he had done nothing amiſs in murdring Amnon, ſeeing thereby he had juſtly revenged that wrong and diſhonour which he had offered his ſiſter. Or, if he had failed in the manner of executing juſtice, he was content for that to ſuffer, becauſe he had rather dye then live in ſuch diſgrace: But then he deſired that his father ſhould ſentence him to death, who was ſupream Iudge, becauſe he knew he had ſuch intereſt in his favour that he was ſure enough to be out of danger. Thus wicked men juſtifie themſelves in their evil actions, eſpecially when they preſume upon the favour of their Iudge.

V. 33. and told him] i. e. Ioab related unto him Abſaloms ſpeeches, by which he made ſhew that he was ſo much grieved for his being excluded out of his fathers preſence that he choſe rather to die then to live. And hereby David, deluded by his hypocriſie, and out of his own indulgency, being perſwaded that he was now ſufficiently humbled for his ſin, yeilded to his ſuit, and admitted him to come into his preſence. But there was in him no true repentance, nor hearty deſire to recover his fathers favour, but only that he might come unto the Court to work his own miſchievous and ambitious ends by gaining the love and applauſe of the people.

And the King kiſſed Abſolom] To give him full aſſurance that now he had forgiven his offence, and was throughly reconciled unto him. See on Gen. 29. 11. & 31. 55.

CHAP. XV.

Ver. 1. A*Nd it came to paſſe after this*] i. e. After David had thus reconciled himſelf to his wicked ſon, and again received him into grace and favour, neglecting to execute juſtice by inflicting upon him that puniſhment which Gods law required and his bloody ſin deſerved, God in his righteous judgment begun to execute upon David that heavy doom which he had threatned againſt him for his ſins of adultery and murder, that he would raiſe up evil againſt him in his own houſe, ch. 12. 11. And to this purpoſe he gives up his gracleſs ſon, out of pride and ambition to plot and practice againſt him, that dethroning him he might reign in his ſtead. Being now his eldeſt ſon, he had fair hopes to attain his deſire, if he would have ſtaid till his fathers death, which now in reſpect of old age could not be far off; but he was ſo impatient of delay that nothing could content him but preſent poſſeſſion, though he could no otherwiſe aſcend into the throne then by making the dead karkaſe of his father a ſtep unto it. Of this his haſte (beſides his reſtleſſe ambition) one cauſe might be an old grudge conceived againſt his father, becauſe he had diſhonoured him in the eyes of the people by his long baniſhment for killing his brother (though he approved it a juſt act) which might make him be thought unworthy to reign after his death, whom he thought unworthy to come into his preſence whileſt he was living. Another cauſe might be, the jealouſie he had of Solomons obtaining the Crown, both becauſe he was ſo well beloved of his father and of God himſelf, ch. 12. 24, 25. and alſo becauſe he was a true Iſraelite both by father and mother; whereas himſelf was deſcended of Maacah, a ſtranger, and of a heatheniſh Nation. Therefore to put the matter out of all doubt, he reſolveth, whatſoever it coſt, to get preſent poſſeſſion: And to this purpoſe he putteth divers policies in practiſe to further his ambitious deſign. And firſt, he getteth a princely retinue to attend him.

Abſolom prepared him chariots, and horſes, and fifty men to run before him] This he did to the end, that taking upon him the port and ſtate of a Prince, the people might take notice of him as heir to the Crown, and uſe him with ſuitable reſpect; and becauſe ſuch unuſual pomp would much commend him to the eſteem of the vulgar ſort, who are much taken with novelties, and apt to admire and adore outward appearances of glory and greatneſſe. Of this height of pride David taketh no notice, nor uſeth any means to croſſe his ſonnes ambition in the firſt riſe, being much blinded with fondneſſe of affection.

V. 2. And Abſolom roſe up early, and ſtood beſide the way of the gate] To wit, of the Kings Court, out of the City; which was appointed to be the place of Judicature. This pains and diligence he uſed as another politick means to inſinuate himſelf into the hearts of the people, ſeeing he was ſo zealous of their welfare that he ſpared no pains to inform himſelfe in their cauſes and ſuits, that they might have right.

then Abſolom called unto him] i. e. He was ſo forward to gratifie them in their ſuits, that he did not ſtay till they made their addreſſes unto him, but prevented them by ſhewing his readineſs to do them good.

Thy ſervant is of one of the tribes of Iſrael] i. e. Of this or that city, ſituate in ſuch or ſuch a tribe.

V. 3. And Abſolom ſaid unto him, See thy matters are good and right] i. e. Thus it was his manner to ſay unto any man that had a ſuit, that their cauſe was juſt and good, though it were never ſo bad: And he would make them fair promiſes of his aſſiſtance, though he never intended it, but only aimed by ſoothing flattery to gain their love; which was an eaſie purchaſe, coſting him no more then the price of his breath.

but there is no man deputed of the King to hear thee] Or, None will hear thee from the King downward. i. e. He hath not appointed any of his Judges or inferiour Officers to hear thy cauſe, and do thee right. Here he traduceth the King, that he might work him out of the hearts of the people, by telling them of his ill government in his old age, ſeeing he had no care to execute juſtice himſelf, nor of having it done by others under him; either not appointing them to do it, or not calling them to account if they neglected it. Which was a ſhameleſſe ſlander of a graceleſſe ſon, ſeeing it is ſaid, that David reigned over all Iſrael, and executed judgment and juſtice unto all the people ch. 8. 15.

V. 4. Abſolom ſaid moreover, O that I were made Judge in the land] So Gaal, Judg. 9. 29. Here he plainly ſheweth that his end in traducing his fathers government was to advance himſelf, though the eyes of the common people were ſo dazeled with his gloſing language that they could not diſcren it.

V. 5. And it was ſo, that when any man came nigh to him to do him obeyſance——he kiſſed him] i. e. Seeing his plot was to inveigle all the people with his allurements, he put no great difference between one and another, rich and poor, but uſed the ſame humanity and affability to all alike. Putting forth his hand he pulled them to him, imbraced and kiſſed them, which was the common complement that was uſed in thoſe times for expreſſing of love. Now this he did to ſhew how unpartial he was, and that in all theſe courteſies he had no reſpect of perſons, but only aimed at juſtice and the common good of all the people.

V. 6. So Abſolom ſtole the hearts of the men of Iſrael] To wit, from David his father, whoſe they were by right and duty, as being the lawful King and ſovereign Lord, unto himſelf to whom they belonged not in that relation. They might lawfully love and honour him as their Prince, yet not ſo as to ſet the Crown on his head, which was only his fathers right. In this reſpect he is ſaid to have ſtoln their hearts, becauſe he ſought to take away that which was due only to his father, and alſo in that he did it ſecretly and deceitfully, ſo that neither the people nor David himſelf did diſcover it. But it may be well admired that he who was ſo wiſe a man, and a King alſo (and Kings are uſually very jealous in matters which concern their Crown) ſhould ſuſpect nothing, ſeeing Abſaloms common carriage to all the people and his daily practice could hardly be kept from his ears, but he muſt hear of it, by the relation of one or other. But though love did not ſilence their tongues, Davids fondneſſe ſtopped his ears, that he had neither power nor will to hearken to any reports againſt his ſon. But this came to paſſe principally, becauſe it was Gods pleaſure to uſe Abſolom as his rod to correct his father, and to bring upon him thoſe judgments, which he had by Nathan threatned againſt him, for his adultery and murder.

V. 7. And it came to paſs after fourty years] From what period of time theſe fourty years are to be computed, is a great queſtion among Expoſitors. For the determining whereof, I will let paſſe divers of their conceits; which have no probable ground, and inſiſt only upon two, which are moſt likely. The firſt is of thoſe, who think that this account is to begin with Davids reign. But ſeeing he reigned but fourty years in all, it doth not ſeem unto me very probable, that this reckoning can ſtand which taketh up his whole time, from his firſt anoynting at Hebron, to his death. And though it be ſaid, that the things afterwards related from Abſoloms rebellion, to the end of Davids reign, were all tranſacted in a ſhort time, and as they conceive, in the laſt year before his death; yet it ſeemeth to me to be far otherwiſe, and apparently contrary to the plain text. For beſides the time required to the raiſing of the rebellion of Abſolom and Sheba, and the ſuppreſſing of the rebels; we read of a three years famine that followed in the dayes of David, inflicted upon the land for the ſin of Saul and his bloody houſe; of execution done upon Sauls ſons, and of Riſpahs attendance upon their dead bodies, which were hung up in the hill all the time of the harveſt, chap. 20. ver. 10. mention alſo is made of wars raiſed by the Philiſtims three ſeveral times, and of Davids victories over them; for the obtaining whereof, he went out and fought againſt them in his own perſon, and was in danger to have been ſlain, had not Abiſhai ſuccoured him, ch. 21. ver. 15, 16. which ſurely he could not have been able to do, when the ſame year natural heat was ſo wholly ſpent, that he could by no means have any warmth procured, but lay (as we ſay) bedridden. Beſides, there were almoſt ten moneths taken up in numbring the people, chap. 24. ver. 8. And in this very time of Abſoloms rebellion, it is related, that David was ſo ſtrong and healthy, that he fled away on foot; yea, barefoot, and not only on plain ground, but by climbing up by the aſcent of mount Olivet, ver. 30. And afterwards was reſolved to have gone out with the people to battel, had they not diſſwaded him; not becauſe he was old, impotent, and decrepit, but only becauſe they would not have him to endanger his perſon, ch.18. ver. 2,3. All which things conſidered, I cannot but wonder that ſo many learned and godly Expoſitors, ſhould entertain ſuch a groundleſſe conceit, that all thoſe things were done in a very ſhort time before Davids death. And therefore I much rather incline to their opinion, who reckon theſe fourty years from the time of Davids firſt anointing by Samuel, whereby he had from God juſt title and right to the Crown and Kingdom; though he had no actual poſſeſſion for divers years after. Againſt which computation, there is but one only objection of any weight, which I do not doubt, but that I can eaſily anſwer; namely, that Davids anointing being done privately, and in a ſecret manner, could not well be a rule of the publick account; for though this action were ſecret and private when it was done, yet long before this rebellion of Abſolom, in all the former parts of Davids reign, it was famous and notoriouſly known to all men, and ſo now became a fit period of time, for the raiſing from it this preſent computation of fourty years.

Let me go and pay my vow which I have vowed to the Lord in Hebron] Or, pay my vow in Hebron, which I have vowed whileſt I abode at Geſhur] Where, like a cunning hypocrite he maketh religion to be the cloke for his rebellion, becauſe he knew that his pious father would not be an hindrance unto him in any act of devotion and religion. And he maketh choice of Hebron, becauſe it was a place famous, as being ancient, and one of the chief Cities of Iſrael, where was the Sepulchre of the Patriarchs, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and a principal high place whereunto they reſorted to offer ſacrifices, eſpecially gratulatory oblations and peace offerings, which might be lawfully done in other places beſides the Tabernacle, before the building of the Temple. See 1 Sam. 9. 12. and the note upon it. The place alſo where his father was firſt crowned King, and where himſelf was born and bred, and where his kindred, friends, and acquaintance lived, which made him chiefly to deſire to go thither, as being likely there to find the beſt aſſiſtance.

V. 8. If the Lord ſhall bring me again indeed to Jeruſalem, then will I ſerve the Lord] To wit, in a publick manner, by offering unto him gratulatory oblations and peace-offerings; of which ſervice he maketh choice to propound it to his father; not only becauſe he knew that it would rejoyce his heart to ſee his ſon ſo religiouſly devout to ſhew his thankfulneſſe; and ſo make him willing to condeſcend to his ſuit, but alſo, becauſe at ſuch ſacrifices they uſed to make great feaſts, unto which they invited their friends and acquaintance; under which colour he had a fit opportunity to aſſemble as many as he thought meet to come together, for the raiſing of this rebellion.

V. 10. But Abſolom ſent ſpies throughout all the tribes of Iſrael] To wit, to this end, that he might diſcover how the chief of every Tribe ſtood affected towards him, and withall, that they might prepare a way for his rebellion, by perſwading and drawing the people to his party, who were already too much inclined towards him, ver.6.

As ſoon as ye ſhall hear the ſound of the Trumpet then ſhall ye ſay, Abſolom reigneth in Hebron] When the Trumpets ſhall be ſounded in every tribe, at the ſame time which ſhall be agreed upon and appointed by Abſolom, then, at the hearing thereof, when the people wondred what it ſhould mean, the ſpies and others, which were to be ſent for this purpoſe, ſhould inform them, that Abſolom was anointed King in Hebron, with all regal ceremonies and ſolemnities, and was ſo accepted and proclaimed by the people. Or elſe, when theſe trumpets ſounded in every tribe, they were appointed to tell them the cauſe of it; namely, that it was to ſummon them to reſort unto Hebron, to give their approbation and acclamation to their new crowned King in Hebron, and to cry out, as it was uſual in ſuch inaugurations, God ſave King Abſolom.

V. 11. And with Abſolom went two hundred men out of Jeruſalem, that were called, and they went in their ſimplicity, &c.] That is, Abſolom invited two hundred ſpecial men of note, to come to the feaſt of his peace-offerings, whom he acquainted not with his conſpiracy, and were therefore wholly innocent in the point of his rebellion. Of which he made choice, as being eminent men, and ſo fit to grace his action, and by their example, to draw on others to joyn with them; and becauſe he had conceived good hope, that having drawn them from the Kings party at Jeruſalem, to come among his own friends at Hebron, they might eaſily be perſwaded to be on his ſide, ſeeing they could not with any ſafety, now they were there, ſhew their diſlike, by forſaking the faction, and returning home; eſpecially, conſidering how generally he was beloved of the people, ver. 6. But howſoever, though he could not ſo far prevail with them, as to withdraw them from David, yet now at leaſt, they were in his power, and under reſtraint, that they could not give him their aſſiſtance, though they ſhould much deſire it.

V. 12. And Abſolom ſent for Abitophel the Gilonite Davids counſellor] Who it ſeemeth, though he had been formerly in great eſteem with David for his wiſdom; yet now there was ſome breach between them; either becauſe David had, upon good experience, diſcovered him to be a crafty unconſcionable politician, and a wicked man, or ſome other quarrel; and as ſome think, (though I ſee no reaſon for it,) for abuſing Bathſheba, ſuppoſed to be his grand-child, ſeeing he had made her large amends, by taking her to wife, and making her a Queen. But howſoever manifeſt it is, that he proved unfaithful to David, and became Abſoloms Councellor in plotting his conſpiracy; though at this time he was gone home to his own houſe, that he might more eaſily diſguiſe himſelf, and not be known to have his hand in this Rebellion.

whileſt he offered ſacrifices] To wit, his peace offerings, unto which he invited Ahitophel, as one of his gueſts.

the conſpiracy was ſtrong, for the people encreaſed continually with Abſolom] Which was no ſmall wonder, that a King ſo pious, juſt, and proſperous in all his undertakings, ſhould be ſo ungratefully forſaken by his people, who notwithſtanding made profeſſion of Gods true religion. But this came to paſſe, partly, from the fickle and unconſtant diſpoſition of the common people, who are ſoon weary of the preſent government, if at leaſt they find any wants and weakneſſes in it, which cannot wholly be avoided in the very beſt; and partly, becauſe they were great with child of thoſe ſwelling hopes, which Abſolom, by his fair ſhews and flatteries, had begot in them; and partly, becauſe the Conſpirators had blacked and blaſted David, by divulging and aggravating all the errors of his life and government; as his adultery with Bathſheba, the murder of Uriah, with divers others of the army, his pardoning of Amnon for his inceſtuous rape; to which they might have added, his not puniſhing of Abſolom, as a treacherous Paricide, but that it would have made againſt their cauſe; which becauſe it did not make for, but againſt them, therefore it is likely, that inſtead of that, they juſtified Abſoloms fact, as being an act of his juſt revenge for the abuſe of his ſiſter; and contrarywiſe, laid it as a great fault to Davids charge, that he had dealt harſhly and rigorouſly with Abſolom, in diſgracing and diſcountenancing him ſo long a time for ſo good an action. But principally, this came to paſſe by Gods ſpecial providence, who chiefly ruleth all the affairs of men, and their events, by ruling and inclining their hearts which way he pleaſeth; and ſo here, the hearts of the people, in turning them from holy David, to impious Abſolom; that hereby he might chaſtiſe his ſins, by bringing upon him that puniſhment which they had deſerved, and he had threatned.
